Section 25 (2) proceeds to "full site value." This is a mysterious term. But I think it is really meant to describe the present value of the bare land, still disregarding encumbrances, burdens, and restrictions. It is made of no subsequent use in itself, but only for the amount of the deduction from gross value which is required to be made in order to arrive at it. What it really is, stripped of its verbal disguise, is the present value of the site, still regarded as unencumbered, unburdened, and unrestricted, but also as divested of the result of man's labour and expenditure of capital. I do not think I go far wrong in saying that this would be popularly, and at the same time correctly, and more briefly described, as the present prairie value. And I venture to accept counsel's expression for it, divested value. That, again, must be something positive, something based on real value. For though there may be pieces of land in this country worth nothing, there is not conceivably any such worth less than nothing.

But the way full site value is got at requires to be noticed. It is defined, to read the subsection short, as gross value minus the difference between gross value and divested value, that is, as divested value. But, as will be afterwards seen, it is not divested value that is afterwards wanted or used, but (though a roundabout way is taken to get at it) gross value minus divested value, or the proportion of the gross value of the subject which is attributable to man's labour and expenditure, and not to the mere present prairie value of the land. Still both full site value, that is, divested value, and gross value minus full site value, that is, the added value which is the result of man's handiwork, are real values, and if they be not nil, as one or other or both may possibly be, must be positive values. But the section appears to me to put the cart before the horse. The valuer cannot possibly estimate directly what addition to bare site value has been made by man's exertions. The valuer must in practice first apply himself to find out, according to his own estimate, the full site or divested value, and then the difference between gross value and full site value is a mere question of subtraction.

Then comes section 25 (3), "total value," in itself expressive of nothing, but intended to mean, though it does not describe, nothing more nor less than real market value, i.e., the market value of the subject as it would go into the market at the time with its title-burdens and restrictions, but with such enhancement as man's labour and expenditure may have effected. For it is defined to be gross value as diminished by the incidence of fixed burdens and restrictions. That, again, contemplates a real tangible value. And though it may not be a positive value, it can never conceivably be less than nil.

For gross value, according to the definition (section 25 (1)) is ex hypothesi a market value. Total value is gross value after deducting the amount by which gross value would be diminished if the subject were sold subject to April 18, 1912. fixed charges and restrictions, and is therefore real market value, as that would be found in practice. I could conceive a case in which gross value was substantial, but in which total value might be nil, owing to the incidence of intolerable burdens and restrictions. But I cannot conceive of total value, which is just real market value, being stated as a minus quantity. Market value may be nil, but it cannot be minus anything. We were reminded of a case recently before the Division of the Court in which I usually sit—that of Stirling Crawford of Milton. It is not reported, as the Court found that there was no proper contradictor, and that they could not ex proprio motu decide an important point which the papers appeared to raise. But the circumstances are useful as illustrating the matter under consideration. They may indeed at first sight be used as indicating that real market value may be a minus quantity. For £5000 was paid to get rid of the property with its fixed burdens. But this is only at first sight, and was not really the position. The property was overburdened with its fixed charges, but was not thereby worth minus £5000. It was simply worth nil, and the £5000 was paid for release from the personal obligation which the holders had incurred for the fixed charges. But in applying this statute, and particularly sections 2, 3, and 25, the element of personal obligation is entirely disregarded. The reference to the case, therefore, only illustrates the self-evident proposition that property in land subject to an excessive fixed charge, though it may be worth nothing, cannot per se be worth less than nothing. A thing is only worth what the market will give for it, and it will give nothing for a property which is overburdened. If it is worth a minus quantity, it must be on the hypothesis that the owner must pay something to get rid of it. But under the Scottish system of land laws, with which alone we are concerned, a man will pay nothing to get rid of the property, though he may pay something to get rid of a personal obligation connected with the property which he has undertaken. If a property worth £1000 is burdened with a feu-duty of £100, it is overburdened by at least £60 a year. It is therefore valueless. No one will give a sixpence for it. But unless the owner, by the form of and completion of his title, has come under a personal obligation for that feu-duty, he need not and will not pay to be rid of the property, and with it of his obligation. It is only by mixing up the real and the personal element in relation to the subject that the conception of a minus value can be reached. And in interpreting the statute we have nothing to do with the personal obligation resulting from contract or completed title. The total value of land, then, as defined by the statute, or the true market value, can never be stated as a minus quantity, though it may sometimes be nil.

Herbert's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.
—
Id. Johnston.

The provisions already considered were believed to be necessary to arrive at assessable site value, whether original or occasional. But let me recapitulate what they really mean. (1) Gross value is nothing but the hypothetical market value of a property neither encumbered, burdened under its title, nor restricted. (2) Full site value is nothing but the present value of the bare site, unencumbered, unburdened, and unrestricted. (3) Total value is market value in its ordinary acceptation.

I think that assessable site value will also be found to be equally suscep-

April 18, 1912. tible of a plain meaning, inconsistent with the contention maintained by the Crown.

Herbert's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. Johnston.

Before approaching section 25 (4) there are two things to note. The first and most important appears to be the use of the term "assessable" as qualifying "site value." Though site value is an artificial conception, the phrase "assessable site value" clearly indicates that the site has a value which is assessable, and a minus value never can be that. The assessable value may be nil, but if there is any virtue in the use of words, it can never be a minus quantity. It is true that the tax is not to be laid on the assessable value simply. It is to be laid on the excess (if any) of the occasional assessable site value over the original assessable site value. If the original cannot be a minus quantity, still less can the occasional site value be so. For if one turns back to section 2 (2) of the Act, it will be found that the occasional site value is to be ascertained in the same way as the original, but by substituting real values, where available, for the estimated values of section 25. The difference between the two may be nil, but if neither of them can be a negative quantity, the difference between them cannot be a negative quantity.

Another thing is this, the Act has been drafted with reference to English law and the English system of land tenure, and it has been thought sufficient in applying it to Scotland to insert a Scottish interpretation clause (section 42). But there is a practice in dealing with land in Scotland, which, as it appears to me, considerably affects the aim of the framers of this Act in its application. Something of the same sort may occur in England, but I know too little about the English system to venture the assertion. In Scotland in a great many feuing transactions, the fixed burdens in the nature of feu-duty or ground-annual are not laid on the bare land as at the time the feu is taken nor have they any relation to the then value of that bare land. They are laid on after buildings are erected, and they bear a relation, not to the bare land as originally taken up, but to the land and buildings, a relation which is one of the arcana of the building trade, but of which it may generally be said that the feu-duty, &c., as laid on, are as much as the land and buildings will carry, and yet allow the builder to get a price which will refund him his outlay in building. His profit is in the enhanced feu-duty, &c., which is a saleable asset to him. I think that this fact disturbs somewhat the result of applying the scheme of the Act to Scotland, and not improbably accounts for the referee having on a literal application of section 25 brought out a minus result. It is clear that a large half of the actual feu-duty in the present case is not secured by the site.

In considering now section 25 (4), which defines assessable site value, I think it convenient to assume a very simple case such as the present, where the only fixed charge is a feu-duty of £52, 13s. 9d., which, taken by the referee at twenty years' purchase, gives the capital value of £1053, as stated in the case. There appear to be no factors in relation to this property which call for the application of the many other detailed deductions which complicate section 25 (4). But for determination of the question of principle involved in this case, the present simple instance is as good as the most complicated.

It will be found, I think, that assessable site value is really, divested of its statutory trappings, just the value of the interest in the bare land of the statutory "owner." For the statutory definition of "owner," see sections 41 and 42. Assessable site value for the purposes of this case is defined, section 25 (4) (a), as the total value of the land after deducting from the total value, in the first place, the same amount as is to be deducted from gross value to arrive at full site value, and after deducting, in the second place, other items which when examined are found to be of the same character as the items which go to make up the said amount, for the deductions under section 25 (4) (b), (c), and (d) are all, like the deduction under section 25 (4) (a), allowances in respect of man's labour or expenditure. The deduction, section 25 (4) (e), the parties were agreed, is in practice negligible. When in the definition of assessable site value in section 25 (4), their real meanings are substituted for "total value," and for the amount "to be deducted from gross value to arrive at full site value," a simple result, notwithstanding the complexity and circuitry of the statutory definitions, is arrived at in the present case, and equally, I think, in every case. For original assessable site value is found to be full site value under deduction of the value of the title-burdens, or the present value of the bare site under deduction of the present value of the title-burdens, and that is, as I have said, just the value of the statutory owner's interest in the bare site. When divested of the nomenclature with which the statute has clothed it, that is really the result. If there are other deductions to be made under section 25 (4) (b), (c), and (d), they only go still further to reduce the assessable site value by further deductions from the full site value. But this result seems to be the key to what was the idea at the root of the statutory scheme.

Herbert's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. Johnston.

That scheme recognises that the title-burdens or fixed charges as by way of feu-duty, &c., are really an estate in the land, which belongs to someone other than the "owner" as defined by the Act (sections 41 and 42). It aims at assessing the increment of site value in the hands of the "owner," on the assumption that you can really sever the value of land from that of buildings or improvements on it, after the land has been built upon or improved. But it firstly recognises, and consistently, that the site value in the hands of the "owner" is only so much of the value of the bare site as remains after deducting therefrom the value of the interest in the bare site of the holder of the title-burdens or fixed charges—that is, in the present case, of the superior. Accordingly the site value is just the value of the "owner's" interest in the site. That may be nil, but it cannot be a minus quantity. It is conceived of as an assessable value. An assessable value must be a positive and not a negative value. Though the definition of site value is more complicated than that of gross value, full site value, and total value, it is seen, when bared, to represent an idea, just like those involved in gross value, full site value, and total value, which requires the term value to be used in its ordinary acceptation. Now, it may be that as here the value of the owner's interest in the site is reduced to nil by reason of the predominating value of the title-burdens or fixed charges. It may in time come nearer to meeting the fixed charges and yet still be nil. But I cannot find ground in the intention and scope of the statute for the

April 18, 1912. implication that the value of the owner's interest is here to be stated not at its true value, viz., nil, but at the amount of the deficiency to meet the fixed charges or at a minus quantity.

Herbert's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. Johnston.

To call such minus quantity an assessable value, and subsequently to assess the difference between two such minus quantities, would not be to extract revenue from site value, but from man's development of the site by his expenditure of labour and capital. This would be entirely against the conception of the Act. To reach such conclusion I see no warrant for giving to value a symbolic meaning, involving a purely mathematical conception, and for departing from its ordinary acceptance.

If anything was wanted to show that the statute never contemplated a minus value, it is sufficient to refer to one of the provisions for collection of increment duty (section 3 (5)). As a relief to the owner, the increment value, as otherwise ascertained under the statute, is to abate by ten per cent of the original site value. Working mathematically, with minus values, the fantastic result would be attained of an increase instead of an abatement.

I have confined attention hitherto to increment value duty, but it is not out of place to refer to the provision (section 16) regarding undeveloped land duty. That duty is to be levied "in respect of the site value of undeveloped land" "at the rate of one halfpenny for every twenty shillings of that site value." It is not conceivable that the expression contemplates anything but a positive value. And it does not detract from this inference that, in a subsequent section (17 (1)), exemption from the duty is provided where the site value of the land does not exceed £50 per acre.

I conclude, therefore, that according to the true intent and meaning of the Act the assessable site value of the appellants' "land" in the sense of the statute is not a minus quantity, but nil, as representing its real value.

LORD SALVESEN.—I agree that we must sustain the appeal. I proceed mainly on the ground that the language of the statute must be construed according to the ordinary and popular meaning of the words used; and that the word "value" cannot, according to this rule of construction, include a minus quantity. If the simple case be taken of a piece of ground having been feued at a rate which, when capitalised in the ordinary way, largely exceeds the market value of the land as at the date when the Act comes into operation, it would follow that if twenty years later the value of the land had increased, but still not to an extent sufficient to cover the burdens upon it, the owner of the land would escape taxation on this increment. But I cannot see that there is any injustice in this, because, during the whole period, he must have been meeting a large part of the annual burdens out of his personal estate; and the effect of applying the provisions of the Act to his case would be to impose upon him a further charge in respect of an increment in the value of the land from which he had taken no actual benefit. The Act appears to me to be opposed to the notion of so dealing with the owner of an overburdened estate. The idea that underlies all its provisions is that an increment of value, which arises not from any expenditure on the part of the owner but from the requirements or increased prosperity of the community of the district, shall be shared in by the State to the extent of one-fifth ; but this proceeds on the assumption that the owner has actually or potentially put money in his pocket. Had it been intended that the word "value" should include a minus quantity, and that the valuers appointed by the Act were to proceed as the valuator in this case has done, I think this ought to have been clearly stated ; but I cannot gather from the sections cited any intention that the word "value" as therein used was to have a mathematical or technical meaning as distinguished from its ordinary signification. On the contrary, I think it is assumed throughout that the owner of the land from whom increment value duty is to be collected on the occasion of a transfer is receiving some consideration on the transfer ; whereas if the contention of the Crown were sound he would be liable to be taxed although he was actually paying a sum to get rid of the personal obligation which he has undertaken to the previous owner.

April 18, 1912.
 Herbert's
 Trustees v.
 Inland
 Revenue.
 Lord Salvesen.

I content myself by stating thus shortly the main ground on which I agree with the decision that your Lordship has proposed ; and I think it unnecessary, in view of the exhaustive examination you have made of the general scheme of the Act, to do more than express my general concurrence in your Lordship's criticisms.

LORD CULLEN.—By the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are directed to "cause a valuation to be made of all land in the United Kingdom showing separately the total value and the site value respectively of the land," &c. What is meant by "total value" and by "site value" respectively is defined in the 25th section of the Act. Two other values are defined in that section, viz., "gross value" and "full site value," but neither of these falls to be shown by the Commissioners' valuation.

"Total value" may be said to represent the market value of the land as it stands, that is to say, as enhanced in value (or otherwise) by buildings or other heritable accessions to the solum, and burdened with any fixed charges and restrictions which may affect it. "Full site value" is the value of the solum per se, regarded as divested of any buildings or other heritable accessions to it, and also as free from any encumbrances, fixed charges, or restrictions which may affect it. "Assessable site value" is the value of the solum, regarded as divested of buildings or other heritable accessions, but as burdened with its fixed charges and restrictions, if any.

The "assessable site value," therefore, where there is a burden of fixed charges on the land, is not the value of the land in itself, but the value, if any, of the land as so burdened. In many cases there will be a net residual value. But in others there will be none. This may happen where the fixed charges have been laid on the land as enhanced in value by buildings erected upon it and are such as the enhanced value will carry. If the value of the enhancement is eliminated, as section 25 directs, while the fixed charges are treated as remaining to their full amount as a burden on the divested site, it will often happen that the amount of the charges is greater than the actual value of the divested site, as in the case of a feuing stance of which the actual feuing value is, say, £100 per annum, but which in the statutory calculation of "assessable site value" falls to be viewed as

April 18, 1912. Herbert's Trustees v. Inland Revenue.
Lord Cullen. burdened with a feu-duty of £150 per annum. This fixed charge, if regarded as a charge only on the divested site, could never have a greater value than that of the site carrying it. But the terms of section 25 involve that, in the process of fixing "assessable site value," such a charge is to be taken at its value as secured on the undivested site. The estimate of "total value" is to allow for the burden of the fixed charge as so secured. And then there falls to be deducted from total value, in order to arrive at "assessable site value," any depreciation arising from a supposed divesting of the site. Thus, in the present case, the value of the feu-duty is stated at £1053, while the value of the divested site (full site value) is stated at £508, showing a difference of £545, being the deficiency in the value of the land per se to meet the feu-duty so estimated.

Applying the definitions in section 25, the valuer in the present case is put to do a sum in subtraction, the upper figure being £3775 of total value, while the lower is £4320, representing the statutory deductions from total value. The difference is the said sum of £545. The question is whether the intendment of the statute is that the resulting valuation shall be written down simply as nil, or shall be written down as a minus quantity (minus £545), being the amount by which the statutory deductions, as estimated by the valuer, exceed the total value, or, to state it otherwise, the amount by which the value of the land in itself falls short of its burden of feu-duty. Either mode will show an absence of any positive value in the "assessable site value." The latter will show how far the "assessable site value" falls short of positive value.

I am not aware of any other statutory system of land valuing for the purposes of taxation in which valuation at minus quantities holds place. It may be, however, that the purposes of the present statute require the use of minus quantities. The respondents so contend. They say that the increment value duty is imposed in respect of appreciation in the value of "any land" (section 1); that "land" here means the land per se; that land overloaded with a feu-duty or other fixed charges (as estimated in terms of the statute) may appreciate in value while the assessable site value, although progressing upwards, continues to be of no positive worth; and that if, in such cases, the original assessable site value be stated simply as nil, the appreciation of the land per se will not be disclosed. This is true, assuming the respondents to be right in saying that the intendment of the statute is to tax a landowner on the appreciation of the value of his land site per se, whatever its burden of fixed charges whereby it may be and remain a valueless asset in his hands. The statute does not contain any definition of the word "land" as used in section 1. It does not direct that where the total value is less than the deductions to be made from it in reaching "assessable site value" the resulting valuation is to be stated as a minus quantity; and while the respondents say that, mathematically, this is the necessary result of a direction to subtract a larger amount from a smaller, and while the referee agrees with them, I have not been able to satisfy myself that this view is in accordance with the intendment of the statute.

While the word "land," as used in section 1, is not defined, it is clear that liability for increment value duty is to be ascertained by comparing the original "assessable site value" with what may be called the "occasional site value" as ascertained at a subsequent period. Now, if the intendment of the statute were that the incidence of the increment value duty should be determined by comparing the value of the land per se as originally ascertained with its value per se as ascertained subsequently, I do not clearly see why the factor for the purposes of comparison should not have been the statutory "full site value." For that is the value of the land per se, regarding it as divested of buildings or other heritable accessions and as free from all incumbrances, charges, or restrictions. To illustrate this by reference to the figures in the present case,—if, by appreciation in the value of the land per se to the extent of £100 the referee's minus quantity were to rise from minus £545 to minus £445, the full site value, were it available for purposes of comparison, would show a similar increase. As it is, however, the statutory factor for comparison is not the value of the land per se (full site value) but the assessable site value. This represents the position in point of value of the loaded site. The Commissioners' Valuation-roll is not to be a roll showing the value of the land in itself. And it is the loaded site, apparently, which has to appreciate in value before increment value duty becomes exigible. Now, if words are to be used in their ordinary sense, I do not very well see how, in the hands of the landowner who is to be taxed, the loaded site can be said to appreciate in "value" until it comes to have, at least, some positive value. Until then, any appreciation in the value of the land per se will accrue to the holder of the excessive feu-duty or other fixed charge by enhancing the value of his security, and, consequently, the value of the fixed charge. The site owner, qua site owner, will continue bankrupt. The holder of the feu-duty or other fixed charge is not, however, brought under taxation by the statute in respect of such a betterment of his property. The respondents' contention is that the owner of the site falls to pay for the betterment, which does not provide him with a valuable asset but only goes to relieve, to some extent, his bankrupt state. This is, a priori, an improbable scheme of taxation, inasmuch as it involves that one man shall be taxed in respect of an increment in the value of property which, so far as any positive worth goes, accrues wholly to another. And while I am sensible that the construction of the statute under consideration is attended with much difficulty, I have been unable to extract from it this anomalous result.

I accordingly agree in the conclusion at which your Lordships have arrived.

THE COURT recalled the first decision of the referee which fixed the original site value of the subjects at minus £545, and affirmed the second or alternative decision fixing it at nil.

CONNELL & CAMPBELL, S.S.C.—SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

April 18, 1912.
Herbert's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.
—
Lord Cullen.

No. 131.

MRS AGNES EASTON OR EUMAN, Pursuer (Respondent).—

T. G. Robertson.

May 14, 1912.

JAMES DALZIEL & COMPANY, Defenders (Appellants).—

*W. J. Robertson.*Euman v.
Dalziel & Co.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Second Schedule, (17) (b)—A. S., 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (h)—Stated case—Refusal of arbitrator to state a case—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Form of question of law.

In arbitration proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that a workman's death resulted from injuries sustained by him owing to a fall from a ladder, and awarded compensation. A medical certificate which was produced stated the cause of death to have been appendicitis-peritonitis. The arbitrator refused a minute for the employers craving him to state a case for the opinion of the Court on the question whether the death of the deceased "was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment," on the ground that the question was one of fact and not of law.

Held that the proper question was "whether there was evidence upon which it could competently be found that the death of the workman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"; and case remitted to the arbitrator to state a case on this question.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles.

ON 14th May 1912 James Dalziel & Company, manufacturers Walkerburn, presented a note to the Court in which they prayed for an order on Mrs Agnes Easton or Euman to show cause why a case should not be stated by the Sheriff-substitute of the Lothians at Peebles (Orphoot) on appeal from a judgment which he had delivered as arbitrator in proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in which Mrs Euman claimed compensation in respect of the death of her husband while in the employment of the appellants.

The appellants set forth that it had been admitted or proved in the arbitration proceedings, inter alia, that, on 18th July 1911, Euman, whilst engaged in their employment, fell from a ladder, sustained certain injuries, and was found to be suffering from general shock and from a local injury known as "staved ankle"; that he was confined to bed for three weeks; and that in the fourth week on 15th August, he died, the cause of death being certified to be appendicitis-peritonitis.

On 12th January 1912 the Sheriff-substitute pronounced certain findings, which included the following:—"(1) That on 18th July 1911 Robert Euman, mill foreman, Walkerburn, was in the employment of the defenders as a millworker in their mills at Walkerburn when he met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his said employment, through a ladder on which he was standing accidentally slipping, whereby he was thrown to the ground and injured; (2) that the said Robert Euman died at Walkerburn on 15th August 1911; (3) that his death resulted from the injuries he received by said accident"; and awarded compensation.

The employers lodged a minute craving the Sheriff to state a case for the Court of Session on the following question of law:—"Whether the death of the said Robert Euman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the mean- May 14, 1912.

ing of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906?"

They also caused a draft stated case to be presented to the Sheriff- Euman v.
substitute for his signature containing the following questions of law : Dalziel & Co.
—" (1) Whether the arbitrator was entitled to draw from the facts stated the inference that the peritonitis which caused the death of the deceased was the result of his being confined to bed with a staved ankle? (2) Whether the death of the deceased was caused by personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment?"

The Sheriff-substitute refused to state a case or sign the draft case, and certified the following reasons for his refusal:—" (1) That the questions of law stated in the draft stated case submitted to me are not raised by the admissions made or the facts proved before me; (2) that the only question raised in this arbitration is, Did the death of Robert Euman, husband of the pursuer, on 15th August 1911, result from personal injuries sustained by him in the accident which happened to him on 18th July 1911? and (3) that that question is a question of fact."

The employers craved the Court to pronounce the required order for these reasons:—

"Because the question whether the death of the deceased did or did not result from injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, under the conditions found proved as above, is a question of law and not of fact.

"Because there was no evidence that the death of the deceased resulted from the injuries he received by the accident on 18th July aforesaid."

The case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 14th May 1912.

Argued for the respondent;—The Sheriff-substitute had rightly refused to state a case on the question whether the death of the deceased was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, as this was a question of fact, not of law. If the appellants desired to raise the question whether there was evidence before the Sheriff-substitute to support his findings, the question should have been in the form suggested by Lord Atkinson in the House of Lords in the case of Jackson v. General Steam Fishing Company,¹ viz., "Was there evidence before the Sheriff-substitute upon which he might reasonably have found that the accident by which the deceased met his death arose out of and in the course of his employment." This was quite a different question from that which had been proposed to the Sheriff-substitute, and the Court should not now direct him to state a case on a question which had not been raised before him.²

Argued for the appellants;—It was the duty of the respondent to establish, either by direct evidence or by legitimate inference from the facts proved, that the death resulted from an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment.³ This duty had not been

¹ 1909 S. C. (H. L.) 37, at p. 41.

² Rae v. Fraser, (1899) 1 F. 1017; Hobbs & Samuels v. Bradley, (1900) 2 F. 744.

³ Hawkins v. Powell Tillery Steam Coal Co., Limited, [1911] 1 K. B. 988, per Cosens Hardy, M.R., at p. 991.

May 14, 1912. discharged. The question which was raised in the present case was whether the facts proved could reasonably support the findings of the arbitrator, and this was a question of law on which the appellants were entitled to have the opinion of the Court. Though the question had not been put in this precise form to the Sheriff it was his duty to have adjusted the stated case so as to bring out the true question. Even in the form proposed to the Sheriff the question was not incompetent, for questions in that form had been admitted and considered by the Court in previous cases.¹

Euman v.
Dalziel & Co.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is an application to us to ordain the Sheriff to state a case. He has refused to state a case when asked, and the application is made in accordance with the provisions of the Act of Sederunt of 26th June 1907 which deal with that matter.

The claim is at the instance of the widow of a workman who died. He died, it seems, of peritonitis—appendicitis-peritonitis, I think, is the form of the certificate, which I suppose means that the cause of death was appendicitis, or otherwise inflammation of the appendix, and that that inflammation had spread to the peritoneum so that there was inflammation of the peritoneum as well as of the appendix. Now, the accident which he had met with—using the word “accident” in the popular sense of the word—was that he had fallen from a ladder; and one can see easily enough that the question that is really raised between the parties is whether the death was due to the accident or was not. The Sheriff-substitute, acting as arbitrator, disposed of the matter by the following findings:—(1) That the workman “met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, through a ladder on which he was standing accidentally slipping, whereby he was thrown to the ground and injured; (2) that the said Robert Euman died at Walkerburn on 15th August 1911; and (3) that his death resulted from the injuries he received by said accident”—and that is all that the interlocutor tells us about the accident; the rest of the case concerns the adjustment of the compensation.

Now, as your Lordships well know, it has been conclusively settled by decisions of the House of Lords and of this Court, that, although such appeals are by statute limited to questions of law, nevertheless they are competent when the question is whether such findings as these can be supported upon the evidence submitted, for that has been held to be a question of law. The criterion is whether anyone could reasonably have come to that conclusion. It has been said more than once that this criterion is, if not exactly the same, at least strictly analogous to the criterion we are in use to apply where we are asked to direct a new trial on the ground that the verdict of a jury is contrary to evidence. It is not a question of whether the decision is right or wrong, but a question of whether there was evidence led upon which the decision can be supported. I think as soon as that position is laid down, it is quite impossible for us to direct our minds intelligently to the question unless we have before us a stated case which will give us a description of what the evidence that was led May 14, 1912. was. Accordingly, we have more than once insisted either upon cases ^{Euman v.} being stated, or upon cases being modified which were inadequate in their ^{Dalziel & Co.} statement, so as to enable us to apply our minds intelligently to the ques- ^{Ld. President.} tion before us. I can give a very recent illustration of that in the case of Millar v. Refuge Assurance Company,¹ where, after a case was stated, we sent it back in order that it should be modified. Here I do not think there can be any doubt that the respondents had a right to have the question raised which they wished decided, namely, whether these findings of the Sheriff can reasonably be supported on the evidence given.

¹ Coe v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, 1909 S. C. 393; Blakey v. Robson, Eckford, & Co., Limited, supra, p. 334. The Lord President referred to Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, supra, p. 37.

Now, the only difficulty that I have had at all in this case is owing to the terms of the minute in which the respondents made their original crave. The minute is lodged also in terms of the Act of Sederunt, and runs thus: "Oliver for the defenders respectfully craved the Court to state a case for the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session upon the following question of law, viz., whether the death of the said Robert Euman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906." Now, strictly speaking, I think that question is wrongly put, because that is not a question for us. That would be simply asking us to reply to a question of fact upon the merits. The question is, as I have said, whether the evidence as led before the Sheriff could support the finding that he made. But although that is so, and although I think it should be made clear that the proper form of the question is as I have said, I think it would be treating the appellants too harshly if we refused to allow a case to be stated upon the ground that they phrased their question in that form, in view of the fact that there are many cases in the books where we have gone into the question of whether the evidence did support the findings in a reasonable sense upon a question phrased exactly as this question is phrased. As recently as the case of *Robson, Eckford, & Company*² (23rd December 1911) the question was phrased in that way. I think the proper form of the question is the form that is given in *Millar v. Refuge Assurance Company*¹: "Whether there was evidence upon which it could be competently found that the said James Millar sustained an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment on 9th May 1910?"

I think that is the form in which the question ought to be put. To refuse this note because it is put in a different form would, I think, be treating the appellants too hardly. I think, therefore, the case should go back to the Sheriff in order that he may state the facts proved before him upon which he found that the death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I think that in the minute presented to the Sheriff, and equally in the draft special case laid before him; the question put to him was one on which he was not bound to prepare a special case, and I cannot say he did wrong in refusing to do so. But now that the parties desiring to appeal have learned what the question ought to have been, I

¹ Supra, p. 37.

² Supra, p. 334.

No. 131.

MRS AGNES EASTON OR EUMAN, Pursuer (Respondent).—

T. G. Robertson.

May 14, 1912.

JAMES DALZIEL & COMPANY, Defenders (Appellants).—

*W. J. Robertson.*Euman v.
Dalziel & Co.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Second Schedule, (17) (b)—A. S., 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (h)—Stated case—Refusal of arbitrator to state a case—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Form of question of law.

In arbitration proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that a workman's death resulted from injuries sustained by him owing to a fall from a ladder, and awarded compensation. A medical certificate which was produced stated the cause of death to have been appendicitis-peritonitis. The arbitrator refused a minute for the employers craving him to state a case for the opinion of the Court on the question whether the death of the deceased "was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment," on the ground that the question was one of fact and not of law.

Held that the proper question was "whether there was evidence upon which it could competently be found that the death of the workman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"; and case remitted to the arbitrator to state a case on this question.

1ST DIVISION. ON 14th May 1912 James Dalziel & Company, manufacturers, Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles. Walkerburn, presented a note to the Court in which they prayed for an order on Mrs Agnes Easton or Euman to show cause why a case should not be stated by the Sheriff-substitute of the Lothians at Peebles (Orphoot) on appeal from a judgment which he had delivered as arbitrator in proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in which Mrs Euman claimed compensation in respect of the death of her husband while in the employment of the appellants.

The appellants set forth that it had been admitted or proved in the arbitration proceedings, inter alia, that, on 18th July 1911, Euman, whilst engaged in their employment, fell from a ladder, sustained certain injuries, and was found to be suffering from general shock and from a local injury known as "staved ankle"; that he was confined to bed for three weeks; and that in the fourth week, on 15th August, he died, the cause of death being certified to be appendicitis-peritonitis.

On 12th January 1912 the Sheriff-substitute pronounced certain findings, which included the following:—"(1) That on 18th July 1911 Robert Euman, mill foreman, Walkerburn, was in the employment of the defenders as a millworker in their mills at Walkerburn, when he met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his said employment, through a ladder on which he was standing accidentally slipping, whereby he was thrown to the ground and injured; (2) that the said Robert Euman died at Walkerburn on 15th August 1911; (3) that his death resulted from the injuries he received by said accident"; and awarded compensation.

The employers lodged a minute craving the Sheriff to state a case for the Court of Session on the following question of law:—"Whether the death of the said Robert Euman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906?" May 14, 1912.

They also caused a draft stated case to be presented to the Sheriff-substitute for his signature containing the following questions of law: —“(1) Whether the arbitrator was entitled to draw from the facts stated the inference that the peritonitis which caused the death of the deceased was the result of his being confined to bed with a staved ankle? (2) Whether the death of the deceased was caused by personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment?” Euman v. Dalziel & Co.

The Sheriff-substitute refused to state a case or sign the draft case, and certified the following reasons for his refusal:—“(1) That the questions of law stated in the draft stated case submitted to me are not raised by the admissions made or the facts proved before me; (2) that the only question raised in this arbitration is, Did the death of Robert Euman, husband of the pursuer, on 15th August 1911, result from personal injuries sustained by him in the accident which happened to him on 18th July 1911? and (3) that that question is a question of fact.”

The employers craved the Court to pronounce the required order for these reasons:—

“Because the question whether the death of the deceased did or did not result from injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, under the conditions found proved as above, is a question of law and not of fact.

“Because there was no evidence that the death of the deceased resulted from the injuries he received by the accident on 18th July aforesaid.”

The case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 14th May 1912.

Argued for the respondent;—The Sheriff-substitute had rightly refused to state a case on the question whether the death of the deceased was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, as this was a question of fact, not of law. If the appellants desired to raise the question whether there was evidence before the Sheriff-substitute to support his findings, the question should have been in the form suggested by Lord Atkinson in the House of Lords in the case of Jackson v. General Steam Fishing Company,¹ viz., “Was there evidence before the Sheriff-substitute upon which he might reasonably have found that the accident by which the deceased met his death arose out of and in the course of his employment.” This was quite a different question from that which had been proposed to the Sheriff-substitute, and the Court should not now direct him to state a case on a question which had not been raised before him.²

Argued for the appellants;—It was the duty of the respondent to establish, either by direct evidence or by legitimate inference from the facts proved, that the death resulted from an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment.³ This duty had not been

¹ 1909 S. C. (H. L.) 37, at p. 41.

² Rae v. Fraser, (1899) 1 F. 1017; Hobbs & Samuels v. Bradley, (1900) 2 F. 744.

³ Hawkins v. Powell Tillery Steam Coal Co., Limited, [1911] 1 K. B. 988, per Cosens Hardy, M.R., at p. 991.

May 14, 1912. discharged. The question which was raised in the present case was whether the facts proved could reasonably support the findings of the arbitrator, and this was a question of law on which the appellants were entitled to have the opinion of the Court. Though the question had not been put in this precise form to the Sheriff it was his duty to have adjusted the stated case so as to bring out the true question. Even in the form proposed to the Sheriff the question was not incompetent, for questions in that form had been admitted and considered by the Court in previous cases.¹

Euman v.
Dalziel & Co.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is an application to us to ordain the Sheriff to state a case. He has refused to state a case when asked, and the application is made in accordance with the provisions of the Act of Sederunt of 26th June 1907 which deal with that matter.

The claim is at the instance of the widow of a workman who died. He died, it seems, of peritonitis—appendicitis-peritonitis, I think, is the form of the certificate, which I suppose means that the cause of death was appendicitis, or otherwise inflammation of the appendix, and that that inflammation had spread to the peritoneum so that there was inflammation of the peritoneum as well as of the appendix. Now, the accident which he had met with—using the word “accident” in the popular sense of the word—was that he had fallen from a ladder; and one can see easily enough that the question that is really raised between the parties is whether the death was due to the accident or was not. The Sheriff-substitute, acting as arbitrator, disposed of the matter by the following findings:—(1) That the workman “met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, through a ladder on which he was standing accidentally slipping, whereby he was thrown to the ground and injured; (2) that the said Robert Euman died at Walkerburn on 15th August 1911; and (3) that his death resulted from the injuries he received by said accident”:—and that is all that the interlocutor tells us about the accident; the rest of the case concerns the adjustment of the compensation.

Now, as your Lordships well know, it has been conclusively settled by decisions of the House of Lords and of this Court, that, although such appeals are by statute limited to questions of law, nevertheless they are competent when the question is whether such findings as these can be supported upon the evidence submitted, for that has been held to be a question of law. The criterion is whether anyone could reasonably have come to that conclusion. It has been said more than once that this criterion is, if not exactly the same, at least strictly analogous to the criterion we are in use to apply where we are asked to direct a new trial on the ground that the verdict of a jury is contrary to evidence. It is not a question of whether the decision is right or wrong, but a question of whether there was evidence led upon which the decision can be supported. I think as soon as that position is laid down, it is quite impossible for us to direct our minds intelligently to the question unless we have before us a stated case which will give us a description of what the evidence that was led May 14, 1912. was. Accordingly, we have more than once insisted either upon cases ^{Euman v.} being stated, or upon cases being modified which were inadequate in their ^{Dalziel & Co.} statement, so as to enable us to apply our minds intelligently to the ques- ^{Ld. President.} tion before us. I can give a very recent illustration of that in the case of Millar v. Refuge Assurance Company,¹ where, after a case was stated, we sent it back in order that it should be modified. Here I do not think there can be any doubt that the respondents had a right to have the question raised which they wished decided, namely, whether these findings of the Sheriff can reasonably be supported on the evidence given.

¹ Coe v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, 1909 S. C. 393; Blakey v. Robson, Eckford, & Co., Limited, supra, p. 334. The Lord President referred to Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, supra, p. 37.

Now, the only difficulty that I have had at all in this case is owing to the terms of the minute in which the respondents made their original crave. The minute is lodged also in terms of the Act of Sederunt, and runs thus: "Oliver for the defenders respectfully craved the Court to state a case for the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session upon the following question of law, viz., whether the death of the said Robert Euman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906." Now, strictly speaking, I think that question is wrongly put, because that is not a question for us. That would be simply asking us to reply to a question of fact upon the merits. The question is, as I have said, whether the evidence as led before the Sheriff could support the finding that he made. But although that is so, and although I think it should be made clear that the proper form of the question is as I have said, I think it would be treating the appellants too harshly if we refused to allow a case to be stated upon the ground that they phrased their question in that form, in view of the fact that there are many cases in the books where we have gone into the question of whether the evidence did support the findings in a reasonable sense upon a question phrased exactly as this question is phrased. As recently as the case of *Robson, Eckford, & Company*² (23rd December 1911) the question was phrased in that way. I think the proper form of the question is the form that is given in *Millar v. Refuge Assurance Company*¹: "Whether there was evidence upon which it could be competently found that the said James Millar sustained an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment on 9th May 1910?"

I think that is the form in which the question ought to be put. To refuse this note because it is put in a different form would, I think, be treating the appellants too hardly. I think, therefore, the case should go back to the Sheriff in order that he may state the facts proved before him upon which he found that the death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I think that in the minute presented to the Sheriff, and equally in the draft special case laid before him; the question put to him was one on which he was not bound to prepare a special case, and I cannot say he did wrong in refusing to do so. But now that the parties desiring to appeal have learned what the question ought to have been, I

¹ Supra, p. 37.

² Supra, p. 334.

May 14, 1912. agree that it would be too stringent to refuse to let them have a case in proper form. I do so, however, with reluctance. For I think, in the interest of the Sheriff as arbitrator, it is imperative that he should know precisely what the question is to which he has got to apply his mind, and to meet which he has got to prepare a case. I think that if the proper form of question were more consistently adopted, we should not have so much difficulty in determining whether cases coming here really present the species facti which the Sheriff ought to have stated, and doubtless would have stated, had his mind been properly directed to the precise question which the case was intended to raise. And, further, the competency or incompetency of such cases would be much more easily determined. While, therefore, allowing in the circumstances a case to be stated, I should be inclined to mark this case in some such way as to indicate that as originally prepared it was incompetent.

LORD SKERRINGTON.—I agree.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor :—"Remit to the Sheriff-substitute as arbitrator to state a case upon the following question of law, viz., whether there was evidence upon which it could competently be found that the death of Robert Euman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment: Find the pursuer and respondent entitled to expenses since 12th January 1912, and remit, &c."

J. & J. GALLETLY, S.S.C.—STEEDMAN, RAMAGE, & Co., W.S.—Agents.

No. 132.

DAVID ALLEN & SONS BILLPOSTING, LIMITED, Pursuers (Respondents).—Gentles.

May 17, 1912.

THE DUNDEE AND DISTRICT BILLPOSTING COMPANY, LIMITED,
Defenders (Appellants).—J. D. Johnston.

David Allen &
Sons Billpost-ing, Limited,
v. Dundee and District Billposting Co.,
Limited.

Process—Appeal—Competency—Value of cause—Action concluding for interdict and for £50 damages—Question of interdict exhausted prior to appeal—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 51), sec. 28.

The pursuers in an action in the Sheriff Court sought to interdict the defenders from interfering with subjects of which the pursuers were tenants, and claimed the sum of £50 in respect of damages sustained or to be sustained by them through such interference. Interim interdict was granted; but before judgment was pronounced on the merits the pursuers' tenancy of the subjects expired. The Sheriff-substitute accordingly recalled the interim interdict; but, on the pecuniary conclusion, found the defenders liable in the sum sued for.

The defenders having appealed to the Court of Session, objection was taken to the competency of the appeal on the ground that the value of the cause did not exceed £50.

Held that, as all that now remained in the action was the pecuniary conclusion which was below the statutory limit, the appeal was incompetent.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Forfarshire.

ON 2nd December 1911 David Allen & Sons Billposting, Limited, brought an action of interdict and damages in the Sheriff Court of Forfarshire at Dundee against the Dundee and District Billposting Company, Limited.

The pursuers sought to interdict the defenders from interfering with a billposting stance and hoarding affixed to subjects of which May 17, 1912. they, the pursuers, were tenants, and claimed payment of the sum of £50 as the measure of damages sustained or to be sustained by them through the defenders covering advertisements displayed thereon by the pursuers with advertisements of their own. The question whether the hoarding was a trade fixture which the pursuers were entitled to remove at the end of their lease was also raised incidentally in the case, but there were no conclusions affecting this question.

David Allen &
Sons Billpost-ing, Limited,
v. Dundee and District Billposting Co.,
Limited.

Interim interdict was granted by the Sheriff-substitute (Campbell Smith) on 2nd December 1911 and, on 8th December 1911, the Sheriff (Ferguson) refused an appeal against this interlocutor.

On 7th March 1912 the Sheriff-substitute (Neish), after proof, issued an interlocutor in which he found, inter alia, that the pursuers' tenancy of the subjects had expired and that the defenders had become tenants in succession to them on 28th December 1911, and accordingly he recalled the interim interdict. He further found that the pursuers were entitled to damages in respect of the defenders' actings prior to the termination of the lease, and decerned against them for the sum sued for.

The defenders appealed to the Court of Session.

When the case was called in Single Bills of the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington), on 17th May 1912, counsel for the respondents objected to the competency of the appeal in respect that the value of the cause did not exceed £50, and argued;—The question of interdict had been finally disposed of, and was no longer a living question, as the defenders had become tenants of the stance. The only question that remained to be determined was that of damages and, as these were only laid at £50, the value of the cause was not sufficient to allow appeal.¹

Argued for the appellants;—The value of the cause fell to be ascertained as at the date when the initial writ was presented, not at that of the appeal. As the action at that date contained conclusions for interdict as well as for £50 of damages the appeal was competent.²

LORD PRESIDENT.—This case, as it was originally presented in the Sheriff Court, was an action of interdict and damages raised by a tenant of a hoarding against a tenant who succeeded him when his term of tenancy was over, upon an averment that this incoming tenant had, so to speak, assumed possession too soon, and had put his bills upon the hoarding and obliterated the bills of the prior occupant. The Sheriff-substitute granted interim interdict. At the time that he came to pronounce judgment on the question of damages the period of the pursuers' lease had expired, and therefore there was no longer room for any pronouncement upon the matter of interdict. Accordingly, the Sheriff-substitute recalled the interim interdict previously granted, and found damages due and assessed them at £50. An appeal was taken to this Court, and the respondents objected that it was incompetent, because the value of the action does not exceed £50.

I am of opinion that that is a good objection. No doubt the action, as it was originally raised, contained a conclusion for interdict, and if there

¹ Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, secs. 7 and 28.

² Thomson v. Barclay, (1883) 10 R. 694. Lord Johnston referred to Duke of Argyll v. Muir, 1910 S. C. 96.

No. 134. DUNCAN HARVEY, Pursuer (Appellant).—G. Watt, K.C.—Paton.
 May 18, 1912. ALEXANDER STURGEON AND ANOTHER, Defenders (Respondents).—Duffes.

Harvey v.
Sturgeon.

Reparation—Wrongous Apprehension—Police-Constable—Privilege—Issue—Whether malice and want of probable cause to be put in issue.

In an action of damages for wrongous apprehension, directed against two police-constables who had apprehended the pursuer without a warrant, the Court held that, in the circumstances of the case, it was unnecessary to insert malice and want of probable cause in the issue, in respect that the pursuer's averments disclosed a case of such wrongful and unreasonable conduct on the part of the defenders that their actings could not be regarded as privileged.

2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

DUNCAN HARVEY brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Glasgow against Alexander Sturgeon and Andrew Stirling, police-constables, concluding for £500 in name of damages for wrongous apprehension.

The pursuer averred that he was a partner of the firm of D. Harvey & Company, coppersmiths and brassfounders, carrying on business at 6 Eglinton Lane, Glasgow, and that he had been a partner of the firm for about eight years. The defenders were police constables attached to the Southern Division of the police force in Glasgow.

The pursuer further averred:—(Cond. 2) "On an evening in or about the beginning of February 1910 the pursuer was proceeding about 5.30 P.M. from his business premises at Eglinton Lane to a metal refinery business which is carried on by his brothers at Salkeld Street. On his arrival there he was accosted by the defenders, who maliciously and without probable cause proceeded to search his clothing, and declared that he had something concealed under his overcoat. The pursuer remonstrated with the defenders as to their conduct, and informed them of his identity. The defenders, for some reason unknown to the pursuer, had made up their minds to arrest him, and they were obviously disappointed when they discovered nothing of an incriminating nature upon him. After the defenders had got pursuer's name and address and had satisfied themselves that he had nothing to conceal they allowed him to go, but they intimated they would watch him in future. Said proceedings were wholly unjustifiable, and pursuer, who was a respectable and law-abiding citizen, was greatly annoyed at what had occurred and spoke pretty strongly to the defenders about their conduct. In consequence thereof pursuer believes and avers defenders conceived a feeling of ill-will towards him which they determined to gratify by bringing another unfounded charge against him." (Cond. 3) "On or about 25th October 1910 the pursuer left his premises before named about 5.35 P.M. and walked down Eglinton Street, his intention being to call at Salkeld Street to leave a message. At that time he was carrying a parcel containing an alarm clock which belonged to his mother, and which he was taking to a jeweller's for the purpose of being repaired. As he approached Salkeld Street he observed that the premises there were closed up. He thereupon retraced his steps along Bedford Street, and proceeded along Apsley Place, when he was arrested by the defenders, who were in plain clothes. Defender Sturgeon crept up behind him and caught hold of the said parcel. The pursuer resented the defender Sturgeon's interference, with the result that pursuer was thrown heavily against some iron railings. May 18, 1912.

Thereafter defender Sturgeon took him by the arm and the defenders marched him down through the public streets to the Southern Police- Harvey v. station, the pursuer walking between the defenders and held by Sturgeon.
On arrival there the defenders falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause stated to the official in charge that they had arrested the pursuer on the ground that he had refused to disclose the contents of his parcel and also give his name and address. The parcel was taken by the defenders from the pursuer and handed to the lieutenant in charge, who examined the same and found it to contain an alarm clock as aforesaid. The pursuer objected to being searched, but notwithstanding his remonstrance the defenders searched his person, and the contents of the various pockets were laid upon the counter of the police-station. Prior to that, however, he informed the lieutenant who he was, and stated that the defenders were all along aware of his identity. Although he was well known to the defenders, they refused to concur in his identity." (Cond. 4) "When the defenders were in the act of searching the pursuer, Detective M'Bride, who was attached to the Southern Division, came out from the detectives' room, and on realising what was taking place he informed the lieutenant that there must be some mistake, as the pursuer was a most respectable man. Notwithstanding this information the pursuer was detained in custody until said detective was sent by the lieutenant in charge to the pursuer's mother's house to verify the information both as to his identity, and as to the proprietorship of the alarm clock in question. On said statements being verified he was thereupon liberated." (Cond. 5) " . . . The arrest and charge against the pursuer was made maliciously and without probable or any cause, and was made for the purpose of injuring the pursuer in his reputation, feelings, and business. Since the incident in February 1910 the defenders have known perfectly well who the pursuer was. They have seen him frequently in the streets, and they knew he was a brother of Archibald Harvey, who is a partner in the Salkeld Street business."

It was admitted that the pursuer was arrested without a warrant.

The defenders' averments were to the effect that the pursuer was proceeding in the dark, with a parcel under his arm, towards premises which they had reason to suspect were resorted to by thieves for the purpose of disposing of stolen metal, and which were being watched by detectives; and that they had acted reasonably in insisting on ascertaining the contents of his parcel.

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The pursuer having been wrongfully arrested by the defenders without a warrant, and on a charge which was false, and having been detained in prison, is entitled to reparation for the loss thereby caused, and for the injury to his feelings and reputation. (2) The actings of the defenders having been malicious and without probable cause, he is entitled to decree as craved, with expenses.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The action is irrelevant.
(2) The defenders' whole actings towards pursuer being in the bona fide execution of their duty as police-constables, without malice and with probable cause, are privileged.

On 12th May 1911 the Sheriff-substitute (Boyd) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action as irrelevant, holding that the defenders' conduct had been reasonable, and was

May 18, 1912. accordingly privileged, and that no sufficient facts from which malice could be inferred were stated on record.

Harvey v.
Sturgeon.

The pursuer appealed to the Sheriff (Millar), who, on 12th February 1912, recalled the interlocutor appealed against, and allowed a proof before answer.

On the requirement of the pursuer, the case was remitted to the Court of Session.

The case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 18th May 1912, when the pursuer proposed the following issue for the trial of the cause:—"Whether, on or about 25th October 1910, the defenders wrongfully and illegally apprehended the pursuer in Apsley Place, Glasgow, and conveyed him to the Southern Police Office in Glasgow, to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer?"

The defenders objected to the form of the issue, and argued;—The pursuer's averments disclosed a case of privilege, and malice and want of probable cause should be inserted in the issue. This was not, as in the case of Wood,¹ an action directed against private persons. The defenders were police-constables exercising a public duty. In such circumstances the presumption was that they were acting honestly, and the onus was on the pursuer to displace that presumption by showing that in point of fact they were acting maliciously.² The action of the defenders in arresting the pursuer without a warrant was justified by section 88 of the Glasgow Police Act, 1866.³

Counsel for the pursuer was not called upon.

LORD SALVESEN.—I am of the same opinion as the Sheriff. The only point where I differ from him is when he says that this is a difficult case. I think it is a very plain case.

The pursuer here avers that he is a law-abiding citizen of Glasgow, and a partner of a firm of brassfounders; that on a certain day he was carrying a parcel containing a clock belonging to his mother, which he was taking to be repaired; and that he was suddenly pounced upon by two police-officers in plain clothes, and carried off to the police-office.

Now, it is quite true that under section 88 of the Glasgow Police Act of 1866, even such an apparently unjustifiable proceeding may be justified if the police-officers are able to show that they acted with reasonable cause, having reasonable grounds of suspicion against the person whom they treated in that way. But prima facie what they did, on the pursuer's statement, which is the only one we can consider just now, was a wrongful thing; and, accordingly, it appears to me that the pursuer is entitled to an issue in the form which has been proposed by his counsel.

If at the trial the defenders are able to persuade the jury that they acted reasonably and within the powers conferred upon them by the Glasgow

¹ Wood v. North British Railway Co., (1899) 1 F. 562.

² Hill v. Campbell, (1905) 8 F. 220, per Lord Kinnear, at p. 225; Young v. Magistrates of Glasgow, (1891) 18 R. 825.

³ 29 and 30 Vict. cap. cclxxiii., sec. 88, authorises any constable to "take into custody, and convey to the police-office any person who is either accused or reasonably suspected of having committed" certain classes of offences, "or any police offence where the name and residence of such person are unknown to the constable and cannot be readily ascertained by him."

Police Act, then a case of privilege will arise, and it will be the duty of May 18, 1912. the presiding Judge to tell the jury that if they take that view they must find for the defenders unless they are of opinion that the defenders acted maliciously. But that will arise at the trial. In the meantime I see no ground for putting malice into the issue, or assuming, in the face of the pursuer's averments to the contrary, that the defenders acted reasonably in taking him to the police-office.

Harvey v.
Sturgeon.

Lord Salvesen.

LORD GUTHRIE.—The Sheriffs have differed in this case; but I rather think the difference has arisen from the fact that the Sheriff-substitute has not only looked at the defenders' averments, which the Court may be entitled to do, but has substantially assumed that they were correct.

It is quite clear that whatever view may be taken of the opinions of the House of Lords in Pringle v. Bremner and Stirling,¹ any such proceeding is quite unwarranted. In that case, as the Sheriff brings out, there appears to have been a difference of opinion as to whether the defenders' averments could be even looked at; but I take it that Lord Colonsay when he expressed the opinion—which the Sheriff seems to read as differing from those of the other Judges—that “In judging of cases of this kind we are accustomed to examine the whole record, consisting of the statements of the pursuer, the statements of the defenders, and the answer of the pursuer,” certainly never intended that the Court should do what the Sheriff-substitute has here done, namely, not merely examine the whole record and look at the averments, but also assume, without any evidence, that the defenders' averments are correct. I think the Sheriff has taken the right view, and I agree with him.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I am entirely of the same opinion. In recent times, when there is so much publicity, very large discretionary powers have been given to police-officers which would not have been tolerated in former times. That makes it all the more necessary that, while such officers are allowed a certain margin as regards dealing with persons upon suspicion, their powers should not be stretched beyond what is reasonable, and that, when these powers are conferred by statute, they should not be stretched beyond what the statute provides or what may be reasonably inferred from its terms.

I find it difficult to imagine anything more unreasonable and more wrong on the part of police-constables than that, when a person is going along the street with a parcel under his arm, they should, because they think he may be going to some place on a suspicious errand, seize his parcel and insist upon him going to the police-office with them to answer to some charge or other which they are going to make. As a matter of fact they made no charge against him, but they tried to make out that he was arrested in what they call the execution of their duty. I cannot conceive that it should be held to be reasonable by any Magistrate or Judge that it is within the powers of the police to arrest a private citizen going along a street with a parcel under his arm, he having done nothing, not even having gone into a shop, but simply carrying the parcel under his arm.

¹ (1867) 5 Macph. (H. L.) 55.

May 18, 1912.

Harvey v.
Sturgeon.Lord Justice-
Clerk.

If the police had had a warrant to arrest the pursuer it would have been a different thing altogether, and they would have had a good excuse for arresting a law-abiding citizen in such circumstances. If they were entitled to do this to him without a warrant, they were entitled to do it to everybody who went along the street with a parcel under his arm, under the idea that he was going to some shop for an illegal purpose. I think it would be very bad practice indeed to insist in such circumstances that the general privilege which a police-constable has, viz., that he is presumed to be acting honestly in the execution of his duty, should preclude the pursuer from taking an issue that he wrongfully and illegally made this arrest.

I must say I think it is a great pity that the Sheriff-substitute has stated the case as he has done in his note. He says:—"I think it was a reasonable wish" on the part of the police-officers "to see the contents of the parcel, and I think also it would have been reasonable for the pursuer to disclose the contents at once, and had he done so, it is likely the matter would have ended there." That is all upon the assumption that the defenders' statements are true, which is not an assumption that ought to be made in considering relevancy. It is also upon the assumption that if he chose not to show them the contents of his parcel they were entitled then to arrest him. A law-abiding citizen is not to be called upon to allow himself, on the public street, to be subjected to a search by the police of any parcel he may be carrying, and his refusal to allow a search would never justify arrest. It does not give just ground for any suspicion, and cannot give reasonable ground for taking into custody. Such an idea seems most extraordinary, and it is one which can have no countenance from this Court. I must say I think this a most unfortunate case.

It may turn out when the case comes to trial that the statements of the pursuer are not substantiated as he states them, and that the statements which the defenders make are substantiated. In that case the question of malice may arise at the trial; but I see no ground whatever for interfering with the issue proposed, and I am for approving of the issue as it stands.

THE COURT approved of the issue.

REID & MILNE, W.S.—W. CARTER RUTHERFORD, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 135.

WILLIAM SMART TAYLOR, Pursuer (Respondent).—

Blackburn, K.C.—J. A. Christie.

May 21, 1912.

WYLIE & LOCHHEAD, LIMITED, Defenders (Reclaimers).—

*Horne, K.C.—T. G. Robertson.*Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

Contract—Construction—Sale—Hire-purchase agreement—Character of instalments—Appropriation of instalments as between capital and interest.

An agreement for the hire-purchase of certain furniture had endorsed on it an inventory of the furniture hired with cash prices annexed, the summation of which amounted to £7543. The agreement stipulated for payment by the hirer of annual sums of varying amount, the total of which was £8649; and further provided that the hirer might at any time become the purchaser of the furniture "by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners."

The hirer, who had in the course of several years paid in terms of the agreement sums amounting in cumulo to £4966, desiring to become the purchaser of the furniture, tendered to the owners the sum of £2577, being the difference between the sums so paid and £7543, the "endorsed price."

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

On a construction of the agreement, held (rev. judgment of Lord Cullen) that in view of the fact that in a contract of hire-purchase the instalments are calculated so as to provide for interest on so much of the capital as remains unpaid, the expression "whole sums previously paid" must refer to the portion of the sums paid attributable to capital, to the exclusion of the portion attributable to interest; and, accordingly, that the pursuer was not entitled to become the purchaser of the furniture on payment of the sum tendered.

ON 19th May 1911 William Smart Taylor, an hotel-keeper in Glasgow, brought an action against Wylie & Lochhead, Limited, furniture dealers there, in which he sought declarator that certain articles of furniture, the subject of an agreement of hire-purchase entered into between the parties, were now the absolute property of the pursuer. The summons also contained conclusions for interdicting the defenders from interfering with the pursuer in his possession and enjoyment of the furniture in question.

1st DIVISION.
Lord Cullen.

The agreement above referred to, which was dated 15th and 20th June 1906, set forth that the defenders had agreed to let to the pursuer "on a yearly hiring, the furniture and other plenishing enumerated in the inventory annexed and subscribed as relative hereto, and, in consideration thereof, the parties hereto have agreed and hereby agree as follows, viz. :—First. The hirer agrees to pay the owners an advance hire of the sum of One thousand pounds sterling on fifteenth May, Nineteen hundred and six, notwithstanding the date hereof, and thereafter to pay the owners as follows" :—

1. At 15th May 1907	£650	0	0
2. At 15th May 1908	£1044	13	10
3. At 15th May 1909	£1107	3	10
4. At 15th May 1910	£1164	13	10
5. At 15th May 1911	£1217	3	10
6. At 15th May 1912	£1264	13	10
7. At 15th May 1913	£1201	0	4

The cumulo amount of these payments was £8649, 9s. 6d.

The seventh article of the agreement was in these terms:—“(Seventh) The owners agree that the hirer may terminate the hiring by delivering up to the owners the furniture and plenishings, and that the hirer may at any time become the purchaser of said furniture and plenishings by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners.” Annexed to the agreement was an account or inventory, signed by the parties as relative thereto, giving details of the furniture hired, with the price of each individual article. The summation of these prices was £7543, 16s. 6d.*

* The import of articles 2 to 6 of the agreement was summarised thus by the Lord Ordinary :—“ Articles 2 and 3 relate to obligations of the pursuer as to the mode of keeping the hired furniture, &c. Article 4 provides that if the hirer do not duly perform the agreement, the defenders may (without prejudice to any right they may have to recover arrears of rent and damages for breach) summarily terminate the hiring and take back the furniture. Article 5 provides that, if the hiring is terminated otherwise than by pur-

May 21, 1912.

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

The pursuer averred (Cond. 4) that he had up to the date of the action paid the sums due under the agreement at their proper dates, amounting in all to £4966, 11s. 6d.; that he had intimated to the defenders his desire to become purchaser of the furniture in terms of article 7 of the agreement "by payment in cash of the thereon endorsed price under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the pursuer to the defenders"; that he had tendered to them payment of the sum of £7543, 16s. 0d. (sic), being the price endorsed on the agreement, under deduction of the sum of £4966, 11s. 6d. already paid, but that the defenders had refused to accept the difference, being £2577, 4s. 6d. The pursuer accordingly had lodged this sum in bank, and brought the present action.

The defenders' fourth answer was in these terms:—"Explained that the net or cash price of said furniture and plenishings was £7543, 16s. 6d., but the pursuer, not being in a position to purchase same on a cash basis, arranged with the defenders to acquire them on the hire-purchase system by graduated payments, in instalments, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent on said price from and after the termination of the first year, all as stipulated for in article first of said agreement. The instalments agreed on, including interest at 5 per cent, are set forth in article first of the agreement, and the total price amounts to £8649, 9s. 6d., which is the price referred to in article seventh. The following account was adjusted between the parties, and the figures therein arrived at are embodied in article first of said agreement":—
[Then followed a detailed account, showing how each instalment was made up of a payment towards capital and of interest on the unpaid balance; the interest due at 15th May 1911 being £167, 3s. 10d.; at 15th May 1912, £114, 13s. 10d.; and at 15th May 1913 (the date of the final payment), £57, 3s. 10d.] "The pursuer has paid the instalments of principal and interest to 15th May 1910 as follows:— . . . Principal, £4200; interest, £766, 11s. 6d. To enable him to become purchaser at Whitsunday 1911, there is due the balance as follows:—

Principal sum,	£7543 16 6
Paid to account,	4200 0 0
	<hr/>
	£3343 16 6
Interest due at Whitsunday 1911,	167 3 10
	<hr/>
Total balance due at Whitsunday 1911,	£3511 0 4

The pursuer is thus relieved of the interest which has not yet accrued, and this is deducted from the total price and interest as follows:—

Total price, including interest,	£8649 9 6
Paid to account,	4966 11 6
	<hr/>
	£3682 18 0
Less Interest to Whitsunday 1912, £114 13 10
Interest to Whitsunday 1913, 57 3 10
	<hr/>
	171 17 8
	<hr/>
	£3511 0 4

chase, as provided for under the seventh article, the hirer shall not be entitled to any allowance, credit, return, or set-off for payments previously made. Article 6 provides for possible giving of time, &c., by the defenders."

If the pursuer elects to become purchaser as at Whitsunday 1911, he should accordingly pay to the defenders the sum of £3511, 0s. 4d., with interest at 5 per cent thereafter. If he should not elect to become purchaser, he is due to the defenders the instalment of £1217, 3s. 10d. payable at Whitsunday 1911." Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The pursuer having the right under said agreement to become purchaser of said furniture and plenishings on payment of the sum of £2577, 4s. 6d., is entitled to decree of declarator as craved for, with expenses. (2) The defences are irrelevant.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(2) The pursuer not having right under said agreement to become purchaser of said furniture and plenishings as at Whitsunday 1911, except on a payment of £3511, 0s. 4d., the decree of declarator and interdict concluded for should be refused. (3) Interest on the price of said goods at 5 per cent having been agreed to and paid, as condescended on, the pursuer is not entitled to become purchaser except upon payment of the sum of £3511, 0s. 4d., and the defenders should be assoilzied from the conclusions of the summons, with expenses.

On 27th July 1911 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) granted decree in terms of the conclusions of the summons.*

* "OPINION.—[After narrating the terms of the agreement]—The parties are agreed that the words 'the hereon endorsed price' refer to the £7543, 16s. 6d., which is the summation of the prices in the inventory annexed to the agreement.

"The pursuer made the payments stipulated for in article 1 up to 15th May 1910, amounting to £4966, 11s. 6d. He thereafter intimated his intention to purchase the furniture in exercise of his right under article 7, and tendered to the defenders the difference between this sum and the £7543, 16s. 6d. (as the 'hereon endorsed price'), being £2577, 4s. 6d. This is prima facie in accordance with the terms of the agreement. It provides for a sum being paid annually as hire, and then gives the hirer right to purchase on paying the £7543, 16s. 6d. under deduction of the 'whole sums previously paid' by him. And these can only be the sums for hire which he had paid under article 1. No other sums are mentioned in the agreement.

"The defenders refuse to accept the £2557, 4s. 6d. tendered by the pursuer, and maintain that the sum which he is bound to pay on purchase is £3511, 0s. 4d. Now, this is a sum which cannot be arrived at within the four walls of the agreement. It is not the amount of the annual sums payable as for hire after 15th May 1910. These come to £3682, 18s. What the defenders say is that the annual sums for hire under article 1 include (1) instalments of the price of £7543, 16s. 6d., and (2) interest at 5 per cent running on the price, as reduced from time to time by the annual payments, so far as these payments are attributable to price and not to interest on it already accrued. They aver that the figures in article 1 were adjusted on this basis with the pursuer prior to being embodied in the agreement. Now, this may very well be so. Indeed, one would expect that a hire-purchase agreement would probably proceed on such lines. The difficulty is that the agreement, which supersedes any prior communings, does not express such a bargain as the defenders maintain. The payments stipulated for in article 1 are stated simply as lump payments for hire, and nothing is said as to how they are arrived at, or as to their including interest, and if so, how the interest was calculated. Under article 7, what falls to be deducted from the total cash price is 'the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners.' These can only be the whole sums paid under article

May 21, 1912.

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

The defenders reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 16th May 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The terms of article 7 of the agreement were ambiguous, and it was therefore necessary for their interpretation to refer to other parts of the deed. Such reference showed that the words “sums previously paid” must refer to sums paid to capital, to the exclusion of those paid to interest. This ambiguity was patent when one considered that circumstances might arise in which the “whole sums paid” by the hirer would amount to more than the invoiced value from which they fell to be deducted. But, assuming the actual terms of article 7 not to be in themselves ambiguous, the Court was still entitled to restrain its express terms where to allow their literal effect would lead to an inequitable result which was contrary to the obvious intention of the parties.¹ A contract of hire-purchase was a form of contract in which it was well known that the payments were so adjusted that each one should represent a payment towards capital, plus a further sum representing interest upon the balance of capital still outstanding. It must be taken that the intention of the parties was to regulate the payments in accordance with this well-established rule. Here the amounts of the instalments stipulated for in article 1 appeared quite clearly, from an examination of the figures themselves, to be calculated according to this rule (interest being allowed for at the rate of five per cent), and were capable of no other explanation. The Court therefore should restrain the expression “sums previously paid” by interpreting it as if the words “towards capital,” or words to a like effect, had been added.

Argued for the respondent;—The provision in article 7 was perfectly clear and free from ambiguity. The circumstances to which the reclaimers pointed in support of their contention to the contrary were evidence only that they had made a bad bargain. The “whole sums previously paid” could only mean those paid under article 1; and there was no reference, either there or elsewhere in the agreement, to the apportionment of any part of these payments towards interest. That being so, the Court could not seek a construction outside the

1. The defenders say it is not the whole sums paid under article 1 which fall to be deducted, but only the portions thereof ascribable to the principal of the price, and exclusive of interest on the unpaid balances of the price, according to the calculations which, they allege, preceded the agreement, whereby the sums in article 1 were arrived at. This may have been what they intended to bargain for. But, unfortunately, it is not what is said in the agreement, which is the only repository of the meaning of the contracting parties. The words of the seventh article, ‘whole sums previously paid by the hirer,’ seem to me plainly and unambiguously to refer to the whole sums paid by him under article 1. There are no other sums defined in the agreement to which they can be referred. The defenders’ argument, I think, really implies that the agreement, as it stands, does not truly express the bargain which the parties intended to make. That may be so, but I can only construe the agreement as it stands, and cannot reform it.

“Following these views, I shall grant decree in terms of the conclusions of the summons.”

¹ Dickson on Evidence, 3rd ed., sec. 1041; Pollok on Contracts, 8th ed., p. 268; Marquis of Queensberry v. Scottish Union Insurance Co., (1839) 1 D. 1203, affd. (1842) 1 Bell’s App. 183; Lee v. Alexander (1883) 10 R. (H. L.) 91.

agreement, or qualify its clear and unambiguous words by considerations of a supposed intention of the parties.¹ The words must be construed according to their primary meaning, and evidence that they were used in another sense was not admissible.²

May 21, 1912.
Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

At advising on 21st May 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In June 1906 an agreement was entered into between Wylie & Lochhead, furniture dealers in Glasgow, and Mr Taylor, hotel proprietor, the pursuer in this action, with regard to furniture which was supplied by Wylie & Lochhead for the Adelphi Hotel. The agreement is of the character, well known to us, of a hire-purchase agreement for furniture, and although every agreement must be construed by its own terms, I think it is clear that we have judicial knowledge of the general scope of such agreements. The idea of a hire-purchase agreement is that instead of the price for furniture which is supplied being paid in one sum, that price should be paid by instalments, in respect of those instalments the intending purchaser having the use of the furniture in the meantime, and the matter being so calculated that, when the last instalment is paid, the furniture then should become the property of the hirer and purchaser. It is quite evident that, according to the ordinary business view, the instalments will be so calculated as to provide for interest on so much of the principal as is not paid. All that, I think, may be taken to be common judicial knowledge of this class of agreement. But, as I said before, the particular rights of parties must be judged upon the agreement which is in question.

Now, the agreement here was embodied in a minute, and this minute we have before us. The present question arises upon what is the proper construction of one of the articles of this agreement. The first head of the agreement is that "the hirer agrees to pay the owners an advance hire of the sum of one thousand pounds sterling on fifteenth May nineteen hundred and six," and thereafter to pay various sums. All these sums are payable on 15th May, and the payments begin on 15th May 1907 and they end upon 15th May 1913. They are of varying amounts. Then, after certain clauses which provide for insurance and bind the hirer to keep the furniture in his hotel and not to take it away, and also deal with the question of what will happen if he does not pay up the instalments he has bound himself to pay, we come to the seventh clause, upon which the whole matter turns. The seventh clause is this:—"The owners agree that the hirer may terminate the hiring by delivering up to the owners the furniture and plenishings, and that the hirer may at any time become the purchaser of said furniture and plenishings by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners."

Now, what happened was this: the hirer paid his various sums duly and properly upon each 15th May down to and inclusive of the 15th May 1910. He then intimated that he wished to take advantage of the seventh clause and become owner of the furniture "by payment in cash of the

¹ Smith v. Cooke, [1891] A. C. 297, per Lord Halsbury, at p. 299.

² Shore v. Wilson, (1842) 9 C. & F. 355, per Coleridge, J., at p. 525.

May 21, 1912. hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners." Now the endorsed price, which is upon the back of the agreement, is an addition sum coming out at the total of £7543, 16s. 6d., and is arrived at by the simple addition of the detailed cash prices of the various articles of furniture which were hired.

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

Ld. President.

Accordingly, what the hirer says is that he is entitled to get the furniture upon payment of the difference between the summation of the five sums which he paid (namely, the £1000, the first sum, and then the four sums payable in 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910 respectively) and the £7543, 16s. 6d. It is, of course, obvious that, if his reading is correct, he practically is allowed to pay cash now, and is not charged any interest or any other hire-payment for the time during which he has enjoyed the furniture, that is from the beginning of the arrangement up to the present time. And accordingly the owners of the furniture, Wylie & Lochhead, say that this is not the true construction of the agreement, but that the true construction is that he must pay (if he wants to get the furniture) the difference between what he has paid and the sum which the whole sums in article 1 amount to, under deduction of that part of the payments yet to come which represents interest. The difference in tender is that the hirer offers to pay £2577, 4s. 6d., whereas the owners of the furniture say that he ought to pay £3511, 0s. 4d.

Now, the question is, What is the meaning of the agreement? The Lord Ordinary, whatever views he may have had on what the parties intended, has considered that they have expressed themselves in such a way that he cannot get beyond the expressed terms of the bargain, and that, inasmuch as "the hereon endorsed price" undoubtedly is the sum of £7543, 16s. 6d., "the whole sums previously paid" mean—and can only mean—the sums which have been paid under article 1 of the agreement. I do not think that one is driven to that construction, which obviously would be against the fair meaning of the bargain. The absurdity of the construction is probably best illustrated thus. If the pursuer chose to exercise his option under article 7 on 14th May 1913, he would have to pay only a sum of some £95; whereas, if he waited until the next day, he would get precisely the same effect, but he would have to pay £1201, 0s. 4d.—a very curious result.

It seems to me, in the first place, that if you take the agreement literally, the only way in which the hirer can become the proprietor of the furniture is by exercising the option under article 7. There is no provision in the agreement (as there might have been) for the furniture becoming ipso facto the property of the hirer upon the payment of the last instalment under article 1. Well, if one therefore reflects that article 7 is to be called in aid, that seems inevitably to point to the conclusion that "the whole sums" must really mean the whole sums previously paid towards capital, with the exclusion of interest. It is quite evident that you cannot take the expression absolutely literally, because you could not suppose that, if there had been some completely different transaction between the parties, a sum paid by the hirer to the owner under the other transaction would have entered into computation at all. The expression must refer to sums in connection with this agreement; and, for the reason I have already given, I think it can only be the sums paid to capital, and not the whole sums including May 21, 1912. interest.

Now, if that is so, you are set to find out what sums have been paid to capital. Article 1 by itself is not so explanatory, and if one was going absolutely strictly, I think it would be necessary to have a proof in order to find out how the sums provided in article 1 were made up. That however is quite unnecessary, because it is set out before us—and it is really admitted by both parties—that the figures in article 1 are arrived at by taking a five per cent interest upon the amount that still remains unpaid and deducting the instalments, as is set out in answer 4. It would be quite useless to have a proof about that, because there could only be one result. But the proof admitted would not be required and admitted in order to show what is the meaning of the agreement. I think one is bound to take the question of the construction of article 7 without any idea that one has had proof before one in the figures which are set forth in answer 4. It is only after I have come, taking the agreement by itself, to the conclusion, for the reasons that I have already stated, that “the whole sums” means the whole sums previously paid to capital, that then I think proof is allowable—not to construe the meaning of the agreement, but simply to find out what is the true arithmetical calculation upon which these figures are based, so as to arrive at what has been paid to capital and what to interest.

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.
—
Ld. President.

The result of the whole matter, in my judgment, is that the Lord Ordinary's judgment ought to be recalled ; and inasmuch as the action is brought by the hirer and the conclusions are so framed that they can only confirm his view of the agreement, I think the proper judgment is absolutor.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I entirely agree with the judgment your Lordship proposes, and I should add nothing if it were not for an argument which was strongly maintained on behalf of the defenders, and which I think is unsound. We were asked to intervene in this matter, on equitable considerations, to obviate what was represented as an injustice and a hardship upon the defenders if a literal construction was given to a certain section of the agreement. Now, I think that argument is without foundation. We cannot interfere : to do so would be to make a new contract.

I think it is worth while comparing the situation under article 4 and that under article 7 of this agreement.

Under article 4, if the hirer fails to make the continuous payments stipulated for, he forfeits not only the furniture, but all that he has already paid. That undoubtedly would be a great hardship on him and may be represented as inequitable, but the hirer has unqualifiedly and unambiguously agreed to it. If we were to do anything in the way of modifying the conditions of that section, we should certainly be re-writing the contract for him.

Under article 7 the matter is quite different. It is not a question of remodelling an unambiguous contract ; it is a question of construing an ambiguous one. No one can read article 7, with the knowledge which we are entitled to bring to a case of this sort as to what hire-purchase means, without seeing that there is a manifest ambiguity ; because if it be taken, as contended by the pursuer, literally, there might come a period in such a contract at which the sum to be deducted exceeded

May 21, 1912. the sum from which it was to be deducted. That certainly cannot be intended. But I do not think there is much difficulty in understanding what the parties meant. The ambiguity lies in the words "by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid." And it is perfectly clear that to make this consistent—because we know what the payment in cash is to be, and we know what, taken literally, the sums previously paid would be—it is necessary to give some intelligible construction to the words "the whole sums previously paid." Now, we know—or I should rather say we are entitled to know—that the sums previously paid consist of principal and interest. Although we do not really know how much is principal and how much interest, the parties do. The persons who lent on hire drew the contract and arranged these figures and must clearly understand them, and the person who took on hire must be assumed to do so also. If, then, these sums are partly principal and partly interest, it does not require very much intuition to see that "under deduction of the whole sums previously paid" must mean "under deduction of the whole sums previously paid so far as those sums consist of capital."

Taylor v.
Wylie &
Lochhead,
Limited.

Ld. Johnston.

For these reasons I entirely agree with the judgment which your Lordship proposes.

LORD SKERRINGTON.—I concur.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, and assoilzied the defenders.

E. ROLLAND M'NAB, S.S.C.—WHIGHAM & MACLEOD, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 136.

ARTHUR DALRYMPLE FORBES GORDON, Pursuer (Appellant).—
Constable, K.C.—D. M. Wilson.

May 21, 1912.

ALEXANDER HOGG, Defender (Respondent).—Johnston, K.C.— T. G. Robertson.

Gordon v.
Hogg.

Lease—Management—Outgoing—Rules of good husbandry—Five-shift rotation of crops—Obligation of tenant to sow grass seeds with waygoing white crop.

The tenant of a farm obliged himself under his lease to cultivate the same "agreeably to the rules of good husbandry," and in particular "by at least the five-shift rotation," which was therein defined. Under this rotation the white crop on one-fifth of the land at his outgoing fell to be followed by young grass in the next year.

Held that the tenant was bound in the last year of his lease to sow grass seeds along with his waygoing white crop upon that portion of the land, he receiving reasonable remuneration therefor; or, alternatively, to grant all necessary facilities to the landlord or incoming tenant to do so.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk.

ON 9th May 1911 Arthur Dalrymple Forbes Gordon, liferenter of the farm of Gordon East Mains, in Berwickshire, brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Duns against Alexander Hogg, his tenant in the farm, in which he craved the Court:—"To find and declare that the defender as outgoing tenant foresaid of the said farm and others is bound either (First) To sow down and harrow and roll in, in so far as not already done, with his waygoing crop upon said farm and others upon that break which in the year 1910 was in fallow or turnips, the usual kind and quantities of grass and clover seeds either supplied by himself or by the pursuer or the incoming tenants as the defender may elect, and upon payment by the pursuer or incoming tenants aftermentioned of fair and reasonable remuneration for all additional work and all expenses occasioned thereby; or alternatively (Second) To grant all necessary facilities and access for the pursuer or James Haliburton, and Ralph Haliburton, both farmers, Raecleuch, near Lauder, incoming tenants of said farm and others, and his or their servants, to sow, harrow, and roll in the same upon said break, in so far as not already done.”

May 21, 1912.
Gordon v.
Hogg.

In terms of the lease under which the defender occupied the farm he was outgoing tenant as to the houses and grass lands at Whitsunday 1911, and as to the lands in grain crop at the separation of the crop of that year from the ground.

The pursuer averred:—(Cond. 2) “By said lease it is, inter alia, provided:—‘With respect to the management and cropping of said lands, the said Alexander Hogg binds and obliges himself and his foresaids to labour, cultivate, and manure the same in all respects agreeably to the rules of good husbandry, and particularly without prejudice to said generality to farm and manage these parts of said lands that are arable by at least the five-shift rotation, thus to have in each year not less than one-fifth thereof in old grass, and not more than one-fifth in each of the following crops, videlicet:—Young grass, turnips, or bare fallow, white crop after grass and white crop after turnips or fallow, declaring that no two white crops shall succeed each other.’ . . . Explained further that the above narrated clauses of the foresaid lease are in identical terms with corresponding provisions in a succession of leases of said farm and others, and in particular with the corresponding provisions contained in the lease thereof in favour of the late David Allan, terminating at the entry of the defender thereto under his said lease.” (Cond. 3) “It is absolutely necessary not only to secure the labouring and cultivation of agricultural farms such as that before referred to in accordance with the rules of good husbandry, but also for the maintenance of the rotation thereof, as it is also the universally recognised practice in farming, in sowing down the grain crop immediately following upon the break of fallow or turnips, to sow also and to harrow and roll in with the grain crop grass and clover seeds in order that the land may be in young grass in the following year. From similar necessity it is also customary, in the absence of conventional provisions thereanent, in all cases of farm outgoings in which, as in the present instance, the date of vacation of the lands in grain crop is at the separation of the crop of the waygoing year from the ground, in order that the grass and clover seeds may be sown down, that the outgoing tenant should adopt one or other of the following alternatives, namely:—That the outgoing tenant should sow down and harrow and roll in along with his waygoing grain crop immediately following after fallow or turnips the usual kinds and quantities of grass and clover seeds, either supplied by himself or by the landlord or incoming tenant as the outgoing tenant may elect, upon his being paid fair and reasonable value for the seeds, if supplied by him, and for the work of sowing, harrowing, and rolling in the same, and for any other expenses properly incurred by the outgoing tenant thereanent; or, alternatively (second) that May 21, 1912. the outgoing tenant should grant all necessary facilities and access for the landlord or incoming tenant to enter upon the lands intended for said crop, and to sow the said grass and clover seeds with the said waygoing crop, and to harrow and roll in the same, or that he, the outgoing tenant, should himself harrow and roll in the same, on being paid value for so doing. It is believed and averred that in practice the second alternative is the course almost invariably followed. When conventional provisions are made thereanent, it is merely to vary the outgoing tenant's common law obligation as above, frequently to the effect of conferring on the landlord or incoming tenant the right, and taking from the outgoing tenant the option, of sowing down the seeds, and binding the outgoing tenant to harrow and roll in the same free of charge."

Gordon v.
Hogg.

The defender's answer to these averments was:—"Explained and averred that the sowing, harrowing, and rolling in of grass and clover seeds along with the waygoing grain crop of an outgoing tenant would benefit solely the landlord or incoming tenant, and is matter of bargain, by contract of lease or otherwise, between the landlord or incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant. The defender's lease contains no provisions in regard to the operations condescended on."

The pursuer further averred that the incoming tenants entered upon the fields on which grain seeds had been sown by the defender, and sowed down and harrowed in the usual grass seeds thereon; but that, after they had thus sown two fields, the defender expelled them and their servants from the farm, and refused to allow the sowing operations to be completed by either of the alternative methods referred to in condescendence 3. Consequently, 41 acres which should have been in young grass the following year remained unsown. The pursuer's averments proceeded:—(Cond. 5) "The pursuer has offered and hereby offers, and has all along been willing to pay to defender for all seeds, work, and other expenses which he might properly incur in connection with the sowing down, harrowing, and rolling in of the said grass and clover seeds, and has further offered and hereby offers, without prejudice to his and the incoming tenants' rights, that the sowing, &c., might be completed upon either alternative method or any other proper method under reservation of any claims competent to defender thereanent, but the defender persists in his refusal."

In answer the defender averred that he was willing, and had all along been willing, to allow the pursuer to enter upon the land upon which grain seeds had been sown for the purpose of sowing grass and clover seeds, the defender himself rolling in the same along with his grain seeds, provided that reasonable payment were made to the defender for rolling in the seeds, and provided that the pursuer or incoming tenant agreed to pay the amount of damage, if any (to be settled by arbitration), done to the defender's waygoing corn crop in consequence of the incoming tenant's sowing his grass seeds therewith; but that the pursuer and the incoming tenant had declined to agree to these terms.

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The defender being bound to labour and cultivate said farm in accordance with the rules of good husbandry, and separatim to preserve and maintain the rotation of cropping thereupon, and having failed to implement said obligations or either of them as stated, decree should be granted as craved. (2) The defender being bound in accordance with the common law and the custom of the said farm and surrounding district to adopt one or other of the alternatives concluded for, and having refused to implement same, decree should be granted as craved. May 21, 1912.

Gordon v.
Hogg.

The defender pleaded;—(1) The defender not having failed to implement any of the obligations incumbent upon him as tenant of the said farm either under his lease or at common law, decree of absolvitor should be pronounced, with expenses. (2) The defender having afforded to the pursuer upon reasonable terms every facility for carrying out the operations referred to in the conclusions of the initial writ, he should be assoilzied with expenses.

On 15th July 1911 the Sheriff-substitute (Macaulay Smith), after a proof, pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Finds in fact (1) that the defender under a lease of fifteen years was tenant of the farm of Gordon East Mains down to Whitsunday 1911 as to houses and grass; (2) that about one-fifth part of these subjects, now under white crop, is not to be vacated by him till the separation of said crop; (3) that in or about the month of April 1911 the defender was requested by pursuer either himself to sow or to grant facilities for his successor, the incoming tenant, to sow grass seeds along with said crop of corn in order to provide young grass for said incoming tenant, and at same time preserve the rotation of cropping; (4) that defender, after having permitted a portion of said ground to be sown by his successor, refused to allow the remainder to be sown except upon the granting to him by the incoming tenant of certain conditions which, inter alia, included a reference to arbiters; (5) that in consequence of defender's refusal a portion of said subjects consisting of about 41 acres is still unsown with grass seeds; (6) that under his said lease the defender was bound to observe the rules of good husbandry and to follow a regular rotation of crops known as the five-shift rotation; (7) that there is no clause in said lease explicitly binding the defender to sow grass seeds as described, nor reserving to the pursuer the right to permit anyone else to come upon the subjects to do so; (8) that in agricultural districts generally there is a practice or custom proved to exist under which sowing of grass seeds with a waygoing crop is carried out either by the outgoing or incoming tenant by arrangement between themselves; and (9) that the defender, in terms of some form of arrangement with his predecessor in the lease, was allowed, under certain conditions, to sow grass seed with his predecessor's waygoing corn crop: Finds in law (1) that the defender is not bound by said practice or custom either himself to sow grass seeds as described, or to permit his successor in the lease to do so; and (2) that he is not bound to do so either by the fact of his having himself had access at the beginning of his lease for sowing grass seeds, or by the terms of his lease: Therefore refuses the crave of the initial writ."

The pursuer appealed, and the case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 15th May 1912.¹

¹ The following authorities were referred to in argument:—For the appellant—Purves v. Rutherford, (1822) 2 S. 53; Marshall v. Walker, (1869) 7 Macph. 833; Simson's Trustee v. Carnegie, (1870) 8 Macph. 811. For the respondent—Lyll v. Cooper, (1832) 11 S. 96, per Lord Balgray, at p. 116; Stark v. Edmonstone, (1826) 5 S. 45; Hunter on Landlord and Tenant, vol. ii., p. 630.

May 21, 1912. At advising on 21st May 1912,—

Gordon v.
Hogg.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This case raises the question whether a landlord is or is not entitled to have grass seed sown along with the white crop under a five-shift rotation in the last year of the lease. The lease in question binds the tenant "to labour, cultivate, and manure" the lands "in all respects agreeably to the rules of good husbandry, and particularly, without prejudice to said generality, to farm and manage these parts of said lands that are arable by at least the five-shift rotation."

Now, the whole question, it seems to me, comes to be what is the five-shift rotation, and secondly, is the sowing of grass seed with the white crop part of that rotation? I cannot imagine that anybody, whether lawyer or farmer, could give any but the one answer. But I will take two witnesses, who will do as well as more. The first I take is Mr Davidson, a well-known authority on the subject, who says this: "I would say that the failure to have these grass seeds sown is a complete violation of the rules of good husbandry, and also of the fifth-shift system. It is plain you can't have that system unless it is done." And the other is Mr Forrest, Edrom, a witness for the defender, who, in his examination-in-chief, gives us the advantage of some legal views as to what the tenant is bound to do in the last year of the lease, but who, when he is cross-examined, not upon legal views but upon what actually happens, says that he has sown grass seeds after harvest if the sowing which had been done previously had mis-given, that is to say, come to grief. And he goes on thus: "With that exception I have always sown down my grass seeds with the waygoing crop. I have never known of anybody on the fifth shift who did not follow that procedure. (Q.) Would you say that anybody who did not do that was following the rules of good husbandry? (A.) He could not do it otherwise."

I think these two witnesses are quite enough to confirm one in what one might say was part of judicial knowledge, namely, that it is part of the five-shift rotation to sow down grass seeds with the white crop so as to get the young grass in terms of the rotation. Now, I do not think that custom, that is to say custom in a technical sense, has anything to do with this. Custom in a non-technical sense has, because custom, or what everybody does, may serve to show how the five-shift rotation is in practice carried out. When the sowing of the grass seeds is done by the tenant, who is leaving, in the last year of the lease, then custom, in the technical sense, has provided that he shall be remunerated for the grass seeds (if he provides them) inasmuch as he is not going to reap the grass which he has sown, and also that he shall have the right (if they are provided by the landlord or the incoming tenant) to be paid for his labour in sowing them, and for harrowing and rolling them in, unless there are special stipulations in the lease providing that he is to do it for nothing.

I must say that I think it is exceedingly clear that this tenant had no right to take up the attitude he did during the last year of his lease and to say that, by refusing to sow grass seeds himself and preventing the landlord or his assignee, the incoming tenant, doing so, he would make it impossible for the five-shift rotation to be carried on, that five-shift rotation being the particular thing which he was bound to see carried out.

Accordingly, I think the Sheriff-substitute is wrong, and that the appeal May 21, 1912. should be allowed.

Gordon v.
Hogg.

LORD JOHNSTON.—This lease has, as it seems to me, the unusual merit of brevity ; but, at the same time, it contains an exact statement of the situation that was intended to be created between the landlord and his tenant, during its currency, and between the landlord and the outgoing tenant on the one side, and between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant on the other. The lease is also drawn evidently with an accurate knowledge of agriculture so far as bearing on the matter, and if agricultural knowledge had been applied to its interpretation, instead of legal ingenuity, this litigation would not have occurred.

To come to the details of the lease, if the farm is to be cultivated upon a five-shift rotation, it must be so cultivated. What, then, is the five-shift rotation? I do not take this from my own knowledge, I take it from the lease itself. The five-shift rotation is : first year, old grass ; second year, white crop after grass ; third year, green crop or bare fallow ; fourth year, white crop after green crop or fallow ; and fifth year, young grass. Now, how is the young grass to get there? It can only get there, according to the rules of good husbandry, by being sown with the white crop. That is the course which, on the five-shift rotation, the tenant was bound to follow, and if he does not, there will be no young grass to follow the last white crop, and as Mr Forrest says in two lines after the passage your Lordship quoted, "If there was no young grass on the farm it would throw it out of rotation for the incoming tenant."

Now, that is just exactly what this outgoing tenant has maintained his right to do. But it seems to me that he is not entitled to say that he has fulfilled the conditions of his lease, if when at the end of his lease he is sowing out his last grain crop, he does not also do that which is part of the due cultivation of the farm on a five years' rotation, and with that grain crop sow out grass seeds for the next year's grass. I do not think, therefore, that there is any question whatever that it was an obligation on the outgoing tenant under this lease to sow out with the last white crop grass seeds to provide young grass for next year. Without doing so, his obligation to cultivate the farm under a five-shift rotation according to the rules of good husbandry would not be fully implemented.

It is perfectly true in many, and probably in most cases, that the incoming tenant is, by arrangement, allowed to come in and sow the grass seed for himself, because—while the obligation is as I have stated—it is, if not expressed, implied by custom that the incoming tenant must pay for the seed, the grass of which he is to reap, and for the cost of sowing it. But this coming in and sowing is not his right. It is a mere arrangement for mutual convenience between the outgoing and the incoming tenant, that the incoming tenant should be allowed to do himself that which he must otherwise pay for, and the doing of which is not a matter of profit to the outgoing tenant. But that does not affect the obligation upon the outgoing tenant in such a lease as the present to sow the grass seeds with the waygoing crop, receiving the cost of the seeds and sowing from the incoming tenant.

I therefore agree with the judgment which your Lordship proposes.

May 21, 1912. LORD SKERRINGTON.—I concur.

Gordon v.
Hogg.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Recall the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute dated 15th July 1911: Find in fact in terms of the first six findings in fact in said interlocutor: Find further in fact (7) that the five-shift rotation requires that grass be sown along with the grain crop on the fields in question: Find in law that the pursuer is entitled to decree as craved: Find and declare accordingly in terms of the crave of the initial writ, and decern; find the pursuer and appellant entitled to expenses, and remit," &c.

KINMONT & MAXWELL, W.S.—STEEDMAN & RICHARDSON, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 137. THE GLASGOW GOLDSMITHS COMPANY, Pursuers (Appellants).—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—Wark.

May 24, 1912. MACKENZIE & COMPANY AND ANOTHER, Defenders (Respondents).—
Morison, K.C.—T. G. Robertson.

Glasgow Goldsmiths Company v. Mackenzie & Co.

Penalty—Recovery of statutory penalty—Procedure—Summary application—Sheriff—Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836 (6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 69), secs. 2, 18, and 22—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. VII. cap. 65), sec. 4.

Proceedings for the recovery of penalties under the Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836, must be brought under the forms of the Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, and not in the form of an ordinary action in the Sheriff Court.

1st DIVISION. IN March 1911 the Glasgow Goldsmiths Company brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Stirling against Mackenzie & Company, silver-smiths there, and against John Mackenzie, the only known partner of that firm, for the recovery of penalties alleged to be due under the Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836.*

* The Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836 (6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 69), imposes certain penalties by sec. 2 for using or striking on plate marks other than those prescribed by the statute, and by section 18 for selling or exposing for sale plate not duly marked, and enacts:—Sec. 22. "All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this Act shall be recovered by any person or persons who shall sue for the same before any two Justices of the Peace having jurisdiction within the county, city, burgh, or place in which the offence shall have been committed or where the alleged offender shall reside, or before the Sheriff of any such county; and it shall be lawful for such Justices or Sheriff to proceed in a summary way, and to grant warrant for bringing the parties complained of immediately before them or him, and on proof by the confession of the offender, or on the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses or other legal evidence, forthwith to determine and give judgment in such complaint; and if on conviction the penalties hereby imposed be not immediately paid, the said Justices or Sheriff are hereby empowered to grant warrant for the recovery thereof, and of the expenses decreed for, by poinding and sale, according to the law of Scotland; and in case such penalties shall not be forthwith paid upon conviction, and if by the confession of the offender, or the report of a Sheriff's officer or constable, it shall appear that no sufficient goods or effects can be found within any place in the said county known to such officer or constable, then

The pursuers averred that the defenders had (1) struck on certain articles of silver-plate marks other than those prescribed by the Act, in contravention of section 2 thereof; and (2) exposed the same for sale, in contravention of section 18 thereof.

The pursuers craved the Court:—"To grant a decree against the defenders ordaining them to forfeit and pay (first) the sum of £100 in respect of each of the offences committed by the defenders under section 2 of said Act, 6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 69; and (second) the sum of £100, or such other sum as the Court may think right, in respect of each of the offences committed by the defenders under section 18 of said Act."

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The Court has no jurisdiction, in respect proceedings in the inferior Courts for recovery of alleged penalties imposed by the statute founded on can only be brought in the Sheriff's Criminal Court under the Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908.

On 17th July 1911 the Sheriff-substitute (Mitchell) sustained the defenders' plea of no jurisdiction and dismissed the action.

On 24th October 1911 the Sheriff (Lees), on appeal, adhered to that interlocutor.

The pursuers appealed, and the case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 24th May 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—The terms of section 22 of the Plate Act did not prescribe summary procedure as necessary for the recovery of penalties, they merely permitted such procedure to be adopted. The opening words of the section conferred upon a common informer the right to sue for penalties in unlimited terms, and it must be assumed that the ordinary forms of Court were available.¹ The remaining part of the section provided an alternative method of procedure of which the Sheriff might, but need not, avail himself. An action for the recovery of a penalty was not necessarily a criminal it shall be lawful for such Justices or Sheriff, by a warrant under their or his hand, to cause such offender or offenders to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for the said county where the matter of complaint may arise, or for the nearest burgh in such county, there to remain without bail for such time as such Justices or Sheriff shall direct, not exceeding six calendar months, unless such penalties and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof shall be sooner paid and satisfied; and the penalties so paid or recovered shall belong, one-half thereof to the person or persons suing for the same, and the other half thereof to His Majesty, his heirs and successors: Provided always that . . . the judgment of such Sheriff . . . shall be final, and shall not be subject to review by advocacy, suspension, reduction, or otherwise."

The Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. VII. cap. 65), enacts:—

Sec. 4. "This Act, so far as relating to summary procedure, shall apply to summary proceedings in respect of . . . (b) any offence or the recovery of a penalty under any statute which does not exclude summary procedure . . ."

Sec. 6. "Nothing contained in this Act shall affect any right to sue for any penalty, or to apply for any order of Court or other warrant ad factum prestandum in the Court of Session or Sheriff Court, but it shall not be competent to sue for penalties in the Small-Debt Court."

¹ Crewer v. Wright, (1883) 2 Guthrie's Sheriff Court Cases, 412.

May 24, 1912. proceeding as the learned Sheriffs had apparently thought.¹ The words of the section which applied to the recovery of this particular penalty pointed to its being a civil proceeding. The expression used "to sue for," was not appropriate to a criminal proceeding, and, further, the concluding words of the section pointed in the same direction, "advocation" and "suspension" being appropriate to civil as well as to criminal proceedings, "reduction" to civil proceedings only. In any case, the reservation in section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1908, expressly excepted the present case from the operation of that Act. There was no force in the objection that the pursuers were suing for the whole penalty when they were only entitled to recover one-half thereof. Section 22 expressly authorised them to do so.

Glasgow Goldsmiths Company v. Mackenzie & Co.

Argued for the respondents;—The form in which the action was brought was bad. It was an ordinary petitory action, and the name of the payee was not given in the initial writ. Such an action had been held to be incompetent.² Further, the pursuers sued for a sum one-half of which was payable to another party. The action, if civil procedure were competent, should have been brought at the joint instance of the pursuers and the Lord Advocate.³ The pursuers had cited no instance of the recovery of a penalty by means of an ordinary civil action. A summary criminal proceeding was the appropriate form of action.⁴ In any case the question was settled by the terms of section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1908, which swept in all actions for any offence which might be tried in a summary way, or for recovery of a penalty where summary procedure was not excluded.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I think that the result to which the Sheriffs have come is right, although I am not quite certain that I have come to that conclusion on the same grounds as the Sheriffs did, because in their notes they have touched upon many topics which are not necessary for the disposal of the action.

The question must necessarily turn upon what is the true interpretation of section 22 of the Plate (Scotland) Act. Now, I think when one reads that section it is quite clear that the only procedure which is contemplated is procedure of a summary character, and that it is not meant there to give ordinary civil action—it may be for very large sums of money—with a privative jurisdiction to the Sheriff Court or the Court of the Justices of the Peace. If that is so, the right view of the procedure that is contemplated by section 22 is that it was meant to be a summary application, and then all difficulty is really at an end. There might have been difficulties as to review under the earlier law, but under the existing law, as the result of the two statutes—the Sheriff Courts Act of 1907 and the Sum-

¹ Campbell v. Young, (1835) 13 S. 535; Dunlop v. Hart, (1835) 13 S. 1173; M'Donald v. Gray, (1844) 2 Broun, 107; Macdonald v. Young, (1862) 4 Irv. 154; Caledonian Railway Co. v. M'Gregor, (1909) 46 S. L. R. 721; Moncreiff's Review in Criminal Cases, 273 and 279.

² Hardie v. Brown, Baker, & Bell, (1907) 15 S. L. T. 539.

³ Paterson v. Robson, (1872) 11 Macph. 76.

⁴ Glasgow City and District Railway Co. v. Hutchison's Trustees, (1884) 11 R. (J.) 43, 5 Coup. 420.

mary Jurisdiction Act of 1908—it is quite clear that the proceedings must be taken under the forms of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, because there is nothing else left.

Now, admittedly, this is not a procedure under the forms of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, and therefore I think the action fails, there being no warrant for it being brought in the form in which it has been.

May 24, 1912.
Glasgow Goldsmiths Company v. MacKenzie & Co.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I agree with your Lordship. I have come to the same conclusion as the Sheriffs, although I do not wish to be held as endorsing everything that they say on the subject. Section 22 gives right to sue for a penalty, and, as I read it, says that if you do sue you must sue in the following way, and that following way is a summary way. Whether the suit is civil or criminal we do not need to decide, but it certainly cannot be entertained under the ordinary civil procedure of the Sheriff Court.

LORD SKERRINGTON.—I concur.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

GILL & PRINGLE, W.S.—DUGALD MACLEAN, Solicitor—Agents.

ROBERT KIRKLAND MILLS, Pursuer (Respondent).—Morison, K.C.— No. 138.
C. H. Brown.

KELVIN & JAMES WHITE, LIMITED, Defenders (Reclaimers).— May 28, 1912.
Macmillan, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

Process—Proof—Diligence for recovery of documents—Action of damages for criminal charge made maliciously and without probable cause—Precognitions supplied to Crown officials. Mills v. Kelvin & James White, Limited.

In an action of damages in respect of a criminal charge, alleged to have been made maliciously and without probable cause, and to have been contained in certain documents including precognitions lodged by the defenders with the criminal authorities, the Court granted diligence at the instance of the pursuer for recovery of the precognitions, no objection to their production being stated for the Lord Advocate.

ON 28th December 1911 Robert Kirkland Mills, instrument maker, 1st Division, brought an action of damages against Kelvin & James White, Ld. Ormidale, Limited, nautical and scientific instrument makers, Glasgow, on the ground that the defenders had falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause lodged criminal information with the Procurator-fiscal, Glasgow, against the pursuer, charging him with theft and fraud.

The pursuer averred :—"The defenders have prevented the pursuer from obtaining the documents which the defenders, through their law-agent and directors, lodged with the criminal authorities, but he believes and avers that the charge of theft was contained in a statement lodged in or about November 1911 with the Procurator-fiscal, and the charge of fraud was made in or about the month of December or January following, and was contained in what purported to be precognitions and statements of certain of the defenders' directors and servants."

On 20th March 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Ormidale) granted diligence for the recovery of documents in terms of a specification lodged by the pursuer, the first article of which (as amended by the May 28, 1912. Lord Ordinary) was in these terms:—"All charges, statements, or other writings, lodged by the defenders or their solicitor or by any of their directors with the Procurator-fiscal, Glasgow, or the Crown Agent, Edinburgh, and relating to charges of theft or fraud against the pursuer, between 1st November 1911 and 16th January 1912."

Mills v.
Kelvin &
James White,
Limited.

The defenders reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First Division on 28th May 1912.

Counsel for the reclaimers stated that they did not object to the recovery, under the first article of the specification, of such documents as were covered by the diligence craved in *Henderson v. Robertson*¹; but argued that precognitions supplied to the Crown authorities were not recoverable, being in the same position as precognitions taken by the Procurator-fiscal.²

Counsel for the respondent were not called on to reply on this point.

The Court were informed that the specification had been intimated to the Lord Advocate, and that he had lodged no objections.

THE COURT (the Lord President, Lord Kinnear, Lord Johnston, and Lord Mackenzie), without delivering opinions, adhered.

CARMICHAEL & MILLER, W.S.—ALEX. MORISON & Co., W.S.—Agents.

No. 139.

ARCHIBALD CALLAN HUNTER, Pursuer (Respondent).—

Morison, K.C.—T. G. Robertson.

May 28, 1912.

JOHN BROWN & COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Appellants).—

Macmillan, K.C.—James Stevenson.

Hunter v.

John Brown &
Co., Limited.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sec. 1 (3)—Application for arbitration—Competency—Compensation being paid—"Question" arising under the Act.

A workman, who was receiving full compensation for total incapacity under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, applied for the registration of a memorandum of agreement for payment of compensation at that rate until ended, diminished, &c., in terms of the Act. The genuineness of this memorandum was objected to by the employers, on the ground that the workman had signed a receipt bearing that he had agreed that compensation should be paid only while his employers were of opinion that his incapacity continued. The workman accordingly abandoned the application.

He then presented an application for arbitration to fix the amount of compensation, to the competency of which the employers objected on the ground that, as full compensation was being paid, there was no "question" arising in any proceedings under the Act within the meaning of sec. 1 (3) thereof. Held, in the circumstances, that there was a "question" in the sense of the Act, and that the workman was entitled to apply for and to obtain an award of compensation.

2D DIVISION. ON 7th December 1911 Archibald Callan Hunter, a labourer in the employment of John Brown & Company, Limited, engineers and shipbuilders, Clydebank, applied in the Sheriff Court at Dumbarton for an award of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Prior to this application Hunter had (as stated in the Sheriff-substitute's interlocutor infra) made two applications to have a memorandum of agreement recorded in the special register in terms May 28, 1912. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, but on both occasions the employers objected to the genuineness of the memorandum, and both applications were abandoned.

¹ (1853) 15 D. 292, at p. 293.

² Sheridan v. Peel, 1907 S. C. 577.

Hunter v.
John Brown &
Co., Limited.

In the application for an award of compensation the Sheriff-substitute (Blair) awarded compensation, and, at the request of the employers, stated a case for appeal.

The case set forth that it was admitted that on 24th March 1911 the respondent was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment with the appellants; that his average weekly wages were 25s.; and that compensation at the rate of 12s. 6d. a week had been paid to him regularly since the date of the accident, and was being paid to him at the date of the case.

The case also set forth:—"On 7th December 1911 the respondent lodged a petition in the Sheriff Court of Dumbarton narrating the [admitted] facts, and stating that the question which had arisen between the parties is what is the amount of compensation due to the respondent, and craving an award for the compensation due to the respondent under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. This petition, which was by way of initial writ, and contained only a bare statement of claim, called in Court at Dumbarton on 19th December following, when the appellants lodged a written note of defence maintaining that the application was incompetent and premature in respect that there were no questions in dispute between the parties in terms of section 1 (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906,* so as to entitle the workman to present a petition for arbitration. In the note of defence it was admitted that the respondent was injured in the appellants' employment on 24th March 1911, that he was still incapacitated as the result of that accident, that the appellants were paying the respondent compensation at the rate of 12s. 6d. per week, being one half of his average weekly wage of 25s., and that the respondent had accepted, and was still accepting, this compensation. The appellants therefore craved that the application should be dismissed as incompetent and premature, with expenses.

"Nothing was said in the note of defence by the appellants about the respondent having signed the form of receipt now objected to and hereinafter set forth.

"I heard parties' procurators on these pleadings on 19th December 1911, when the respondent's agent submitted, for the first time in these proceedings and in answer to the note of defence, a copy of receipt which he alleged the respondent had signed on receiving his first payment of compensation, in the following terms:—

"Received from Messrs John Brown & Company, Limited, engineers and shipbuilders, the sum of 12s. 6d., being compensation due to me in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in respect of injuries which I received through an accident while in their employment; and I acknowledge that my employers and I have agreed that compensation shall be paid to me under this agreement only while the said John Brown & Company, Limited, are of opinion

* The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), enacts:—Sec. 1 (3) "If any question arises in any proceedings under this Act as to the liability to pay compensation under this Act . . . or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, the question if not settled by agreement shall . . . be settled by arbitration. . . ."

May 28, 1912. that my incapacity continues, and when they are of opinion that my incapacity has ceased, this agreement shall end. Reserving to me
Hunter v. my rights otherwise to recover further compensation should I claim John Brown & Co., Limited. to be entitled to it. ARCHD. C. HUNTER.'

" A copy receipt was lodged in this process, but the original was not. It was and still is in the possession of the appellants, and it has never been produced by them. The appellants requested me to dismiss the petition on the ground stated in their note of defence. Respondent craved a proof.

" I refused the appellants' motion, and fixed a diet of proof, which took place on 11th January 1912. The respondent led evidence. The appellants refused to cross-examine the respondent's witnesses, and led no evidence on their own behalf.

" On 15th January 1912 I issued an interlocutor finding proved, inter alia, the facts admitted on both sides. I further found proved the following facts:—(1) that the respondent, on 15th May 1911, attended at the shipyard to receive his first payment of compensation; (2) that he was one of a long line of men also waiting to receive compensation; (3) that when he was opposite the pay window, the appellants' clerk handed him a sum of money amounting to £4, 9s. 3d., stating that it was compensation for seven weeks and two days, and placed the printed form of receipt already mentioned before him, and asked him to sign it, which he did; (4) that its terms were not read over or explained to him in any way, nor was his attention directed to the fact that its terms made the appellants the sole judges of whether and when the respondent had recovered from his injuries; (5) that the respondent signed the receipt under essential error, in the belief that he was acknowledging only the sum handed to him by the appellants' clerk; (6) that on the 7th of June 1911 the respondent lodged in this Sheriff Court a memo. of agreement, to be recorded in the Special Register, to the following effect:—'That on the 7th of April 1911 the appellants agreed to pay to the respondent compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, at the rate of 12s. 6d. per week, beginning the first payment as at 31st March 1911, and to continue the payment thereof until the same is ended, diminished, redeemed, or suspended in terms of the said Act,' and the appellants lodged a minute in answer, objecting to the genuineness of that memorandum of agreement; (7) that on the 17th day of June 1911 the respondent lodged another memo. of agreement made on the 15th of May 1911, to be recorded in said register, whereby the appellants agreed to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, at the rate of 12s. 6d. per week, beginning the first payment as at 31st March 1911, and to continue the payments thereof until the same is ended, diminished, redeemed, or suspended, in terms of the said Act; and the appellants lodged a further minute objecting to the genuineness of that second memorandum of agreement; and (8) both petitions to record presented by the respondent were thereupon abandoned, because of the terms of the receipt granted to the appellants, and set up by them as their objection to the genuineness of the memo. sought to be recorded. The appellants at the diet of proof intimated that they had no intention of binding the respondent down to the terms of the said receipt. I asked them to put in a minute to that effect. They declined.

" It was further proved that the respondent thereafter continued to receive his compensation without interruption. Accordingly, I issued an award, and found that the receipt in question was a form May 28, 1912.

 of contracting out not authorised by the said Act; that it was signed by the respondent under essential error; that the only agreement ^{Hunter v.} entered into by the respondent was to receive compensation in terms ^{John Brown &} of the Act; that the only way in which the respondent could protect ^{Co., Limited.} himself against the appellants constituting themselves the sole judges as to when his compensation should terminate was by an award, especially in face of the fact that the appellants declined to put in a minute superseding all or any effect which the said receipt might have, and also in face of the fact that when the respondent had lodged a simple memo. to record, the appellants disputed the genuine ness thereof, and set up the aforementioned receipt as the real agreement between the parties; that the respondent had not recovered from the effects of his injury, and that he was entitled to compensation at the rate of 12s. 6d. per week from the date of said accident, so far as not already paid, and to continue until further orders of the Court: And I further found the appellants liable in five guineas of modified expenses.

“The validity of this form of receipt under the Workmen’s Compensation Act is a constant source of discussion between the appellants and their workmen in compensation cases in the Sheriff Court, and it is earnestly desired by both parties that this question should be definitely settled by the judgment of the Court of Session.”

The questions of law were:—“(1) Was the receipt in question, as a receipt, a proper and competent form of receipt within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1906? (2) Was the said receipt, so far as it purports to be an agreement, a competent and proper agreement in terms of the Workmen’s Compensation Act?
 (3) In the circumstances, and in respect that the appellants paid, and have continued to pay, half wages to the respondent, was the procedure adopted by the respondent in asking for an award, and the award following thereon, competent?”

The case was heard before the Second Division on 28th May 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—It was a condition of arbitration that there should be a difference between the parties on the matters mentioned in section 1 (3) of the Act.¹ There was no such dispute in the present case; for although there was no written agreement, the appellants were actually paying compensation to the respondent.

Argued for the respondent;—The respondent was entitled to have his right to compensation established so as to be in a position to enforce that right in the future. There were only two methods of establishing his right, viz., (1) by recording a memorandum of agreement; and (2) by an application for arbitration. The respondent had failed in his attempt to have a memorandum recorded, and the second course alone remained. If he failed in this application then he might be met in the future with the objection that he had not made his claim within six months.² There was here a dispute between the parties, as was clear from the fact that the appel-

¹ Caledon Shipbuilding and Engineering Co., Limited, v. Kennedy, (1906)
 8 F. 960; Gourlay Brothers & Co. (Dundee), Limited, v. Sweeney, (1906)
 8 F. 965. Reference was also made to the Lord President’s observations in John Brown & Co., Limited, v. Orr, 1910 S. C. 526.

² Rendall v. Hill’s Dry Docks and Engineering Co., [1900] 2 Q. B. 245.

May 28, 1912. the Act, whether as to liability, amount, or duration, and if it be also the fact that the question had not been settled by agreement, then the respondent here was entitled to take the course he did in bringing a petition at that date. It seems to me quite clear that there was a double question as at that date, namely, first, as to the existence of an obligation, depending on the receipt; and, second, if the obligation did exist legally, was it one that could be enforced?

Hunter v.

John Brown & Co., Limited.

Lord Guthrie.

It is said, however, that supposing there was a question at that date the defence put in by the appellants disposed of it. I find no such defence stated by the Sheriff-substitute, because there was no admission that the compensation could only be ended in terms of the Act. It is further suggested that at all events now, after what happened later, the whole dispute between the parties has disappeared, because the appellants at the date of the proof intimated that they had no intention of binding the respondent down to the terms of the receipt. They declined, however, to put in a minute putting themselves under any obligation to that effect; and therefore it seems to me, as at 7th December, and also as at the present moment, there was and is a dispute between the parties which the respondent is entitled to have settled in the way that he has taken.

I think, therefore, that the third question must be answered as your Lordships propose. It is a pity that the only question of great general importance, and it is of great general importance and may be of great difficulty, raised in the case in the first and second questions, could not be answered, but that is the position.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I agree with your Lordships in holding that the first and second questions ought not to be answered by us. The questions are not really based on anything before us and cannot be dealt with by this Court. As regards the third question I have had some difficulty, but, in the circumstances of the case, I have come to agree that, as there was a receipt by the workman in such terms as to imply that the employers were to pay compensation only for so long as they chose to do so, that was sufficient to justify the workman in making an application to have the question settled.

THE COURT found that the first and second questions were not such as the Court was called upon to answer, and answered the third question in the affirmative.

GARDINER & MACFIE, S.S.C.—AULD & MACDONALD, W.S.—Agents.

JAMES BOGLE GIBSON (Trustee on the Sequestrated Estate of the late David Chrystal) AND OTHERS, First Parties.—Cooper, K.C.—C. H. Brown. No. 140.
May 30, 1912.

MRS ELIZA AUGUSTA SMITH OR CHRYSTAL, Second Party.—M'Lennan, K.C.—Hedderwick. Chrystal's Trustee v. Chrystal.

Insurance—Life Insurance—Husband and Wife—Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. cap. 26), sec. 2—Policy "for the benefit of" the wife.

The Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, enacts:—Sec. 2. "A policy of assurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife . . . shall, together with all benefit thereof, be deemed to be a trust for his wife for her separate use . . . and such policy . . . shall not . . . form part of his estate or be liable to the diligence of his creditors. . . ."

A married man effected with a life assurance society a policy of assurance, described as an "endowment bond," in terms of which the society undertook, in consideration of the payment of certain annual premiums, to pay to him the principal sum assured, with interest and profits, on the expiry of twenty years. The society also undertook, in the event of the husband's death before the expiry of the twenty years, to pay the principal sum assured to his widow, whom failing, to the husband's executors, administrators, or assigns. The husband having died within the twenty years, survived by his widow, and his estate having been sequestrated—

Held (dub. the Lord President) that the policy in question was a policy "for the benefit of his wife" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Act, and accordingly that the proceeds thereof fell to the widow and not to the husband's creditors.

ON 7th February 1912 a special case was presented by James Bogle 1ST DIVISION. Gibson, trustee on the sequestrated estate of the late David Chrystal, writer, Stirling, with the concurrence of certain others, the commissioners on the said estate, first parties, and by Mr Chrystal's widow, second party, for the opinion and judgment of the Court as to the respective rights of the parties in the proceeds of certain policies of assurance on the life of Mr Chrystal.

The circumstances in which the case arose were as follows:—

The late Mr Chrystal married the second party in June 1894, and died in January 1911, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement under which he appointed her to be his universal residuary legatee. Mr Chrystal's settlement contained the appointment of an executor, but the person so appointed refused to accept office, and Mr Gibson was appointed by the Court on 11th February 1911 to be judicial factor on the estate. The estate was thereafter sequestrated, and the first parties were appointed to be trustee and commissioners respectively thereon.

In September 1894 Mr Chrystal had effected with the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States two policies for the sum of £1000 each. These policies were described by the society as "Twenty Years Endowment Bonds," with "five per cent guaranteed for ten years." They were in identical terms, and bore that, in consideration of an annual payment of £55, 15s. on or before 18th August in each year for the term of twenty years from their respective dates, "the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States promises

May 28, 1912. the Act, whether as to liability, amount, or duration, and if it be also the fact that the question had not been settled by agreement, then the respondent here was entitled to take the course he did in bringing a petition at that date. It seems to me quite clear that there was a double question as at that date, namely, first, as to the existence of an obligation, depending on the receipt; and, second, if the obligation did exist legally, was it one that could be enforced?

Hunter v.

John Brown & Co., Limited.

Lord Guthrie.

It is said, however, that supposing there was a question at that date the defence put in by the appellants disposed of it. I find no such defence stated by the Sheriff-substitute, because there was no admission that the compensation could only be ended in terms of the Act. It is further suggested that at all events now, after what happened later, the whole dispute between the parties has disappeared, because the appellants at the date of the proof intimated that they had no intention of binding the respondent down to the terms of the receipt. They declined, however, to put in a minute putting themselves under any obligation to that effect; and therefore it seems to me, as at 7th December, and also as at the present moment, there was and is a dispute between the parties which the respondent is entitled to have settled in the way that he has taken.

I think, therefore, that the third question must be answered as your Lordships propose. It is a pity that the only question of great general importance, and it is of great general importance and may be of great difficulty, raised in the case in the first and second questions, could not be answered, but that is the position.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I agree with your Lordships in holding that the first and second questions ought not to be answered by us. The questions are not really based on anything before us and cannot be dealt with by this Court. As regards the third question I have had some difficulty, but, in the circumstances of the case, I have come to agree that, as there was a receipt by the workman in such terms as to imply that the employers were to pay compensation only for so long as they chose to do so, that was sufficient to justify the workman in making an application to have the question settled.

THE COURT found that the first and second questions were not such as the Court was called upon to answer, and answered the third question in the affirmative.

GARDINER & MACFIE, S.S.C.—AULD & MACDONALD, W.S.—Agents.

JAMES BOGLE GIBSON (Trustee on the Sequestrated Estate of the late David Chrystal) AND OTHERS, First Parties.—Cooper, K.C.—C. H. Brown. No. 140.
May 30, 1912.

MRS ELIZA AUGUSTA SMITH OR CHRYSTAL, Second Party.—M'Lennan, K.C.—Hedderwick. Chrystal's Trustee v. Chrystal.

Insurance—Life Insurance—Husband and Wife—Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. cap. 26), sec. 2—Policy "for the benefit of" the wife.

The Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, enacts:—Sec. 2. "A policy of assurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife . . . shall, together with all benefit thereof, be deemed to be a trust for his wife for her separate use . . . and such policy . . . shall not . . . form part of his estate or be liable to the diligence of his creditors. . . ."

A married man effected with a life assurance society a policy of assurance, described as an "endowment bond," in terms of which the society undertook, in consideration of the payment of certain annual premiums, to pay to him the principal sum assured, with interest and profits, on the expiry of twenty years. The society also undertook, in the event of the husband's death before the expiry of the twenty years, to pay the principal sum assured to his widow, whom failing, to the husband's executors, administrators, or assigns. The husband having died within the twenty years, survived by his widow, and his estate having been sequestrated—

Held (dub. the Lord President) that the policy in question was a policy "for the benefit of his wife" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Act, and accordingly that the proceeds thereof fell to the widow and not to the husband's creditors.

ON 7th February 1912 a special case was presented by James Bogle 1ST DIVISION. Gibson, trustee on the sequestrated estate of the late David Chrystal, writer, Stirling, with the concurrence of certain others, the commissioners on the said estate, first parties, and by Mr Chrystal's widow, second party, for the opinion and judgment of the Court as to the respective rights of the parties in the proceeds of certain policies of assurance on the life of Mr Chrystal.

The circumstances in which the case arose were as follows:—

The late Mr Chrystal married the second party in June 1894, and died in January 1911, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement under which he appointed her to be his universal residuary legatee. Mr Chrystal's settlement contained the appointment of an executor, but the person so appointed refused to accept office, and Mr Gibson was appointed by the Court on 11th February 1911 to be judicial factor on the estate. The estate was thereafter sequestrated, and the first parties were appointed to be trustee and commissioners respectively thereon.

In September 1894 Mr Chrystal had effected with the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States two policies for the sum of £1000 each. These policies were described by the society as "Twenty Years Endowment Bonds," with "five per cent guaranteed for ten years." They were in identical terms, and bore that, in consideration of an annual payment of £55, 15s. on or before 18th August in each year for the term of twenty years from their respective dates, "the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States promises

May 30, 1912.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

to pay at its branch office in the city of London, England, 81 Cheap-side, London, E.C., on the maturity of this bond on the eighteenth day of August in the year Nineteen hundred and fourteen to David Chrystal Eleven hundred and thirty-six pounds sterling, together with the surplus then to be apportioned to this bond by the society. Or in lieu thereof to pay the surplus in cash and defer the maturity of the bond (£1000) for the term of ten years or until prior death paying until such maturity five per cent per annum on the sum of the annual premiums paid. (If thus extended the bond will also participate in any annual profits apportioned in excess of the five per cent; payable in cash at the end of the ten years.) Or to convert the surplus into an annuity to increase the annual income on the bond and extend the bond as above for ten years or until prior death. Or to convert the bond and surplus into an annuity for life.

"The society further promises that in the event of the death of the said David Chrystal before the expiration of twenty years from the date hereof and while this bond is in force to pay immediately upon the receipt of satisfactory proofs of death the amount of the bond (£1000) to his wife, Eliza Augusta Smith or Chrystal, if living, if not, then to the said David Chrystal's executors, administrators, or assigns. And should the annual premiums paid hereon compounded annually at four per cent interest exceed the amount of the bond, such excess shall be added to the principal of the bond and paid therewith."

Among the privileges guaranteed to the assured under these bonds was the following:—"3. If, after having been in force for three years, this bond should lapse in consequence of non-payment of any instalment, it will have a surrender value in non-participation paid-up assurance for as many twentieths of the original bond as annual premiums have been paid; provided that such surrender be made within six months after default in the payment of the premium. This paid-up bond will mature and be payable at the time at which the original bond would have matured; but if the holder then desires its continuance, this payment may be extended for a period of ten years, or until prior death. If thus extended, the paid-up bond will be entitled annually to as many twentieth parts of the income guaranteed under the original bond as annual premiums have been paid."

On the back of the bond was the following endorsement:—

"Issued on the life of D. Chrystal.

"Payable at maturity on the 18th day of Aug. 1914, until which date no dividend will be declared on this bond.

"Amount £1000.

"Annual instalment £55, 15s. 0d.

"Due on the 18th day of Aug.

"Register date of bond Aug. 18th, 1894.

"20 payments  20 years bond."

With regard to the privilege above quoted the following information was added by minute to the case in the course of the proceedings:—"The parties have ascertained that in the event of article 3 of the list of privileges guaranteed to the assured under each of the said policies . . . being brought into operation, the document to be granted by the assurance society effecting this would, in accordance with the practice of the said society, be an endorsement on the policy in the following terms:—"Inasmuch as the premium due , has not been paid upon the within policy, it is hereby agreed and declared that in accordance with the wish of the assurant, the said policy has become a paid-up policy for £ sterling, without profits, requiring no further payments except for extraordinary privileges. The paid-up policy will not participate in the tontine or any other dividend, will be known under No. and in favour of the same beneficiaries as before. The conditions of the said policy, except as herein modified, remain as before.'"

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Mrs Chrystal gave no price or consideration in respect of her husband's effecting or keeping up these bonds, nor did she accept them as in lieu of or in implement of any obligations undertaken by him in their marriage-contract.*

At subsequent dates sums amounting in cumulo to £1077 were borrowed by Mr Chrystal from the assurance society, and assignations of the bonds in favour of the society were granted in security of these loans. The society required that Mrs Chrystal should sign these assignations in respect of her interest as a beneficiary in the trust created by the bonds. The sums so borrowed were used by Mr Chrystal for the purposes of his business.

After Mr Chrystal's death the balance of the sums due by the society on the bonds, amounting, after deduction of the loans, to £1580, 13s. 6d., was paid over by the society on the joint receipt of the trustee and of Mrs Chrystal, and was put on deposit-receipt pending the settlement of the question that had arisen as to the rights of parties in this balance. The parties were agreed that Mr Chrystal was a domiciled Scotsman at the date when the policies were effected, and remained so continuously until the date of his death, and that the question fell to be determined on the same footing as if the contracts embodied in the policies had been entered into in Scotland, and were to be construed in accordance with the law of Scotland.

The contentions of the parties were stated as follows:—

"The first party maintains that as trustee on the sequestrated estate of the said David Chrystal he is entitled to the said balance as being part of the estate of the said David Chrystal, in respect (a) that having regard to the nature and terms of the policies referred to, they were not effected and held by the late David Chrystal as trustee for the second party under the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880.† . . .

* The first parties contended that, having regard to the provisions of this marriage-contract, the effecting of these bonds was in excess of a reasonable provision for the wife, was therefore revocable as a gratuitous donation, and had been revoked by Mr Chrystal's bankruptcy. In view of the grounds on which the case was decided it is unnecessary for the purposes of this report to make further reference to this contention or to the statements made in the case with regard to it.

† The Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. cap. 26), enacts:—Sec. 2. "A policy of assurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his children, or of his wife and children, shall, together with all benefit thereof, be deemed a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use, or for the benefit of his children, or for the benefit of his wife and children; and such policy, immediately on its being so effected, shall vest in him and his legal representatives in trust for the purpose or purposes so expressed, or in any trustee nominated in the policy, or appointed by separate writing duly intimated to the assurance office, but in trust always as aforesaid, and shall not otherwise be subject to his control,

May 30, 1912.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

"The party of the second part maintains that she is entitled to the said balance on the ground that the said policies of insurance—in so far as the second alternative obligation thereby imposed upon the said assurance society is concerned, viz., to make the payments therein set forth in the event of the death of the said David Chrystal before the expiration of twenty years from the date of said policy to the second party, whom failing, the said David Chrystal's executors, administrators, or assigns—were policies of insurance effected by the said David Chrystal on his own life, and expressed on the face of them to be for the benefit of his wife, the second party; and that in terms of said 2nd section of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, the said policies, in so far as said second alternative obligation is concerned, were held in trust for her benefit. In the event which has happened, viz., the death of the said David Chrystal survived by the second party, the said second alternative obligation and not the first alternative obligation is the one which has become prestable against the said assurance society, and the second party is accordingly entitled to the balance of the sums payable by the said assurance society under said second alternative obligation in virtue of the said trust created for her benefit."

The questions of law for the determination of the Court were:—
"(1) Is the trustee on the sequestrated estate of the said David Chrystal entitled to the balance of the proceeds of the said policies? or (2) Is the second party, as wife of the said David Chrystal, and named in the policy, entitled to the said balance?"

The case was heard before the First Division on 20th and 21st February 1912.

Argued for the first parties;—The policies in question did not fall within the scope of section 2 of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance Act. They were not expressly taken as policies under the Act, nor were their terms such as to bring them within its scope. The Act contemplated an indefeasible interest in favour of the wife, and the husband's interest must be excluded before the trust contemplated for the wife could be set up. These policies were primarily for the benefit of the husband. They were primarily payable to him, and were only destined to the wife conditionally on the occurrence of a certain event, viz., his death before the period of payment. Further, the husband had the right to claim their surrender value at any time before maturity to her exclusion. Accordingly, the wife had not shown that unqualified interest which the Act required. In all previous cases under this Act one of two sets of conditions had been present, either (1) the policy had been taken with express reference to the terms of the Act,¹ or (2) the interest of the wife had or form part of his estate, or be liable to the diligence of his creditors, or be revocable as a donation, or reducible on any ground of excess or insolvency; and the receipt of such trustee for the sums secured by the policy, or for the value thereof, in whole or in part, shall be a sufficient and effectual discharge to the assurance office: Provided always, that if it shall be proved that the policy was effected and premiums thereon paid with intent to defraud creditors, or if the person upon whose life the policy is effected shall be made bankrupt within two years from the date of such policy, it shall be competent to the creditors to claim repayment of the premiums so paid from the trustee of the policy out of the proceeds thereof."

¹ Schumann v. Scottish Widows' Fund Society, (1886) 13 R. 678; Stewart v. Stewart's Trustee, (1901) 8 S. L. T. 436.

been one which clearly excluded that of the husband.¹ Neither of these sets of conditions were satisfied by the policies here; and to admit these policies to the benefit of the Act would be an extravagant extension of its scope.

May 30, 1912.
Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Argued for the second party;—The two sets of obligations undertaken in the bonds were distinct and separate, and the latter formed just such a provision for the wife as was contemplated in section 2 of the Act. There was no authority for the proposition that the bonds must bear ex facie to be taken subject to the provisions of the Act. All that was required was that the policies should be taken by a married man in favour of his wife. These policies satisfied that requirement, and neither the fixing of a period of time within which the provision in her favour was to come into operation,² nor the fact that the husband's representatives might take under a destination-over,³ was sufficient to exclude the application of the Act. In such a policy there must necessarily be a right in the husband to take on the failure of the wife or children. The fact that the husband might accept a surrender value did not alter the nature of the wife's right, as he could only take that surrender value as trustee for the wife under the terms of the bond.

At advising on 30th May 1912,—

LORD JOHNSTON.—I have examined the cases referred to by counsel, but I do not find that they give much assistance in the determination of the present, because, even though there are several of them which depend on the construction of policies of this particular American assurance company, they were not concerned with policies of the same class as that with which we have to deal. This is a policy of a peculiar description. It is a combination of the ordinary endowment insurance and of the "Married Woman's Policy of Assurance," and the only difficulty in the case arises from that combination. The methods of the Equitable of New York are not those to which we are accustomed in the practice of our insurance companies. But they are only more complicated. They are perfectly legitimate developments of the principles of life insurance.

The policy in the present case is, as regards the primary interest of the assured, David Chrystal, a twenty year endowment policy—that is to say, it secures him payment of the sum assured with accrued share of profits on his maintaining the policy for twenty years and surviving the term. That it allows him to take payment in four alternative ways is immaterial. What is material is that, at and after the expiry of the endowment period, he and he alone is entitled to the benefits under the policy. But within the endowment period, by which I mean the period of twenty years which

¹ Coulson's Trustees v. Coulson, (1901) 3 F. 1041; Dickie's Trustees v. Dickie, (1892) 29 S. L. R. 908; Holt v. Everall, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 266; Seyton v. Sallerthwaite, (1887) 34 Ch. D. 511. Reference was also made to Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, per Esher, M.R., at p. 151, and to Barras v. Scottish Widows' Fund Society, (1900) 2 F. 1094.

² In re Suse v. Sibeth, (1887) 18 Q. B. D. 660; Holt v. Everall, 2 Ch. D. 266; Robb v. Watson, [1910] 1 Ir. R. 243.

³ Porter on Insurance Law, 5th ed., p. 375; In re Parker's Policies, [1906] 1 Ch. 526.

May 30, 1912. is the primary currency of the insurance, the policy is a provision for the wife of the assured. In the event of the death of the assured within the twenty years, the policy being meantime duly maintained, the sum assured is made payable to the wife of the assured nominatim, if surviving, and failing her, to the assured's representatives.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Ld. Johnston.

The difference between the policy in question and the usual policy taken out by a married man for the benefit of his wife, is that the latter confers a right on the wife contingent merely on her husband predeceasing, while this policy confers a right on the wife contingent on a double event, viz., (1) the husband predeceasing her, and (2) dying during the endowment period—that is, before the expiry of the twenty years during which the policy is primarily current.

I think, notwithstanding this double contingency, that the policy in question comes under the protection of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance Act, 1880. It is a policy effected by a married man on his own life, and it is expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife. The statute does not restrict the benefit of the wife to any specified interest in the policy. The statute does not say that the benefit of the wife must be absolute and void of contingency, so as to leave nothing in the husband. It is recognised that her interest may be clogged with the contingency of her survivance of her husband, and that should she not do so, his radical right may result. On the same principle the benefit of the wife may, I think, depend not merely on one, but on two contingencies, viz., the predecease of the husband, and occurrence of the predecease within twenty years from the date of the policy, and yet the policy be for the benefit of the wife in the sense of the Act. The Act declares the policy together with all benefit thereof to be deemed a trust for the benefit of the wife for her separate use, or for the benefit of children, &c., and to vest in the husband and his legal representatives in trust for "the purpose or purposes so expressed"; and to be not otherwise subject to the husband's control or to form part of his estate. I cannot read the statute as requiring that the policy must be in favour of the wife unconditionally to admit of it, "together with all benefit thereof," being deemed a trust for the benefit of the wife. I read the enactment as providing that the policy and all benefit thereof shall be deemed a trust for the benefit of the wife for her interest, as that interest is defined or expressed in the policy. That is, I think, the meaning of "in trust for the purpose or purposes so expressed"; and I hold that that interest and benefit may be a contingent interest and benefit. It is to the policy that one must go to find the wife's interest or benefit. It is the statute that gives protection, such as the common law would not confer, to the interest or benefit so created.

It is consistent with, and a fair test of, this view that, when the spouses sought to borrow on the security of the policy, it was found the wife had such a vested, though contingent, right in the policy that the spouses could not do so except jointly for their respective interests, as evidenced by the assignment in security of a loan which is printed on page 25 of the case.

The doubt which the Court experienced at the hearing was as to whether the policy, on surrender being made under the third head of the list of privileges endorsed thereon, within the twenty years of its currency, would cease to be held for the benefit of the wife, but this doubt is entirely resolved by the minute which the parties have lodged. May 30, 1912.

An argument was maintained by Mr Chrystal's trustee as to whether, having regard to his marriage-contract, the effecting of the policy in question was not in excess of a reasonable provision and revocable as a gratuitous donation, and was revoked by his insolvency. But that objection is just one against which the statute expressly protects the wife. The point is, I think, beyond argument.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Ld. Johnston.

Accordingly, I think that the first query should be answered in the negative and the second in the affirmative.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The only question argued in this case on which it is necessary to express an opinion is whether the two policies or endowment bonds are within the protection of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, section 2. If they are, the second party, who is the widow of the late David Chrystal, is entitled to receive from the assurance society the sum of £1580, 13s. 6d., being the balance payable upon the bonds after deduction of the sums borrowed on their security. If the bonds are not protected by the statute the proceeds go to the trustee on the sequestrated estate of the husband.

It appears to me that the Act does protect the bonds in question. They are in identical terms, are both dated the 10th September 1894, and are issued by the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. They bear to be twenty year Endowment Bonds. Each bond provides for the payment annually in advance of £55, 15s. for the term of twenty years from its date. The benefits which result from these payments fall under two heads. In the first place, the assurance society promises to pay on the maturity of the bond to David Chrystal a specified sum of £1136, together with a share of the surplus. Then follow certain alternative benefits which are conceived in his favour, none of which, however, can be claimed by him until the maturity of the bond. In the second place there is an obligation on the society in the event of the death of the husband before the expiration of twenty years—i.e., before the maturity of the bond—provided the bond is in force, to pay the amount of the bond, £1000, to his wife if living, and if not, then to the husband's executors, administrators, or assigns.

The theory of these provisions is intelligible and reasonable. The view appears to me to be this: the husband was desirous, by contributing out of his annual savings, to have at his command, if he so desired it, at the maturity of the bond, a capital sum of money. He was, however, also desirous of safeguarding the interests of his wife during the period when these savings were being made. The same considerations would apply if a person entitled to succeed to an estate insured his life for the benefit of his wife to provide for the contingency of his not succeeding to the estate. The two parts of the bond are, and must be kept, separate. Nothing that the husband could do so long as the annual premiums continued to be paid, could, in my opinion, diminish the benefit secured by the terms of the bond to his wife during the currency of twenty years. She was entitled to this benefit provided (1) her husband died before the bond matured, and May 30, 1912. (2) she survived him. This benefit, no doubt, only continues while the bond is in force. If it lapses during the first three years the whole benefit would apparently be lost.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

A list of privileges guaranteed to the assured under the bond is attached thereto, the third of which provides that, if after having been in force for three years the bond should lapse in consequence of non-payment of any instalment, it is to have a surrender value in non-participation paid-up assurance for a certain proportion of the original sum, and this substituted bond is to mature and be payable at the same time as the original bond. This article appeared to cause a possible difficulty, because if its true meaning was that the husband could at any time during the twenty years make available as a fund of credit for his own behoof the amount of the premiums then paid up, this would put an instrument in his hands which might enable him to defeat the interest vested in the wife by the terms of the body of the bond. The minute of amendment lodged by the parties removes this difficulty, because it makes it clear that the paid-up assurance substituted for the original policy is to be in favour of the same beneficiaries as before. The nature of the right vested in the wife would remain the same as before—its extent only would be affected.

Loans were obtained on the security of the bonds in question, the amounts of which found their way into the hands of the husband. The indefeasible nature, however, of the wife's right under the bonds is recognised by the fact that the assignments in security, which the society took, are granted by her as well as by her husband.

The result of this, in my opinion, is that by the bond a policy of assurance was effected by a married man on his own life, and it is expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife. It, therefore, in terms of the second section of the Act, is to be deemed a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use. Immediately on its being effected it vested in the husband in trust for the purpose so expressed, and is not subject to his control, nor does it form part of his estate, nor is it liable to the diligence of his creditors, nor revocable as a donation, nor reducible on any ground of excess or insolvency. There is no definition or limitation in the Act as to the form in which the policy is to be expressed. The fact that in certain circumstances there is a destination to the husband's executors, administrators, or assigns, will not prevent the statutory consequences of the policy receiving effect. As matters stood during the whole of the twenty years until the bond matured, the policy by virtue of the Act was held for the wife absolutely. It appears to me that there must be in all such cases the possibility of a resulting benefit in favour of the husband. It was so in the case of Schumann v. The Scottish Widows' Fund Society.¹ In that case, in the event of the wife predeceasing her husband, it was provided that his heirs, executors, or assignees should be entitled to receive a certain specified sum after his decease. In the present case the fact that if the husband survived the period when the bond matured, a benefit then accrued to him, does not appear to me to be of a different nature, or that there is anything in this feature of the bond under consideration which would render the wife's right defeasible during its currency. A similar point arose under the English Married Women's Policies Act, and it was held that the possibility of a resulting trust in favour of the husband's representatives did not exclude the operation of the Act—Holt v. Everall,¹ and Seyton v. Satterthwaite.²

¹ 13 R. 678.

May 30, 1912.
Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

Upon the whole matter therefore I am of opinion that the bonds are within the protection of the statute, and that the first question should be answered in the negative and the second question in the affirmative.

LORD KINNEAR.—I am of the same opinion. The conclusive consideration to my mind is that, in the event which has happened, the bond gives the whole benefit of the insurance money, which is the fund now in dispute, to the insured's wife, and that in terms falls within the second section of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance Act. The husband had, no doubt, a contingent interest in the insurance, but that contingent right never became absolute, and was completely and finally determined by his death. The result, to my mind, was to leave this a policy of insurance for the benefit of the wife and of the wife alone.

I do not think any second argument arises upon the point which was raised by the trustee as to the provision for the wife being revocable as a donation inter virum et uxorem. That simply raises the same question over again, Does the Married Women's Policies of Assurance Act apply, or does it not? If it does not, there would be, no doubt, a very strong ground for the trustee's contention; but if it does, it expressly enacts that the assurance shall not be revocable as a donation inter virum et uxorem, and the insurance money therefore cannot be paid to the husband's creditors.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I confess I have had considerable difficulties in this case, and, indeed, that the first inclination of my judgment was against the result at which your Lordships have arrived. What pressed upon my mind was that I think that at common law, and apart from the provisions of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance Act, this money would, undoubtedly, belong to the husband's creditors. It is, therefore, really the protection of the Act and of the Act alone that effectuates the other result. Now, the Act which grants the privilege says, "A policy of assurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife or of his children, or of his wife and children, shall, together with all benefit thereof, be deemed a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use." What struck me at first was that this policy was certainly prima facie not a policy for the benefit of the wife, but a policy for the benefit of the husband himself, because the first clause provides that if he lives to a certain age he will get a sum of money, and the provision in favour of the wife is only put in to meet the case of his not living to that age.

But I am sensible of the strength of the arguments which your Lordships have used. I feel also that the Act is an enabling statute, and the class of insurance which is here disclosed seems to be a very sensible one. It pro-

¹ 2 Ch. D. 266.

² 34 Ch. D. 511.

May 30, 1912. vides for the wife if the husband is taken away by an early death, and, on the other hand, if he lives long enough, it provides him with a considerable sum of money out of which he can make a provision for her after his death. That being so, I do not feel sufficient confidence in the view that first struck me to intimate a formal dissent.

Chrystal's
Trustee v.
Chrystal.

THE COURT answered the first question in the negative and the second question in the affirmative.

ADAMSON, GULLAND, & STUART, S.S.C.—CUMMING & DUFF, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 141. GEORGE HODGE (Judicial Factor on Mrs Kerr's trust-estate), Pursuer (Respondent).—J. R. Christie.
May 31, 1912. JOHN WISHART (Hugh Kerr's Trustee), Defender (Appellant).—Wilton.
Hodge v.
Wishart.

Bankruptcy—Sequestration—Claims—Delay in lodging claim—Interdict of payment of dividend—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 79), sec. 125.

A husband, who was executor on his wife's estate, having become bankrupt, a judicial factor was appointed on the executry estate. The judicial factor lodged a claim in the husband's sequestration, but the claim was not lodged until after a meeting of the commissioners, held as provided for in sec. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1856, at which they had declared a first and final dividend. The judicial factor (although he was aware of the progress of the sequestration from other sources) had received no notices from the trustee, as the bankrupt (who denied that he was due any debt to himself as his wife's executor) had not inserted any such debt in his state of affairs, and the trustee was unaware that such a claim was to be made.

Held that, as there was no fault on the part of the bankrupt or his trustee, and as the delay in lodging the claim was due to the judicial factor's own remissness, the latter was not entitled to interdict the trustee from paying away the estate.

Scobie v. Hill's Trustee, (1869) 8 Macph. 161, distinguished.

2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

GEORGE HODGE, chartered accountant, Glasgow, judicial factor on the trust-estate of the deceased Mrs Elizabeth Kerr, brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Glasgow against John Wishart, accountant, Glasgow, trustee on the sequestrated estate of Mrs Kerr's husband, Hugh Kerr, contractor, Glasgow. In this action the pursuer sought to interdict the defender "from dividing the whole funds available for division among the creditors ranked by him of the said Hugh Kerr, in payment of a first dividend to them in prejudice of the pursuer's claim, until the defender has set aside a figure sufficient to pay an equalising dividend on pursuer's claim, should, on adjudication by the defender as trustee foresaid, the pursuer's claim be admitted."

Hugh Kerr was executor-nominate of his wife, and continued to act as such until, on his sequestration, he was superseded, and the pursuer appointed judicial factor on the estate on the petition of a beneficiary. The pursuer averred that Hugh Kerr had failed to account for his wife's estate to the beneficiaries under her will, and that he (the pursuer) had unsuccessfully endeavoured to get a statement of his intromissions as executor from Kerr, and had "endeavoured to see the agent, William Watson, solicitor, Glasgow, who had acted for bankrupt in the executry, but he could never be found."

The further facts averred on record are stated in the following May 31, 1912. passage from the opinion of Lord Salvesen :—

“The circumstances of the case are these :—The pursuer, Mr Hodge, ^{Hodge v. Wishart.} who was appointed a factor on the trust-estate of the deceased Mrs Kerr, claims to be a creditor qua factor of her husband, Hugh Kerr, on whose sequestrated estate the defender is trustee. The pursuer was appointed factor so far back as 18th August 1911, his appointment was extracted on 29th August, and he intimated his appointment as factor to the defender in the beginning of September. The examination of the bankrupt took place on 30th August, and it appears, and I think it is a material circumstance, that the pursuer was represented at that examination, because in another representative capacity he was a creditor of the bankrupt. He therefore had, from that early date, if not sooner, full knowledge of the sequestration of Hugh Kerr, and it was his duty to apprise himself, if necessary, by examination of the Gazette of the procedure in that sequestration. He probably even did not require to look at the Gazette, because as a representative of another creditor he would get all the usual notices issued to creditors of the estate.

“The pursuer at an early stage seems to have thought that there might be a claim against the bankrupt in respect of his having failed to account for the executry estate, and in September there was some correspondence between him and the defender on that subject. Nothing followed, and no claim was lodged by the pursuer as factor on Mrs Kerr’s estate, and I think the trustee, the defender in this case, was perfectly entitled to assume that, having had the possibility of such a claim brought to his mind, the pursuer had elected not to pursue it. The statutory period of four months expired on 28th November, after which and within fourteen days the commissioners were required to meet and to consider as to the distribution of the estate. The commissioners in fact met on the second day after the 28th November, and they then passed a deliverance to the effect that the whole estate should be distributed (except a small balance on hand) as a first and final dividend. Up to that time the commissioners and the defender had no knowledge that the pursuer intended to lodge any claim. The case might have been entirely different if, at the time that their deliverance was pronounced, a claim had in fact been lodged, or the circumstances were such as to make it their duty to provide for a known claim.”

The pursuer’s claim was in fact lodged on the eleventh day after the 28th of November.

On 22nd February 1912 the acting Sheriff-substitute (Taylor) pronounced the following interlocutor :—“Finds the following facts are admitted—(1) The estates of Hugh Kerr were sequestrated on 28th July 1911 ; (2) the first statutory meeting was held on 8th August 1911, and defender was appointed trustee ; (3) the said Hugh Kerr was confirmed executor of the late Mrs Elizabeth M’Lean or Dimond or Wallace or Kerr on 12th August 1910 ; (4) pursuer was appointed judicial factor on the trust-estate of the said Mrs Kerr on 18th August 1911 ; (5) the state of affairs lodged by the said Hugh Kerr contained no statement of any claim against him at the instance of himself as executor aforesaid ; (6) to entitle creditors to participate in the first dividend, oaths and grounds of debt fell to be lodged on or before 28th November 1911 ; (7) no notice was sent to pursuer by defender intimating the date by which claims required to be lodged in order to

May 31, 1912. participate in the first dividend; (8) intimation of a possible claim at the instance of pursuer was received by defender in the letter of 30th September 1911*; (9) a claim in the sequestration at pursuer's instance for £754, 6s. 5d. was lodged on 9th December 1911; (10) the commissioners on the sequestrated estate met on 30th November 1911, and decided to divide all available sums amongst the creditors whose claims had been timeously lodged: Finds in law that the pursuer is entitled to the interdict craved: Therefore declares the interdict already granted to be perpetual; and decerns."†

Hodge v.
Wishart.

The defender appealed to the Court of Session, and the case was heard before the Second Division on 30th and 31st May 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—The respondent was not entitled to the interdict craved. The case of Scobie v. Hill's Trustee,¹ on which the Sheriff-substitute relied, was distinguishable from the present case. In *Scobie*¹ there was fault on the part of the trustee in the sequestration; here there was no such fault. Here also the creditor was aware of the sequestration; whereas in *Scobie*¹ the creditor was ignorant of it. In this case the respondent could blame no one but himself. Further, his remedy was either to appeal, under section 169 of the Bankruptcy Act, against the deliverance of the trustee appointing payment of the dividend²; or to appeal to the nobile officium of the Court. The interdict, however, could not be granted for it would create an impossible situation in the sequestration.

Argued for the respondent;—There were two questions in the case, viz., (1) Did the respondent's tardiness preclude him from sharing in the first dividend? and (2) Did that tardiness prevent him from claiming to have money set aside to meet his claim, if established? On the first question the principle of the decision in *Scobie*¹ was directly applicable, although it was not contended here that the trustee was in fault. On the second question, the Bankruptcy Act of 1856 carefully provided³ that contingencies should not be ignored in the division of the estate. Until the expiry of the fourteen days

* This letter, from the pursuer to the defender, contained a request that the defender should arrange for delivery to the pursuer of jewellery belonging to Mrs Kerr, and proceeded:—"Could you assist me in getting from Mr Kerr a statement of his intromissions with Mrs Kerr's estate?"

† "NOTE.— . . . In Scobie v. Hill's Trustee, 8 Macph. 161, interdict was granted where a bankrupt had made no statement, and the trustee had taken no steps to force him to do so. Here the bankrupt has left out of his statement a possible claimant, with the result that this claimant receives no notice. There, Lord President Inglis said, 'It is impossible to sanction so great injustice as would result from refusing this interdict, unless there is some provision that, if a claim is not lodged within the specified time, no matter from what cause, the creditor shall not participate in the estate. But I find no such provision.' He goes on to say that, in the absence of a declaration of nullity, the Court is entitled to consider the circumstances, and see if the creditor has fairly complied with the statute or been prevented by the fault of someone else. I think these remarks apply to the present case. Pursuer got no formal notice owing to the fault of the bankrupt, and as the case against him rests on defender's having strictly complied with all statutory provisions, he is entitled to insist on that notice. . . ."

¹ (1869) 8 Macph. 161.

² Steele v. Ligertwood, (1865) 3 Macph. 587.

³ Reference was made to secs. 123, 125, and 130 of the Act.

mentioned in section 125, there was no finality under the Act; and May 31, 1912. the policy of the Courts under the various bankruptcy statutes had been not to press too harshly such statutory time limits as the Acts contained.¹ Hodge v. Wishart.

LORD SALVESEN.—[After the narrative quoted above]—Now the Sheriff has held that the defender must be interdicted from distributing the estate so as to prejudice the pursuer, and his ground is that the “pursuer got no formal notice owing to the fault of the bankrupt, and as the case against him rests on defender’s having strictly complied with all statutory provisions, he is entitled to insist on that notice.”

Now, I do not think it was contended before us that there was any fault on the part of the bankrupt. It is quite true that the bankrupt did not, in the state of affairs that he requires to lodge with his trustee, include this claim as one of the debts due by the estate, but the circumstances show quite clearly that he did not do so because he maintained, and has always maintained, that it was not a good claim against him. His case was, as we were informed, that he never fingered a penny of the money, but that the money was appropriated by his law-agents, whom he had properly employed to conduct the affairs of the executry. Therefore I cannot see that there was any fault in the bankrupt’s not including in his state of affairs, as a debt, a claim which he did not recognise and which he had reasonable cause for not recognising as a debt against him.

Fault on the part of the trustee is not alleged. The trustee appears to me to have acted here perfectly properly and fairly. There is no suggestion of any desire on his part to take any undue advantage of the pursuer. He acted entirely in discharge of his statutory duties.

Now, is it to be said that in such circumstances, where a claim is not lodged simply through want of vigilance on the part of the person who is vested in it, that the whole statutory procedure is to be changed in order that the person who has been so neglectful of his own or his constituent’s interests may nevertheless not be penalised? I do not think so. I see no reason why he should not suffer the usual penalty of his failure to take the necessary steps to vindicate his rights. It is quite true that under the Bankruptcy Acts, if there is more than one dividend, a creditor who has neglected to lodge his claim so as to participate in the first dividend is entitled to have an equalising dividend set apart for him on the declaration of the second dividend, if his claim has then been adjudicated upon and found good. That is a great concession to a creditor in such a position, and it may result in his not being penalised at all for not lodging his claim, as he ought to have done, before the first deliverance as to distribution was pronounced. But when the circumstances are, as here, that the commissioners have resolved, in entire ignorance of any outstanding claim, and in the bona fide discharge of their duty, to distribute the whole estate in one division, then, it seems to me, the creditor must take the consequences of his own failure to lodge his claim.

¹ Porteous & Mitchell v. Aitken’s Trustee, (1828) 7 S. 22; Mitchell v. Wilson’s Trustee, (1829) 7 S. 841.

May 31, 1912. The case of *Scobie*¹ was referred to as an authority—and indeed, as the only authority—for this application; but it seems to me that that was a totally different case and rests upon the well-known principle that if non-compliance with a statutory provision has been due to the fault of the person or body who are going to benefit by the strict application of these statutory provisions, then the Court will give an equitable remedy. The Court there proceeded upon the view that, but for the failure of the trustee to have the bankrupt examined, there would in all probability have been notice given to the creditor which would have apprised him of the necessity of lodging a claim in the sequestration, and that, as the creditor had received no such notice because of the failure of the trustee to perform his statutory duty, the creditor was entitled to the remedy of interdict against the estate being paid away to his prejudice. That, in my view, was an entirely different case from the one presented to us here, in which, as I think, there are no specialties at all, because the fact that this creditor was a creditor in a representative capacity cannot make any difference. Indeed, I agree with Mr Wilton that it makes the case rather worse because the pursuer was a professional man well versed in the bankruptcy statutes, having full knowledge, through his position as representing another creditor, of the exact position of this sequestrated estate, and therefore the very person who might reasonably be expected to do all that was necessary to protect the interests of those whom he represented.

Hodge v.
Wishart.

Lord Salvesen.

My view is that, if we were to listen to this demand on so-called equitable grounds, we should really have to give the same relief to every creditor who happened to be too late in lodging his claim to participate in the first dividend, with the result of upsetting the whole scheme of distribution under the bankruptcy statutes. I am therefore for recalling the judgment of the Sheriff-substitute and refusing the prayer of the note.

LORD GUTHRIE.—The question seems to arise chiefly under section 125 of the 1856 Act, which says, at the close of the section, that “they shall declare whether any and what part of the net produce of the estate, after making a reasonable deduction for future contingencies, shall be divided among the creditors.” Now, it is said in this case that the commissioners should have had the respondent’s claim in view as a possible claim. That is the first ground and that is the ground that the Sheriff-substitute has gone on. Mr. Christie, however, argued that, at all events, the claim having been lodged before the expiry of the fourteen days mentioned in section 125, the commissioners should have met again and given effect to the claim by considering it among the items that entered into the reasonable construction of the words “for future contingencies.” Then the third question is, the commissioners, not having taken either course, can we interdict the paying of the dividend? I agree with your Lordships that we cannot. The commissioners were bound to consider all claims that were actually in. It may be that if a claim had been intimated as about to be lodged, but was delayed on account of want of information, they might have been bound to consider that matter also; but here I agree with your Lordship's opinion that the contrary was the case. The claim had been May 31, 1912. suggested at an early period but the conduct of the pursuer was such as to lead to the reasonable inference that it was not to be lodged. If so, it seems to me the deliverance was final and the money could be paid away. No doubt *Scobie*¹ shows that there may be special circumstances in which the remedy here sought will be granted, and the Sheriff-substitute has erred because he thought that the special circumstances which arose in *Scobie*¹ exist here. It seems to me that this case is a case by contrast to *Scobie*¹. In *Scobie*¹ there was fault on the part of the trustee; here it is admitted there was no fault on the part of the trustee or of the bankrupt. There were other circumstances in *Scobie*¹ which would be sufficient to entitle a claimant to the remedy sought; there are none here. The representative capacity will not do, and the omission of the bankrupt to include the claim will not do, and Mr Christie was not able to suggest any other special grounds. Taking it on the lowest footing, if it be the law that cause must be shown why the Court should interfere, then, it seems to me, no cause has been shown here.

¹ 8 Macph. 161.

Hodge v.
Wishart.
Lord Guthrie.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD DUNDAS concurred.

THE COURT sustained the appeal, recalled the interlocutor appealed against, and refused the crave of the initial writ.

C. STRANG WATSON, Solicitor—JAMES G. BRYSON, Solicitor—Agents.

ALEXANDER EDWARD FORBES MORISON, Pursuer (Respondent).— No. 142.
Blackburn, K.C.—D. P. Fleming.

A. & D. F. LOCKHART, Defenders (Appellants).—Constable, K.C.— June 11, 1912.
Skelton.

Morison v. A.
& D. F. Lockhart.

Entail—Powers of heir in possession—Sale—Sale of moveables—Transference of property—Sale of growing timber by heir of entail—Right of succeeding heir to prevent cutting of timber—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71), secs. 17, 18, and 62.

The heir in possession of an entailed estate entered into a contract with a firm of wood merchants for the sale to them of certain lots of standing timber on the estate, under the condition that the purchasers should themselves cut down and remove the timber. The contract, which was constituted by offer and acceptance, further provided that half the price was to be paid within six days of the acceptance and the remainder when half the timber was cut, and that the timber should be at the purchasers' risk from the date of acceptance.

The heir died before all the timber was cut, and on the succeeding heir seeking to interdict the purchasers from proceeding with the cutting of the timber, the latter contended that, in virtue of the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, the property in the timber had passed to them as at the date of the contract of sale.

Held (1) that—even assuming the growing timber to be "goods" in the sense of sec. 62 of the Sale of Goods Act—the property therein had not passed in virtue of the provisions of that Act, in respect that this was not a contract for the immediate sale of timber in a deliverable state, but was merely a personal contract to allow the purchaser

¹ 8 Macph. 161.

June 11, 1912.

Morison v. A.
& D. F. Lockhart.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Aberdeen, Kincardine, and Banff.

to cut and remove the timber ; and (2) that the growing timber being pars soli passed to the succeeding heir unaffected by this personal contract of his predecessor ; and interdict granted.

ON 6th September 1911 Alexander Edward Forbes Morison, heir of entail in possession of the estate of Bognie, brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Aberdeen against A. & D. F. Lockhart, wood merchants, Huntly, in which he craved the Court "to interdict the defenders by themselves or others from cutting, sawing up, or otherwise interfering with the trees that were standing on the said estate of Bognie on the 24th day of July 1911, and to grant interim interdict."

The pursuer averred :—(Cond. 2) "The pursuer succeeded to the said estate on 24th July 1911, on the death of his father, Lieutenant-Colonel Frederick de Lemare Morison, the previous heir of entail in possession." (Cond. 3) "The said Frederick de Lemare Morison entered into a contract of sale, dated 27th March 1911, with the defenders, whereby he sold to them a quantity of standing timber, consisting of part of the Bogcoup Wood on the said estate of Bognie." (Cond. 4) "The pursuer was not a party to said contract of sale, and was unaware of its existence until after the death of the said Frederick de Lemare Morison." (Cond. 5) "Prior to the death of the said Frederick de Lemare Morison, the defenders had cut down a portion of the timber sold to them, but a large portion thereof still remained uncut at his death. After the death of the deceased, the defenders continued their cutting operations on the uncut portion." (Cond. 6) "As soon as the pursuer became aware of the defenders' operations he made inquiries, and thereupon he requested the defenders to cease all operations as regards cutting, sawing up, or otherwise interfering with trees that were standing on the said estate of Bognie at the date of the said Frederick de Lemare Morison's death, but they have refused to do so unless ordered by the Court. The present application has thus been rendered necessary."

The contract of sale referred to was constituted by offer and acceptance in terms of certain conditions of sale, the provisions of which were, inter alia, as follows :—

"CONDITIONS OF SALE by Private Bargain of standing timber on Bognie Estate, 1911, the property of Colonel F. de L. Morison of Bognie, hereinafter called 'the exposor.'"

"First. The timber embraced in the sale consists of a clean cut of part of Bogcoup Wood in two lots, which contain . . .

"Third. The purchaser will be at the sole expense of cutting off root and removing the timber. A stance for a sawmill will be allowed for each lot if required ; but except at such stances no sawmill shall be placed. The whole of the timber must be cut up and any sawmill or engine removed from the wood by the 31st day of December 1911, and all cut up and sawn timber must be removed from the estate by the 31st day of January 1912, and in the event of the purchaser failing to remove from the estate the whole or any part of the timber by the above stipulated dates, he shall pay to the exposor the sum of £1 sterling of pactional damages for every day thereafter during which the wood or any part thereof, or any sawmill, shed, or engine shall remain on the ground. The timber shall be entirely at the purchaser's risk from fire or other damage from the date of the acceptance of his offer. . . .

"Seventh. The price shall be payable half within six days after June 11, 1912. acceptance of offer and before commencing operations, and the balance when half of the wood has been cut off root—but not later than the 30th day of June 1911."

Morison v. A.
& D. F. Lockhart.

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia ;—(2) The pursuer, not having been a party to or adopted the said contract of sale, and said contract being personal to the said Colonel Morison, the pursuer, as succeeding heir of entail in possession, is not bound by it, and the defenders' licence to cut trees on the entailed estate ceased on the death of the said Colonel Morison. (3) The previous heir of entail's right to cut trees upon the said estate of Bognie having ceased at his death, all trees standing on the estate at that date became then the property of the pursuer as succeeding heir of entail, and he is entitled to interdict the defenders from interfering with the same.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia ;—(1) The action as laid is irrelevant. (2) The defenders having purchased the timber in question from the party entitled to sell the same, and the property therein having passed to defenders at the date of the said contract of sale,* the pursuer is not entitled to the interdict craved, and the interim interdict ought to be recalled. (3) The contract of sale having been entered into by the late Frederick de Lemare Morison in the ordinary course of estate management, is binding on the pursuer as a succeeding heir of entail.

Interim interdict had been granted on 6th September 1911, and on 14th November 1911 the Sheriff-substitute (Laing), after hearing

* The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71), enacts:—

Sec. 17. "(1) Where there is a contract for the sale of specific or ascertained goods the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred. (2) For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the circumstances of the case."

Sec. 18. "Unless a different intention appears, the following are rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the time at which the property in the goods is to pass to the buyer.

"Rule 1.—Where there is an unconditional contract for the sale of specific goods, in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether the time of payment or the time of delivery, or both, be postponed.

"Rule 2.—Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods, for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state, the property does not pass until such thing be done, and the buyer has notice thereof.

"Rule 3.—Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods in a deliverable state, but the seller is bound to weigh, measure, test, or do some other act or thing with reference to the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the price, the property does not pass until such act or thing be done, and the buyer has notice thereof. . . ."

Sec. 62. "(1) . . . 'Goods' include all chattels personal other than things in action and money, and in Scotland all corporeal moveables except money. The term includes emblements, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale. . . . (4) Goods are in a 'deliverable state' within the meaning of this Act when they are in such a state that the buyer would under the contract be bound to take delivery of them."

June 11, 1912. Morison v. A. & D. F. Lockhart. parties, pronounced an interlocutor in the following terms:—" Finds in fact (1) that by contract of sale, dated 27th March 1911, the late Colonel Frederick de Lemare Morison, then heir of entail in possession of the entailed estate of Bognie, in the parish of Forgue and county of Aberdeen, sold to the defenders a quantity of standing timber comprised in two lots containing 6286 trees at the price of £575; (2) that in terms of the contract the defenders forthwith proceeded to cut said timber; (3) that on 24th July 1911 the said Colonel F. de Lemare Morison died, and was succeeded in said entailed estates by the pursuer; (4) that the defenders continued after said 24th July to cut down said timber; (5) that on 2nd September 1911 they received a letter from the pursuer's agents intimating to them that they must stop cutting said timber, as their right to do so had ceased as at the date of the death of the said Colonel F. de Lemare Morison; (6) that as the defenders refused to accede to this request, the pursuer on 6th September obtained interim interdict against them prohibiting them from cutting, sawing up, or otherwise interfering with the trees that were standing on the said estate of Bognie on 24th July 1911: Finds in law (1) that the said contract entered into between the said Colonel F. de Lemare Morison and the defenders, being personal to him, the pursuer, as succeeding heir of entail, is not bound thereby; and (2) that the right of the said Colonel F. de Lemare Morison to cut timber on said estate of Bognie having ceased on his death on 24th July 1911, the whole timber standing on said estate, as at that date, became the property of the pursuer as the succeeding heir of entail: Therefore repels the first plea in law for the defenders: Sustains the pleas in law for the pursuer: Declares the interdict already granted perpetual." *

* " NOTE.— . . . As regards the facts essential for a decision at this stage, the facts as stated in the foregoing interlocutor may be taken as admitted, as it was upon them that both parties at the debate founded their respective contentions. Upon these facts the legal question arises, whether the contract for the sale of timber on the estate of Bognie made by the late Colonel Morison is or is not binding on the pursuer as the succeeding heir of entail of Bognie. On consideration of the authorities cited to me, I think that the legal position of the pursuer, as expressed in his second and third pleas in law, is unchallengeable. The right of an heir of an entail to refuse to recognise his predecessor's contracts of a personal nature, and in particular contracts of the nature of that made here, is, I think, well settled by authority. I need not refer in detail to the earlier cases relied on by the pursuer's agent, as I think the law on this subject was fully stated in the opinion of Lord Moncreiff in the case of Paul v. Cuthbertson, (1840) 2 D. 1286, at p. 1307, in which opinion Lord President Hope and Lords Gillies, Mackenzie, Fullerton, Cockburn, and Murray concurred." [The Sheriff-substitute then quoted passages from that opinion, and also referred to the cases of Earl of Galloway v. Duke of Bedford, (1902) 4 F. 851, and Gillespie v. Riddell, 1908 S. C. 628, and proceeded]—

" It was, however, urged for the defenders that, on the assumption that the law was as stated supra, it must be held to have been altered by sections 17 and 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, which prescribe the rules for ascertaining when the parties to a contract of sale of goods intended the property therein to pass, the argument being that the property in the timber sold by the late Colonel Morison to them under the contract referred to passed to them the moment the contract had been signed, i.e., prior to severance of the timber sold. I think this argument is untenable. Trees prior to being cut are not moveable property. Trees are partes soli, i.e.,

The defenders appealed, and the case was heard before the First Division on 8th and 13th March 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—An heir of entail in possession had power to sell ripe timber, with some exceptions affecting amenity and administration.¹ When growing trees were sold by an heir of entail in possession the property in the timber was now transferred, by operation of the Sale of Goods Act, when the contract was made,² because growing trees, being partes soli, were “things attached to or forming part of the land,” and therefore “goods” in the sense of that Act.³ From the terms of the contract here it was quite clearly the intention of the parties that the property in the trees should pass at once. Thus the sale of the timber in question having been completed during the life of the seller, the pursuer had succeeded to the entailed estate of Bognie after the timber sold had ceased to form part of the estate, having become the property of the defenders. The contract here was for the sale of a definite quantity of timber, and was not merely a contract for giving the defenders a right to enter upon the land and cut timber.⁴ Even though trees might not be directly covered by the phrase “industrial growing crops” in section 62 (1), yet in Scotland that attribute of property which conferred a right to separate such crops from the soil applied with equal force to timber, and as the Act had clearly made growing crops moveable even before severance, it was only consistent that it should affect timber in the same way.⁵ It was unnecessary that the Act should have specified trees in view of English authority upon the Statute of Frauds.⁶

Argued for the respondent;—(The following argument was submitted on the assumption that the timber in question was ripe, a parts of the land on which they grow, and ‘so long as they remain such by growing in the soil, or by being so attached to it that a considerable degree of force would be required for severance, are heritable, but as soon as they are cut down they become moveable’—(Rankine on Land Ownership (1909 edition), p. 119). Now, it is perfectly clear that wherever the subject of a sale is heritable it does not fall under the Sale of Goods Act, and accordingly, as the growing timber which formed the subject of contract between the defenders and the late Colonel Morison was at the date of sale heritable, it follows that the contract itself, and the intentions of parties thereunder, do not fall to be construed in light of the foregoing Act. In other words, the law as laid down in the authorities referred to is unaltered by that Act, for the simple reason that it in no way affects contracts of sale relative to heritable subjects.

“I must therefore make the interdict perpetual, leaving it to the defenders to work out their remedy against the late Colonel Morison’s executors.”

¹ Hamilton v. Viscountess of Oxford, (1757) M. 15,408; M’Kenzie v. M’Kenzie, (1824) 2 S. 775; Bontine v. Carrick, (1827) 5 S. 811; Paul v. Cuthbertson, (1840) 2 D. 1286, Lord Jeffrey, at p. 1292, Lord Moncreiff, at p. 1307; Boyd v. Boyd, (1870) 8 Macph. 637; Gillespie v. Riddell, 1909 S. C. (H. L.) 3, Lord Robertson, at p. 5.

² 56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71, secs. 17 and 18.

³ Ibid., sec. 62 (1).

⁴ Morgan v. Russell & Sons, [1909] 1 K. B. 357, Alverston, C.J., at p. 365.

⁵ Chalmers’ Trustee v. Dick’s Trustee, 1909 S. C. 761, Lord Johnston (Ordinary), at p. 767, Lord Low, at p. 769.

⁶ 29 Car. II. cap. 3; Smith v. Surman, (1829) 9 B. & C. 561; Marshall v. Green, (1875) 1 C. P. D. 35; Chalmers, Sale of Goods Act, 143.

June 11, 1912. fact which the respondent denied)—Growing trees upon an entailed estate were partes soli, and therefore subject to the fetters of the entail,¹ Ripe trees continued to be partes soli until actually felled, when they became moveable property, and might then be “goods” in the sense of the Sale of Goods Act. But as long as they were growing they were not covered by the words of the Act. They were not “industrial growing crops”; and they could not be held to be covered by the word “things,” for that word was used in contradistinction to “growing crops,” and so must refer to something quite different, i.e., to fixtures attached to the land.² If it had been intended to include growing trees, they would have been specifically mentioned. In any case, the Act could not be founded upon to help out the defenders’ contract with the pursuer’s predecessor, because an heir of entail in possession could confer no higher right than he possessed.³ If a seller had no title to sell, the Sale of Goods Act did not give him a title. It assumed a sale by one having a title to transmit a real right, and all it did was to provide a new mode of delivery in an effective contract. An heir of entail’s own right to cut timber, and therefore any right that he could confer upon another, terminated at his death. It was not suggested that the property in trees cut after the death of an heir in possession would pass to his executor if they had been ripe during his life; nor did the right of his creditors to cut ripe trees continue after his death.⁴ Even during his life, his right to cut them was not unrestrained.⁵ This was determined by authorities subsequent in date to Erskine.⁶ The defenders’ only remedy was to proceed against the representatives of the heir with whom they contracted in respect of implied warranty.⁷

At advising on 11th June 1912,—

LORD JOHNSTON.—So far as this case depends upon the law of entail in Scotland, unaffected by the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it is covered by the decision of the whole Court in Paul v. Cuthbertson,⁸ and on this branch of the question I concur, therefore, in the judgment of the Sheriff-substitute, to which I should have had nothing to add, were it not that I think that the argument addressed to us, founded on the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, requires more serious consideration than the Sheriff-substitute has given to it.

The interpretation clause, section 62, of that Act declares that the term “goods” where occurring in the Act “includes emblements, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale.” Growing timber is admittedly attached to and in law forms part of the land, and is therefore “goods” in the sense of the statute, and a contract of sale of growing timber to be cut is therefore a contract of sale of goods to which

¹ Ersk. ii. 2, 4; M’Kenzie v. M’Kenzie, (1824) 2 S. 775.

² Benjamin on Sale (5th ed.), 176.

³ Paul v. Cuthbertson, 2 D. 1286, Lord Moncreiff, at pp. 1306-1307.

⁴ Bell’s Com. (7th ed.), i. 51; Cathcart v. Schaw, (1755) M. 15,399; Elibank v. Renton, (1833) 11 S. 238, Lord Gillies, at p. 243.

⁵ Sandford on Entails, 276.

⁶ Ersk. iii. 8, 29.

⁷ 56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71, sec. 12.

⁸ 2 D. 1286.

the provisions of the Act apply. But I do not think that this fact carries June 11, 1912. the defenders so far as they assume, for in the first place every contract of ^{Morison v. A.} sale of goods is not made in the same circumstances, nor is it subject to the ^{& D. F. Lock-} same incidents, nor under the statute has it the same effect; and in the ^{hart.} second place the Act is solely concerned with regulating the rights of the ^{Ld. Johnston.} parties to the contract of sale, and is not intended to affect the rights of third parties. It may regulate the transfer of property under the contract, but it does not affect the seller's rights in the subject of sale and enable him to deal with it in a manner and to an effect which he could not do independently of its provisions. It does not confer on the seller rights in the goods which he had not independently of the Act, nor deprive third parties of rights in them which they have at common law. The contract of sale may be binding between the parties as a contract, and give rise to liabilities hinc inde, yet it may be incapable of effect as a sale for want of inherent power or title in the seller. Indeed section 61 (2) expressly says:—"The rules of the common law . . . save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act, and in particular the rules relating to the law of principal and agent and the effect of fraud . . . or other invalidating cause, shall continue to apply to contracts for the sale of goods." A contract for the sale of timber may be a contract for the sale of goods in the sense of the Act, and in many cases perfectly good and effectual according to its terms, but if it comes up against an invalidating cause, such as the law of entail, there is nothing in the Act, still less in a mere interpretation clause, to override that law or to affect the rights of third parties under that law.

When, however, the provisions of the Act are examined, it is, I think, hardly necessary to have recourse to the above saving clause to expiscate the rights of all concerned under this contract. But I think, before considering them, some attention must be given to the terms of the particular contract itself. Growing timber cannot be sold so as to transfer the property as it stands, for as long as it is growing it is pars soli, and can only be transferred with the land on which it is growing. If it is to be sold, and it is not already severed, it must be agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale. While growing it may be "goods" in the sense of the Act, about which a contract of sale may be made, but it does not follow that a sale is effected, for there is a distinction, to be afterwards noticed, between a sale and an agreement to sell. Till severed, growing trees are not in a "deliverable state" within the meaning of the Act, for they are not (section 62 (4)) "in such a state that the buyer would, under the contract, be bound to take delivery of them," for physically he could not do so. Hence a proprietor in a proper sale of timber may cut his growing trees and sell the felled timber, or he may sell his growing timber and agree to cut it for delivery, but there may come a time when supervening circumstances, and the law applicable to those circumstances, deprive him of the power to cut and so to render the timber deliverable. Such is the case, for instance, when a fee-simple proprietor unconditionally divests himself feudally of the land on which the trees are growing, or when an entailed proprietor dies.

But the present case is not one of a proper contract of sale of timber. It

June 11, 1912. is a compound of a contract of sale of growing timber and a licence to cut or sever and so put it into a "deliverable state." But this makes no difference; the purchaser is merely doing vicariously what a proper contract of sale requires of the seller, and his licence falls as soon as the right of the licensor comes to an end. It cannot extend beyond the latter's own tenure of the land. There are also details in the contract which must be noticed. The sale is expressed to be of "a clean cut of part of Bogcoup Wood." A "clean cut" means a clean sweep of the whole wood, leaving no inferior trees standing. The purchaser is to be at the whole expense "of cutting off root and removing the timber," and the "goods" in a "deliverable state" are not "ascertained" till cut, for the quantity in each log, more or less, depends on the views or methods of the woodman. Stances for saw-mills are to be allowed, and such mills and their refuse must all be removed from the ground by 31st January 1912, under a penalty of £1 per day payable to the seller for delay; but here the seller ceased to be proprietor by his death on 24th July 1911, six months before the expiry of this licence, and was succeeded by one who does not represent him, and who is under no obligation to give facilities for cutting and dressing timber on his land, irrespective of the question of the property in the timber. Lastly, the price was to be paid forehand, and the risk of the timber was to be with the purchaser from the date of the contract. This may have been a good contract of sale between the parties, but it is clear that both the parties to it ignored the fact that the seller was an heir of entail, and might die before the timber was felled, or were unaware of its bearing upon their transaction.

Turning now to the Act, I think it will be found that its provisions quite recognise the possibility of a contract of sale of growing timber, but regard such as an agreement to sell, and not as a sale, at least so long as the timber remains standing or is pars soli. In fact there may be a contract of sale of growing timber as "goods" in the sense of the Act, but what the effect of the contract may be is a different question.

Section 1 carefully discriminates between a sale and an agreement to sell. It tells us (subsection (1)) that a contract of sale is a contract whereby the seller transfers or agrees to transfer the property in goods for a price. The distinction is between "transfers" and "agrees to transfer." It tells us further (subsection (3)) that where under the contract the property is transferred the contract is a sale, but where the transfer is to be future, or subject to condition first to be fulfilled, the contract is an agreement to sell. The distinction is now between a transfer and a suspended or contingent transfer; but an agreement to sell becomes (subsection (4)) a sale as soon as the time elapses or the condition is fulfilled. Transfer of property being thus the important point of distinction between a sale and an agreement to sell, the Act proceeds (section 16, et seq.) to assist in the ascertainment of the legal fact of transfer as an effect of the contract of sale. Where (section 16) the contract is for the sale of unascertained goods no property is transferred unless and until the goods are ascertained. As has already been pointed out a sale of growing timber may be a sale of goods in the sense of the Act; but until the timber is severed it cannot be said to be ascertained. Till then the property does not pass, and the contract of sale is only an agreement to sell, which has not yet developed into a sale.

But even if, in a contract of sale of growing trees where "a clean cut" June 11, 1912. of a whole wood is sold, the subject, contrary to my opinion, could be held ^{Morison v. A.} to be specific or ascertained, even then I do not think that under the ^{& D. F. Lock-} statute the property would be transferred and the contract become a sale ^{hart.} until the timber was severed from the ground and therefore deliverable; ^{Ld. Johnston.} for the statute (section 17) says that, where the contract is for the sale of specific or ascertained goods, the property is transferred at the time when the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred, and that in ascertaining the intention of the parties regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the circumstances of the case. In the present case the terms of the contract and the conduct of the parties undoubtedly lead to the inference that they thought they were transferring the property and effecting a sale from the date of the contract, or, at any rate, on payment of the first half of the price. But I cannot conclude that it was their intention to do what at law, in the circumstances of the case, it was out of their power to effect. I must assume that they intended the property in the goods to pass and the contract to effect a sale, whenever, in the carrying out of their contract, it should pass at law.

They have made an incautious bargain, but it is an agreement to sell nevertheless, though not a sale, and under it the parties have their rights and obligations hinc inde, for (section 12) it is an implied condition on the part of the seller, in the case of an agreement to sell, that he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass. But with this we are not here concerned. All we are concerned with is that the timber, so far as uncut at the death of the last heir of entail, was not "goods" of which he as the seller was in law the owner; that, therefore, these goods have been sold by a person who turned out in the circumstances not to be the owner, and who had not the consent of the owner; and, consequently, that (section 21 (1)) the buyer has acquired no title to them. I therefore think that for these reasons the Sheriff-substitute's judgment falls to be affirmed.

LORD MACKENZIE.—[In his Lordship's absence his opinion was read by the Lord President]—I am of opinion that the Sheriff-substitute has come to a right conclusion in this case. It does not admit of dispute that prior to the passing of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, the contention of the appellants would have been untenable. The older cases settled that the heir of entail in possession of an estate could not transmit to his executors or to a third party a right to cut timber after his death. The estate passes on death with the trees then growing upon it to the next heir of entail. The heir of entail so succeeding had a right to refuse to recognise his predecessor's contracts of a personal nature. The right of a purchaser was at an end the instant the heir of entail in possession died. These points had all been established before the case of Paul v. Cuthbertson.¹ The passages from the opinions in that case quoted in the note of the Sheriff-substitute bring out clearly the limitations upon the right of an heir of entail in possession.

¹ 2 D. 1286.

June 11, 1912. It is said, however, that the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act altered the existing law. It was argued that the reason why before that Act an heir of entail in possession could not make such a contract as the one now under consideration was because he could not give delivery of the trees sold; that the definition of "goods" in section 62 of the Act is wide enough to cover trees; and that under the earlier sections of the statute the property in the trees passed when the contract was made. Even on the assumption that section 62 is wide enough to cover trees, that would not, in my opinion, be sufficient to establish the proposition for which the appellants contend. The contract in question purports to confer upon the purchaser a right to cut certain wood growing upon the estate of Bognie. The seller had no power to confer a right to cut which could be exercised after his death. The provisions of the Act do not and cannot enable an heir of entail in possession to invest a purchaser with a better title than he had himself. It is not a question of delivery; the question is one of capacity to contract. The Act, in my opinion, only applies to a case where an effective contract has been made. If no effective contract has been made, then the appellants cannot pray in aid the sections of the Act to validate it. The title of possession ends with the death of the heir of entail, and the Sale of Goods Act cannot extend it further.

Morison v. A.
& D. F. Lockhart.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

The appellants' case, accordingly, in my opinion, fails at a point antecedent to the consideration of the question whether the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act in regard to delivery and passing of property can be applied to the contract in question here. If, however, it were necessary, I should be prepared to hold that the appellants' case failed here also. No doubt the contract provides (article third) that the timber shall be entirely at the purchaser's risk from fire or other damage from the date of the acceptance of his offer; and (article seventh) that the price shall be payable half within six days after acceptance of the offer and before commencing operations, and the balance when half of the wood has been cut off root—but not later than the 30th day of June 1911. The subject of sale, however, consisted, as stated in article first, of a "clean cut" of certain wood; and (article third) it was provided that the purchaser shall be at the sole expense of cutting off root as well as of removing the timber. These latter provisions show that the subject of the contract of sale was not timber in a deliverable state, but merely the right to cut timber. The sections of the Sale of Goods Act on which the defender relies, do not, in my opinion, apply to such a contract, and I agree with the opinion of Lord Johnston as regards this. Even on the assumption, therefore, that the trees included in the contract were ripe for cutting, which is denied by the heir of entail in possession, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Sheriff-substitute should be affirmed.

LORD KINNEAR.—I have come to the same conclusion, and substantially for the same reasons.

I think it necessary to attend to the precise form of the action. It is an action brought by an heir of entail in possession of the estate of Bognie to have the defenders interdicted from cutting, sawing up, or otherwise interfering with the trees standing on his estate of Bognie on the 24th of June 1911, and therefore forming part of the soil of his estate. The June 11, 1912. answer is that the defenders are entitled to enter upon the pursuer's lands ^{Morison v. A.} and cut his trees by virtue of a contract of sale between them and the late ^{& D. F. Lockhart.} heir of entail in possession, which they set out in some detail. The question therefore is whether this contract of sale gives a good title after Lord Kinnear. the death of the heir of entail who was party to it, to enter upon the lands and cut down and carry off trees forming part of the property, and in the possession of the succeeding heir of entail.

The contract is one of some complexity. It is not in form or effect a contract for the transfer and delivery of growing trees as such. It is a contract for the sale of the wood that may be got out of certain trees when they are cut down, or of the portion of the trees severed from the root and turned into corporeal moveables; and that is combined with a licence or mandate to the purchasers to enter upon the estate and cut and saw the timber which is to be sold to them. The right to enter and cut is subject to some detailed regulations; the purchaser is limited as to the manner in which he is to enter, and he is tied down by specific details as to the particular operations which he is to execute for the purpose of getting the timber, and he is taken bound to maintain the roads by which he enters upon the lands. I think that is not a pure and simple sale of timber by any means, but a contract enabling the purchaser to enter upon the lands and cut down and carry away the timber which may be got from the trees.

Now, if the question were whether, prior to the Sale of Goods Act, such a contract was binding upon a succeeding heir of entail, the answer must be that it was not. I do not think that depends upon any view that may be taken as to the limitations of the right of an heir of entail in possession to cut down trees during his own occupation. We have heard a very able argument on that point, but it seems to me to be altogether beside the question. The heir of entail's right is said to rest upon his right as a fiar who is in possession of the land subject only to the fetters of the entail, provided he commits no contravention of the entail. He is subject to certain limitations, but I do not think it is necessary for the purposes of this case to consider them in reference to his right to cut and sell timber. But the question really depends upon a different principle, which is that although the heir of entail is fiar in so far as he is not fettered, he is fiar only for the limited period of his own life. His power to affect the fee is determined by his death, and the new heir who becomes fiar in his turn is not bound by any contracts bearing to affect the lands which the previous heir may have executed, except such leases as may be valid under statute or by the deed of entail. We had occasion to consider the law upon this subject very fully in the recent cases of *Gillespie v. Riddell*¹ and The Duke of Bedford v. The Earl of Galloway's Trustee,² and I think that it would be out of the question to examine again the grounds upon which these decisions were based. But I think there are two cases to which I may refer shortly—the cases of *Cathcart v. Schaw*³ and Veitch of Ellioch.⁴ In both of these cases a contract of sale of growing wood executed by an

¹ 1908 S. C. 628.

³ M. 15,399.

² (1904) 6 F. 971.

⁴ Bell's Com. i. 51, note.

June 11, 1912. heir of entail in possession ceased to have any effect or value on the moment
Morison v. A. of the death of the heir of entail in possession, and that of course rests & D. F. Lock- upon the law which was so clearly stated in Paul v. Cuthbertson,¹ that hart. while ordinary industrial crops which are sold and consumed from year to Lord Kinnear. year are moveable before separation, trees which are intended to be parts of the ground for generations, and part of the soil, cannot be conveyed so long as they are still growing, excepting as part of the land, however effectually they may be sold and delivered when they are cut down and turned into corporeal moveables.

The only question is whether that law is altered by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. I assume, but without expressing any definite opinion upon it myself, that the definition of "goods" in the 62nd section of the Act is wide enough to cover growing trees. Assuming that that be so, I do not think it carries the defenders very far, because it still remains to be considered what is the effect of the enacting clauses of the Act, construing the words in which they are expressed according to the directions of the definition clause. Now, I apprehend that the argument for the validity of the contract as against the heir of entail is really this, that by the new law, introduced by this Act, the growing timber has been conveyed to the purchasers and become their property. It is said that was no part of the property to which the new heir of entail succeeded, because in law, although not in fact, it had been already separated and made over to them before the succession opened. They had no need therefore, according to the argument, to inquire whether their vendor's personal obligations are transmissible against heirs of entail, because they no longer stand upon contract, but upon the real right given them by the statute. I do not doubt that, in the cases to which the clause making a contract equivalent to a transference of property properly applies, the purchaser does obtain a real right in this sense, he acquires a right not only against the seller and his representatives but against all the world. I see great difficulty in the application of that doctrine to contracts for the sale of growing timber, but I do not think it necessary to consider how far it would apply to any other contract than that which is actually before us. The question is whether the trees still growing on the pursuer's land, in so far as they are covered by the contract in question, are specific goods in a deliverable state, so as to have been carried in property to the defenders by force of the statute.

I am of opinion, for the reasons stated by Lord Johnston and Lord Mackenzie, that this is not a contract for the immediate sale and transference of the property of specific goods in a state in which, at the date of the contract or now, they can be said to be deliverable, but, as I have said, a contract which will enable the purchaser, so long as it is available to him, to enter upon the lands, turn the trees into a new form by cutting them down and severing the trunks and limbs from the stumps, and then to carry off the severed timber. In the meantime the trees are not in the possession of the purchasers, but of the owner of the land; and the purchasers cannot enter upon the land and remove them on any other title than the deceased owner's personal obligation to allow them to do so on certain conditions. Their right therefore rests upon contract; and it is June 11, 1912. settled law that the contract is not binding upon an heir of entail who was ^{Morison v. A.} not a party to it and does not represent a party. I do not think it ^{& D. F. Lock-} material that what remains to be done in order to put the trees into a ^{hart.} deliverable shape as timber and not as growing trees, is by the contract to Lord Kinnear. be done by the purchaser and not by the seller, because the purchaser can only do it by authority of the seller's mandate authorising him to enter upon the lands and carry out the operations for sawing and cutting the timber, and that mandate, as I hold, falls by his death, inasmuch as it has no effect as against his successor, the present heir of entail in possession. I therefore agree in the opinions delivered.

¹ 2 D. 1286.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I have had more difficulty in this case than your Lordships have had, but in the end I agree with the result at which your Lordships have arrived. But I found my judgment entirely upon the particular contract here; and, holding the view I do about it, I am able to concur entirely in the last sentence of Lord Mackenzie's judgment and in the exposition which your Lordship has just given.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

ALEXANDER ROSS, S.S.C.—DUNCAN & HARTLEY, W.S.—Agents.

THE PARISH COUNCIL OF THE PARISH OF MELROSE, Pursuers (Appellants).—Kemp.

No. 143.

THE PARISH COUNCIL OF THE PARISH OF HAWICK, Defenders (Respondents).—MacRobert.

June 12, 1912.

Process—Appeal—Competency—Value of cause—Continuing liability—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 51), sec. 28.

Melrose
Parish Council
v. Hawick
Parish Council.

A married woman was admitted as a private patient to a district asylum, and her husband paid for her maintenance there for four months, but afterwards refused to continue the payments on the ground that he was unable to do so. The parish in which the asylum was situated thereafter paid for her maintenance, and subsequently brought an action in the Sheriff Court against the parish of her settlement for recovery of the sums so expended, amounting to £17, 9s. 1d., and for decree ordaining the defenders to free and relieve them of future expenditure. The only question raised in the action was whether, in the circumstances, the patient was a proper object of parochial relief. During the progress of the action the patient recovered and was discharged from the asylum.

The Sheriff having assoilzied the defenders, the pursuers appealed to the Court of Session, when held that the appeal was incompetent in respect that the sum concluded for did not exceed £50, and that, in the circumstances of the case, the Court was not asked to decide a question of continuing liability which could exceed that amount.

Question (per the Lord President) whether the judgment in Tait v. Lees, (1903) 5 F. 304, is consistent with more recent decisions.

ON 7th June 1911 the Parish Council of Melrose brought an action 1st Division. in the Sheriff Court at Hawick against the Parish Council of Hawick, Sheriff of in which the pursuers sought payment of £17, 9s. 1d., being the Roxburgh, amount expended, or to be expended, by them upon the maintenance Berwick, and Selkirk.

June 12, 1912. of Mrs Young, the wife of William Young, a baker in Hawick, in the Roxburgh District Asylum at Melrose as a pauper from 24th January to 15th August 1911, and for decree ordaining the defenders to free and relieve them of all further advances they might make on her behalf so long as she might require parochial aid.

Melrose
Parish Council
v. Hawick
Parish Council.

A proof was allowed, at which the following facts were proved:—Mrs Young was admitted as a private patient into the district asylum at Melrose in the pursuers' parish on 24th October 1910. Her board there was paid by her husband, who was an able-bodied man earning 30s. per week, up to 24th January 1911, after which date he declined to continue to pay the cost of her maintenance on the ground that he was unable to do so. The district asylum then called upon the pursuers to pay for her maintenance at the rate of £31 per annum. The pursuers did so, and subsequently brought this action against the defenders, the Parish Council of the husband's settlement, to recover the sums so paid by them, at the rate mentioned, from 24th January up to 15th August 1911. Mrs Young was still a patient in the asylum at the date of the action, but she recovered and was discharged in December 1911.

On 17th May 1912 the Sheriff (Chisholm), on an appeal from an interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute (Baillie), assoilzied the defenders from the conclusions of the action.*

The pursuers appealed, and on the case appearing in Single Bills of the First Division (without Lord Mackenzie), on 12th June 1912, counsel for the respondents objected to the competency of the appeal on the ground that the value of the cause did not exceed £50.

Argued for the appellants;—The true criterion of the value of the cause was its value at the date at which the parties joined issue, and such value could not be affected by circumstances supervening after the question at issue had been fixed by litiscontestation, or at least by the closing of the record.¹ The decision in David Allen & Sons Billposting, Limited,² was a departure from the previous practice in this respect. Taken at the time which was considered the test in the earlier decisions the pleadings here clearly disclosed a case of continuing liability, such as there was in the case of Paisley Parish Council v. Glasgow and Row Parish Councils.³ Further, the mere fact of Mrs Young's recovery—even if relevant—did not exclude the possibility of a continuing liability, for her recovery might be merely temporary.

Argued for the respondents;—The initial writ concluded for a sum

* The Sheriff's judgment proceeded on the grounds that Mrs Young, who was committed to the asylum not under section 15, but under section 14, of the Lunacy Act, 1862, was so committed under a voluntary contract between her husband and the asylum authorities; that this contract was terminated by the husband's refusal to continue to pay for her maintenance after 24th January 1911; that the duty of the asylum authorities was then either to have removed her from the asylum or to have called upon her husband to do so, but that they adopted neither of these courses; that the husband was not, in his position, entitled to have her maintained in the asylum at the public cost; and that in these circumstances the pursuers were not only not bound, but were not entitled, to pay the sums claimed from them by the asylum authorities, and could therefore not recover from the defenders payments which neither of the parties were under obligation to make.

¹ Cairns v. Murray, (1884) 12 R. 167; Tait v. Lees, (1903) 5 F. 304.

² Supra, p. 970.

³ 1907 S. C. 674.

of less than £50, and in these circumstances appeal was incompetent June 12, 1912. unless the appellants could show that there was a continuing liability which might reasonably be expected to amount to more than that sum.¹ The question of such a continuing liability was here excluded, as the alleged pauper had recovered, and had been discharged from the asylum, at a date when the total liability for her maintenance could only amount to the sum sued for with the addition of a sum of approximately £10, representing the value of her board for the four months between August and December 1911—in all, some £27.

Melrose
Parish Council
v. Hawick
Parish Council.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I think that this appeal is incompetent, and the grounds on which I do so are the grounds which I set forth in the case of the Paisley Parish Council v. Glasgow and Row Parish Councils.² Of course, the decision there was the other way, because the case practically involved the determination of a question of continuing liability, which liability, in the circumstances of that case, might reasonably be expected to amount to more than £25. In this case there is no question, as I understand, of continuing liability, because the woman, who was a lunatic, has recovered, she has left the asylum, and the whole bill incurred never can amount to £50, which is now the pecuniary limitation of the right of appeal. To read a single sentence of what I said in the Row case²: “The common sense test seems to me to be simply this, Is the Court asked to decide a practical question of continuing liability, or is it not?” I think that is always a practical question, and that it is so here. We are not asked to decide a question of continuing liability, and therefore I think this appeal is incompetent.

Certain cases have been quoted to us, and I wish to reserve my opinion as to whether the case of *Tait v. Lees*³ does not on principle really conflict with what was said in the case of *Paisley Parish Council*² and in the very recent case of David Allen & Sons.⁴ But, so far as this case is concerned, there is no conflict, and for this very good reason, that in Tait's case³ the sum on the face of the summons clearly exceeded £25, which was then the limit of value, whereas here the sum on the face of this initial writ is under £50. Accordingly, taking the first rough test of competency, viz., what is upon the face of the summons, this appeal is incompetent; in other words, you have got to show that the question is one of continuing liability in order to make the appeal competent. If, as I have already said, you look at the matter in a practical way and find that it is not a question of continuing liability, then cadit questio.

So far as I myself am concerned, I should like to say that—although it is a practical question, and although, as I put it in the Paisley case,² it is not enough to say that the liability may theoretically recur—if I can suppose that this woman should become insane again and should happen to be put in an asylum in the same parish (because that is necessary to support the

¹ Paisley Parish Council v. Glasgow and Row Parish Councils, 1907 S. C. 674, per Lord President Dunedin, at p. 677; Duke of Argyll v. Muir, 1910 S. C. 96; David Allen & Sons Billposting, Limited, v. Dundee and District Billposting Co., Limited, supra, p. 970.

² 1907 S. C. 674.

³ 5 F. 304.

⁴ Supra, p. 970.

June 12, 1912. hypothesis), I do not think the case would be res judicata; because I think the decision of this Court that the appeal is incompetent, in respect that no question of continuing liability is raised, reduces the matter to a mere question whether a particular sum of £17, 9s. 1d. is or is not due. On these grounds I am of opinion that the appeal is incompetent.

Melrose
Parish Council
v. Hawick
Parish Council.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree with your Lordship for the same reasons. I shall only add that I think the case of *Tait v. Lees*¹ is distinguishable. In that case the parties had joined issue in the Sheriff Court as to liability for an amount which would have allowed a decision to be appealed, and after they had joined issue a minute of restriction was put in, reducing the value of the cause to less than £25. The only question was whether the restriction of the conclusions of the summons after the parties had joined issue had or had not the effect of rendering the case unappealable. I do not think that applies to any question we have to consider here.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I agree that appeal is incompetent in the particular circumstances of this case. But I think it is necessary in order to arrive at a judgment really to know what the merits are. I have read the record and the judgments of the two Sheriffs, and I find that the case is this:—It so happens that the district asylum for Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk is situated in the parish of Melrose; a particular lunatic from Hawick was sent there as a private patient, and was paid for for six months, but then her husband, pleading inability to continue the payment, ceased the payment, and a question has arisen between the parish of Melrose, who were called upon by the asylum authorities to accept initial responsibility after the husband ceased to pay, and the admitted parish of the lunatic's settlement, as to the liability for her board. The question at issue is therefore not the ordinary question of the settlement of the lunatic. It is a question of whether the lunatic was a pauper or not. That question might have involved one of continuing liability, because the pauper might have continued a lunatic, and the obligation to maintain her might have continued. But we are told that the lunatic is now well, and has been removed from the asylum, and that the present obligation to pay for her has ceased. In these circumstances, there is no continuing liability possible, because if she turns out only to have had a lucid interval and has to be sent back to the asylum, the question of the husband's capacity to maintain her arises de novo in different circumstances. While, then, this appeal is incompetent as the value at stake is below the limit, if there had been a question as to the pauper's settlement there might very well have been a question of continuing liability, because no one can tell whether the convalescence is to be permanent or is merely a lucid interval.

THE COURT sustained the objection to competency, and dismissed the appeal.

JAMES D. TURNBULL, S.S.C.—SIBBALD & MACKENZIE, W.S.—Agents.

THE CALEDONIAN RAILWAY COMPANY, Complainers (Reclaimers).— No. 144.

Morison, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

HUGH SYMINGTON, Respondent.—Constable, K.C.—D. Jamieson.

June 12, 1912.

Process—Proof—Diligence for recovery of writs—Letter-books—Primary and secondary evidence. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington.

In an action of suspension and interdict, the respondent obtained a diligence for recovery, inter alia, of letters written by the complainers or anyone on their behalf relating to certain matters on record, and “failing principals,” for recovery of copies thereof. He subsequently applied for another diligence to recover, inter alia, the letter-books of the complainers’ agents containing copies of letters relating to certain other specified matters.

Held that as the respondent had not attempted to show that the principal letters were unavailable, he was not entitled, hoc statu, under the first diligence to recover the letter-books containing copies of letters written by the complainers’ agents, or to obtain the second diligence.

THE CALEDONIAN RAILWAY COMPANY, owners of part of the estate of Woodhouse, acquired by them in 1852, in connection with the construction of the Glasgow and Carlisle Railway, under a conveyance which excluded minerals, brought an action of suspension and interdict against Hugh Symington to restrain him from working the freestone upon that estate. 2D DIVISION.
Lord Cullen.

In defence it was averred that the freestone on that estate was a mineral in respect that it was of exceptional quality, and that, at the time when the land was purchased by the complainers, freestone was universally regarded as a mineral, and was so regarded by the complainers, and by those from whom they purchased the land.

After sundry procedure a proof was allowed by the House of Lords.¹ Thereafter the respondent obtained from the Lord Ordinary a diligence for recovery of, inter alia:—“1. All notices to treat under the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845, or Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, served by the complainers or anyone on their behalf on the proprietors of the Woodhouse estate, their tenants or lessees, or anyone on their behalf for or in connection with the acquisition or purchase of land, freestone, or sandstone for or in connection with the formation of the Glasgow and Carlisle Railway, and all claims, valuations, reports, arbitration proceedings, awards, and decrees-arbitral following thereon, and all correspondence between said parties, or any of them relating in any way to said notices, claims, arbitrations, or otherwise. 4. All notices to treat served by the complainers, or anyone on their behalf, on landowners, their tenants or lessees, in connection with the acquisition, purchase, or reservation of freestone or sandstone within said county [the county of Dumfries], referred to in said answer 11 for or in connection with the formation of the complainers’ undertaking; all claims, valuations, reports, arbitration proceedings, awards, and decrees-arbitral following thereon, and all correspondence between said parties, or anyone on their behalf, relating in any way thereto, between the years 1845 and 1868. 6. Failing principals of all or any of the books and documents called for, drafts, duplicates, excerpts, jottings, or copies thereof are called for.”

¹ Reported supra (H. L.), 9.

June 12, 1912. At the execution of the commission Mr Kirk, a partner of Messrs Hope, Todd, & Kirk, W.S., the complainers' law-agents, was cited as a haver, and was ordered by the commissioner, inter alia, to produce, under article 6 of the specification, the letter-books of his firm containing copies of the letters written by his firm on behalf of the complainers between 1845 and 1868, and called for under articles 1 and 4. The haver declined to obey the order. The case was then enrolled before the Lord Ordinary, when the respondent moved that the commissioner's ruling be sustained, and also moved for a diligence in terms of a second specification (No. 59 of process) for recovery of "All books kept by or on behalf of Hope, Todd, & Kirk, Writers to the Signet, Edinburgh, and of their predecessors in business Messrs Hope & Oliphant, Hope & Mackay, Hope, Mackay, & Mann, and Hope, Mann, & Kirk, all Writers to the Signet, Edinburgh, including ledgers, journals, cash-books, day-books, account-books, letter-books, statement-books, receipt-books, voucher-books, and all others, that excerpts may be taken therefrom showing or in any way tending to show the purchase money, compensation, and other moneys paid or payable by the complainers (a) to the proprietors of Woodhouse, their tenants and lessees, and (b) to all other landowners, their tenants and lessees or anyone on behalf of any of them, for or in respect of free-stone or sandstone within the county of Dumfries acquired, taken, used, or reserved by the complainers or their contractors for or in connection with the construction of the railway and railways referred to in answer 11 for the respondent between the years 1845 and 1868."

On 29th May 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) pronounced an interlocutor which, after disposing of a point with which this report is not concerned, proceeded:—“(2) Having considered the interim report of the commissioner, No. 55 of process, and heard counsel for the parties and the haver, sustains the commissioner's ruling, and ordains the haver to make production to the commissioner of the letter-books in question in order that he may excerpt therefrom copies of letters falling under the specification: Further grants diligence at the instance of the respondent for recovery of the books in terms of the specification, No. 59 of process.”

The complainers, having obtained leave, reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Second Division on 12th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The reclaimers' law-agents were not bound to produce the letter-books called for under article 6 of the first specification. The respondent had adduced no proof that the original letters were irrecoverable, and until this had been shown secondary evidence of their contents was inadmissible.¹ This was just a fishing diligence to obtain information about letters as to which the respondent did not even know whether or not they existed, and a diligence of such a nature should be refused.² The same objection applied to the second specification, which should further be refused on the ground that the documents therein called for were only writ of the complainers' agents, and therefore no evidence against the complainers of the matters in question.³

Argued for the respondent;—Article 6 of the first specification

¹ A v. B, (1858) 20 D. 407.

² County Council of Fife v. Thoma, (1898) 25 R. 1097.

³ Smith v. Smith, (1869) 8 Macph. 239.

was in the usual form, and had always been interpreted as meaning that the haver should produce principals if he possessed them, and if not, then copies. The interpretation contended for by the reclaimers, namely, that copies could only be called for after proof that the originals no longer existed, had been suggested, and negatived by the Court in Sleigh v. Glasgow and Transvaal Options, Limited.¹ The respondent's view was the most practical and convenient, for in many instances—as in the present case, where it was nearly fifty years since the letters were written—it would be difficult, if not impossible, to prove what had become of the originals. As to the second specification, the complainers' agents kept separate books dealing only with the complainers' business, and such books must be regarded as the complainers' own books and admissible in evidence against them.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I think that this reclaiming note must receive effect. The ground for so holding is extremely simple, and does not touch many of the points that Mr Constable made in arguing the case for the respondent.

The respondent in this case has obtained a diligence under which he was entitled to recover certain documents if they existed. Without having done anything whatever to endeavour to execute that diligence, which, of course, is a diligence to try and recover principal documents, he asks a second diligence to recover, not the documents themselves, but copies of the documents contained in the books of the complainers' agents, which at best are only secondary evidence, available only on its being proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the principals cannot be obtained. That is so elementary that I cannot see how it could be pleaded that, without anything whatever having been done to discover whether the principal documents existed, a diligence should be granted to recover that secondary evidence. I think, therefore, the proper course will be to recall the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, refuse the second specification, and find that Messrs Hope, Todd, & Kirk are not required hoc statu to produce their letter-books in order that excerpts may be taken of the copy letters that are to be found in these books.

Even if the production of such books were ultimately to be found necessary, I think that the interests of the agents to whom they belong would require to be very carefully guarded before such a sweeping search could be allowed. The point is certainly a novel one. I never heard of such a case before, and I am not in the least moved by what Mr Constable says, namely, that it is a good many years since these letters were written, and that it would be putting the respondent to great expense to show that he could not recover the letters. The fact that a long time has elapsed may make it difficult to recover the letters, but will make it all the easier to show that the party cannot expect to recover them.

LORD DUNDAS.—I agree. In this case a proof was allowed some time ago, the respondent to lead. He thereupon applied for, and obtained, a diligence and specification for recovery of documents. The last article was

¹ (1903) 5 F. 332.

June 12, 1912. the familiar one, "failing principals . . . drafts, duplicates, excerpts, jottings, or copies thereof." I should have thought it was elementary that, speaking generally, under a clause like this there can be no recovery of copies, drafts, and the like, except of consent, unless and until reasonable diligence has been exercised in attempting to recover the principals. But what the respondent did was to cite before the commissioner as the first haver Mr Kirk, a member of the firm who are agents for the complainers in Edinburgh, and to call upon him to produce copies of the letters written by his firm on behalf of the complainers between the years 1845 and 1868, and called for under articles 1 and 4. He declined to produce the letter-books containing these copies; the commissioner ordered him to produce them; the haver declined to obey the order, and the matter was brought before the Lord Ordinary. The respondent then lodged a second specification of documents, asking for recovery of the books of Messrs Hope, Todd, & Kirk, the complainers' agents, and their predecessors in the agency. In that state of matters the Lord Ordinary pronounced the interlocutor now under review, in which after dealing with a matter which we are not asked to consider, he sustained the commissioner's ruling, and ordained Mr Kirk to make production as ordered, and further granted diligence for recovery in terms of the new specification. I think that is wrong, and I think accordingly with your Lordship that the second branch of the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor ought to be recalled, and that we should refuse hoc statu the second diligence, and find that Mr Kirk is not bound hoc statu to produce in terms of the order upon him by the learned commissioner. Mr Morison argued strongly that the agents' letters are not evidence against the complainers. I do not know that one need consider that absolute proposition, and I express no opinion upon it; but at the present stage the letter-books of Messrs Hope, Todd, & Kirk are not the best evidence, in this sense that they cannot be got at and recovered until at all events it is made reasonably clear that better evidence is not available. I have a great deal of sympathy with Mr Morison's remark that this is a fishing diligence, promoted apparently in the interests of cheapness. Mr Morison's further contention was upon confidentiality. That would be a matter, if it arose, for the commissioner, and would, no doubt, be safe in his hands.

LORD SALVESEN.—I agree. I think the additional specification should not have been granted until the respondent had in some reasonable sense satisfied the Lord Ordinary that it was necessary for him to recover copies of the documents, in respect it was impracticable to recover the principals.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I agree.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Sustain the reclaiming note; recall the second head of said interlocutor, and refuse hoc statu the specification No. 59 of process, as also recall hoc statu the ruling of the commissioner appealed against: Quoad ultra adhere to the said interlocutor, and remit the cause to the Lord Ordinary to proceed as accords."

HOPE, TODD, & KIRK, W.S.—DOVE, LOCKHART, & SMART, S.S.C.—Agents.

MRS ISABELLA CATHERINE GALLOWAY OR HOUSTON AND ANOTHER,

No.145.

Pursuers (Reclaimers).—G. Watt, K.C.—MacRobert.

June 15, 1912.

ISABELLA AITKEN, Defender (Respondent).—Cooper, K.C.—

D. P. Fleming.

Houston v.
Aitken.

Insanity—Facility and Circumvention—Will—Reduction—Relevancy of averments that testator's relatives suffered from mental disease.

In an action for reduction of a will on the grounds of insanity and of facility and circumvention, the pursuer averred that the testator was peculiarly liable to suffer from mental disease as mental disease was hereditary in his family, and, in support of this, made specific averments as to the diseased mental condition of various near relatives of the testator.

Objection having been taken to the relevancy of these averments, held that the averments were not necessarily irrelevant, and objection repelled.

ON 20th October 1911 Mrs Isabella Catherine Galloway or Houston, 1st DIVISION. with the advice and consent of her husband, Robert Houston, brought Lord an action against Isabella Aitken for reduction of a general disposi- Skerrington.
tion and settlement executed by Edward Galloway, under which the defender acted as sole trustee and executrix.

The pursuers averred:—(Cond. 1) "The pursuer Mrs Isabella Catherine Galloway or Houston, wife of Robert Houston, joiner, 15 High Street, Dunfermline, is the only child of the late Edward Galloway (otherwise Edward Drinkwater Bethune Galloway), retired engineer, who resided at Fernbank, Kennoway, Fifeshire, and who died on 10th December 1910. The defender, who is about forty years of age, was, at the date of his death and for a period of about twenty years prior thereto, housekeeper to the said late Edward Galloway." (Cond. 2) "The late Edward Galloway, who was seventy-one years of age at the date of his death, was for many years an engineer in the service of the Egyptian Government, and in receipt of a large salary. He retired on a pension amounting to £8 per month about twenty years ago, and was in receipt of the pension up to the date of his death. While on duty in the Red Sea the said Edward Galloway suffered from sunstroke, and had to leave Egypt sooner than he intended to do. For many years before his death he suffered from arterio-sclerosis of the brain, and latterly softening of the brain." (Cond. 5) "The said deceased Edward Galloway was subject to violent fits of passion. On one occasion he took possession of the defender's clothes and set them on fire. He frequently behaved in an outrageous fashion, and indulged in alcoholic liquor to excess. A sister of the deceased's was confined in an asylum for twelve months on account of her mental condition, and David Galloway, a brother of deceased's, was a person of weak mind. A nephew of deceased (the son of a brother) is at present in an asylum." (Cond. 6) "For a number of years prior to his death the defender exercised a dominating influence over the deceased. About twelve years prior to his death deceased had a shock of paralysis followed by a second shock four years afterwards. These shocks had a marked effect on the mind of the deceased, and for a number of years prior to his death he was mentally weak and easily influenced."

The pursuers further averred that at the date of the execution of the trust-disposition and settlement the testator was incapable of

June 15, 1912. making a will, or that, being weak and facile, the deed was impetrated from him by fraud and circumvention on the part of the defender.
 Houston v.
 Aitken.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The deed under reduction not being the deed of the deceased, the pursuer is entitled to reduction thereof as concluded for. (2) In any event, the deed under reduction having been obtained from the deceased to his lesion by fraud and circumvention when he was weak and facile in mind and easily imposed upon, decree of reduction ought to be pronounced as concluded for.

The defender pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuers' statements being irrelevant and insufficient in law to support the conclusions of the summons, the action should be dismissed; and, in particular, the averments with regard to the mental condition of the deceased's relatives are irrelevant, and should be excluded from probation.

On 19th December 1911 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) appointed the passage (printed in italics supra) in condescendence 5 relating to a sister and a brother and a nephew of the testator to be deleted from the record, and approved of issues for the trial of the cause.*

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First Division on 25th January 1912, when it was continued to enable the pursuers to lodge a minute of amendment. The pursuers thereafter lodged a minute of amendment craving leave to add to condescendence 6, in place of the passage deleted by the Lord Ordinary, the following averments:—"Deceased's father had a sister, Christina, who suffered from mental disease, although she was not actually confined in an asylum. A sister of the deceased was confined in Springfield Asylum for seven months on account of her mental condition. She suffered from melancholia and strong suicidal impulses, and David Galloway, a brother of deceased's, suffered from epileptic fits accompanied by

* "OPINION.—This is an action for the reduction of a will in which the pursuer proposes the two ordinary and familiar issues. The defender's counsel moved that, before approval of the issues, the following passage should be deleted from article 5 of the pursuer's condescendence:—"A sister of the deceased's was confined in an asylum for twelve months on account of her mental condition, and David Galloway, a brother of deceased's, was a person of weak mind. A nephew of deceased (the son of a brother) is at present in an asylum." Evidence of this kind has been repeatedly disallowed in criminal cases, but it would appear from Dickson on Evidence, vol. i., sec. 3, where the whole authorities are collected, that the law is not so clear in regard to civil cases. I do not regard such evidence as necessarily irrelevant. An expert in insanity, who was familiar with the whole history of the various relatives of the testator who are referred to in the passage above quoted, might be able to draw the inference that the testator had a hereditary predisposition to insanity; and this conclusion, if correct, might help him to form an opinion on the further questions whether the testator had in fact become insane, and whether his insanity was of such a kind as to affect the validity of the will. The real reason for excluding such evidence is that its bearing upon the main issue is remote, and that it would be valueless and, indeed, positively misleading unless the inquiry as to the alleged mental disorder of the testator's relatives was conducted with the same care and minuteness as the inquiry into the alleged insanity of the testator himself. Life is not long enough to allow of an exhaustive inquiry into every side issue which has or may have a bearing upon the main issue. I accordingly appoint the passage to be deleted from the record. . . ."

mental derangement. Another sister of deceased's was for a period of nine months mentally incapax. These persons all suffered or suffer from mental disease. The disease showed itself in different forms in different persons. The fact that so many of the relations of the deceased Edward Galloway suffered from mental disease is a clear indication that mental disease is hereditary in the family. The fact that the disease showed itself in varied forms shows that the disease is deeply rooted in the family. Hereditary insanity is different from hereditary disease. In the former case the insanity may, and usually does, take a different form in the descendant, but the cause in both cases is mental disease. With such a family history the deceased was peculiarly liable to suffer, and did suffer, from mental disease."

June 15, 1912.
Houston v.
Aitken.

The case was again heard before the First Division (without the Lord President) on 15th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The amendment should be allowed, for the facts therein set forth could competently be inquired into. The mental condition of the testator was a matter on which medical experts would have to give their opinions, but, in arriving at these opinions, the family history of the testator was an element which they might have to take into consideration. For that purpose the facts relative to that history would have to be established by proof. The admissibility of such evidence in a civil case appeared to have come before the Courts in Scotland only once.¹ In criminal cases, although it had generally been rejected, it had sometimes been admitted.² In England, however, the usual practice was to admit it in criminal cases.³ The question of admissibility was really one of degree, depending on the circumstances of each case.⁴

Argued for the respondent;—The amendment should not be allowed, for the facts therein set forth were not such as could be admitted to probation.⁵ They were too remote from the main question in the case; and if admitted would involve a wide inquiry into the facts of each particular case, and, even if irrelevant, could not fail to prejudice the minds of the jury. The only civil case in which the admissibility of such evidence was raised had been carefully considered, and had been decided against the view of the reclaimers here.⁶ In criminal cases the weight of authority was against the admission of such evidence.⁷ In Lord Advocate v. Galbraith,⁸ although such ³ Taylor on Evidence (10th ed.), sec. 335; Earl Ferrers, (1760) 19 Cobbett's State Trials, 886, at pp. 923 and 932; Frere v. Peacocke, (1843) 3 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 664, at p. 669; The Queen v. Tucket, (1844) 1 Cox's C. C. 103; The Queen v. Oxford, (1840) 9 C. & P. 525, at p. 547.

¹ Walker v. Macadam, F. C., 8th March 1806, M. App. voce Proof, No. 3, aff. (1813) 5 Pat. 675, Eldon, L.C., at p. 689.

² Hume on Crimes, i. 40; Lord Advocate v. M'Leod, (1838) 2 Swin. 88; Lord Advocate v. Stewart, (1848) Ark. 471.

⁴ Dickson on Evidence, vol. i. sec. 3.

⁵ A v. B, (1895) 22 R. 402; Inglis v. National Bank of Scotland, Limited, 1909 S. C. 1038.

⁶ Walker v. Macadam, M. App. voce Proof, No. 3, 5 Pat. 675.

⁷ Lord Advocate v. Gibson, (1844) 2 Brown, 332, at p. 347; Lord Advocate v. Brown, (1855) 2 Irv. 154; Lord Advocate v. Dingwall, (1867) 5 Irv. 466; Lord Advocate v. Paterson, (1872) 2 Coup. 222; Lord Advocate v. M'Clinton, (1902) 4 Adam, 1, at p. 13; Lord Advocate v. Edmonstone, (1909) 47 S. L. R. 7.

⁸ (1897) 5 S. L. T. 65.

June 15, 1912. evidence had been admitted, the point had not really been discussed.
Houston v. In any event this was not a case for trial before a jury.
Aitken.

LORD KINNEAR.—I think, with the alterations which have now been proposed, and which have been made at the bar, the amendment ought to be allowed. The relevancy of the proposed averments appears to me to raise questions not of law but of fact, because the only point in dispute is whether, if they were proved, the facts alleged would tend to make the fact in issue highly probable, and that does not depend upon any doctrine of law but upon medical opinion. The opinion of medical experts as to the significance of the family and personal history of the testator is a relevant fact, and the facts upon which such opinion is rested may also be proved in order to the proper application of the expert opinion to the question in issue. I think, accordingly, the amendment ought to be allowed, because we can decide nothing at present as to the importance or direct bearing of the evidence, and we decide no more than that it may be admissible if a proper foundation is laid for it.

As to the defender's motion that the case should be sent to proof before a Judge instead of a jury, I am not disposed to accede to that. This is one of the appropriated causes. It is a case that is eminently suitable for trial by jury, and we should be going contrary to the ordinary practice if we appointed it to be otherwise tried.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I concur, but with considerable hesitation, because I foresee great difficulty in dealing with the matters which are proposed to be proved in support of this action in their proper bearing, and in confining them to their proper bearing before a jury. Three physical symptoms of mental incapacity are averred—arterio-sclerosis, softening of the brain, and shocks of paralysis. And these three being the physical symptoms, the mental symptoms averred are fits of violent passion, outrageous conduct, and excessive indulgence in liquor. These physical symptoms are so definite and so personal to the deceased, and so closely connected with the mental condition alleged, that I see very great difficulty in so connecting them with the alleged hereditary history of this man's family as to make evidence of heredity relevant or pertinent. But I admit that there is very great force in a remark which was made, not to-day but at the first discussion, that a medical expert may view symptoms differently if he knows that there has been insanity among near relations in blood, and is not drawing his conclusions solely from the symptoms themselves. I therefore do not see my way to refuse the addition of this very proper notice of details being added to the record, if evidence of the sort referred to is to be allowed.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I am of the same opinion. In a case of this kind evidence of the opinion of medical men has of course great weight, and the facts upon which that medical opinion is founded must be proved. Now, evidence may be tendered on behalf of the pursuers to the effect that the opinion of their medical witnesses is based to some extent upon the facts which are averred in this minute of amendment. If that is so, it would not be possible to exclude subsequent evidence to prove that the facts were as stated, and accordingly, if a sufficient foundation is first laid, I think June 15, 1912. that the averments in the minute of amendment may be made evidence in the case.

Houston v.
Aitken.

Upon the question of whether this case is to go to proof or to jury trial, I agree with what your Lordship in the chair has said.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

THE COURT allowed the record to be amended in terms of the minute, recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, and of new approved of the issues for the trial of the cause.

D. R. TULLO, S.S.C.—MYLNE & CAMPBELL, W.S.—Agents.

HURST, NELSON, & COMPANY, LIMITED, AND ANOTHER, Pursuers (Reclaimers).—Moncrieff, K.C.—D. P. Fleming.

No. 146.

SPENSER WHATLEY, LIMITED, Defenders (Respondents).—
Sandeman, K.C.—J. R. Christie.

June 20, 1912.

Jurisdiction—Foreign—Reconvention—Continued dependency of action of convention.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

A Scottish company, using arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem, brought an action in the Court of Session against an English company. The English company appeared to defend, and subsequently brought a counter action against the Scottish company. The actions were conjoined, and both were finally disposed of in the Inner House upon a reclaiming note, with a finding of expenses in favour of the Scottish company, and the accounts of expenses were remitted to the Auditor to tax and to report.

Before the Court had approved of the Auditor's report and decerned for expenses, and while the period for appeal to the House of Lords was still current, the Scottish company brought another action arising out of the same subject-matter against the English company, and pleaded jurisdiction ex reconventione. When this action was raised, the English defenders were making no claim against the pursuers, but had paid the sums due by them under the decrees in the conjoined actions, and were also willing to pay the accounts of expenses in these actions when taxed.

Held by the majority (the Lord President, Lord Kinneir, Lord Dundas, Lord Johnston, and Lord Mackenzie) of a Court of seven Judges, that the English company was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Scottish Court ex reconventione, inasmuch as the original actions had been finally disposed of on the merits by a decree of that Court.

Dissenting Lord Guthrie and Lord Salvesen, on the ground that, at the date of signeting the summons in the present action, the original actions had not been finally disposed of on the merits, as they were still open to appeal to the House of Lords.

Thompson v. Whitehead, (1862) 24 D. 331, followed.

Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company, (1894) 21 R. 866, commented on, and Lord Rutherford Clark's dissenting judgment therein approved.

ON 1st August 1911 Hurst, Nelson, & Company, Limited, Mother-1st DIVISION, well, and the liquidator of the company, brought an action against with three consulted Spenser Whatley, Limited, London, and averred, inter alia, that the Judges. defenders were subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session ex Lord reconventione. This report is concerned solely with that ground of Skerrington. jurisdiction.

The circumstances in which the case was brought are set forth

June 20, 1912. in the following narrative from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington):—

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

“ The question in this case is whether the defenders, Spenser Whatley, Limited, are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session in the present action at the instance of Hurst, Nelson, & Company, Limited, in respect either (a) of reconvention, or (b) of arrestments to found jurisdiction. The pursuers are a company registered in Scotland, but having places of business in England. As they are being reconstructed, their liquidator is conjoined as a pursuer. One branch of their business is to repair railway wagons. The defenders are a company registered in England. In the course of their business as coal factors they own and use a large number of railway wagons. For many years prior to 1908 the parties did business with each other under contracts for the maintenance, reconstruction, and hiring of railway wagons. Under the nine maintenance contracts the pursuers undertook to maintain, paint, and repair for various periods certain groups of wagons belonging to the defenders, in return for quarterly payments calculated at so much per annum for each wagon. Under the reconstruction contracts the pursuers undertook to reconstruct individual wagons at various prices. Under the hiring contracts the pursuers hired wagons from the defenders for which they paid rent.

“ On 24th March 1908 the present pursuers, Hurst, Nelson, & Company, brought an action against the present defenders, Spenser Whatley, concluding for payment of (first) £1933, 12s. 4d., and (second) £354, 2s. 2d. The sum first concluded for was claimed as due to the pursuers under the maintenance and reconstruction contracts after giving credit for what was due to the defenders under the hiring contracts. The sum sued for in the second conclusion was the damage claimed by the pursuers in respect of the defenders' alleged breach of the maintenance contracts.

“ In reply to this action Spenser Whatley on 22nd June 1908 brought a cross action against Hurst, Nelson, & Company. The summons contained six conclusions based on the three groups of contracts above referred to, and it concluded for moneys due under the contracts, and also for damages for their breach. The total sum concluded for in the leading action was £2287, and in the cross action £4871.

“ The actions came before me as Lord Ordinary, and they were conjoined. After a long proof I pronounced an interlocutor on 22nd February 1910, in which I disposed of the several conclusions, first in the leading and then in the cross action. In the leading action I found that Hurst, Nelson, & Company were entitled practically to the sum sued for under their first conclusion, but that they were entitled only to one shilling as damages under their second conclusion. In the cross action my decision was, with certain comparatively unimportant exceptions, in favour of Hurst, Nelson, & Company. By interlocutor of 9th March 1910 the sums to which Spenser Whatley had been found by the former interlocutor entitled were fixed at £59 and £117, 1s. 6d., and I further found Hurst, Nelson, & Company entitled to expenses in the separate actions, and also in the conjoined actions modified to three-fourths.

“ Spenser Whatley reclaimed to the First Division, and on 8th March 1911 their Lordships pronounced an interlocutor disposing of the whole merits of the conjoined actions, and also disposing of the question of expenses. . . . The judgment of the Inner House June 20, 1912. affirmed my interlocutor except on two points, viz.: (a) Hurst, Nelson, & Company's right to about £1100, which I awarded to them as the arrears which I held to be due to them under the maintenance contracts; and (b) as regards the expenses incurred in the Outer House. With reference to the first point, their Lordships held that the pursuers were not entitled to any sum under the maintenance contracts, and they accordingly, to that extent, recalled my interlocutor and dismissed the first conclusion of the summons at the instance of Hurst, Nelson, & Company. The leading opinion was delivered by Lord Mackenzie, and I quote the following passage from it:—'The fact remains that the (maintenance) money had, in part, not been earned. How much had been earned cannot be determined in this process. The action is laid on the contract and on the contract alone as regards the £1123, 7s. 4d. of maintenance money. Though it may be somewhat of a hardship to Hurst, Nelson, the matter is not one of form but of substance. In my opinion they should, as regards the period between 1st October 1906 and 7th January 1908, have sued for quantum meruit, or have brought an action to recover damages for work done by them during that period and not paid for. It is not possible in this process to say what that sum should be. I am therefore unable to agree with the Lord Ordinary's view that Hurst, Nelson are entitled to decree for £1123, 7s. 4d.' As regards the expenses incurred in the Outer House, the First Division affirmed my judgment, finding Hurst, Nelson, & Company entitled to expenses in the separate actions and also in the conjoined actions, but they modified the amount to one-half instead of three-fourths.

"The present action, which was signeted on 1st August 1911, was avowedly brought with the object of taking advantage of Lord Mackenzie's suggestion, and the pursuers plead that the sum sued for (restricted to £2314) is due to them either as a quantum meruit or in name of damages.

"Another fact bearing upon the question of reconvention is not founded upon in the pleadings in the present action, but is vouched by the correspondence, No. 37, the genuineness of which is admitted. On 28th July 1911—that is, three days before the signeting of the present summons—Spenser Whatley's solicitors wrote to Hurst, Nelson, & Company's solicitors, enclosing a cheque for £438, 16s. 1d., being the amount which they considered to be payable on a balancing of the amounts due under the conjoined actions. This cheque was accepted by Hurst, Nelson, & Company's solicitors, and although a trifling controversy remained unsettled, the fact upon which the defenders' counsel placed great reliance is substantially true, viz., that when the present action was raised Spenser Whatley were making no claim against Hurst, Nelson, & Company, and were ready and willing to pay the latter's account of expenses when taxed. Hurst, Nelson, & Company's account of expenses has not been lodged for taxation even at the present date (February 1912), but their counsel explained that the account was one of unusual magnitude, amounting to about £4000. It is not averred that the delay was intentional, and technically the action at the instance of Spenser Whatley is still a depending cause. In these circumstances, the question arises whether Spenser Whatley's action can be regarded as an actio conventiois, entitling Hurst, Nelson, & Company to bring the present action as one reconventionis."

June 20, 1912.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia ;—(1) The defenders are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session (a) ex reconventionem ; (b) in respect of the arrestments used to found jurisdiction. (2) (a) the defenders are barred by personal exception by their own actings from insisting in their plea of forum non conveniens ; (b) separatim, in the circumstances the Court of Session is the appropriate and convenient forum.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia ;—(1) The defenders not being subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session on either of the grounds alleged by pursuers or otherwise, the action should be dismissed. (2) Separatim, this Court being in the circumstances set forth forum non conveniens, the action should be dismissed.

On 20th February 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.*

* “OPINION.—[After the narrative quoted above, his Lordship proceeded] —It was argued for the defenders that their cross action against Hurst, Nelson, & Company was purely defensive, and that accordingly they could not be regarded as persons who had voluntarily appealed to the jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts. There is authority to the effect that as regards reconvention the question is one of substance and not of form, and that an action which is truly defensive in its nature cannot be founded on as giving rise to this plea. A typical example is an action brought by a foreigner in the Scottish Courts for the purpose of suspending threatened diligence on a bill of exchange. These authorities have no application to the facts of the present case. It is true that Spenser Whatley appeared as defenders in the leading action by compulsion in respect of arrestments used against them to found jurisdiction. It is also true that a cross action was necessary in order to give effect to what they conceived to be their rights under the three groups of contracts. None the less, by bringing the cross action, they subjected to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session various questions which were not raised in the leading action, and by suing for a larger sum they practically placed their opponents on the defensive. I am accordingly of opinion that if the present action had been brought while the conjoined actions were depending for judgment, no valid objection could have been taken to the jurisdiction, and that it would not have been necessary for the present pursuers to arrest anew in order to found jurisdiction against the defenders. The whole difficulty to my mind arises from the fact that the present summons was not signeted until long after final judgment on the merits had been pronounced by the Court of Session in the conjoined actions.

“The pursuers’ case rests upon the decision of the Second Division in the case of Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company, (1894) 21 R. 866. In that case the Lord Justice-Clerk (Macdonald), Lord Young, and Lord Trayner decided that an action of reconvention was competently raised after final judgment on the merits, with a finding of expenses, had been pronounced in the action of convention. Lord Rutherford Clark dissented, and he quoted the opinion of Lord President Inglis in Thompson v. Whitehead, (1862) 24 D. 331, to the effect that reconvention will apply only ‘where the two claims, the conventio and the reconventio, may be tried simultaneously, and terminated either by a single sentence, or by two sentences contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous.’ The facts in Thompson’s case raised an entirely different question from that which had to be decided in Allan’s case or in the present case, but the dictum of the Lord President is of high authority, and it commends itself by its good sense. That dictum seems to me to deprive of all authority the earlier decision of Lord Rutherford in Baillie v. Hume, (1852) 15 D. 267, which in some respects is more favourable to the pursuers than Allan’s case. In Allan’s case the Lord

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Extra June 20, 1912. Division (consisting of Lord Kinnear, Lord Dundas, and Lord Mackenzie) on 14th May 1912, and continued for hearing before seven Judges. Hurst, Nelson, & Co., Limited, v. Spenser Whatley, Limited.

On 18th May 1912 the First Division ordered the cause to be heard before that Division with three Judges of the Second Division, and the case was accordingly heard before the First Division, with Lord Dundas, Lord Salvesen, and Lord Guthrie, on 4th and 5th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The Lord Ordinary had erred in so far as he had distinguished the case of *Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company*¹ from the present case. The dissenting opinion of Lord Rutherford Clark in that case was not rested upon Scottish practice, the authorities dealing with which had not been fully cited in that case, and were inconsistent with his Lordship's view.² Until the Justice-Clerk and Lord Trayner accepted as authoritative the Lord President's dictum, but they did not comment upon the requirement that the two claims 'may be tried simultaneously.' They discussed only the requirement that the two judgments must be 'contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous.' While I prefer the opinion of Lord Rutherford Clark, it is my duty to give effect to the decision of the Second Division, and I can best do so by quoting the concluding words of Lord Trayner. After stating that the crucial date is that at which the actio reconventionis is brought, he proceeds:—'The only tests, at that date, of jurisdiction are (1) do the actions arise out of the same transaction, or are they ejusdem generis? (2) is the actio conventionis still in dependence? and (3) do the cases in themselves admit of being terminated by judgments nearly contemporaneous? If these questions are answered in the affirmative, there arises jurisdiction ex reconventionibus; if otherwise, not. Applying these tests here, I think jurisdiction ex reconventionibus was well founded.' It is a question of fact whether in any particular case two actions can be terminated by judgments nearly contemporaneous. In considering this matter I have kept in view the observations of the Lord Justice-Clerk (p. 871), to the effect that delay from accidental causes ought not to be taken into account. Accordingly I discount the fact that the present action was brought in the beginning of the autumn vacation of 1911, and that I was unable to hear the debate until early in February 1912. Allowing for all this, I am of opinion that it is impossible in the present case to hold that there is jurisdiction ex reconventionibus unless one is prepared to interpret Lord Trayner's third test in such a wide sense as to deprive it of all meaning.—[His Lordship then dealt with the question of arrestments used by the pursuers to found jurisdiction (with which this report is not concerned), and stated his reasons for holding that, as the subjects arrested were valueless, the arrestments were inept.]

"I dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction, and sustain the defenders' first plea in law. As the defenders' second plea of forum non conveniens was carefully argued I may say that I would have repelled that plea if the action had been competently before me. The fact that the defenders plead res judicata shows how inconvenient and unjust it would be for the Court of Session to refuse to entertain the action. A Scottish lawyer can see at a glance that this plea is absurd, but an English Court might have difficulty in arriving at the same result."

¹ (1894) 21 R. 866.

² Balle & Brink v. Benton, (1763) M. 4036; Black & Knox v. Ellis & Sons, (1805) M. App. Foreign, No. 7; M'Ewan's Trustees v. Robertson, (1852) 15 D. 265, Lord Rutherford, at p. 266; Baillie v. Hume, (1852) 15 D. 267; Ord v. Barton, (1847) 9 D. 541.

June 20, 1912.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

process in an action of convention was extracted there was jurisdiction in the Court to entertain an action of reconvention.¹ Applying that test to the present case there was a surviving process in the action of convention in which the present defenders were pursuers, and in which a final interlocutor, dealing with expenses, had still to be pronounced.² That being so, the defenders were subject to the jurisdiction of the Court ex reconventione. There were passages in the Civilians from which it appeared that the actio conventionis and the actio reconventionis need not necessarily be disposed of by contemporaneous judgments,³ as seemed to be implied in the passage quoted by the Lord Ordinary from the opinion of the Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in Thompson v. Whitehead.⁴ Set-off at the sight of the Court was not of the essence of the doctrine, but in the action of convention the present defenders had put in issue before the Scottish Court matters as to which their claims and the claims of the pursuers in the present action of reconvention should be tried by the same tribunal.⁵ The principle was that the defenders being pursuers in the action of convention could not be heard to plead no jurisdiction in the action of reconvention. When the summons in the present action was signeted the judgment in the defenders' action was subject to appeal to the House of Lords, and on the merits it might have been remitted back to the Court of Session. Accordingly, at that date the defenders were still seeking the benefit of the jurisdiction of the Court, and were bound to submit to its decisions.⁶ A plea of lis alibi pendens was in some ways analogous, and that plea would be sustained if, in the action in which it was stated, the summons was signeted before taxation of expenses had taken place in the action on which it was based.⁷ In the present case the summons having been signeted before the Auditor had reported upon the present pursuers' account of expenses in the action of convention, that action should be held to have been in dependence and jurisdiction to have been effectually founded ex reconventione.⁸

Argued for the respondents;—The stage reached in the action of convention excluded jurisdiction against the defenders ex reconventione. Before the present action had been brought against the defenders they had tendered payment of the sum found due to the present pursuers in the action of convention, and they were willing to pay the amount

¹ Longworth v. Yelverton, (1868) 7 Macph. 70; Stirling Maxwell's Trustees v. Kirkintilloch Police Commissioners, (1883) 11 R. 1.

² Inglis v. National Bank of Scotland, 1911 S. C. 6, Lord President, at p. 8.

³ Dig. II. i. 11; V. i. 22; Code VII. xlv. 14; Nov. 96; Voet, V. i. 78, 80, 86, 88; Huber, Prælectiones, XI. ii. 5.

⁴ (1862) 24 D. 331, at p. 344.

⁵ Morison and Milne v. Massa, (1866) 5 Macph. 130, Lord Deas, at p. 137.

⁶ Schibsby v. Westenholz, (1870) L. R., 6 Q. B. 155, Blackburn, J., at p. 161.

⁷ Mackay's Manual of Practice, 226; Aitken v. Dick, (1863) 1 Macph. 1038; Kennedy v. Macdonald, (1876) 3 R. 813.

⁸ Reference was also made to South African Republic v. La Compagnie Franco-Belge du Chemin de Fer du Nord, [1897] 2 Ch. 487; Yorkshire Tannery and Boot Manufactory, Limited, v. Eglinton Chemical Co., Limited, (1884) 54 L. J., Ch. 81; Merlin's Repertoire voce Reconvention, I., 2nd paragraph.

of the pursuers' accounts of expenses when taxed. If by bringing the present action before taxation the pursuers could subject the defenders to the jurisdiction of the Court, then by abstaining from extract they could subject the defenders to the jurisdiction indefinitely. Moreover, in the action of convention the defenders had not resorted to the Scottish Courts; but, having been brought there, they took proceedings to vindicate their defence in the only competent Court, because the action which they brought could not have been served upon the present pursuers in England.¹ Their action was really defensive, and there could be no reconvention following upon a defensive action.² The passages in the Civilians relied upon by the reclaimers did not affect principles of international law, because the principles of Roman law were not concerned with any question of jurisdiction as between Courts of different nations, but only as between Courts deriving jurisdiction from a common source. In any case these passages supported the view that jurisdiction ex reconventionem depended upon the question whether the two causes, the conventio and the reconventio, could be tried simultaneously and terminated by contemporaneous judgments,³ and that was a question to be determined by the circumstances of each case. In the circumstances of the present case, as the defenders were not seeking to enforce any pecuniary claim against the pursuers there were no two causes to be terminated by contemporaneous judgments, and accordingly there could be no reconvention.⁴ This question had not been considered fully in Scotland until the case of Thompson v. Whitehead.⁵ The case of *Balle & Brink v. Benton*⁶ was special by reason of consent signified by caution.⁷ The case of *Black & Knox v. Ellis & Sons*⁸ and other cases relied upon by the reclaimers were also special, and did not turn on principle.⁹ The dissent of Lord Rutherford Clark in *Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company*¹⁰ was in accordance with the decision of the Court in Thompson v. Whitehead,⁵ and supported the defenders' application of that decision to exclude jurisdiction in the present case.¹¹ A decerniture for expenses was not a final interlocutor on the merits of a cause, for as to the merits the function of the Court was exhausted by the interlocutor dealing with them.¹² A plea of lis alibi pendens was not analogous, and, in any event, could not be sustained if at the time when it had to be disposed of the action on which it was founded was no longer

June 20, 1912.
Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

¹ Watkins v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 285.

² Goodwin & Hogarth v. Purfield, (1871) 10 Macph. 214; Davis v. Cadman, (1897) 24 R. 297.

³ Thompson v. Whitehead, 24 D. 331, Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, at pp. 342 and 344.

⁴ Thompson v. Whitehead, 24 D. 331, Lord Neaves, at p. 347; Longworth v. Yelverton, 7 Macph. 70, Lord President Inglis, at p. 74.

⁵ 24 D. 331.

⁶ M. 4036.

⁷ M. 4036; Vans v. Sandilands, (1675) M. 4840.

⁸ M. App. Foreign, No. 7.

⁹ White v. Spottiswood, (1846) 8 D. 952; M'Ewan's Trustees v. Robertson, 15 D. 265, Lord Rutherford, at p. 267; Baillie v. Hume, 15 D. 267; Ord v. Barton, 9 D. 541, Lord Ivory, at p. 543.

¹⁰ 21 R. 866.

¹¹ Davis v. Cadman, 24 R. 297; Oliver & Boyd v. Miller & Son, (1905) 12 S. L. T. 634.

¹² Cruikshank v. Smart, (1870) 42 Scot. Jur. 241.

June 20, 1912. truly in dependence¹; similarly the Lord Ordinary had rightly sustained the defenders' plea of no jurisdiction in the present case.²

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

At advising on 20th June 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this case the facts are that Hurst, Nelson, & Company, who are a Scottish company, founded jurisdiction against Spenser Whatley, Limited, who are an English company, by arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and brought an action against them in the Scottish Courts. Spenser Whatley appeared to defend, and at the same time brought a counter action against Hurst, Nelson, & Company. The actions were conjoined; decree was given upon the merits in the Outer House; it was reclaimed to the Inner House, and the Inner House disposed of both actions—I need not go into particulars—by bringing out a sum in favour of Hurst, Nelson, & Company with a finding of expenses in their favour. The case then proceeded in the ordinary way, that is to say, a remit was made to the Auditor to tax the accounts of expenses, and to report, and nothing more remained to be done in those conjoined actions than to approve of the Auditor's report and to decern for expenses. Apart from that, the cases were absolutely finished, and the decision upon the merits could never be altered unless by the House of Lords.

While the cases were in this position Hurst, Nelson, & Company, who had not been found entitled to all that they conceived they were entitled to—the Court having decided, so far as they were unsuccessful, upon the ground that they had sued for a sum upon contract instead of for a quantum meruit—raised another action against Spenser Whatley, Limited, but this time without any effectual arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Spenser Whatley appeared in that action and pleaded “No jurisdiction,” and the sole question that has been remitted to seven Judges is whether there is in these circumstances jurisdiction ex reconventionem, owing to the fact that Spenser Whatley may still be said to be in the Scottish Courts in respect of the dependence of the former action and cross action to the limited extent that I have already explained, namely, for the stage which is represented by the approval of the Auditor's report on the expenses.

The Lord Ordinary held that there was no jurisdiction, but he did so upon what he considered was a specialty of the case. Apart from that specialty he considered that there would have been jurisdiction owing to the decision of the Second Division in the case of Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company,³ in which case it was decided by the Lord Justice-Clerk, Lord Young, and Lord Trayner, that an action of reconvention was competently raised, and that jurisdiction existed ex reconventionem. Lord Rutherford Clark dissented from that judgment.

The present case was reclaimed and came before those of your Lordships

¹ Gracie v. Kerr, (1846) 19 Scot. Jur. 60; M'Aulay v. Cowe, (1873) 1 R. 307.

² The following English authorities were referred to:—The “Salybia,” [1910] P. 25. Sup. Ct. Rules 1883, O. 31, Rules 15 and 16, and O. 19, Rule 27. The Lord President referred to Rousillon v. Rousillon, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 351, per Fry, J., at p. 371.

³ 21 R. 866.

who were sitting in the Extra Division, and I understand that your Lordships then came to the conclusion that the Lord Ordinary's judgment could not be supported upon specialty, and that it was necessary therefore to decide the general question and to reconsider whether the judgment of the majority or the minority in the case of *Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company*¹ was right; and for that reason the case was sent to seven Judges.

June 20, 1912.
Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

Ld. President.

Lord Rutherford Clark based his judgment in *Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company*¹ upon the opinion of Lord President Inglis when he was Lord Justice-Clerk, in the case of Thompson v. Whitehead.² I have considered carefully the various authorities that were cited to us in debate, and, in particular, the latter judgment, and I have come to the conclusion that in our books that is the only attempt which has been made to examine the principles upon which jurisdiction ex reconventione is founded, and I think that really nothing can be added to what Lord President Inglis said, viz., that reconvention will apply only when two claims—the claim in the actio conventionis and that in the actio reconventionis—may be tried simultaneously and terminated by a single judgment or by two judgments contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous. No doubt that makes it necessary to determine on the facts of each case what you mean by contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous. It appears to me that the foundation of the whole thing, as Lord President Inglis puts it, lies in the ability of the Court to deal with two actions at one time and in one decree. And therefore I think that unless the case is in such a position that that can be done effectually, there is no reason for the exercise of jurisdiction ex reconventione.

I do not think it is sufficient to say that, inasmuch as the foreigner has come to the Scottish Courts, he has by that step impliedly subjected himself for a time to whatever the Scottish Courts may think fit to do with him. Of course, this particular case is very peculiar. In the ordinary case it is the foreigner who comes here on his own account, and therefore to a certain extent he cannot be heard to complain of what happens to him in the way of jurisdiction when he comes. Here the foreigner did not come; he was brought. It is true that he then raised the counter action; but I do not think that that peculiarity affects the application of the general principle of which I have just spoken.

It appears to me that—in the position in which this case was, viz., that everything was done in the action and counter action that could be done; that nothing that this Court could do could alter the decree on the merits; and that all that remained was merely to give effect to a finding of expenses against the foreigner which the foreigner is perfectly willing to pay—there is no ground for upholding the jurisdiction ex reconventione. I do not mean that I think there might not be other circumstances in which the result would be different; for instance, supposing what is called the final judgment had only been pronounced by the Lord Ordinary, and the reclaiming days had not expired, I have no doubt the action would have been in time, because it would still be possible in this Court to put the

¹ 21 R. 866.

² 24 D. 331.

June 20, 1912. of the case before us, the result seems to me to be that the plea of jurisdiction ex reconventione must be repelled.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.
Lord Dundas. It occurs to me to add two observations. The first is that the pursuers' counsel did not satisfy me that there is any true analogy between the plea we are here considering and that of lis alibi pendens; and he is not, in my judgment, in a position to take benefit from the existing decisions upon that question of procedure—some of which have gone very far as to the continued technical “dependence” of a process, and might, perhaps, not unfitly be reconsidered if a suitable occasion should arise. The other observation is that, if it had been necessary to consider and decide the defenders' plea of forum non conveniens, I should, as at present advised, have thought much more favourably of it than the Lord Ordinary seems to have done.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I agree that the Lord Ordinary's judgment falls to be affirmed. The practice of the Scottish Courts in assuming jurisdiction ex reconventione is an equitable rule of practice or pleading, its motive being, as shown by the Lord Justice-Clerk (Inglis) in Thompson v. Whitehead,¹ the equitable object of placing the native defender in the matter of counter claims and counter actions in the same relation to a foreign pursuer as he would have been had the pursuer also, like himself, been a native. It is not to be extended or applied beyond the attainment of that object. To sustain jurisdiction ex reconventione in the present case would be so to extend or apply it. If I may humbly do so, I should accept the dissenting judgment of Lord Rutherford Clark in *Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company*² as expressing the opinion which I have briefly indicated, and as conclusive of the question raised in the present case.

LORD SALVESEN.—In common with your Lordships I accept the exposition of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in the case of *Thompson v. Whitehead*¹ as stating the grounds upon which, according to the law and practice of Scotland, a foreigner may be subjected to the jurisdiction of our Court ex reconventione. The main difficulty, however, in the present case is to apply the rules which were laid down by that learned Judge, and which the majority of the Second Division, who decided the case of Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company,² at least professed to follow. Several of these rules occasion no difficulty. Thus reconvention is admitted “not only where the two claims arise in eodem negotio, but also where they arise ex diversis causis, provided they be claims which can fairly be set against one another without violating some other rule of pleading or principle of equity.”³ I apprehend that this would cover the case of a foreigner suing a Scotsman for the price of goods under a contract of sale, and the Scotsman retaliating with a claim of a similar kind under a different contract of sale. According to our rules of pleading, it would not be competent as between two natives to set off the one claim against the other in the original action, but a counter action would require to be raised which could not be conjoined with the first, but which, nevertheless, might be conveniently tried by the same Judge immediately after he had heard the evidence in the first. Some of the other Judges indicated an opinion that reconvention is not allowed except when the actions can be conjoined, but this was June 20, 1912. certainly not the view of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, and is not, in my opinion, in accordance with the balance of authority. It is plain, therefore, that the right to convene the foreigner who sues in a Scottish Court is not confined to cases where, by the law of Scotland, compensation can be pleaded, but rests upon the broad principle of equity as stated in the leading opinion, "that it is iniquitous and oppressive to demand payment of a debt, however just, while you withhold from your debtor his property or funds, by the use of which he might be enabled to pay you."¹

¹ 24 D. 331.

² 21 R. 866

³ 24 D., at p. 345.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

Lord Salvesen.

The second rule is that the defenders' privilege is limited to those cases where the subject-matter of the two claims can be conveniently tried at the same time and in the same Court, and can be brought to a conclusion by one judgment (as in conjoined actions), or by two separate and contemporaneous, or nearly contemporaneous, judgments. This rule might be construed as meaning that an action ex reconvention was not competent after a judgment on the merits by the Judge of first instance in an action raised by a foreigner against a Scotsman. I do not think, however, this is the true construction. If the judgment in the first case has become final, then it is impossible to comply with the rule that the two claims shall be brought to a conclusion by one judgment, or by separate and nearly contemporaneous judgments, for the final judgment may be extracted at any moment and the other case would have to be litigated on its own merits; and the judgment would be separated in point of time from the earlier one by just such an interval as must necessarily elapse in order to have the pleadings adjusted and the case disposed of in the ordinary way. But where the judgment of the Judge of first instance is still open to review at the time when the action of reconvention is instituted the conditions postulated in the rule may still be complied with. The earlier judgment may be appealed to the Sheriff or to the Inner House, and may, if the Court thinks proper, be sisted to await the decision in the second, so as to permit of both being tried in the Court of appeal at substantially the same time, and of contemporaneous, or nearly contemporaneous, judgments being pronounced. There may be many cases in which it would be equitable that such a course should be followed. The defender in the first action may have been so confident of success that he did not think it necessary to plead his counter claim. If the Judge of first instance, however, decided against him, and the judgment has not yet become final, I think he is entitled to bring his action of reconvention, and it does not appear to me to be material that he afterwards allows the judgment in the first action to become final. As Lord Trayner pointed out in Allan's case,¹ the point of time in questions of jurisdiction, which must always be looked at, is the date at which the action is brought, and if jurisdiction then exists it is not affected by any subsequent change of circumstances.

Applying these principles, I think the case of *Allan*¹ was well decided. At the time the action of reconvention was raised the judgment in the original action had not become final. It is true that judgment upon the merits had been pronounced, but the pursuer still required to appeal to the

¹ 24 D., at p. 344.

June 20, 1912. jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts in order to obtain a decree for his expenses.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

Had the defender therefore appealed the case, it was open to him to get the action sisted until judgment was given in the second action; and it would therefore have been possible for the Court of appeal to have disposed of the two actions by contemporaneous, or nearly contemporaneous, judgments.

The circumstance that the original defender felt that he could not with any reasonable prospect of success challenge the judgment that had been pronounced against him cannot, in my opinion, affect the question of jurisdiction. I differ from the view that reconvention is not a ground of jurisdiction. Unless it be so, the Court cannot entertain an action against the foreigner who is convened and who is not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts.

I should like to add, with reference to something which has fallen from Lord Kinnear, that I think the distinction which he has drawn between a final judgment in this Court and a judgment on the merits in an inferior Court shows that the decision of your Lordships is not inconsistent with the decision in the case of Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company.¹

Assuming, however, the jurisdiction to exist, it must always be a question of discretion whether in a particular case the Court think they should exercise the jurisdiction, or should remit the pursuer in the action of reconvention to the forum of the defender. That was expressly laid down by Lord Young in his opinion in Allan's case,¹ in which I respectfully concur, and has been given effect to in other cases, of which *Williamson's*² is an example. In the present case the plea of forum non conveniens is presented with unusual force. In the first place, the actio conventionis had been decided not merely by the Judge of first instance, but by a decision of the Inner House which, although still appealable to the House of Lords when the actio reconventionis was raised, has since been permitted to become final. This latter action would therefore have to be carried through quite independently of the former process. A still stronger circumstance is that we were told by the respondents' counsel, without contradiction, that the subject-matter of the dispute arose in England, and that by far the greater number of the witnesses are resident there; and it may well be that, if there be any difference between the laws of the two countries, the proper law to apply is that of England. Further, there is no reason to suppose that the action will not be tried just as well in England as here; and I am not at all moved by the consideration which seems to have appealed to the Lord Ordinary, that a plea of res judicata might be entertained in the English Courts which would not have the smallest chance of success here. On these grounds I concur with your Lordships in holding that we should dismiss this action; not, however, on the ground that we have not jurisdiction to entertain it, but on the ground that it is not convenient that the jurisdiction which we possess should be exercised against the defenders here.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The question in this case is whether the defenders, who are an English company, can be sued here ex reconventionis by the pursuers, whose company is registered in Scotland.

¹ 21 R. 866.

² (1884) 11 R. 596.

The facts in connection with the previous action brought in the Court of June 20, 1912. Session by Hurst, Nelson, & Company, the pursuers here, against Spenser Hurst, Whatley, Limited, the defenders here, and the counter action brought Nelson, & Co., by the latter against the former, are given by the Lord Ordinary in his Limited, v. Spenser Whatley, Limited. opinion. The merits of these litigations have been wholly exhausted and expenses have been awarded. The only thing that remains to be done is to obtain approval of the Auditor's report. These circumstances were also Lord Mac- present in the case of Allan v. Wormser Harris & Company,¹ in which kenzie. it was held by a majority of the Court that an English firm was subject to the jurisdiction of the Court here on the ground of reconvention. The pursuers' counsel maintained that the judgment of the majority was conclusive in his favour, and the case has been sent to seven Judges in order that it may be decided whether the view taken by the majority in the case of *Allan*¹ was sound or not. An argument was maintained by the defenders which would obviate the necessity of considering the case of Allan,¹ because they maintained that the previous action they raised against Hurst, Nelson, & Company was not of the nature of an actio conventionis at all, but had been brought in order to establish their counter claims to the demands which Hurst, Nelson, & Company had made in the original action in which they were the defenders. As the Lord Ordinary points out, Spenser Whatley, Limited, did raise in the pleadings in their action various questions which were not raised in the leading action, and by suing for a larger sum they practically placed their opponents on the defensive. In this view I agree. Accordingly, if Spenser Whatley's action is to be considered as still in dependence, I think they would be liable to be sued in the present action. If that action is not in dependence, then there cannot be reconvention.

If the true test be whether there is anything that Hurst, Nelson, & Company have to set against any sum for which they might obtain decree, it is plain there is nothing here. When the present action was raised Spenser Whatley were making no claim against Hurst, Nelson, & Company, and had offered to pay their account of expenses when taxed. It appears to me that the true test is whether the claim in the actio reconventionis can be pleaded in compensation to demands made in the leading action. I accordingly agree with the Lord Ordinary who states that he prefers the opinion of Lord Rutherford Clark, who dissented, in the case of Allan.¹ Lord Rutherford Clark's opinion gives effect to the principles that were laid down by the Lord Justice-Clerk (Inglis) and the majority of the Court in the case of Thompson v. Whitehead,² and its substance is that reconvention holds its place in our jurisprudence on the equity that a foreigner who is appealing to the jurisdiction of a Scottish Court must submit to that jurisdiction in such actions as his adversary may raise and are necessary to enable the Court to do justice between the parties; that it is a condition of jurisdiction ex reconventionione that the other action shall depend for judgment, for to hold that the actio reconventionis can proceed when the actio conventionis has ceased to be in dependence would be to act on a principle after the reason of it has ceased to exist. After final decree

¹ 21 R. 866.² 24 D. 331.

June 20, 1912. the cause cannot be in dependence for judgment. The question of expenses having here been disposed of, any further interlocutor approving of the Auditor's report will be merely executorial.—Inglis v. National Bank.¹

Hurst, Nelson, & Co., Limited, v. Spenser Whatley, Limited.
 Lord Mac-kenzie.

The decree on the merits cannot be altered. The question, therefore, whether the decree has been extracted or not does not appear to be relevant, for the Judge after pronouncing decree has no power to alter its terms either before or after extract. The passages from the civil law cited by Lord Rutherford Clark show that the actio reconventionis is truly a mutua petitio which implies that each petition is before the Court for judgment.

The case in which there is the fullest exposition of the law on the whole subject is Thompson v. Whitehead,² and although it is not directly a judgment on the merits of the question here, as the ground of judgment was that the two claims did not arise in eodem negotio, yet the principles regulating reconvention were fully explained. The opinion of the Lord Justice-Clerk is summed up in the passage quoted in the opinion of the Lord Ordinary to the effect that reconvention will apply only "where the two claims, the conventio and the reconventio, may be tried simultaneously, and terminated either by a single sentence, or by two sentences contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous."³ It is pointed out in *Thompson's case*² that the law will have fully satisfied the principle of equity on which reconvention is founded if it allows the Scottish defender to protect himself against the demand of a foreigner by setting off against it pro tanto the foreigner's debt to him. The law of Scotland, like the law of Rome, permits reconvention out of favour to a defender that he may not be condemned to pay without his having at the same time an opportunity of enforcing his demand against the pursuer. The pursuers' counsel in the present case contended that there were further passages in writers on the civil law which threw additional light upon the matter. The result of the passages referred to appears to me to be this,—that a foreigner during the dependence of the law suit, and while he is himself pursuing, is personally barred from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court in which he has brought his action in regard to all claims arising in eodem negotio, or even ex diversis causis, provided they are claims which could fairly be set against one another without violating some other rule of pleading or principle of equity. This view of the equity on which the plea rests was recognised in the case of *Longworth v. Yelverton*⁴; and in *Davis v. Cadman*⁵ Lord M'Laren pointed out that reconvention just means that when a pursuer, being a foreigner, takes proceedings here, and thereby submits the matters in dispute to the judgment of this Court, "he is not allowed to plead want of jurisdiction in any counter action which may be necessary for completely determining the rights of parties which are in dispute." This bears out the view that in a proper case of reconvention the question is a question of the terms on which the pursuer is to get judgment in the leading action. In the present case, so far as this Court is concerned, what is being treated as the actio conventionis is at an end on the merits. It is not relevant to consider what the House of Lords might have done if an appeal had been taken. If this consideration was relevant, then the argument in Allan's case¹ was futile. The merits of the cause which is June 20, 1912. treated as the actio conventionis have been exhausted in this Court.

¹ 1911 S. C. 6.² 24 D. 331.³ 24 D., at p. 344.⁴ 7 Macph. 70.⁵ 24 R. 297, at p. 305.

It does not appear to me that the principles explained by the Lord Justice-Clerk in Thompson's case² and Lord Rutherford Clark in the case of *Allan*¹ are inconsistent with the decisions in any of the earlier cases with the exception of Baillie v. Hume.³ That judgment is entitled to great respect, having been pronounced by Lord Rutherford, but no reasons are given in the report for the conclusion reached. The case of Balle & Brink v. Benton,⁴ which at first sight appeared to be an authority for the pursuers, proves on examination to contain a specialty which was quite sufficient for the decision of the case. Upon the application of Andrew Fowler, a merchant in Aberdeen, as agent for Benton, a merchant in Newcastle, a vessel was arrested at Aberdeen. Fowler was ordered to find caution for payment of all damages and expenses. As the result of the process at Benton's instance it was found by the Court of Session that the property in the ship had been regularly transferred by proceedings in Norway to a Danish purchaser. Benton and Fowler together with their cautioner were thereafter sued for damages and expenses in consequence of the arrestment of the ship and the judicial procedure following upon it. The facts above stated were quite sufficient to subject the defenders to the jurisdiction of the Scottish Court. *Black & Knox v. Ellis & Sons*⁵ is not an authority on the question of reconvention. It decided that a foreign creditor who executed a poinding in Scotland could only take the poinded goods subject to the nexus put upon them by Act of Parliament, and was bound under the Bankrupt Act to contribute the statutory proportion of the proceeds of the poinded goods. With all deference therefore to what is said about this case in M'Ewan's Trustees,⁶ *Black & Knox*⁵ cannot be regarded as an authority on the question. In M'Ewan's case⁶ it was held that, where a debtor who had been sequestrated and discharged under a composition arrangement had left Scotland, he could not be sued in the Court of Session by a creditor for payment of the composition on the ground of reconvention.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

In *Ord v. Barton*⁷ the foreign defender was a claimant in a Scottish sequestration, and it was therefore held, as Lord Moncreiff puts it, that he must take from us the whole law of bankruptcy which may bear upon his claim. The process in that case was a depending one. This case recognised that jurisdiction ex reconventionis is not to be tested with reference to the power of the Court to give full effect to its decree.

It therefore appears to me that if the judgment in the case of *Allan*¹ is to be taken as laying down law inconsistent with the opinion of the Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in Thompson,² it is not in accordance with principle or authority. I therefore arrive at the same conclusion as the Lord Ordinary. I do so, however, upon the grounds stated, not because I am able to distinguish the facts of the present case from those in the case of Allan.¹

It is not necessary to express an opinion upon the plea of forum non conveniens stated by the defenders. The facts set forth in the third article

¹ 21 R. 866.

² 24 D. 331.

³ 15 D. 267.

⁴ M. 4036.

⁵ M. App. Foreign, No. 7.

⁶ 15 D. 265.

⁷ 9 D. 541.

June 20, 1912. of their statement of facts, however, show that there is much to be said in support of it.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur in the opinion of Lord Salvesen. I think the action should be dismissed, on the ground of forum non conveniens, in accordance with the respondents' second plea, not on the ground stated in the first branch of the first plea, which the Lord Ordinary has sustained, namely, that the Court has no jurisdiction ex reconventione.

It is common ground that the two requisites necessary, by the law of Scotland, for an action of reconvention are, first, that the matters with which it deals must be the same as those in the action of convention, in the sense of being either ex eodem negotio or ejusdem generis; and second, that the action of reconvention must be instituted while the action of convention is still, as Lord Rutherford Clark puts it in Allan's case,¹ in dependence for judgment. It seems to me that what Lord Trayner states, in the case of Allan,¹ as a third element, namely, to quote the Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in the case of Thompson v. Whitehead,² that the action is only competent "where the two claims, the conventio and the reconventio, may be tried simultaneously, and terminated either by a single sentence, or by two sentences contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous," is only an ingredient in the second requisite that the action of convention be still in dependence.

The Lord Ordinary holds, and it is not disputed, that this action satisfies the first requisite. The question is, Does it satisfy the second?

The expression "in dependence," used in the writings of the jurists and in the decided cases, is ambiguous. I read it as meaning in dependence for final judgment on the merits. If so, the date at which the question is to be considered is all-important. If the ruling date in this case is the present date, it is clear that the action of convention is no longer in dependence for final judgment on the merits, because the interlocutor of the First Division on the merits of that action is no longer appealable. If, however, the ruling date be the date of raising the action of reconvention, then, that action having been raised on 1st August 1911, it was still open to either of the parties to the action of convention to have taken the interlocutor of the First Division of 8th March 1911, disposing of the merits of that action, to review by the House of Lords.

I concur with Lord Trayner in the case of Allan,¹ that the date of raising the action of reconvention is the ruling date. If so, I do not see how, as at that date, while the period given by statute to the parties to consider whether they will treat a judgment as final or not was running, any final judgment on the merits can be properly said to have been pronounced, and the action in that sense to have been no longer in dependence.

Two consequences, inequitable to the native litigant, and not demanded in the just interests of the foreigner, seem to me to follow from the opposite view, as laid down by Lord Rutherford Clark in the case of Allan.¹ First, I have difficulty in seeing how a sufficient distinction can be drawn—Lord Rutherford Clark makes none—between a judgment on the merits pronounced in the lowest of a succession of tribunals constituting a judicial system of lower and higher Courts, and a judgment pronounced in one of June 20, 1912. the higher Courts; and thus it would seem to follow that, after judgment on the merits has once been pronounced by a Sheriff-substitute in the action of convention, an action of reconvention, competent so far as the subject-matter is concerned, cannot be brought for want of jurisdiction either in the Sheriff Court or the Court of Session. The second consequence would seem to be that an action of reconvention would not be competent even if, before it was brought, the judgment on the merits in the action of convention had been appealed; and, a fortiori, it would not be competent if brought before an appeal was taken in the action of convention, even if, after it was brought, a timeous appeal was taken in that action.

¹ 21 R. 866.

² 24 D. 331, at p. 344.

Hurst,
Nelson, & Co.,
Limited, v.
Spenser
Whatley,
Limited.

Lord Guthrie.

I see nothing inconsistent with the Lord Justice-Clerk's opinion in the case of *Thompson v. Whitehead*¹ in holding that, by the law of Scotland, a proper action of reconvention can always be raised while the relative action of convention is still in dependence for final judgment on the merits, meaning thereby, so long as the merits have not been disposed of by a judgment no longer appealable. Nor, as at the date when this action was brought, do I see anything to prevent the reasonable application of the Lord Justice-Clerk's rule laid down in Thompson v. Whitehead's case,¹ that the two claims must be capable of being tried and terminated contemporaneously or nearly contemporaneously.

On the question of forum non conveniens, I think this is a typical case for giving effect to that plea.

THE COURT adhered.

P. GARDINER GILLESPIE & GILLESPIE, S.S.C.—DAVIDSON & SYME, W.S.—Agents.

WILLIAM BENSON ALLAN AND OTHERS (John MacKechnie's Trustees), No. 147.
First Parties.—J. R. Christie.

MRS CHRISTINA MACKECHNIE, Second Party.—J. R. Christie.

ANDREW MACKECHNIE, Third Party.—J. R. Christie.

WILLIAM INGLIS MACADAM, Fourth Party.—Malcolm.

June 21, 1912.

MacKechnie's
Trustees v.
Macadam.

Trust—Administration—Investment—Power to continue business—Conversion of business into private limited company.

A testator by his will directed his trustees to realise the business owned and carried on by him, or, alternatively, to "continue" the business if they considered it "desirable to retain the same and conduct it for behoof of" his estate. In the event of realisation the trustees were directed to invest the proceeds in trust investments. The trustees, after carrying on the business for some years, proposed to form it into, and conduct it as, a private limited liability company, with substantially the same capital and under the same control as before.

Held that, in the circumstances, the trustees' proposal did not amount to a realisation of the old business (which would require the proceeds to be invested in trust investments), or to the starting of a new business, but was in substance a continuation of the old business; and, accordingly, that it was within the powers conferred upon them by the will.

¹ 24 D. 331.

June 21, 1912.

MacKechnie's
Trustees v.
Macadam.

2D DIVISION.

JOHN MACKECHNIE, coppersmith and brassfounder, who carried on a business at Port-Glasgow under the firm name of William Hume & Company, of which firm he was the sole partner, died in 1908, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement by which he disposed his whole estate to trustees. The testator, inter alia, directed his trustees to apply the income of his estate for the maintenance of his wife and children, with a power to encroach on capital for this purpose, and on his wife's death to pay over the residue to his children and their issue, whom failing, to certain other persons. The will further provided:—“(Fourth) I direct my said trustees to realise as soon after my decease as expedient the manufacturing business presently carried on by me in Port-Glasgow, unless it appears to them, and to my said wife, whose views I request my trustees to obtain and consider on this subject, that it is desirable to retain the same and conduct it for behoof of my estate, in which latter event, I direct my said trustees, with the concurrence of my said wife, to continue the said business, and to pay over to my said wife, so long as she remains unmarried, the whole or such part of the net income thereof as they may deem necessary for the maintenance in comfort of my said wife and of my child or children then surviving, due regard being had to the opinion of my said wife as to the amount necessary for her said maintenance, with power to my said trustees to appoint a manager, who may be one of themselves or any other fit person, and to assume such manager as a partner in said business, and to allow such manager or partner to conduct said business subject to their supervision, and to pay him an adequate remuneration for his services: (Fifth) In the event of my said business being sold, I direct my said trustees to invest the proceeds thereof, along with any other uninvested estate belonging to me, in such investments as are authorised by law. . . .”

The testator was survived by his wife and one child. For some years after his death his trustees continued to carry on the business under the powers contained in the will. Questions having arisen with regard to the continuation of the business, a special case was presented for their determination. The first parties were the trustees, the second and third parties, the testator's widow and child respectively, and the fourth party, one of the conditional residuary legatees.

The case stated:—

“6. The trustees have now come to the conclusion that it would not be expedient to continue to carry on the business as a private company, notwithstanding the fact that powers to do so are given in the settlement, as they consider it would be unwise in the interests of the trust-estate to continue trading, with the risk that if a misfortune befell the business the free estate of the testator might be required to assist in paying the debts incurred in carrying on the business. They are of opinion, and the second and third parties agree with them, that if the business of William Hume & Company were formed into a limited liability company as after mentioned, with the capital belonging to the deceased still retained therein, it could be successfully carried on without endangering the other estate left by the deceased. The trustees therefore would propose to form the said business into a private limited liability company on the following lines, viz.:—The company to be formed would be a private one within the meaning of section 121 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and would be incorporated under the name of ‘William Hume & Company, Limited,’ the liability of each member being limited to the amount unpaid on the shares held by him. The nominal capital of the company would be fixed at £2500 or thereby in shares of £1 each. Of this amount there would be issued to the trustees or others, their nominees, in trust for the late John MacKechnie's trustees, say 2300 shares as fully paid as against the value of the business transferred to the Company. This represents the sum of £2300, which is the estimated amount presently at the credit of the trustees of Mr MacKechnie in the books of the firm after providing for all liabilities. This sum is made up of (1) the value of plant and machinery, estimated at £500 or thereby; (2) value of stock in trade, estimated at £1100 or thereby; and (3) debts due by sundry trade debtors, estimated at £700 or thereby. As, in the course of management of the business, accounts are, as a rule, paid monthly, and liabilities settled similarly, it has not been found necessary to provide further cash for the working of the business; and it would probably be unnecessary to issue any further capital than that issued as against the assets acquired. The trustees, however, regard it as in the interest of the business that the truster's widow, the second party hereto, should be allowed to become a shareholder, and she is willing to join the Company if it shall be found to be within the competence of the trustees to form it for carrying on the business. She would take 100 shares either by purchase for cash, or by acquiring 100 of the shares to be issued to the trustees as fully paid. It is proposed that the number of shareholders should by the memorandum of association be limited to five, and that, with the exception of the second party, and one other person acting for the time being as manager as after mentioned, no person should be capable of holding more than ten shares in the concern otherwise than in trust for the first parties. Provision would be made whereby the directors of the company must be trustees for the time being under the said trust-disposition and settlement of Mr MacKechnie; and it is proposed to appoint the trustee who has been managing the business hitherto, or other competent person to be nominated from time to time by the trustees, to be manager of the company, subject to the supervision and control of the directors, at such remuneration as shall be fixed by the directors. The regulations of Table A of the Act would be made applicable so far as consistent with the foregoing proposals; and the objects of the company would be strictly limited to the carrying on of the business hitherto carried on under the powers of the trust-disposition and settlement.

"The business has since the death of the testator been conducted on strict lines, and the books and accounts have been annually submitted for audit, so that it could be carried on as a private company under the Act with little, if any, change in the present arrangements."

The first, second, and third parties contended that it would be for the advantage of the estate to form the business into a private limited company, and that such a course was within the powers of the trustees.

The fourth party contended that it was not expedient to allow the business to be formed into a company, and that the trustees had no power to do so or to retain the testator's funds therein.

The following question of law was stated for the opinion and judgment of the Court:—"Under the terms of the trust-disposition and settlement of the deceased John MacKechnie, have the trustees power to form the business into a limited liability company in the manner proposed, and to retain therein the funds of the deceased presently embarked in the business?"

June 21, 1912.

MacKechnie's
Trustees v.
Macadam.

The case was heard before the Second Division on 21st June 1912. Argued for the first, second, and third parties;—The trustees had power under the will to form the business into a private limited liability company under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1908.¹ So long as it remained substantially the same firm and business, the trustees had power to carry it on.² In each case it was a question of circumstances whether the business remained the same. In the present instance the changes proposed by the trustees did not affect the identity of the business.

Argued for the fourth party;—The trustees had not the power contended for. The leading direction in the will was to “realise” the business, and the discretionary power of the trustees to continue it must be construed strictly. To incorporate the business into a limited liability company would be to alter, not to retain, its personality.³ The trustees could not retain the testator's funds in such a company, since incorporation involved the realisation and sale of the business, and in such an event the trustees were expressly directed to invest the proceeds in trust investments only.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I think that the question in this special case should be answered in the affirmative.

If the widow here was objecting, that might raise a totally different state of circumstances; but she is not objecting, and what is proposed to be done is simply to carry on the same business in the form of a limited company. Now, I cannot see how that can possibly be to the disadvantage of the estate; it might be greatly to the advantage of the estate; and, as it is not really a new business in any sense, and what is to be done is what was done before, and the difference is only in the form in which the business is to be carried on, I do not see any objection to the course proposed by the trustees.

LORD DUNDAS.—I agree. This is, I take it, a friendly suit, brought in order to obtain the sanction of the Court to what is more or less a family arrangement. The argument for the fourth party was very clearly and temperately stated by Mr Malcolm, who said, as I understood, in the first place, that the proposal to form this company, was not to “retain,” “conduct,” or “continue” the business within the meaning of the truster's settlement. I think that is much too narrow a reading of the language, and that in substance and in common sense this is just a continuation of the business. It was then suggested that what was proposed was a sale, but I think the same remark applies to that. In substance and in truth this is not, I think, a sale, but a continuation of the business. When one comes to look at the kind of private company which it is proposed to form, one sees that the control and management of it are absolutely secured to the trustees, and, so far as I can observe, no increased risk or liability to the general estate will ensue, but the contrary. I see no reason, therefore, why we should not answer the question as your Lordship proposes.

¹ Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. VII. cap. 69), secs. 2, 121, 137, (1) (a) (i).

² Alexander v. Lowson's Trustees, (1890) 17 R. 571; Lawrie v. Lawrie's Trustees, (1892) 19 R. 675.

³ Smith v. Patrick, (1901) 3 F. (H. L.) 14; Thomson's Trustees v. Thomson, (1889) 16 R. 517.

June 21, 1912.
MacKechnie's
Trustees v.
Macadam.

LORD SALVESEN.—I am of the same opinion. The testator, in a certain event which has happened, directed his trustees, with the concurrence of his widow, to continue his business. They did so for a number of years, with results that showed that the business is one which is capable of being carried on at a profit, and indeed that a very large loss would, in all probability, be involved to the estate if the business had to be realised. They now propose, instead of carrying it on as a private partnership to convert it into a private company, and to make such alterations on the constitution as the Companies Act of 1908 renders necessary. I am far from saying that we could authorise trustees to carry on a business as a private company under the Companies Act, 1908, generally, but one has to consider what are the terms of the memorandum of the company which the trustees propose to form. These terms are set forth in the special case—as I think they were bound to be before we could determine the question raised by the case—and I find that in substance there is no change upon the old private partnership except such minute changes as compliance with the Companies Act, 1908, requires, and they are in no degree adverse to the interests of the fourth party as residuary legatee. The same capital is being employed; the same persons are going to control the administration of the business; and in every respect, so far as I can see, the new company will be identical with the old, with this important difference, that the rest of the trust funds will no longer be endangered should disaster ultimately overtake the business. Now, these being the facts, I think the trustees are substantially within the direction of the testator, and that this proposed new company is a continuation merely of the business, and is not the establishment of a new business, which is impliedly prohibited. Accordingly, I am of opinion with your Lordship that we should answer the question in the affirmative.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I agree. In the proposal which we are asked to approve there seem to be only two differences of any moment between the business as now proposed to be carried on and the business presently in existence. The one is that certain persons will now be interested in the management and in the profits who were not interested before, but the testator contemplated that his trustees might assume an additional person as partner, namely, the manager if they appointed one. The other difference is a substantial one, namely, that under the new proposal the rest of the estate will not now be in risk. That does not seem to me a difference that can possibly affect the question now before us, because it is in the interest of everybody, including the fourth party, and it will be to the advantage of the estate left by the deceased.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the affirmative.

JAMES G. BRYSON, Solicitor—CARMENT, WEDDERBURN, & WATSON, W.S.—Agents.

No. 148. THE GRAND LODGE OF ANCIENT, FREE, AND ACCEPTED MASONS OF SCOTLAND, Petitioners (Appellants).—Clyde, K.C.—Macmillan, K.C.
 June 21, 1912. —Keith.

Grand Lodge of Freemasons
 v. Inland
 Revenue.

THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, Respondents.—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

Revenue—Corporation duty—Exemptions—Funds applied to charitable purposes—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 and 49 Vict. cap. 51), sec. 11.

The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, sec. 11, imposes a duty of five per cent upon corporate property, but exempts therefrom "property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied . . . for any charitable purpose."

The Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Scotland held and administered by means of committees three benevolent and annuity funds, which were kept separate from the general funds of the body and were appropriated entirely to benevolent purposes. These funds were derived from grants given by Grand Lodge, from contributions by members of Grand Lodge, from a proportion of the fees for intrants paid by daughter lodges, and from voluntary donations and subscriptions by lodges and by individuals. The funds were administered for the relief of distress among freemasons and their relatives and dependants; the relief given being entirely within the discretion of the committees, and no one having any legal right to participate in the benefits of the funds.

The Inland Revenue having sought to assess these funds for corporation duty on the ground that they were not charitable funds but were of the nature of benefit or provident funds—

Held that the funds were appropriated to charitable purposes within the meaning of sec. 11 of the Act, and were accordingly exempt from corporation duty.

Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow v. Inland Revenue, (1887) 14 R. 729, distinguished.

Exchequer
 Cause.
 1ST DIVISION.

ON 19th March 1912 a petition and appeal was presented by the Grand Lodge of Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masons of Scotland against an assessment by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for corporation duty upon the following funds held and administered by the petitioners, viz.:—(1) The Fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence; (2) the Annuity Fund; (3) the Metropolitan District Benevolent Fund.

The petition set forth, inter alia:—

"8. The petitioners and appellants are the Grand Lodge of Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masons of Scotland, hereinafter called 'Grand Lodge.' . . . Grand Lodge is composed of certain office-bearers and others, and of the master and wardens, or, in their absence, the proxy master and proxy wardens, of each daughter lodge holding a charter from Grand Lodge. The members and office-bearers of Grand Lodge must be master masons whose names have been recorded in the books of Grand Lodge, and who are subscribing members of a lodge holding under the Scottish constitution. By rule 74 of the said constitution and laws every member of Grand Lodge is required, in order to raise a fund for supporting the same, to pay 5s. annually besides the contribution specified in the schedule of fees contained in rule 226. By rule 77 all lodges holding of Grand Lodge are required to pay annually the fees exigible for representation in Grand Lodge. Rule 115 fixes the fee for commissions to provincial or district grand masters at ten guineas, renewable every five years under rule 116 for a further fee of two guineas. By rule 138 the lodges in the metropolitan district are required to pay certain fees annually to grand committee of Grand Lodge to meet the necessary expenses of the visitation committee and for purposes of benevolence on behalf of applicants belonging to the said lodges, the funds so collected being administered under the direction of grand committee. Each daughter lodge must annually obtain a certificate from Grand Lodge under rules 151 and 152, for which the sum of 5s. is payable. By rule 164 the master of each lodge is required annually to make up a list of all intrants and affiliates in his lodge during the preceding year, and to transmit the same along with the fees to Grand Lodge. Rule 188 requires each brother at his initiation or affiliation to pay 11s. 6d. through his lodge towards the funds of Grand Lodge for recording his name and for a Grand Lodge diploma when he shall have become a master mason, and by the same rule certain other fees are fixed. By rule 189 no brother whose name has not been registered in the books of Grand Lodge shall be eligible to be a member thereof or of any provincial or district Grand Lodge, or to be a member or office-bearer in any daughter lodge; neither shall he have any claim on the fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence or on the Annuity Fund. Rule 226 contains a schedule of fees payable to the General Fund.

June 21, 1912.

Grand Lodge of Freemasons
v. Inland
Revenue.

"9. By rule 89 of the said constitution and laws the constitution of grand committee is defined, and by rule 92 grand committee is required annually to appoint various standing committees, including a finance committee. The whole of the financial income of Grand Lodge from whatever source, Benevolent and Annuity Funds included, is placed under the direct supervision of the finance committee. . . .

"10. The petitioners and appellants hold and administer five separate funds, known respectively as the General Fund, the Metropolitan District General Fund, the Fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence, which includes a small fund known as the Dalhousie Annuity Fund, the Annuity Fund, and the Metropolitan District Benevolent Fund. No question arises with regard to the General Fund or the Metropolitan District General Fund.

"11. The fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence was instituted in August 1846, and is regulated by rules 199 to 213 inclusive of the said constitution and laws. Rule 199 provides that 'this fund shall be devoted to the purposes of benevolence and shall not be appropriated to any other use.' It is raised by means of annual contributions from the office-bearers and members of Grand Lodge, the amount of these annual contributions being fixed by rule 227; 1s. from the registration fee paid for each intrant, and such voluntary donations as may from time to time be made. It is directed to be kept separate from the ordinary income of Grand Lodge, and no part of the ordinary income may be applied to benevolent purposes unless by special vote on notice given. Rule 200 earnestly recommends Provincial and District Grand Lodges and daughter lodges to contribute annually to this fund as a central fund for carrying out the benevolent objects and principles of freemasonry, either from their lodge funds or by subscription among the brethren. The application and distribution of the fund is by rule 201 entrusted to a committee of Grand Lodge, known as the Benevolent Fund Committee. All

June 21, 1912.

Grand Lodge of Freemasons
v. Inland
Revenue.

applications for benevolence are by rule 203 required to be made through and considered by the lodge from which the petitioner derives right. Under rule 204 no petition shall be considered from any brother whose name is not registered in Grand Lodge books nor from the parent, widow, or child of such brother, neither shall any brother have a claim to be relieved unless his name has been at least two years so registered, with certain exceptions. All applications are decided upon by the said Benevolent Fund Committee and must be accompanied by a certificate by grand secretary of the registration of the applicant or the applicant's son, husband, or father. . . . In cases of extraordinary distress, relief may be afforded by the committee, under rule 207, to brethren, or their widows or children, under the constitution of other Grand Lodges. In urgent cases, grand secretary, by rule 208, may authorise grand treasurer to give such poor brethren as may appear proper objects of relief any sum not exceeding 10s. Rule 211 directs the monies received to be from time to time paid into bank to an account kept in name of the fund. By rule 212, 10 per cent of the monies received is required to be annually set apart to form a sinking fund, and the yearly interest is made applicable to benevolence in addition to the annual revenue. The sums to be distributed in each year by the committee are, under rule 213, limited to the receipts of that year including interest on capital, but under deduction of the payment to sinking fund. The amount unappropriated on each year's contributions, including the contribution of 10 per cent to sinking fund, is required to be regularly capitalised. The Dalhousie Annuity Fund is a small fund consisting of the investments, representing a balance of £150, with certain accumulations of interest, of a fund subscribed in 1872 by members of Grand Lodge and other craftsmen, for the purpose of presenting a bust of himself to the then Earl of Dalhousie, Past Grand Master, and which remained over after that object had been accomplished. The fund is held by the trustees of the Fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence, and the annual proceeds are payable to the aged wife or aged widow of a Scottish freemason by way of annuity during the pleasure of grand committee, in accordance with a scheme approved by grand committee on 27th December 1894. . . .

"12. The Annuity Fund was established by Grand Lodge in November 1888, and is regulated by rules 214 to 225 inclusive of the said constitution and laws. By rule 215 this fund is placed under the management of an annuity board, consisting of the members of grand committee, and is supervised by the finance committee. By rule 218 the accounts of the income and expenditure of the fund are directed to be kept separate from the other funds of Grand Lodge. The fund, as provided by rule 219, consists of donations from lodges and individual brethren, of one-half of the annual free income of Grand Lodge, of any other sums that Grand Lodge may see proper to grant, and of the proceeds of annual and special collections made in the daughter lodges. The donations and one-half of all sums received from Grand Lodge are reserved as capital and invested in the names of the trustees for the Fund of Masonic Benevolence, or such other trustees as Grand Lodge may direct. The contributions from daughter lodges are purely voluntary, and many of them make no contributions to the Annuity Fund. Further, a sum of £15,000, being the proceeds of a bazaar held in 1889 on behalf of the Annuity Fund, was in that year added to the Fund, and is now represented by investments held by the Annuity Fund trustees. In addition to June 21, 1912. these sources of revenue Grand Lodge in 1908 transferred from their general funds to the Annuity Fund as a donation under rule 219 a ^{Grand Lodge of Freemasons} sum of £20,000, now represented by investments held by the Annuity ^{v. Inland Revenue.} Fund trustees. By rule 220 the half not directed to be capitalised of the sums which have been received from Grand Lodge and the income which has arisen from capital during the preceding year under deduction of management expenses, are directed, so far as may be required, to be distributed in annuities. Any surplus is carried forward for disposal in subsequent years. By rule 221 the annuity board is empowered to grant twenty annuities of £15, ten of £20, and five of £25 each in cases which are considered deserving of special treatment. All other annuities are to be of £10 each. The board is empowered to appoint annuities to be paid by instalments, and, if deemed expedient, to fix in what way they are to be applied for the benefit of the annuitants. Under rule 222 every master mason registered in the books of Grand Lodge, and every parent, widow, or child of a master mason so registered, is qualified to be placed on the roll of annuitants, but only one annuity shall be on the roll at the same time in favour of parties deriving right from the same brother. . . . Rule 223 provides that any annuity may be withdrawn at the pleasure of the board. Annuities are granted to applicants qualified as before mentioned, whether the lodge through which they claim contributes to this fund or not.

“ 13. The Metropolitan District Benevolent Fund is a fund devoted to the purposes of masonic benevolence connected with the metropolitan district, and is administered by a committee under a scheme which was adopted by Grand Lodge at a quarterly communication held on 1st August 1907. . . . The fund is divided into two parts—capital and revenue. The capital consists of (1) a fund amounting to £1102, 9s. 1d. or thereby, then set aside and invested; (2) one-half of the annual levy of 5s. per intrans payable by each lodge in the district; (3) such other funds as may from time to time be added to capital as thereafter provided; and (4) any legacy or donation of £20 or upwards unless otherwise specially stipulated by the donors. The revenue consists of (1) the interest or dividends on invested capital; (2) one-half of the said annual levy of 5s. per intrans; and (3) any legacy or donation under £20, unless otherwise specially stipulated by the donors. The accounts of the fund are directed to be kept separate from those of the other funds administered by Grand Lodge. Any unexpended balance on revenue account at the end of the financial year may, in the discretion of the committee, either be added in whole or part to capital or carried forward for distribution in the succeeding year. The capital of the fund is directed to be invested in name of the trustees of the fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence, but as an ear-marked fund. It is further provided by the said scheme that the revenue of the fund shall be devoted solely to the relief of worthy poor and distressed brethren who are members of lodges in the district, and of the widows, children, or parents of such brethren, or of such others as may be deemed by the committee to have been dependent on them. The fund is distributed by a committee consisting of the members of the visitation committee of the metropolitan district and the masters of the lodges in that district. Provision is made for the committee obtaining all necessary information regarding the circumstances of

June 21, 1912.
Grand Lodge of Freemasons
v. Inland
Revenue.

each case in respect of which an application for relief is made, and the committee is required to examine all applications for relief, and is empowered in its discretion to grant according to the circumstances of each case such sums as may appear necessary.

" 14. No member of any lodge has any legal right to participate in the benefits of any of the said funds described in the three immediately preceding articles hereof, nor does any member on joining a daughter lodge make any direct payment to Grand Lodge in respect of these funds. The distribution of grants and annuities therefrom is entirely discretionary on the part of the administrative bodies, and is in no way regulated by or commensurate with the contributions which may have been received from the daughter lodge through which the applicant claims relief, the sole considerations in granting relief being the necessities and merits of the particular case. The said funds are administered entirely on a charitable and benevolent system.

" 15. The petitioners have, since the said Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, came into operation, annually furnished the Commissioners of Inland Revenue with an abstract of their whole accounts showing separately the accounts of their General Fund and the Fund of Scottish Masonic Benevolence, and also of the Annuity Fund, the Metropolitan District General Fund, and the Metropolitan District Benevolent Fund, since the three last-mentioned funds respectively came into existence. No corporation duty was charged by the said Commissioners on the income of any of the said funds except the General Fund until recently, when the Commissioners for the first time intimated to the petitioners a claim for corporation duty on the income of the whole of the said funds for the years 1908-9, 1909-10, and 1910-11. The petitioners objected to this claim so far as regards the funds other than the General Fund and Metropolitan District General Fund, and maintained that the income of the said Benevolent and Annuity Funds was exempt from assessment to duty under section 11 (3) of the Act of 1885, inasmuch as these funds, or the income or profits thereof, were legally appropriated and applied for charitable purposes, in conformity with the respective schemes above set forth, which are strictly observed in the administration of the said funds."

Answers were lodged for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in which they denied that the funds were appropriated for charitable purposes and therefore exempt.

The case was heard before the First Division on 30th May 1912.

Argued for the petitioners;—Legal appropriation to a charitable purpose meant appropriation by the constitution of the body whose funds were in question. By the constitution of Grand Lodge relief might be given from the funds in question to some (e.g., dependants of a mason) who had never been contributors to them and who were therefore recipients of charity. There was no direct relationship between Grand Lodge and individual members of daughter lodges. The only way in which the members assisted the funds in question was indirectly by payment of entrance fees or by voluntary contribution to their lodges. It was not disputed that the funds had always been legally appropriated and applied to specific benevolent purposes, and it was significant that no attempt had ever been made to impose corporation duty, though the Act under which it was sought to do so had been in force since 1885. No applications for relief from the funds could be considered except those of persons who were proper objects of charity, and all applications were disposed of, not as of right, but entirely at the discretion of the appropriate committees. Benefits could not be described as purchased, because there was no commensuration between contributions and benefits, and a large contributor might quite well be an unsuccessful applicant. The fact that there were no legal rights conferred and obligations imposed distinguished the present case from that of the Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow v. Inland Revenue,¹ in which the fund in question was derived chiefly from obligatory payments, as in the case of a provident society. That funds were mainly devoted to charitable purposes sufficed to bring them within the statutory exemption.² Although the application of the benefits of the funds was limited to the class of freemasons and their dependants, that fact did not destroy their charitable character. In considering whether funds were entitled to exemption a generous construction ought to be placed upon the statute.³

June 21, 1912.
Grand Lodge
of Freemasons
v. Inland
Revenue.

Argued for the respondents;—Each mason was obliged to contribute to his own lodge, and his lodge in turn contributed to the funds in question. In return for that each mason acquired a right to apply for assistance from these funds; and an obligation was imposed upon Grand Lodge to give consideration to his application. The case was akin to the case of the Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow,⁴ and was governed by that decision. As an applicant for benefits had to be a mason, contributions to the funds in question were, in fact, compulsory, though the payments were made indirectly; and, although the funds were administered by committees with discretionary powers, they were in fact provident funds administered for the benefit of contributors and their dependants. These considerations excluded the funds from the exemption claimed,⁵ and it was immaterial that the funds received some augmentation from voluntary contributions.

At advising on 21st June 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—The question raised here is as to the liability of a certain portion of the funds of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Scotland for corporation duty, which is levied in terms of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act of 1885. That Act provides for a duty being paid upon the profits accruing to corporate bodies, the view of the Act being that inasmuch as corporations never die, there ought to be some contribution taken out of the corporate property which should more or less correspond to what is taken out of private property on the occasions of the deaths of successive holders. But there are certain exemptions made, one of which is, “property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied

¹ (1887) 14 R. 729, Lord President Inglis, at p. 732.

² Income-Tax Commissioners v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 531, disapproving Baird's Trustees v. Lord Advocate, (1888) 15 R. 682.

³ Inland Revenue v. Forrest, (1890) 15 App. Cas. 334; Royal College of Surgeons of England, [1899] 1 Q. B. 871; Society of Writers to the Signet v. Inland Revenue, (1886) 14 R. 34.

⁴ 14 R. 729.

⁵ Institution of Linen and Woollen Drapers, (1887) 2 Tax Cases, 651, 58 L. T. R. 949, 4 T. L. R. 345.

June 21, 1912. exemption contained in section 11, subsection 3 :—[His Lordship then Grand Lodge of Freemasons v. Inland Revenue.
 Lord Mac-kenzie. quoted the section; and after narrating the constitution and objects of the funds in question, as set forth in the passages from the petition quoted supra, proceeded]—No corporation duty was charged on the income of any of the funds until recently, when a claim was intimated for the years 1908-9, 1909-10, and 1910-11. The Crown do not dispute that all three funds are legally appropriated to a specific purpose, nor is it denied that they are applied to the specific purposes for which they were raised. It was, however, disputed that the purpose was a charitable one, the argument being that, inasmuch as the distressed persons who are relieved are themselves contributors, they merely get back their own in the shape of benefits as the members of a benefit society do. If the present case was the same as that of a benefit society, then it would fall under the decision in the Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow v. Inland Revenue,¹ in which it was held that funds belonging to an incorporate body, which were derived from the entry-moneys of members and were solely applicable as pensions to decayed members and widows of members at the absolute discretion of certain office-bearers, were not to be regarded as funds appropriated “to a charitable purpose” in the sense of the statute. The argument for the Crown was that that case and the present contained the following elements in common :—(1) that the contributions are compulsory; (2) that the funds are appropriated to benevolent purposes; (3) that the objects of benevolence were those who had contributed or their dependants; (4) that the amount of the award, or whether there would be any award, depended upon the discretion of those administering the funds; and (5) that no individual had any absolute right to a share of the funds. The fact that the payments into the three funds in question here were not direct did not, according to the argument of the Solicitor-General, make any difference.

It appears to me that the question whether a particular fund falls within the exemption of the statute or not is largely a question of degree. If the objects of the corporation are purely mutual benefit, if the individual corporators make their contributions as an investment, the case would be governed by the principles laid down in the Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow.¹ From the bye-laws which govern the Tailors Incorporation it appears that all that was left was for the mutual benefit of the individual members. So too in the English case re The Linen and Woollen Drapers, &c., Institution,² which was founded upon by the Crown, it appears from the opinion of Pollock, B., that the institution was a mutual benefit society. As the rules are not printed in the report it does not appear upon what grounds this opinion was reached, but the opinion of Lord President Inglis in the Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow,¹ is referred to and adopted by Hawkins, J., in his judgment.

In the present case it does not appear to me that the contributions by individual freemasons are of such a character or amount as to necessitate the Court arriving at the conclusion that the funds in question are not legally appropriated and applied for a charitable purpose. The individual pays not to any of these funds but to a daughter lodge and makes these payments in order to become a freemason. From the rules a consequence results that a small proportion of his contributions goes to these funds. That, however, is not the main object he has in view when he makes his contribution. He makes his contribution in order to share in the benefit of freemasonry, and this is not confined to receiving payments from these funds. Accordingly I think that there is in the present case sufficient to distinguish it from the *Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow*¹ and the Linen Drapers Institution.² It is not, in my opinion, necessary to make any distinction as regards the funds in question. I think all three fall within the exemption of the statute, and, therefore, that the prayer of the petition should be granted.

¹ 14 R. 729.

² 58 L. T. R. 949.

Grand Lodge
of Freemasons
v. Inland
Revenue.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

LORD KINNEAR concurred, and the Lord President intimated that LORD JOHNSTON, who was absent at advising, also concurred.

THE COURT sustained the appeal and recalled the assessments complained of.

J. L. OFFICER, W.S.—SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

FREDERICK WEIR, Appellant.—Morison, K.C.—Aitchison. No. 149.
THE NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY COMPANY, Respondents.—Cooper, K.C.
—E. O. Inglis. June 21, 1912.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Second Schedule (17) (b)—Act of Sederunt, 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (g)—Stated case—Procedure—Remit to arbitrator to reconsider his award. Weir v. North British Railway Co.

In an appeal by way of stated case in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Court, without answering the questions put, remitted the case to the arbitrator to reconsider his award in light of the opinions expressed by the House of Lords in a judgment pronounced after the date of his decision.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), First Schedule (1) (b) and (16)—Incapacity—Possibility of supervening incapacity—Review—Nominal award—Suspensory order.

Decision in Rosie v. Mackay, 1910 S. C. 714, to the effect that it is incompetent to keep open a claim to compensation by means of a nominal award or similar device, doubted in view of the opinions delivered in the House of Lords in the subsequent English case of Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway, [1912] A. C. 242.

In an application by the North British Railway Company under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for review of a weekly payment made by them to Frederick Weir, labourer, the Sheriff-substitute (Thomson) at Glasgow, ended the compensation and, at the request of the workman, stated a case for appeal.

2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

The case set forth that the appellant lost his right eye through an accident which occurred on 22nd June 1911, and which arose out of and in the course of his employment with the respondents. The respondents admitted liability, and by an agreement, of which a memorandum was recorded, undertook to pay him compensation

¹ 14 R. 729.

² 58 L. T. R. 949.

June 21, 1912. during incapacity at the rate of 11s. 9d. weekly. The application for review was presented on 20th November 1911, and proof was led on 10th January 1912. At the diet of proof the appellant lodged a minute in the following terms:—"The claimant, without prejudice to his pleas that his incapacity is not in any way diminished, respectfully craves the Court, in the event of the Court finding in fact that he is able at present to perform his ordinary work, to find further in fact and law, in respect said accident has involved patent and serious physical disability to the claimant, that he is entitled to a nominal award of compensation so as to preserve his right to apply to the Court for subsequent orders in respect of the injuries sustained by said accident, or otherwise to sist further procedure or continue the present application for review, and grant leave to either party to renew the application in the event of any change of circumstances occurring."

—
Weir v.
North British
Railway Co.

The case further stated that the following facts were admitted or proved:—

"(2) That by 20th November 1911, the date of the present application, he had recovered from the effects of the accident, in so far as recovery was possible; that there was then no danger of the remaining eye becoming affected through the accident, and that the sight of the remaining eye was normal.

"(3) That at the time he met with the accident he was a 'tapper'; that he had been a tapper for three and a-half years, and before that had been an ordinary labourer.

"(4) That his duties as a tapper were, as the parties by joint minute have admitted, 'to bore out copper stays in fire-boxes'; these boxes have holes which are fitted up with copper stays, 'and when these require renewal the tapper cuts the head off the stays on the outside with a hammer and chisel, and he then bores out the stay with a machine and inserts the new stay.'

"(5) That his eyesight in the remaining eye is quite sufficient for the work of a tapper, and that he is now, and was at the date of this application, fit to resume work.

"(6) That the respondents have in their employment, doing the same or similar work, several men who many years ago lost the sight of one eye by accident, and who are able, notwithstanding the loss of the eye, to earn, and do earn, full wages."

The arbitrator found in these circumstances that the compensation fell to be ended, and he ended the same accordingly as at 20th November 1911, and refused the crave of the minute for the appellant lodged on 10th January 1912.

The questions of law for the opinion of the Court were:—" (1) Whether on the facts found proved, as stated in the interlocutor, the arbitrator was entitled to terminate the compensation? (2) Whether in view of the whole facts of the case, the arbitrator was bound to give effect to the appellant's minute, either by making a nominal award or by sisting procedure?"

The case was heard before the Second Division on 20th and 21st June 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—When the arbitrator's award was pronounced the law in Scotland, as laid down in the case of Rosie v. Mackay,¹ was to the effect that it was incompetent to keep a claim for compensation open by the device of a nominal award, or by a June 21, 1912. suspensory order. Since then the competency of such a device had been affirmed by the House of Lords in Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway.¹ The circumstances in the present case were just those in which a suspensory order should be pronounced. At any-rate the arbitrator, if he had not considered himself bound by the case of Rosie,² might have pronounced such an order; and the case should therefore be remitted to him to reconsider his award in the light of the opinions expressed in the case of Taylor.¹ The case of Hargreave v. Haughhead Coal Company, Limited,³ relied on by the respondents, was distinguishable. In that case there was an express finding that the wage-earning capacity had not diminished, and that the workman had returned to work. A workman who had suffered a permanent disfigurement might recover sufficiently to be able to work as before, and yet his wage-earning capacity, i.e., his power to get work, might be diminished, if, for example, he had been refused work on account of his disfigurement.⁴ The arbitrator had apparently relied on Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Limited,⁵ which had been expressly disapproved.⁶ He was bound to consider "the entire results causally connected with" the injury.⁷

¹ 1910 S. C. 714.

Argued for the respondents;—The appeal should be dismissed on the ground that the arbitrator had come to a right decision on the law as it existed at the date of his award. In any event, the decision in the case of *Rosie*² was not overruled by the dicta in the case of Taylor,⁸ which were obiter, and not necessary for the decision of the case. The decision in *Rosie*² was never referred to in the case of Taylor.⁸ Assuming that *Rosie*² had been overruled, still no case had been made out for a remit, because on the findings the arbitrator had come to a right conclusion, and, if the case were remitted to him, he could do nothing else than reaffirm his award. To justify a suspensory order there must be proof, as in the case of Rosie,² of a probable recurrence of incapacity due to the accident. In the present case the findings of fact expressly excluded such a probability. Incapacity had ceased, and therefore the compensation fell to be ended.⁹

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—This case stands in a very peculiar position indeed. I do not think I have ever seen a case in such a peculiar position. The Sheriff-substitute when he came to decide this case was in this position, that he presumably had before him the decisions which had been pronounced in the Court of Session, and in particular the decision in the case of *Rosie v. Mackay*²; and having considered the case with these decisions before him, he decided it in the way he did.

¹ [1912] A. C. 242, per Lord Chancellor Loreburn, at p. 245, Lord Atkinson, at p. 246, and Lord Shaw, at p. 253.

² 1910 S. C. 714.

³ Supra (H. L.), 70, [1912] A. C. 319.

⁴ Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited, [1912] A. C. 496 and supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77; Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Limited, supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

⁵ 1910 S. C. 51.

⁶ Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited, [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

⁷ Ibid, per Lord Shaw, [1912] A. C., at p. 509.

⁸ [1912] A. C. 242.

⁹ Hargreave v. Haughhead Coal Co., Limited, supra (H. L.) 70, [1912] A. C. 319.

June 21, 1912. Now we are in this position, that since he decided the case there have been expressions of opinion in the Supreme Court of Review, in the House of Lords, which tend very much to show that we in this Court, in deciding the case of Rosie,¹ were under a mistake, that is to say, that the view taken by the majority was wrong, and therefore that the law is different from what in that case it was declared to be. Against that it is argued that the decision of the House of Lords in the case of *Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Company*² was a decision on a different point from that involved in the case of Rosie,¹ that all the observations which affect the case of *Rosie*¹ were only obiter dicta of the learned Lords who decided that case, and that indeed the case of *Rosie*¹ was not even cited to them. That may be quite true, and I am inclined to accept it as true; but, although, looking to the decision they gave in that case, they did not need to express those opinions, still we must assume that in the Supreme Court of Review definite opinions upon particular matters are not expressed without consideration, and we must assume, and are bound to assume, that what they said was properly corrective of the decision which had been erroneously arrived at in this Court.

Weir v.
North British
Railway Co.
Lord Justice-
Clerk.

In these circumstances the position is a very peculiar one. It seems to me that the right course for us to adopt is, without answering at present these questions which are before us, to let the case go back to the Sheriff-substitute in order that he may consider whether what has happened since his judgment, in the way of review of the law, would lead him to any different conclusion from the conclusion at which he arrived. He may see no reason to change, and may again come to the same conclusion, or he may see ground to modify his opinion and to adopt the course now open to him in view of these obiter dicta in the House of Lords, and so, instead of ending the compensation finally as he has done by his present decision, to pronounce an order keeping alive the liability of the employers. I do not say that he ought to do that, I express no opinion upon that whatever; it is a matter entirely for his individual judgment.

I think that is all we ought to do. I do not think I need say anything more, because I am very anxious not to express any opinion which might lead the Sheriff-substitute to think that we have expressed any view on the merits of the question, whether or not the compensation should be ended finally. Therefore, if your Lordships approve of the course I have proposed, that will be the course taken.

LORD DUNDAS.—I agree. It is, I think, very unfortunate that the decision by seven Judges of this Court in the case of *Rosie v. Mackay*¹ was not brought under the notice of the House of Lords when they heard and decided the case of Taylor v. The London and North-Western Railway Company.² In Rosie's case¹ the existing decisions, Scots and English, were considered and collated, and it was apparent that there was a grave divergence of judicial opinion upon the question whether or not it was competent for an arbitrator under the Act of 1897, in a case where he considered that capacity had been restored, but that there was a danger, more or less great, of incapacity recurring and supervening, to keep matters open, June 21, 1912. either by what is sometimes called the device of the penny or in some other ^{Weir v.} way; or whether he was bound to end the compensation then and there. ^{North British} The point had been touched upon, but not decided, by the House of Lords ^{Railway Co.} in Nicholson v. Piper,¹ Lord Halsbury and Lord Robertson in that case Lord Dundas. expressly reserving their opinions upon it. The majority of the seven Judges in *Rosie v. Mackay*² held that the whole matter was one of statute; that the statute did not give any warrant for resorting either to the device of the penny or to any other equivalent course; and that, therefore, the arbitrator was bound in such cases to end the compensation. It was attempted to appeal *Rosie v. Mackay*³ to the House of Lords, but the attempt failed, as it was bound to do; because that case arose under the Act of 1897, which did not allow appeals from Scotland—though it did allow English appeals—in cases of this sort to the House of Lords.

¹ 1910 S. C. 714.

² [1912] A. C. 242.

If the important case of *Rosie v. Mackay*² had been brought under the notice of the noble and learned Lords in Taylor's case,⁴ I do not doubt that their Lordships, if they were to arrive at a conclusion adverse to the opinion of the majority of the Scottish Judges, would have expressed in reasoned language and with some measure of argument their grounds for differing from and overruling those opinions; and we should have stood in a more definite and satisfactory state of knowledge than we are in at present. *Rosie's case*² has not been formally overruled; but whether or not it is to be treated as impliedly overruled, we have, at all events, in *Taylor's case*⁴ opinions pronounced (obiter, it may be) by the noble and learned Lords to the effect that a resort to some means of keeping matters open is competent; and I think, with your Lordship, that we ought to respect and give effect to those opinions, whether they are obiter or whether they are not.

Now, we must, I apprehend, assume that the learned arbitrator in this case, when he decided the question, took *Rosie v. Mackay*² to be law, as it certainly then was, and therefore felt that he had no alternative but to end the compensation, whatever view he might have been inclined otherwise to entertain. In that state of matters I agree that the proper course for us is to remit the matter to the learned arbitrator in order that he may have an opportunity of reconsidering the question in the light of the opinions subsequently pronounced by the House of Lords in Taylor's case.⁴ It is possible, it may be more than possible, that he will arrive at the same conclusion as he did before; but the point that is important is that he should have an opportunity of exercising the discretion which he must have thought he had not, but which it appears that in law he had.

Other topics were touched on during the debate, but I think the one with which I have dealt is the only one which arises effectually upon the case as stated, and upon which there is any necessity to pronounce an opinion. I agree therefore that, without answering the questions as they are put—and I think they are badly stated—we should remit to the learned arbitrator for the purpose that your Lordship has indicated, and in which I agree.

¹ [1907] A. C. 215.

² 1910 S. C. 714.

³ Supra (H. L.) 7.

⁴ [1912] A. C. 242.

June 21, 1912. LORD SALVESSEN and LORD GUTHRIE concurred.

Weir v.
North British
Railway Co.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Find it unnecessary to answer the questions; remit to the arbitrator to consider the facts found by him in light of the opinions expressed by the House of Lords in the case of Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Company, [1912] A. C. 242, and thereafter to pronounce such finding as may to him seem just: Find no expenses due to or by either party."

BALFOUR & MANSON, S.S.C.—JAMES WATSON, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 150.

MRS MARGARET MARTIN OR LOVE, Pursuer (Appellant).—
Moncrieff, K.C.—J. Smith Clark.

June 25, 1912.

Love v.
Amalgamated
Society of Lithographic
Printers of Great Britain
and Ireland.

THE AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF LITHOGRAPHIC PRINTERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND AND OTHERS, Defenders (Respondents).—
Constable, K.C.—Keith.

Jus Quæsitum Tertio—Trade union rules—Agreement with member to pay sick benefit to dependants—Revocable agreement—Claim by dependant—Title to sue.

Trade Union—Agreement to provide benefits—Enforcement—Provision of sick benefits to person dependent on member—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 and 35 Vict. cap. 31), sec. 4 (3) (a).

The Trade Union Act, 1871, by section 4 (3) (a), provides that nothing in the Act shall enable the Court to entertain proceedings for directly enforcing "any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members."

The rules of a trade union, which could be altered at the will of the general council, provided that if a member became insane his wife, family, or parent, if dependent upon him, should be eligible to receive sick benefit for one year.

In an action at the instance of the wife of an insane member against the union for recovery of sick benefit, the defenders maintained (1) that as the rules could be altered, the pursuer had no indefeasible jus quæsitum tertio, and so had no title to sue; and (2) that as this was an action to enforce an agreement to provide benefits to members, it could not be entertained by the Court.

Held (1) that as the agreement embodied in the rules, though revocable, had not been revoked when the pursuer's claim arose, she had a good title to sue; and (2) that as the agreement was not one for the provision of benefits to a member, but to the dependant of a member, the jurisdiction of the Court was not excluded; and decree granted.

2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles.

MRS MARGARET MARTIN OR LOVE brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Edinburgh against the Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland, registered under the Trade Union Acts, 1871 to 1876, and its trustees and secretary. The action concluded for (1) various sums in name of sick benefit, in respect of the illness of her husband, James Love, from 17th August 1909 to 17th August 1910; and (2) superannuation benefit, in respect of his inability to work, from 17th August 1910, to be continued until his death, all in terms of the rules of the defenders' Society.

Rule 30 of the defenders' Society provided :—

June 25, 1912.

“ RULE 30.—Insane Members.

“ 1. If any member through loss of reason be unable to follow his employment the case shall be referred to the E.C. [Executive Committee], who shall deal with it at their discretion. Should the member recover sufficiently to receive a doctor's certificate certifying that he is able to work, he shall be eligible to receive unemployed benefit.”

Love v.
Amalgamated
Society of Lithographic
Printers of Great Britain
and Ireland.

“ 2. Should the afflicted member have dependent upon him either wife, family, or parent, they shall be eligible to receive sick benefit for a period of one year, and, should the mental affliction continue, the member may (if eligible as per rule) be placed on superannuation benefit.”

Rule 58 provided that the General Council of the Society, which met every three years, should have power to make new rules and amend existing ones.*

The facts of the case were thus stated in the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute (Orr) of 24th July 1911 :—“ Finds it is admitted (1) that the pursuer is the wife of James Love, who became insane on or about 17th August 1909, and has continued insane since then up till the present time; (2) that the said James Love was on 17th August 1909 a member of the Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland, having its registered general office at Campfield Chambers, 312 Deansgate, Manchester, and its Edinburgh office at 2 Canonmills, Edinburgh, and at said date had

* Rules 20 and 24 were as follows :—

“ RULE 20.—Sick Benefit.

“ 1. Any member having been in this Society twelve months and entitled to benefit, when visited by sickness or lameness (not occasioned by drunkenness, disorderly conduct, or any disease improperly contracted) shall give notice in writing, in accordance with the form contained in these rules, to the secretary of the branch to which he belongs, and send, within three days, a doctor's certificate stating the nature of his complaint, such certificate to be renewed at the discretion of his branch.

“ 2. Payment for sick benefit commences from the date of declaring on.

“ Scale of Benefits.

“ 3. 10s. per week for 6 weeks; 5s. per week for 12 weeks; 2s. 6d. per week for 12 weeks.

“ 6. Any member having drawn all his sick benefit for one year cannot claim again until the expiration of twelve months, dating from first payment. . . .

“ RULE 24.—Superannuation.

“ 1. Any member who has been twenty years successively in the Society, and who, through old age, infirmity, or incurable disease is unable to obtain employment at the trade, and applies for superannuation benefit, shall state his claims to a special meeting of the branch of which he is a member. He shall also present a doctor's certificate, stating that he is permanently disabled from following his employment.

“ 2. Should the meeting be satisfied with the validity of his claim, they shall furnish all evidence to the Executive Committee, who shall have power to grant the sum of six shillings per week until his death, provided the applicant is in all cases entitled to benefit according to rule.

“ 3. The number of members in receipt of superannuation shall be at the rate of 4 per cent of the total membership of the Society.”

June 25, 1912. Love v. Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland. been a member of said Society for over twenty years; (3) that when the said James Love became insane his contributions to said Society had all been duly paid in terms of the rules of said Society: Finds it is admitted by counsel at the bar that at said date the pursuer was dependent upon the said James Love."

It was also admitted in the debate on appeal that the Society was an unlawful association at common law, since its rules, or some of them, were in restraint of trade.

The defenders averred that the claims of the pursuer under rule 30 had been considered and rejected by the Executive Committee of the Society, and this was not denied.

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The said James Love, being a member of the defenders' Society of over twenty consecutive years' standing, and being mentally afflicted as condescended on, the defenders, in accordance with their rules, are liable to the pursuer in payment of the amounts of sick and superannuation benefit first and second concluded for. (2) The defences are irrelevant.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(2) The present action, being an action to enforce a claim to benefits under the rules of a society which is directed to enforce strikes and act otherwise in restraint of trade, and is illegal at common law, is incompetent, and should be dismissed with expenses. (4) No title to sue. (8) The claims of pursuer under rule 30 having been considered and rejected by the Executive Committee of the Society, defenders should be assoilzied from the conclusions of the present action.

On 24th July 1911 the Sheriff-substitute (Orr) pronounced this interlocutor:—[After the findings in fact above quoted]—"Finds that in terms of said rules the pursuer is entitled to receive sick benefit for a period of one year as from 17th August 1909: Therefore repels the defences and decerns against the defenders for payment to the pursuer of the sum of £7, 10s." *

The defenders appealed to the Sheriff (Maconochie) who, on 16th October 1911, recalled the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute, and dismissed the action as incompetent.

The pursuer appealed to the Court of Session, and the case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 23rd May 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—(1) Rule 30 embodied a contract between the Society and its members by which, in certain circumstances, a right was conferred on third parties, namely, the dependants of a member who became insane. The pursuer, being such a dependant, had a right to sick benefit under the contract, and in consequence had a title to sue and vindicate her claim. Her right might have been defeated if the rule had been altered before her husband's illness; but under the rule as it then stood, her claim vested and became indefeasible. It was no answer to say that the contract might have been revoked, when in fact it was not. (2) Section 4 (3) (a) of the Trade Union Act, 1871,† applied only to agreements for the provision of benefits to members.¹ This was not such an agreement, but was one for the provision of a benefit to a person who was not, and never could be, a member of the Society. The pursuer was not claiming as a representative of a member, but independently and in her own right. There was nothing either at common law or under the Act to exclude the Court from entertaining an action to enforce such a claim. Further, on a construction of the terms of rule 30, the appellant—assuming that she had a title to sue and that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action—was entitled as matter of right, and not merely at the discretion of the Executive Committee, both to sick and to superannuation benefits.

* £7, 10s. represented sick benefit for thirty weeks, the maximum amount payable in any one year in terms of rule 20 (3) and (6).

† Secs. 3 and 4 (3) (a) of the Trade Union Act, 1871, are quoted in the opinion of Lord Salvesen, infra, p. 1083.

¹ Wilkie v. King, 1911 S. C. 1310; Baker v. Ingall, [1911] 2 K. B. 132.

June 25, 1912.

Love v.
Amalgamated
Society of Lithographic
Printers of Great Britain
and Ireland.

Argued for the respondents;—(1) The pursuer had no title to sue on the agreement contained in rule 30, even assuming it to be one which the Court had jurisdiction to enforce. A third person, not a party to a contract, might in certain cases adopt the contract and enforce its provisions so far as in his favour. But it was a necessary condition that his right should be indefeasible, and that the contract should not be revocable by the parties to it.¹ In the present case there was express provision in the constitution of the Society for the alteration of the rules, and an alteration of the rule relating to sick benefits would have been binding on the pursuer's husband, even if made after he had become insane.² (2) But in any event, this was a legal proceeding directly to enforce the provision of a benefit to a member, which the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain.³ The pursuer had no right except through her husband. If, for example, he had been in arrears with his subscriptions, she would have got nothing, which was inconsistent with the idea that she had an independent right. Support given to those dependent on a member during the time he was ill was primarily a benefit to the member himself, and was one of the advantages which he obtained by joining the Society. In any event, on the construction of rule 30, the granting of sick and superannuation benefits to the appellant was in the discretion of the Executive Committee, and her claim had been considered and disallowed by them.

At advising on 25th June 1912,—

LORD SALVESEN.—This case involves a comparatively small sum of money, but the questions raised are of general importance and present so much difficulty that I am not surprised that the Sheriffs have differed. The pursuer sues for certain benefits which she maintains are payable to herself under rule 30, section 2, of the rules of the defenders' Society, of which her husband at the date of his insanity was a member. She claims, in the first place, sick benefit for a period of one year, and in the second place that her husband's name should be placed on superannuation benefit and that the amount due should be paid to her in her own right. The Sheriff-substitute has allowed the first claim to the extent of £7, 10s., and disallowed the second claim in toto; but the Sheriff has assoilzied the defenders from the whole conclusions of the action.

¹ Blumer & Co. v. Scott & Sons, (1874) 1 R. 379, per Lord Ardmillan, at p. 387; Finnie v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co., (1857) 3 Macq. 75, per L. C. Cranworth, at p. 88, Lord Wensleydale, at p. 89; Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583.

² Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583; Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, Limited, [1900] 1 Ch. 656.

³ Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 and 35 Vict. cap. 31), sec. 4 (3) (a).

June 25, 1912. The first question we have to decide is whether the pursuer has any jus quæsitum under the contract made between her husband and the defenders; and the main ground upon which it is maintained that she has none, and therefore no title to sue, is that the rules which constitute the contract are alterable at a General Council meeting, and that they might have been altered at any time so as to deprive dependants of any rights which they might otherwise have under rule 30 (2) of the existing rules. It is not said, however, that any alteration has in fact been made; and so far as the pursuer's first claim is concerned, the period in respect of which it is made has long since expired. We were referred to two authorities on this matter—the cases of Finnie,¹ and Blumer v. Scott.² These cases have no direct application, but were cited for certain dicta of Lord Chancellor Cranworth and Lord Wensleydale in the former, and of Lord Ardmillan in the latter, on the legal doctrine known as jus quæsitum tertio. Lord Ardmillan says:—“According to Lord Stair it is only where there is in a contract some ‘article in favour of a third party’ which cannot be recalled by one or both of the contractors that there is jus quæsitum tertio, and this doctrine is specially recognised and approved of by Lord Cranworth and Lord Wensleydale. . . . Even if not named, the third party may be entitled to adopt the agreement and enforce it by action. But in such a case it must be clear that both the contracting parties intended so to secure him, and that they could not, separately or together, revoke the stipulation.” Now I do not doubt that as a general statement of the law these propositions are perfectly sound. The contract between the pursuer's husband and the Society embodied in their rules might have been revoked by both or modified by the defenders alone by way of alteration of the rules so as to have taken away any right of action from the pursuer; but such revocation must have taken effect, as I understand the law, before a right of action emerged, if that right was to be entirely defeated, or before the period in respect of which the claim was made had expired, if it was to be partially defeated. I cannot imagine that if a claim has vested in a third party under a contract the vested interest can be discharged by any act of the contracting parties, and still less by the act of one of them who is the debtor in the obligation. The only analogous case cited was that of Burke,¹ where it was held that the alteration by a trade union, during the insanity of a member, of the rule as to sick benefit to the prejudice of that member was binding on him, if made in accordance with the rule authorising and regulating alteration of the rules of the union. But in that case it was not contended that the rule took effect except with regard to the period after it was passed. I am therefore of opinion that the Sheriff-substitute reached a sound conclusion in holding that the agreement had become irrevocable when the pursuer became entitled to found upon it, and at all events until, pending the running of the sick benefit claimed, an alteration of the rules had in fact been made.

The pursuer now admits that the defenders' Society must be regarded at common law as an unlawful combination, in respect that some of its objects are in restraint of trade. Such societies are, however, legalised by the

¹ 3 Macq. 75.² 1 R. 379.³ [1906] 2 K. B. 583.

Trade Union Acts, 1871 and 1876. By section 3 of the former Act it is provided:—"The purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be unlawful so as to render void or void-able any agreement or trust." Had there been no further provision in the Act, trades unions might have sued or been sued in respect of any agreement entered into between them and their members; but section 4 contains an important limitation and, so far as applicable to the present case, provides that "Nothing in this Act shall enable any Court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements, namely:—(3) Any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union (a) to provide benefits to members." If, therefore, this had been an action at the instance of the pursuer's husband or his representative, it could not be entertained by a Court of law; but the pursuer does not here sue, as the plaintiff did in the case of Burke,¹ as the administratrix of her husband. She is suing in her own right. Even this would not avail her if the agreement on which she founded was one which could be described as "providing a benefit to a member." If the section of the statute had intended to strike at all agreements to provide benefits, it is difficult to understand why the words "to members" should have been added; and it is plain that it was not the intention of the statute to exclude the jurisdiction of a Court in the case of a claim made by a third party against a trade union, for such an action was competent at common law, even if the trade union were an unlawful combination—the third party not being tainted with the illegality which disabled a member from invoking the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts.

The question, however, remains whether the pursuer, as a dependant of her insane husband, has any absolute right at all; or whether her demand for sick benefit is in the discretion of the Executive Committee. It is true that the words "shall be eligible," on which the Sheriff relies, at first sight suggest some power of election, vested in a body or person different from the claimant, but these words occur frequently throughout the rules; and I think in the rule in question and elsewhere they must be treated as meaning "shall be entitled to, if qualified." In the second paragraph of the first section of rule 30 the same words occur, and when one turns back to rule 19, one finds that the member who is declared to be eligible to receive unemployed benefit has an absolute right to such benefit at a stipulated rate, provided his being thrown out of employment was not the result of misconduct. We were referred to other passages in the rules in which the same words occur, where they must be construed as equivalent to "shall be entitled." Thus in rule 18, section 7, there is a provision that members shall pay certain contributions, "and if entitled as per rule, shall be eligible to receive the following benefits." I think this clause must be construed as meaning "if eligible or qualified as per rule, shall be entitled to receive." The defenders appealed to the first part of section 1 of rule 30, which provides "that if any member, through loss of reason, be unable to follow his employment, the case shall be referred to the E. C., who shall deal with it

Love v.
Amalgamated
Society of Lithographic
Printers of Great Britain
and Ireland.

Lord Salvesen.

¹ [1906] 2 K. B. 583.

June 25, 1912. at their discretion"; but I think that this clause is in contrast with the one on which the pursuer founds, and cannot be held to govern an entirely independent section. I accordingly agree with the Sheriff-substitute that, the qualification of the pursuer being admitted, she is entitled under the clause to which she refers to receive sick benefit. [His Lordship then dealt with other questions, turning upon the construction of the rules of the society, with which this report is not concerned. Inter alia, he found, on a construction of rule 30, that the pursuer was only entitled to superannuation benefit at the discretion of the Executive Committee, and as they had refused to grant it, that she could not enforce this part of her claim.]

Love v.
Amalgamated
Society of Lithographic
Printers of Great Britain and Ireland.
—
Lord Salvesen.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I think the Sheriff-substitute has rightly decided that the appellant is entitled to receive sick benefit from the respondents for a period of thirty weeks, and not for fifty-two weeks as she claims, and that she is not entitled to receive superannuation allowance.

The effect of section 4 of the Trade Union Act of 1871 is that what are called "benefits to members," conferred by the constitution of a trade union like the respondents, are rendered unenforceable at law. The dispute turns on whether the sick benefit and the superannuation allowance in question in this case, which are admittedly of the nature of benefits, are or are not benefits to members in the sense of the statute. Are they, one or both, primarily benefits to the members of the trade union themselves, and only secondarily, if at all, benefits to dependants like the appellant; or are they, one or both, primarily benefits to the dependants, and only secondarily, if at all, to the members themselves?

In my opinion, taking rules 20, 24, and 30 together, the two classes of allowances or benefits are sharply contrasted in the case of insane members, like the appellant's husband, who have wife, family, or parent dependent on them, first, in the form of words by which they are conferred, second, in the persons to whom they are payable, and, third, in the purposes to which they are applicable. The sick benefit is payable directly to the dependant, and those alimending the insane person can have no claim on it; while the superannuation allowance would be payable to the legal representatives of the insane person, and the whole of it would be available for his support.

An apparent difficulty is caused by the expression, in rule 30, "they shall be eligible to receive sick benefit." But a consideration of the terms of rules 20, 24, and 30 leads me to the conclusion that the word eligible is equivalent in this clause to "entitled, if qualified."

The respondents founded strongly on the case of Burke,¹ in support of their proposition that the appellant could have no jus quæsitum under an agreement between a member and the Society constituted by rules which are revocable by the Society. But that case in no way conflicts with the appellant's right to vindicate a right which had vested in her under the rules when she made her claim.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I concur in the opinion of Lord Salvesen, which I have had an opportunity of reading.

¹ [1906] 2 K. B. 583.

THE COURT sustained the appeal, recalled the interlocutor June 25, 1912.
 appealed against, found in fact and in law in terms of the findings in fact and in law in the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute, dated 24th July 1911, and found the defenders liable to the pursuer in expenses.

Love v.
 Amalgamated
 Society of Lithographic
 Printers of Great Britain
 and Ireland.

CHARLES GARROW, Solicitor—SIMPSON & MARWICK, W.S.—Agents.

THE MAGISTRATES OF EDINBURGH, Pursuers (Respondents).— No. 151.
Cooper, K.C.—W. J. Robertson.

THE LORD ADVOCATE, (as representing The Commissioners of His June 26, 1912.
 Majesty's Works and Public Buildings), Defender (Reclaimer).— Sol.-Gen. Anderson—Pitman. Magistrates
 of Edinburgh
 v. Lord Advocate.

Crown—Statute—Building restrictions—Exemption of the Crown from statutory restrictions—Personal Objection—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. clxiii.), secs. 67 and 78.

Section 67 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, confers powers upon the Corporation in certain circumstances to require that no buildings shall be erected upon unbuilt-upon ground abutting on an existing street within thirty feet from the centre of the street. Section 78 exempts from the provisions of the Act "every building structure or work vested in or in the occupation of His Majesty . . . or in the occupation of any department of His Majesty's Government for public purposes."

The Commissioners of Works, as managers of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Edinburgh (which are Crown property), applied to the Dean of Guild for warrant to erect the first wing of certain proposed buildings in the Gardens, the building line of which would encroach within 30 feet of the centre line of a public street. The plans lodged showed the completion of the buildings on the same building line extending further down the street. The Edinburgh Corporation offered no opposition, and the lining was granted and the first wing of the buildings was erected.

Two years afterwards the Commissioners applied for warrant to complete the buildings by erecting the other wing in accordance with the original plans, and a lining was granted. The Corporation thereupon passed a resolution, in terms of section 67 of the Act, that no buildings should be erected within 30 feet of the centre of the street, and brought an action to interdict the Commissioners from erecting the buildings within that distance.

The Court assolized the defenders; per the Lord President and Lord Kinnear on the ground that the proposed buildings were exempted from the operation of section 67 by virtue of the provisions of section 78, which applied to future buildings as well as to existing buildings; per Lord Johnston on the ground that the Corporation, by permitting the first warrant to be granted and a portion of the buildings to be erected within the 30 foot space, were barred from objecting to the completion of the buildings on the same building line.

Observations, per the Lord President and Lord Kinnear, on the extent to which the Crown is bound by restrictions contained in local Acts.

ON 9th October 1911 the Magistrates of Edinburgh brought an 1st DIVISION. action against the Lord Advocate, as representing the Commissioners Ld. Ormidale.
 of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, in their capacity as managers of the Royal Botanic Gardens of Edinburgh which are Crown property. The conclusions of the summons were for declarator, June 26, 1912. inter alia, that the defenders had no right or title to erect houses or buildings on the portion of the Botanic Gardens therein described, and for interdict to prevent them doing so. The portion of the Gardens so described consisted of a strip of ground lying along the side of Inverleith Row, Edinburgh, within 30 feet of the centre of the street, and the effect of the interdict would be to prevent the erection of buildings nearer the centre of the street than 30 feet.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

The circumstances in which the action was brought were thus narrated by the Lord President:—"In 1909 the Commissioners of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings proceeded to erect in Inverleith Row certain buildings in connection with the Royal Botanic Gardens. These buildings had a facade to the street with an entrance, and the plans which were exhibited at that time show clearly, to my mind, that it was intended to complete the buildings which were first designed by the addition of another wing on the other side of the entrance, which, although at that time at the end of the building, was described as a central entrance. A warrant for the erection of the first wing, so to speak, of the buildings was duly obtained from the Dean of Guild Court at the time, and the buildings were so far erected. These buildings were all inside the ground belonging to the Commissioners, and came forward to within less than 30 feet of the centre of the street in front of them. Last year the Commissioners decided to complete their original scheme by building the other wing. The facade of the other wing was, naturally, to be in line with the facade so far as erected. They again applied to the Dean of Guild Court and obtained a warrant for the erection of this new wing."

The Town-Council did not oppose the granting of the warrant of 1909, and the proceedings in the Dean of Guild Court in connection with obtaining the warrant of 1911, and the attitude of the Town-Council thereanent, were thus described by the Lord Ordinary in his opinion:—

"It appears that on 2nd September 1911 the defenders [the Commissioners of Works] presented a petition in the Dean of Guild Court for warrant to erect 'upon a portion of the grounds forming the Royal Botanic Gardens, Edinburgh, on part of which portion of the said grounds a laboratory is at present erected, certain buildings to be used' for purposes which are described 'in connection with said gardens, all as shown on five plans' produced. On the plans the proposed new buildings are described as an extension of laboratory buildings (which were erected so recently as 1910, under a warrant obtained from the Dean of Guild in 1909), and the plans show that the proposed new buildings are, so far as their design and purpose are concerned, in complement of the existing buildings. The buildings for which warrant was craved included also a porch to the north-east of the proposed extension.

"The petition was served upon the pursuers. No answers were lodged by them, but on the 7th September an agent appeared for them, and while offering no objection to the petition so far as the main buildings were concerned, took exception to the porch. On that date the Dean of Guild granted interim warrant for the erection of the buildings other than the porch, the cause being continued quoad the porch. The interim warrant was extracted on the 14th September.

"On the 15th September the pursuers lodged a minute craving the Court to allow them to lodge answers relative to the whole operations of the petitioners. This crave was afterwards abandoned and no answers were lodged. On the 20th September the pursuers passed what has been referred to as the 'sterilising' resolution quoted in article 4 of the condescendence. On 3rd October the defenders lodged a minute consenting to their petition being dismissed so far as it craved warrant for the erection of the porch, and on 12th October the Dean of Guild, having heard parties' procurators, allowed the petition, so far as warrant had not been already granted, to be abandoned. No appeal was taken against any interlocutor of the Dean of Guild.

"As there is at present no proposal or intention to erect the porch, the present action appears to be unnecessary so far as it relates to the porch."

The resolution of the Town-Council of 20th September 1911, above referred to, was in these terms:—"The Magistrates and Council, in virtue of the powers conferred by section 67 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906,* resolved and hereby resolve that no houses or buildings shall be erected in Inverleith Row . . . within a distance of 30 feet from the centre line of the following portions of said streets . . ." and then followed, inter alia, a description of the portion of Inverleith Row on which the Botanic Gardens abutted, with the exception of the small part covered by the buildings erected under the warrant of 1909.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The portion of the Royal Botanic Gardens of Edinburgh described in the first conclusion of the summons being ground to which section 67 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, applies, and the pursuers having exercised in regard to such ground the powers conferred upon them by said section 67, they are entitled to decree, in terms of the first declaratory conclusion and the first part of the conclusion for interdict of the summons. (3) The said Commissioners having challenged the right of the pursuers to enforce against them the provisions of the statutes founded on by the pursuers, decree should be granted in terms of the conclusions of the summons.

The defender pleaded, inter alia;—(2) In respect that the lands in question are the property of the Crown, the pursuers are not entitled to decree of declarator and interdict as concluded for. (3)

* The Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. clxiii.), enacts:—

Sec. 67. "Where any ground whether belonging to one or to more than one proprietor abuts on an existing street and is for a continuous distance of two hundred yards or upwards along the street either unbuilt upon within a line parallel to and running at a distance of thirty feet from the centre line of the street or not occupied within the said thirty-foot line by buildings of a greater height than fifteen feet the Corporation may from and after the commencement of this Act require that no houses or buildings shall be erected within the said thirty-foot line. Provided that this section shall not apply to an existing street which has been formed or laid out under the provisions of the Edinburgh Municipal and Police Acts."

Sec. 78. "Without prejudice to any existing right of His Majesty there shall be exempted from so much of the provisions of this Act as relates to buildings structures or works every building structure or work vested in or in the occupation of His Majesty either beneficially or as part of the hereditary revenues of the Crown or in trust for the public service or for public services as also any building structure or work vested in or in the occupation of any department of His Majesty's Government for public purposes or for the public service."

June 26, 1912. In any event the defender is entitled to be assoilzied from the conclusions of the action in respect of the exemption of Crown property contained in section 78 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906. (4) In view of the position adopted by them in the Dean of Guild Court and the warrant of 7th September, the pursuers are barred from insisting in the present action.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

On 7th March 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Ormidale) granted declarator and interdict in terms of the conclusions of the summons.*

* " OPINION.—[After the narrative quoted supra—In the circumstances I have narrated it does not appear to me that the pursuers are barred from insisting in the present proceedings, either by the existence of the Dean of Guild's warrant, or by anything they did or omitted to do in the Dean of Guild Court proceedings. At the time the warrant was granted they had no valid ground on which to oppose it. It was on that account that the supervenient resolution of 20th September was passed. Now, the validity of the resolution is not challenged. It is not suggested that any of the physical conditions required by section 67 in order to warrant it were non-existent. What is maintained is, that it cannot be given effect to in connection with the present proposed buildings, in respect that the pursuers joined issue with the defenders on the question of the defenders' right to erect the buildings in the manner and on the site proposed by them in a Court competent to deal with and to decide that question, and that the defenders obtained a judgment in their favour. But the warrant has not to any extent been put in execution, and I see no reason why the Court of Session should not de plano interdict the erection of the buildings complained of without the warrant being formally reduced, or by some other process set aside. I cannot give to the Dean of Guild's order the effect of a judgment ascertaining and determining the rights of parties. The matter is certainly not res judicata, for the objection now taken was not open to the pursuers on the 7th September, and the Dean of Guild did not in fact entertain or dispose of the present question, assuming that it was within his competency to do so. The existence of the warrant and the proceedings in the Dean of Guild Court, therefore, do not appear to me to form any bar to the present proceedings.

" The contention of the defenders, founded on section 78, raises a difficult question, but I have come to the conclusion that it does not apply to the buildings in question. The section purports to grant an exemption of certain Crown property from so much of the provisions of the Act as relates to buildings, structures, or works. These words are quite general in expression, and there is nothing in them, read by themselves, to exclude from their purview buildings which are not yet erected. As section 67 regulates the distance at which buildings may be kept back from the centre line of a street, it seems to me clearly to contain provisions which relate to buildings in the sense of section 78, and accordingly, if the exemption conferred by section 78 had applied to all Crown property, I should have had no difficulty in giving effect to the defenders' contention. But what is exempted is not all Crown property but every building, structure, or work vested in or in the occupation of His Majesty. Now, these words of themselves impose a limitation, for buildings which are not yet erected, but which it is only proposed to erect, cannot be described as vested in anyone. What is vested in the Crown here is a piece of unbuilt-upon ground upon which it is proposed to erect buildings, and unbuilt-upon ground is not in terms exempted from the provisions of the Act relating to buildings, including section 67. I do not think I am warranted in reading into the section the words 'or which will be vested.' It was said that such a construction limits the effect of section 78 to buildings already erected, and that there are no provisions in the Act relating to such—that all the provisions relat-

The defender reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First June 26, 1912. Division (without Lord Mackenzie) on 25th and 26th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimer;—The buildings proposed were exempt, ^{Magistrates of Edinburgh} by virtue of section 78 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, from ^{v. Lord Advocate.} the restrictions imposed in pursuance of section 67 thereof. The general provisions of the Act applied to buildings to be erected in the future,¹ and the Lord Ordinary was wrong in construing section 78 as being different from the rest of the Act and as applying only to existing buildings. But, even assuming his construction to be right, this was part of an existing building, for it was a mere completion of the portion already erected. Further, the subjects in question here were vested in the Commissioners of Works subject to the rights of the Crown affecting the same,² and it was a rule of universal application that the Crown was excepted from the operation of any statute in which it was not expressly mentioned.³ The Crown had been held to be unaffected by bye-laws made by a corporation under the Public Health Acts,⁴ and a fortiori it was unaffected by mere building restrictions. In any event, the pursuers' resolution of 20th September 1911 came too late, and they were barred from objecting to the proposed erection. They had allowed warrant to be obtained in 1909, and a building to be erected on the faith of it, which not only encroached on the 30 foot line, but showed the completion of the building, now proposed, also encroaching on that line. Further, with regard to the warrant for the present buildings—if a warrant for the Crown were really necessary⁵—the pursuers had taken no ing to buildings, relate to buildings to be constructed. Even if that were so it would not alter the construction of the section. It would only mean that the Crown took no benefit from the exemption. But I do not think that it is so in fact, for there are certain provisions in sections 65, 66, and perhaps 69, which relate or may relate to existing buildings, and from these provisions buildings vested in the Crown would, on the construction I give to section 78, be exempt.

“It is to be regretted, I think, that the defenders should not be allowed to erect the buildings in question, for they are really an extension of existing buildings which are themselves built within the 30 feet limit, and it is difficult to understand in what way the public interest would be affected by the erection of the extended buildings. The phraseology of the two sections 67 and 68 does not, however, permit of any distinction being made between the extension of existing buildings over unbuilt-upon ground and the erection of entirely new and self-contained structures. Had there been room for such a distinction a proof would probably have been necessary to ascertain precisely the true relation of the addition which the defenders propose to make to the existing buildings, for the erection of which warrant was granted in 1909.

“I shall grant decree in terms of the first declaratory conclusion of the summons, and the first part of the conclusion for interdict.”

¹ 6 Edw. VII. cap. clxiii. secs. 67 and 69.

² Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 55), sec. 24.

³ Maxwell on Statutes (4th ed.), pp. 202 and 209; Hornsey Urban District Council v. Hennel, [1902] 2 K. B. 73; Cooper v. Hawkins, [1904] 2 K. B. 164; In re Cuckfield Burial Board, (1854) 24 L. J., Ch. 585; Coomber v. Justices of Berks, (1883) 9 App. Cas. 61; Somerville v. Lord Advocate, (1893) 20 R. 1050; Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. 36), sec. 16.

⁴ Gorton Local Government Board v. Prison Commissioners, [1904] 2 K. B. 165, footnote (3).

⁵ Somerville v. Lord Advocate, 20 R. 1050.

June 26, 1912. steps in the Dean of Guild proceedings, either by objections or by appeal, to maintain the point for which they were now contending; and, standing the Dean of Guild's warrant, which was a decree of a competent Court, the present action to enforce a resolution of later date could not be entertained.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

Argued for the respondents;—Section 78 of the Act dealt only with “buildings,” while section 67 dealt with “ground.” Therefore, as the two sections dealt with different matters, section 78 did not exempt the Crown from the effect of a resolution as to “ground” passed in virtue of section 67. Nor, indeed, could a warrant by the Dean of Guild for the erection of “buildings” override such a resolution. Further, so far as the buildings referred to in section 78 were concerned, existing buildings only were meant. When the Act intended to deal with future buildings, as in sections 65 and 66, it expressly said so. There was no rule in the law of Scotland that the Crown was exempt from the operation of a statute in which it was not expressly mentioned; and this was especially the case with regard to land such as this, which was not held jure coronæ but had been acquired for public purposes from a private owner. But esto that there was such a rule, the Crown being expressly mentioned in section 78, and the extent of the exemption conferred being there defined, there was impliedly no exemption beyond the limits of that section.¹ Further, the pursuers had not done or omitted to do anything with regard to these buildings by which they could be held to have surrendered their statutory rights, or to be barred from insisting in the present action. The resolution of 20th September 1911, passed in pursuance of section 67, was passed without delay after presentation of the defender's petition to the Dean of Guild. It was only by force of that resolution that restrictions in terms thereof could be enforced, and at the date of the Dean of Guild's warrant relied upon, or when the plans of the Commissioners of Works were first approved in 1909, the pursuers could not have taken any objection thereto upon the grounds upon which declarator and interdict were now sought.

LORD PRESIDENT.—[After narrating the facts]—Several questions have been argued before us. It is said by the Commissioners that the Town are barred from insisting in their present demand, because, although they were parties to the case, they made no opposition to the warrant being granted in the Dean of Guild Court. Personally, I do not care to put my judgment upon that. I do not think, myself, that the Town could be prevented from passing the resolution that they did pass, and, when they did so, it seems to me it gave them, for the first time, the title to object to what was being done. But, then, the general question was argued for the Crown—the Commissioners of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings hold for the Crown—that the Crown is not bound by any restriction of this sort contained in any local Act unless the restriction is totidem verbis imposed upon the Crown. While I do not think that that is quite true as a general proposition, I do not think it is necessary to go at length into this matter. I may say that I agree generally with the views expressed by Lord Kyllachy in Somerville's case,¹ and I think the outcome of it is this: While I do not doubt that there are certain provisions by which the Crown never would be bound unless that were clearly expressed—such, for instance, as the provisions of a taxing statute, or certain enactments with penal clauses adjoined, as, for example, certain provisions of the Motor Car Act, and so on—yet, when you come to a set of provisions in a statute having for its object the benefit of the public generally, there is not an antecedent unlikelihood that the Crown will consent to be bound, and this, I think, would be so in the case of regulations which are meant to apply to all the land in a city, and where the Crown's property is not property held jure coronæ, but has been acquired from a subject-superior for the use of one of the public departments. While I think that is so, yet, all legislation being primarily for the subject and not for the Crown, you must in some way or other gather that the Crown means to be bound. In the present case there is, I think, no antecedent improbability of the Crown being bound, and I say that the want of antecedent improbability is turned into a certainty the other way when you find, in a statute like this, saving clauses put in which deal with the Crown's rights. Therefore, looking at this statute, I come to the conclusion that, as regards property acquired from the subject, the Crown did intend to be bound by the restrictions in the Act, except in so far as it was exempted by the saving clauses, viz., sections 78 and 79.

¹ Somerville v. Lord Advocate, 20 R. 1050; The Crown v. Magistrates of Inverness, (1856) 18 D. 366; Lord Advocate and Barbour v. Lang, (1866) 5 Macph. 84.

Coming to clause 78, the clause upon which the Lord Ordinary has based his judgment, I am humbly compelled to differ from the learned Lord Ordinary, who, I think, has put too narrow a construction upon it. His Lordship's judgment comes to this: He agrees that section 67 does contain provisions which relate to buildings in the sense of section 75, and so far I agree with him. But then he goes on to say that, when he reads section 78, "what is exempted"—I am now reading his words—"is not all Crown property but every building, structure, or work vested in or in the occupation of His Majesty. Now, these words of themselves impose a limitation, for buildings which are not yet erected, but which it is only proposed to erect, cannot be described as vested in anyone." I think that that is much too narrow a view to take, and would really make the clause of exemption quite futile. Put in ordinary language, the meaning of the clause of exemption is this, that in so far as there are prohibitions in connection with buildings which are to apply to other people, they are not to apply to the Crown. Well, of course, nearly all the prohibitions about buildings deal with buildings that are to be erected. It is very rarely indeed that a power is given in any Town-Council Act to interfere with existing buildings; but there are a great many regulations as to what you may do, or may not do, with respect to buildings that are going to be erected, and to hold that the clause of exemption only applied to such provisions of the Act as deal with existing buildings, would be, I think, to cut down the exemption to nothing.

While, therefore, I agree with the Lord Ordinary in thinking that section 67, as well as section 78, both relate to buildings, I think the effect of section 78 is this, that it exempts from the provisions of section 67 every building, structure, or work vested in or in the occupation of His Majesty,

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

Ld. President.

¹ 20 R. 1050.

June 26, 1912. either for himself or in trust for the public service. That obviously means not only the existing buildings which are already erected in Inverleith Row, Magistrates of Edinburgh but any extension of these buildings. And therefore, in the circumstances of this particular case, it seems to me that the prohibition of section 67 does not prevent the Crown from completing their plans of two years ago and building upon the ground which is contiguous to the building which already exists.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

Ld. President.

Accordingly, upon the whole matter, I think the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary should be recalled, and that the defender ought to be assoilzied from the conclusions of the summons.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree entirely with your Lordship, and I think that the question really depends upon the true construction of section 78 of the Act of Parliament. I cannot say that I see sufficient reason for attaching great importance to the proceedings in the Dean of Guild Court. It seems to me that, but for section 67, the Corporation had no good objection to the warrant; and until they had resolved to put that section into operation they had no title to object. Nor do I think they could be barred from taking the matter into consideration and determining, in the public interest, whether a new building should be allowed to encroach on the space reserved by the 67th section, by reason of their having abstained from opposing a warrant to erect other buildings to which the same objection might have applied.

On the merits of the objection, now that it is stated, I am not of opinion that the Crown is entirely exempted from the provisions of this statute by virtue of its prerogative. I do not think it necessary to pronounce any definite opinion as to the extent to which it might be affected by provisions other than those which we are considering; but I am not at this moment prepared to hold that property which the Crown has acquired from a subject is, by reason of its now belonging to the Crown, necessarily exempted from building restrictions, whether statutory or conventional, which undoubtedly applied to it in the hands of the private owner whose right has been acquired by the Crown. But, then, I think that section 78 does directly apply to the question we have to consider. I think, with your Lordship, that the Lord Ordinary has taken too strict a view of the section. His Lordship takes out of the clause a particular phrase and analyses it as if it stood alone, instead of reading the whole clause together and construing particular words with reference to the context. So reading it, I cannot say I am embarrassed by the term "vested," in the use of which the Lord Ordinary requires a greater degree of exactness than ordinary language will bear. It is true that buildings cannot be vested in anybody until they exist; but with great deference the point that is raised upon that truism seems to me to be merely a verbal puzzle. I take the plain meaning of the clause to be that buildings, structures, and works belonging to the Crown or in the occupation of His Majesty or any department of Government are to be exempted from the provisions of the Act relating to buildings. But there is a provision relating to buildings in the 67th clause which enables the Corporation to require that no house or building shall under certain conditions be erected within a certain distance of the centre line of the street. Then, according to the argument, buildings belonging to June 26, 1912. the Crown would be exempted from this provision were it not that buildings belong to nobody before they exist. The Crown, therefore, cannot have the benefit of the exemption until the buildings are erected, and in the meantime it may be effectually prevented from erecting the buildings. I cannot accept a construction which makes the clause so utterly futile. The plain meaning of it, in my opinion, is that a provision which prevents the erection of buildings in certain circumstances does not apply to the Crown, which may therefore erect such buildings without regard to the prohibition.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

Lord Kinnear.

Now, the question is whether that is applicable only to existing buildings, so that no provision applicable to the extension or completion of an existing building could fall within the exemption. I think, in order to answer that, you must go back and read the clause which provided the restrictions from which the Crown is to be exempted in order to see what the exemption is. Now, clause 67, on which the Town founds its right to prohibit the completion of the buildings in question, provides for buildings being kept back from the centre line of the street to a certain distance under certain circumstances. That is the clause which the Corporation proposes to enforce. Section 78 says that the Crown is exempted from the provisions of this Act relating to buildings. Is the provision that a building is to be kept back to a certain distance from the centre of the street a provision that does not relate to a building? The argument is that it relates only to existing buildings. Well, then, if you find an existing building which does not encroach within the statutory distance of the centre line of the street, is it, or is it not, prohibited that the building shall be extended so as to make an encroachment? If the existing building is not to be extended towards the centre line of the street so as to encroach upon the prescribed area, then the proceedings of the Crown are not struck at at all. If it is, then that is a prohibition which is directly within the plain terms of the exemption.

I cannot say, therefore, that I have any hesitation really in reading this clause as being applicable to the whole provisions relating to buildings belonging to the Crown, or occupied by the Crown. I therefore agree with the interlocutor which your Lordship proposes.

LORD JOHNSTON.—Certain questions of great general importance have been argued in this case, and if I had to come to a conclusion either on the question of whether the Crown is exempt from all municipal legislation of the description of that of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, or even on the question how far the exemption in section 78 of that Act is to be carried, I should have asked your Lordship for an opportunity of considering the case further. But it seems to me that this case bears to be disposed of on very simple grounds and without entering upon these larger questions. It seems to me that, in the circumstances of this particular case, the Town have moved too late in their endeavour to stay the completion of the building, which they now see will slightly diminish for a short distance the free area available for the widening of Inverleith Row.

I take the case therefore entirely on the footing that I am not concerned

June 26, 1912. with the Crown's claim to exemption. I assume that the Crown is, just as much as a subject, subject to the provisions of section 67 of the Act, and the case appears to me thus: Three years ago, when in 1909 the Crown proposed to commence the building which they are now proposing to complete, the Town might have said, There is a long stretch from Goldenacre up to and including the ground proposed to be built upon which we want to keep free for road as far as the statute permits us, and, therefore, we must require you to keep back your building line. But I am not prepared to say that, after such buildings have been permitted to be erected in part, the Town are entitled to say, "You must stop. We have still got the statutory 200 yards from Goldenacre Toll up to the point which your building so far as completed reaches. Accordingly, we call upon you to keep back the remaining portion of your building to the statutory distance from the centre of Inverleith Row to meet our requirements."

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

Ld. Johnston.

I think that this section 67 must be read reasonably, and when it says that where any ground, whether belonging to one or more than one proprietor, abuts on an existing street, and is for a continuous distance of 200 yards or upwards along the street unbuilt upon within a line parallel to and running at a distance of 30 feet from the centre line of the street, the Corporation may require that no houses or buildings shall be erected within the said 30-foot line, I conceive that that means that no building regarded as a completed whole shall be erected within that line. But a building may be fully planned, but gradually built, and I think it would be stretching the section beyond reason to conclude that it may be applied at any time before the building in the full length of its frontage is completed, and with reference only to a portion of that frontage, when it cannot be applied to the whole.

Even if I were wrong in that view, I should still hold that the Town were barred by the fact that in 1909 they were cited to the petition under which the Dean of Guild's warrant was obtained for the erection of the first portion of this building, and was obtained upon the submission of plans which showed, without question, not only that the buildings (warrant for which was then asked) were merely a portion of a larger whole, but gave exact information as to what that whole was to be. The Town, having been called to that petition, did take exception to one matter connected with the proposed building, and then took no further interest in the proceedings. It seems to me that having allowed—it is hardly fair to call it an encroachment—but having allowed the original portion of this building to extend on ground which they might have kept clear had they chosen, they cannot be heard to come forward and say, "You are not entitled to complete your building, because we have now awakened to the fact that we should like to keep this road a little wider than it is, and we now call upon you to alter the plan of your building and modify it so that, although part of your building impinges upon the statutory 30 feet, and we cannot now help that, the remainder shall not do so." I hold they cannot take up that position now, and I cannot say that I do so with very much regret, because the building having been already partly completed, and extending within the 30-foot line for about three-fifths of its length, it is really futile to require the remaining two-fifths of its length, extending to about 40 feet, necessary for the completion of the building, to be set back from the line which must continue to be kept by the building so far as it is already up.

Magistrates
of Edinburgh
v. Lord Advocate.

I therefore think that the case may be disposed of without determining the larger questions to which I have adverted.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against, and assailed the defender.

Sir THOMAS HUNTER, W.S.—THOMAS CARMICHAEL, S.S.C.—Agents.

WHYTE, RIDSDALE, & COMPANY, Petitioners.—Hon. W. Watson. No. 152.

Diligence—Decree—Service of charge on decree—Scarcity of messengers-at-arms—Service by post—Service by Sheriff-officer—Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882 (45 and 46 Vict. cap. 77), sec. 3. June 26, 1912.

Whyte,
Ridsdale, &
Co.

The Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882, provides for the service of a summons or citation by post, but contains no provision with regard to the service of a charge upon a decree, which according to the previous practice fell to be made by messenger-at-arms.

A pursuer who had obtained in the Court of Session a decree for payment against a defender in Thurso, presented a petition in which he stated that the nearest available messenger-at-arms resided in Inverness and craved the Court to authorise service by post of a charge upon this decree; or, alternatively, to authorise any sheriff-officer in Caithness to act as messenger-at-arms.

Held that the Court could not grant authority for service by post; but authority granted to a sheriff-officer to serve the charge and to carry through the diligence.

WHYTE, RIDSDALE, & COMPANY, warehousemen and importers in London, presented a petition to the Court in which it was stated:—

“That the petitioners have obtained decree in absence in an action at their instance in the Court of Session against William Murray, cycle-agent, Thurso, for payment of £55, 9s. 11d. sterling, with expenses, which decree they extracted on the 7th day of June 1912.

“That at the time of the passing of the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882, there were sixty-six messengers-at-arms practising in Scotland. There are now only thirty-four, of whom fifteen are in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

“That there is now no messenger-at-arms in Caithness, the nearest messenger-at-arms being in Inverness, a distance of about 100 miles.

“That the nearest sheriff-officer is in Wick, which is distant about 20 miles from Thurso.

“By the Court of Session Act, 1868, section 19, services of summonses and citations of witnesses may be made by sheriff-officers in counties or districts of counties where there is no resident messenger-at-arms, but no provision is made for the execution of diligence in similar circumstances.

“By the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, section 49, it is provided that ‘where a charge is necessary upon a decree for payment of money granted in the Small-Debt Court, and the place of execution of the charge is more than 12 miles distant from the seat of the June 26, 1912. Court where such decree was granted, a charge may be given by post in the manner prescribed by the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882.'"

Whyte,
Ridsdale, &
Co.

The prayer of the petition was :—"To grant warrant to charge the defender, the said William Murray, upon the said decree by post in the manner prescribed by the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882; and further, to grant warrant to any sheriff-officer in Caithness on the expiry of said charge to carry into execution all legal diligence competent to follow upon said charge, should the same expire without payment having been made; or otherwise, to grant warrant to any sheriff-officer in Caithness to charge the said William Murray upon the said extract decree at the petitioners' instance, and thereafter to carry into execution all legal diligence competent to follow upon said charge, should the same expire without payment having been made; to dispense with the reading of the minute-book, and to authorise a certified copy of the interlocutor to follow hereon to be used in place of extract; or to do otherwise as to your Lordships shall seem proper."

The opinion of the Court (the Lord President, Lord Kinnear, Lord Johnston, and Lord Mackenzie) was delivered by the LORD PRESIDENT.—I should like to bring to your Lordships' notice a serious grievance of the lieges disclosed by the petition. The petitioners obtained decree in absence against a defender resident in Thurso. They extracted the decree and desired to do diligence on that decree. In old days there would have been no difficulty, because the serving of the charge would have been effected by a messenger-at-arms; but, owing to the alterations introduced by the Citation Act of 1882 (45 and 46 Vict. cap. 77), the calling of a messenger-at-arms no longer pays. There are now only thirty-four messengers-at-arms in Scotland, fifteen of these being in Edinburgh and Glasgow. Thus there are many places where such a messenger cannot be obtained except at considerable expense. In the present case it would be necessary to incur the expense of bringing a messenger-at-arms from Inverness. The Act provides for the service of summonses by post, but there is no provision for the serving of a charge by post. Any alteration in the law must be brought about by Parliament. All that your Lordships can do is to grant the prayer of the petition so far as to authorise a sheriff-officer to act as a messenger-at-arms in the present instance.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor :—"Grant warrant to any sheriff-officer in Caithness to charge the defender William Murray, named and designed in the petition, upon the extract decree at the petitioners' instance mentioned in the petition, and thereafter to carry into execution all legal diligence competent to follow upon said charge, should the same expire without payment having been made; dispense with the reading of the minute-book, and authorise a certified copy of this interlocutor to be used in place of an extract."

MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C., Agents.

DAVID DINGWALL, Pursuer (Respondent).—Morison, K.C.—Guild.
 GEORGE WILSON BURNETT, Defender (Appellant).—Horne, K.C.—
D. Anderson.

No. 153.

June 27, 1912.

Contract—Implement—Mutual obligations—Party in breach of his obligation—Title to enforce implement of counterpart. Dingwall v. Burnett.

Two persons agreed for the lease of an hotel, and stipulated that the tenant should take over the furniture and stock at a valuation, and should deposit £200 in bank in their joint names to account of the valuation price. After the money had been deposited, but before the furniture and stock had been taken over, the tenant intimated that he did not intend to carry out the contract, and brought an action against the landlord for delivery of the deposit-receipt.

The defender lodged a counter claim of damages for breach of the agreement.

Held that the pursuer, having declined to perform his part of the contract, could not call upon the defender to fulfil his obligations until the latter had had an opportunity of constituting his claim of damages, and, accordingly, that the pursuer was not entitled, hoc statu, to delivery of the deposit-receipt.

Contract—Breach—Damages—Penalty or liquidate damages—Penalty clause—Measure of damages—Claim for damages in excess of penalty.

An agreement between two persons for the lease of an hotel contained mutual obligations of different kinds and of varying degrees of importance. Inter alia, the tenant was taken bound to apply for a transfer of the licence, to manage the hotel for the landlord until the licence was transferred, and to take over the stock at a valuation. The minute of agreement also provided :—"Both parties hereto bind and oblige themselves to implement their part of this agreement under the penalty of £50, to be paid by the party failing to the party performing or willing to perform over and above performance."

The tenant having refused to go on with the lease or to carry out the agreement at all, the landlord claimed damages for breach of contract to the amount of over £300.

Held (1) that the sum stipulated in the agreement was not liquidate damages but a penalty, and (2) that the landlord's claim for damages was not limited to the amount mentioned in the penalty clause.

Johnstone's Trustees v. Johnstone, Jan. 19, 1819, F. C. ; Hyndman's Trustees v. Miller, (1895) 33 S. L. R. 359 ; and Lord Elphinstone v. Monkland Iron and Coal Company, Limited, (1886) 13 R. (H. L.) 98, per Lord Fitzgerald, at p. 108, commented on and doubted.

In November 1911 David Dingwall, hotel manager, brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Haddington against George Wilson Burnett, hotel proprietor, Dunbar. The action concluded for (1) an order on the defender to endorse and deliver to the pursuer a deposit-receipt for £200 with the Royal Bank of Scotland, dated 24th April 1911, and (2) payment of £58, 10s.

The pursuer averred that the defender was the proprietor of the St George Hotel, Dunbar, for which he had obtained a licence in his own name. On 18th April 1911 the pursuer and the defender entered into an agreement for a lease of the hotel. The minute of agreement provided :—(Art. 1) The defender let the hotel to the pursuer for four and a-half years from Martinmas 1911 at a rent of £80, conditional upon the granting of an application for a transfer of the licence held by the defender in favour of the pursuer, at the Licens-

2D DIVISION.
 Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles.

June 27, 1912.

Dingwall v.
Burnett.

ing Court in October, which application the pursuer undertook duly to lodge and follow forth. In the event of the application being refused, the agreement was, ipso facto, to come to an end. (Art. 2) In the event of the application being granted, the pursuer was to take over from the defender at mutual valuation, as at the term of Martinmas 1911, the furniture and fittings and stock of liquors, &c., belonging to the defender which should then be in the hotel. To account of the valuation price, the pursuer thereby undertook to consign, within seven days from the date of the agreement, in the joint names of the defender and himself, the sum of £200, to be available to the party having right thereto. Failing this sum being deposited within the time stated, the defender should have the option of terminating the agreement. On the expiry of the lease, the defender was taken bound to take over from the pursuer the furniture and fittings at mutual valuation. (Art. 3) This article dealt with the execution of repairs and alterations. (Art. 4) The pursuer undertook to act as the defender's manager of the hotel from Whitsunday 1911 till Martinmas 1911, and to account to the defender for the whole drawings of the hotel during that period, or alternatively, in the event of his application for transfer being granted, he was to be entitled to pay to the defender a certain sum, and thereupon to demand a return of the free drawings of the hotel during the period, in which case the pursuer should not be entitled to any remuneration for his services as manager. The pursuer, as manager for the defender, was, week by week, to meet the expenses out of the drawings, and to consign the surplus in bank in name of the defender. The pursuer was to conduct the hotel on a proper businesslike footing, and to do nothing which was likely to prejudice the licence. In the event of the pursuer's application being refused, or in the event of his not exercising the option conferred on him in this article, the remuneration which he should receive from the defender for acting as his manager was to be a sum equal to £3 per week for the whole of the period. (Art. 5) "Both parties hereto bind and oblige themselves to implement their part of this agreement under the penalty of £50, to be paid by the party failing to the party performing or willing to perform over and above performance."

On 24th April 1911 the pursuer deposited £200 in the Royal Bank of Scotland in joint names of himself and the defender, in terms of the agreement. The subsequent actings of parties and the position taken up by the defender were narrated by Lord Salvesen in his opinion as follows:—"The pursuer entered on the management of the hotel on 29th May 1911, and continued to act as manager until 12th October. Some months prior to that date he apparently became disappointed with the turnover, and on 25th August intimated that he did not intend to fulfil his agreement. To this position he adhered. Negotiations were then opened for the cancellation of the agreement, but these fell through. With the view of avoiding loss it was ultimately arranged that the pursuer should cease to act as manager, and a new manager was installed on 12th October, without prejudice to the defender's rights under the agreement. The pursuer has now raised the present action in order (1) to obtain a decree ordaining the defender to endorse and deliver to him a deposit-receipt for £200, dated 24th April 1911, this sum having been deposited to account of the valuation price of the furniture, fittings, &c., belonging to the defender, which, under the agreement, the pursuer was to take over in the event of the licence of the hotel being transferred to him; and (2) for payment of the sum of £58, 10s. as wages for the period during which he acted as the defender's manager in the hotel. The defence is that the defender is not under any obligation to endorse the deposit-receipt in face of the pursuer's admitted failure to implement the agreement, and that no wages are due because of the pursuer's mismanagement of the hotel. The defender also counter claims for £250 as damages for breach of the agreement; and there is a further special claim of damage [with regard to a bad debt incurred under the pursuer's management] amounting to £79, 5s. 2d. . . . The defender also demands an accounting of the pursuer's intromissions during the period while he acted as manager of the hotel."

June 27, 1912.
Dingwall v.
Burnett.

The pursuer, without prejudice, tendered £50 to the defender as in full satisfaction of all claims against him under the agreement.

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The defences are irrelevant. (2) The said sum of £200 having been deposited by the pursuer in joint names of himself and defender to account of the price of the furniture, &c., to be taken over at valuation, and said furniture, &c., not having been so taken over at valuation, the pursuer is entitled to decree in terms of the first conclusion of the initial writ with expenses. (3) Said sum sued for in the second place being the amount of wages due to the pursuer at the agreed-on rate, the pursuer is entitled to decree in terms of the second conclusion of the summons with expenses. (4) The counter claim is irrelevant. (5) The defender's counter claim of damages, as stated, is incompetent, and otherwise falls to be dismissed as wanting in specification. (7) The defender having sustained no loss and damage through the pursuer's breach of agreement or otherwise, his counter claim should be dismissed with expenses; et separatim, in respect of the tender made by pursuer he should be assoilzied.

The defender pleaded, inter alia;—(3) The pursuer being in breach of said agreement, he is not entitled to decree. (8) The defender having sustained loss and damage through the pursuer's breach of said agreement to the amount mentioned in the defences, the defender is entitled to decree therefor. (10) The pursuer being bound to hold count and reckoning with the defender, decree should be granted in terms of the defender's counter claim for accounting, as contained in the defences, with expenses. (11) The pursuer having failed to implement his part of the said agreement, he is not entitled to enforce implement of the terms thereof against the defender.

On 21st February 1912 the Sheriff-substitute (Macleod) pronounced this interlocutor:—"As regards the first crave of the initial writ, repels the defences as irrelevant: Ordains the defender to endorse and deliver to the pursuer the deposit-receipt mentioned in the initial writ: As regards the second crave, repels the defences as irrelevant, and finds the defender liable to the pursuer in payment of the sum of £58, 10s. sterling: As regards the counter claim for £79, 5s. 2d., dismisses the same as irrelevant: As regards the counter claim for £250 damages, dismisses the same as irrelevant except to the extent of £50 sterling, and, of consent of the pursuer, finds the pursuer liable to the defender in payment of the said sum of £50 sterling: And as regards the counter claim for count and reckoning, ordains the pursuer" to lodge an account of his intromissions as manager of the hotel, and the defender to lodge objections thereto.

June 27, 1912. The defender appealed to the Court of Session, and the case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 24th, 25th, and 28th May 1912.

Dingwall v.
Burnett.

Argued for the appellant;—(1) The Sheriff had erred in ordering delivery of the deposit-receipt. The pursuer, being in breach of his part of the agreement, could not call upon the defender to fulfil the counter obligations, at any rate until the defender had had an opportunity of establishing any claims competent to him.¹ (2) The defender had relevantly averred a counter claim for damages in respect of the mismanagement of the hotel, and these averments should be remitted to probation. (3) The defender's claim was not limited to the sum of £50 mentioned in article 5 of the agreement. That sum was stipulated as the penalty for breach of the contract, not as the liquidate measure of damages for each and every infringement thereof. It was called "penalty" and not "damages." It bore no relation to the loss which the parties might sustain by breach of the contract, for there were many ways, some material and some trivial, in which it might be broken.² For some of these £50 might be too much, and for others it would be too little. It was just a random sum, and did not prevent the defender from recovering the full measure of the damage he had sustained.³ In the case of a contract secured by a penalty clause, each party had an option. He could either bring an action of debt for recovery of the penalty, or he could sue for damages under the contract. And if he elected to sue for damages, he could recover the actual amount of his loss, whether it was more or less than the penalty. This was well settled in English law and had frequently been applied, especially in cases under a contract of charter-party.⁴ There was no conflicting Scottish authority. The dictum of Lord Fitzgerald in Lord Elphinstone v. Monkland Iron and Coal Company, Limited,⁵ was obiter and unsupported. *Johnstone's Trustees v. Johnstone*⁶ was really a case of liquidate damages, and had been misapplied both by Mr Bell⁷ and in the case of Hyndman's Trustees v. Miller.⁸ It was admitted that the defender might only succeed in recovering less than the penalty. There was no reason in principle why he should not recover more if the facts justified his claim. Payment of the penalty did not excuse non-performance of the contract,⁹ and the only purpose of a penalty clause was to provide an easy remedy for the injured party if he chose to take advantage of it.¹⁰ This was not a case in which the defender could get a decree ad factum præstandum, and therefore he was entitled to damages.

¹ Ersk. Inst. iii. 3, 86.

² Reynolds v. Bridge, (1856) 6 E. & B. 528, per Coleridge, J., at p. 541.

³ Clydebank Engineering Co. v. Yequierdo y Castaneda, (1904) 7 F. (H. L.) 77; Bell's Com. (7th ed.), vol. i., p. 699.

⁴ Chitty on Contracts (15th ed), p. 818; Mayne on Damages (8th ed.), p. 289; Winter v. Trimmer, (1763) 1 W. Bl. 395; Lowe v. Peers, (1768) 4 Burrows, 2225, per Lord Mansfield, at p. 2228; Harrison v. Wright, (1811) 13 East, 343; cf. Stroms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison, (1904) 6 F. 486, per Lord M'Laren, at p. 493.

⁵ (1886) 13 R. (H. L.) 98, at p. 108.

⁶ Jan. 19, 1819, F. C.

⁷ Prin. sec. 34.

⁸ (1895) 33 S. L. R. 359.

⁹ Gold v. Houldsworth, (1870) 8 Macph. 1006.

¹⁰ Craig v. M'Beath, (1863) 1 Macph. 1020, per Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, at p. 1022.

Argued for the respondent;—(1) There was no answer to the pursuer's claim for delivery of the deposit-receipt. The money had been placed in bank to secure implement of a special term of the agreement which was separable from the other conditions, and as implement of this term was now out of the question, the money should be returned. In effect the defender was trying to compensate a claim under article 2 of the agreement by a counter claim under article 4. This would not have been a good defence at common law,¹ and it was not made a good defence by the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907.² Articles 2 and 4 of the agreement were not one contract, but two collateral contracts. (2) The defender's averments in support of his counter claims were irrelevant, and should not be remitted to probation. (3) In any event, the defender's claim for damages was limited to £50, which sum the pursuer was willing to pay. The sum mentioned in article 5 was not a penalty, but was the agreed-on measure of damages for breach of the agreement. In some cases a sum was stipulated in terrorem, to frighten the parties into performance, and had no relation to the actual or probable amount of damage.³ Such penalties were never enforced by way of punishment, and if necessary would be mitigated by the Court.⁴ In other cases the sum stipulated was the measure of damage, and would be awarded without modification.⁵ In deciding into which of these classes a particular clause fell, the use of the word "penalty" was not decisive.⁶ In the present case £50 fairly represented the probable loss which either party would sustain by a breach of the agreement. It made no difference that the contract contained several stipulations of varying importance.⁷ But even if article 5 were to be construed as a penalty clause, the defender could not recover more than the sum mentioned. A penalty clause limited the damage, though it did not assess it.⁸ The English authorities were not a safe guide, because specific performance, as an ordinary remedy, was not recognised in English, as it was in Scots law.⁹

June 27, 1912.
Dingwall v.
Burnett.

At advising on 27th June 1912,—

LORD SALVESSEN.—In this case the Sheriff-substitute has found it possible to dispose, without inquiry, of all the conclusions of the action, with the exception of the demand for accounting made by the defender. As I am

¹ Bell's Prin. sec. 573.

² 7 Edw. VII. cap. 51, First Sched., Rule 55; Christie v. Birrells, 1910 S. C. 986.

³ Bell's Com. (7th ed.), vol. i., p. 700.

⁴ Craig v. M'Beath, 1 Macph. 1020, per Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, at p. 1022.

⁵ Johnston v. Robertson, (1861) 23 D. 646; Reilly v. Jones, (1823) 1 Bing. 302.

⁶ Johnston v. Robertson, 23 D. 646, per Lord Cowan, at p. 654.

⁷ Hinton v. Sparkes, (1868) L. R., 3 C. P. 161; Wallis v. Smith, (1882) 21 Ch. D. 243.

⁸ Johnstone's Trustees v. Johnstone, Jan. 19, 1819, F. C.; Hyndman's Trustees v. Miller, 33 S. L. R. 359; Lord Elphinstone v. Monkland Iron and Coal Co., Limited, 13 R. (H. L.) 98, per Lord Fitzgerald, at p. 108; Bell's Prin. sec. 34.

⁹ Stewart v. Kennedy, (1890) 17 R. (H. L.) 1, per Lord Herschell, at p. 5.

June 27, 1912. unable to reach the same result, I think it necessary to deal with the case in some detail.—[His Lordship then narrated the facts, and proceeded]— Dingwall v. Burnett.

Lord Salvesen.

As regards the first crave the Sheriff-substitute has repelled the defences as irrelevant, and ordained the defender to endorse and deliver the deposit-receipt referred to ; as regards the second crave he also repelled the defences as irrelevant, and found the defender liable in payment of £58, 10s. in name of wages, although the agreement does not provide for the rate of wages in the event which has happened. He has further dismissed in toto the counter claim for £79, 5s. 2d., and also the counter claim for £250 except to the extent of £50 sterling. He has thus disposed of the whole cause with the exception of the defender's claim for an accounting with regard to which there is no dispute.

I am unable to agree with the Sheriff-substitute in any of his conclusions. The averments of negligence are, I think, quite relevant to be remitted to probation.—[His Lordship then dealt with the averments of mismanagement.]

There is more difficulty as to whether the pursuer is entitled to have the deposit-receipt endorsed and delivered to him. His counsel urged that this was a separable part of the agreement, and that the money having been consigned as security for the valuation price of the furniture, fittings, and stock in the hotel, now that he had resolved not to go on with the agreement or to take over these effects, the defender had no right to keep the pursuer out of his own money. It is true that the principle of compensation or set-off is not applicable to such a claim. But there is another principle equally well recognised which was expressed by Lord Justice-Clerk Moncreiff in *Turnbull v. M'Lean*¹ as follows:—"I understand the law of Scotland, in regard to mutual contracts, to be quite clear—first, that the stipulations on either side are the counterparts and the consideration given for each other ; second, that a failure to perform any material or substantial part of the contract on the part of one will prevent him from suing the other for performance ; and third, that where one party has refused or failed to perform his part of the contract in any material respect, the other is entitled either to insist for implement, claiming damages for the breach, or to rescind the contract altogether—except so far as it has been performed." The present case seems to me to fall within these rules. The pursuer has declined to perform his contract altogether, and he cannot therefore call upon the defender to fulfil his obligations until the latter has had an opportunity of constituting his claim of damages for the breach of the contract. As Lord Benholme said in Turnbull's case,¹—"In mutual contracts there is no ground for separating the parts of the contract into independent obligations, so that one party can refuse to perform his part of the contract, and yet insist upon the other performing his part. The unity of the contract must be respected." I am therefore of opinion that the Sheriff-substitute has erred in granting a decree ordaining the defender de plano to endorse the deposit-receipt.

The remaining part of the judgment raises an interesting question of law about which there has been an apparent variety of judicial dicta. The last article in the mutual agreement between the parties is expressed in these terms:—"Fifth. Both parties hereto bind and oblige themselves to implement their part of this agreement under the penalty of fifty pounds, to be paid by the party failing to the party performing or willing to perform over and above performance." The Sheriff-substitute has held that this sum of £50 represents the maximum to which the defender is entitled in respect of the admitted breach by the pursuer of his part of the agreement; and that as the pursuer is willing to allow this sum of £50 to be deducted from any claim which he may establish to wages, no inquiry need be led as to the loss the defender has actually or potentially suffered. He says: "Realising the speculative nature of the enterprise, the parties were careful in advance to translate the situation of a breach into a figure, and that is the figure for which the pursuer admits liability." I understand the learned Sheriff to mean by this that the parties intended that the sum of £50 should represent the liquidate damages in case of a breach by either; and, if he were correct in so thinking, there is no fault to be found with his law. The intention, however, must be gathered from the words of the contract; and I confess that I do not find anything in the penalty clause to suggest that the sum of £50 there mentioned was an agreed-on pre-estimate of the damage which either might sustain by the failure of the other to perform his part of the contract. In the first place, the word used is "penalty" and not liquidate damages. I attach some importance to this, although the Courts have in special circumstances construed the word "penalty" as equivalent to liquidate damages, and conversely. A more important point is, however, that the penalty is to be "over and above performance." Now, it is also true that these words will be implied where the Court is of opinion that the sum agreed on for breach of the agreement is so agreed on by way of penalty merely, and is not to be treated as liquidate damages; but I do not know of any case, and we were referred to none, where such words, when expressed, were held to be consistent with an intention of parties to fix the liquidate damages. An even more important consideration in determining whether the sum stipulated to be paid in the event of a breach of contract is liquidate damages or merely represents a penalty, is to ascertain whether the sum conditioned to be paid bears (in the words of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in *Craig*¹), "a clear proportion to the amount of loss sustained by the party entitled to claim it"; and very similar language was used by some of the noble Lords who decided the case of Elphinstone.² The Lord Chancellor (Lord Herschell), in holding that the stipulated sum in that case represented liquidate damage, said: "The agreement does not provide for the payment of a lump sum upon the non-performance of any one of many obligations differing in importance. It has reference to a single obligation, and the sum to be paid bears a strict proportion to the extent to which that obligation is left unfulfilled." In this case the very opposite holds good. The agreement imposes on the pursuer many obligations of an entirely different kind. There is first an undertaking that he shall duly lodge and follow forth an application for a transfer of the licence to himself. Then he is taken bound to take over at mutual valuation certain furniture, fittings, and stock.

¹ 1 R. 730.

June 27, 1912.
 Dingwall v.
 Burnett.
 Lord Salvesen.

¹ 1 Macph. 1020.

² 13 R. (H. L.) 98.

June 27, 1912. Further, he undertakes to act as the defender's manager, and account to him for the whole drawings of the hotel—also week by week to consign the surplus of drawings over expenses in bank in name of the defender, and to conduct the hotel on a proper businesslike footing, and do nothing likely to prejudice the licence. For a breach of any of these obligations—some of them of a kind which might not involve actual loss, and others a loss that could certainly not be material, as, for instance, the failure to consign in a single week the surplus drawings—the same penalty is prescribed. But I need not pursue the subject, for I do not think the clause with which I am dealing could have been more clearly expressed as a penalty clause or one which is less calculated to indicate an intention of the parties to treat the stipulated sum as liquidate damages, whether in respect of a partial or entire breach of the obligations undertaken by the pursuer.

Dingwall v.
Burnett.

Lord Salvesen.

Even on the assumption, however, that this is a penalty clause, the pursuer argued that while it would be open to him to call upon the defender to prove his actual damage, the latter can never recover more than the stipulated penalty ; although he (the pursuer) is not bound to pay more than the actual damage if it be less. This is a somewhat startling proposition, but it is not unsupported by authority. The earliest case to which we were referred on the subject is that of Johnstone's Trustees.¹ In that case a property was exposed for sale under articles of roup which obliged the highest offerer within thirty days after the day of roup to grant a bond for the price offered by him to the satisfaction of the exposers, with a fifth part more than the price of liquidate penalty in case of failure ; “and if any purchaser shall fail in granting the said bond, he shall, besides incurring a penalty of a fifth part more than the price, forfeit his interest in the purchase ; and it shall be in the option of the exposers to compel the purchaser to implement his bargain or to hold the said lands and others themselves as being unsold, and of new to expose them to sale.” Dr Johnstone bought part of the lands at an upset price of £15,646, but having afterwards relinquished the purchase, the trustees brought an action against him concluding for a fifth of the purchase price, being the penalty incurred by his failure in implementing the conditions of the articles of roup, and also for £5000 damages. Lord Reston (Ordinary) found that the amount of the damage must be the difference between the sum of £15,646, the upset price at which the lands were purchased for behoof of Dr Johnstone, and the amount of the price which should be received by the pursuers when a sale of the whole lands had been effected, together with the difference between the interest on the price offered and on the actual proceeds of the lands. It is thus plain that he treated the clause on which the pursuers founded, not as one by which the damages were liquidated, but as a proper penalty, notwithstanding that it bore a certain relation to the price of the property. The report further bears that his Lordship afterwards found that the sum exigible from the defender could in no event exceed the penalty. A reclaiming petition was presented by the trustees, but the Court refused the petition, without answers. Unfortunately the report does not contain the opinions of the Judges in the Inner House.

¹ Jan. 19, 1819, F. C.

This case was followed by Lord Wellwood in the Outer House in the case June 27, 1912. of *Hyndman's Trustees*¹; although his Lordship stated that, but for that Dingwall v. Burnett. case, his decision would have been the other way. His decision was not Lord Salvesen. reclaimed against; but one main reason for not presenting a reclaiming note (as I happen to know, from having conducted the case in the Outer House) was that it was doubtful if even the sum decerned for could be recovered against the defender. It is further not to be left out of view that Mr Bell in his Principles (section 34) treats the case as authoritative; for he lays down as a proposition in relation to stipulated damages that "the obligation may be fortified by a penalty which is held to cover but not to assess the damage, to entitle the jury to find under it the true amount of damage not exceeding the penalty." Lastly, Lord Fitzgerald's opinion in the case of *Elphinstone*² contains the following passage: "We may take it, then, that by the law of Scotland the parties to any contract may fix the damages to result from a breach at a sum estimated as liquidated damages; or they may enforce the performance of the stipulations of the agreement by a penalty. In the first instance the pursuer is, in case of a breach, entitled to recover the estimated sum as pactional damages irrespective of the actual loss sustained. In the other, the penalty is to cover all the damages actually sustained, but it does not estimate them, and the amount of loss (not, however, exceeding the penalty) is to be ascertained in the ordinary way." This latter dictum was not necessary for the decision of the case before the House, as the sum stipulated in the event of a breach was held to be liquidated damages; and none of the other learned Lords referred to it in their opinions.

It is to be noted that in Johnstone's case³ the pursuers concluded for the penalty although they had a separate and additional conclusion for damages. They were thus founding on the penalty clause, and it may be that in such circumstances they were not entitled to ask any more than the penalty. Possibly this may afford a key to the decision, and also to the dicta of Mr Bell and Lord Fitzgerald. If that is not the true view, I confess that I am quite unable to reconcile these authorities with the other principle which has been firmly fixed in our law by a series of decisions and which is thus stated by Mr Bell in his Principles (section 34), "that the stipulation of a penalty (unless when expressly so declared) is not alternative, and does not discharge the obligation on payment of the penalty." I need only refer to one case as illustrating this principle, that of Gold.⁴ Suppose in the present case that, after the pursuer had obtained a transfer of the licence and had performed, or was willing to perform, all the obligations incumbent on him by the agreement, the defender proposed to let the hotel to some other person at a higher rent. According to the principle of the case last cited, would the pursuer not have been entitled to insist on specific implement, or could the defender have tendered him a sum of £50 sterling as in full of the damages claimable through his breach of contract? In my opinion he could plainly not do so. Or again, to take the decision in the case of Johnstone's Trustees,⁵ suppose the trustees

¹ 33 S. L. R. 359.

³ Jan. 19, 1819, F. C.

² 13 R. (H. L.) 98, at p. 108.

⁴ 8 Macph. 1006.

June 27, 1912. had attempted to resile from their bargain, is it not plain that it would have been open to the purchaser to have obtained a decree ordaining them to execute a disposition on payment of the price, or in default of their doing so granting an adjudication in implement of the sale? To my mind it is obvious that this latter remedy would have been open to the purchaser. It is true that in the case of the purchaser who resiles from his contract the remedy of a decree ad factum præstandum is not open, nor would it be available to the defender here. The only performance of the contract which can be obtained in such a case is full compensation for the breach. I cannot conceive any ground upon which it can be held consistently with principle that one of the parties should escape all the consequences of his breach on payment of a stipulated sum which is stated by way of penalty, when the other may be compelled to implement the contract in its entirety. That is to read a penalty clause, which ex hypothesi does not assess the damage, as nevertheless assessing it where the actual damage sustained is more than the stipulated sum.

I am fortified in this view by the circumstance that the rule has been fixed in England in a sense opposite to that indicated in the Scottish authorities I have quoted. In the case of *Harrison v. Wright*¹ a charter-party had been entered into between the parties for a voyage from Sweden to Hull. It contained a clause, "penalty for non-performance, £1300." The shipowner afterwards refused to allow the vessel to sail, and the charterers claimed £3000 damages for breach of contract. An arbiter awarded the plaintiffs £1860, though it was objected before him that not more than £1300, the amount of the penalty as liquidate damages, could be recovered. Lord Ellenborough, following a prior decision of Lord Mansfield in Winter v. Trimmer,² held that the penalty was auxiliary to enforcing performance of the contract, and that the party aggrieved might either take the penalty as his debt at law and assign his breach under the statute of William III. cap. 11, section 8, or he might bring his action for damages upon the breach of the contract, and that the arbitrator was warranted in awarding the sum which he had given to the plaintiffs. That decision has been recognised ever since as a correct statement of the law of England, and in the ordinary text-books on shipping and contracts the matter is treated as no longer open. Thus Mr Carver in "Carriage by Sea," section 722, says: "A clause such as 'penalty for non-performance estimated amount of freight' (or some fixed sum) is frequently found in charters, but practically it appears to have little effect. On the one hand, it does not limit the amount of damages which may be claimed; on the other hand, it does not entitle either party to claim the amount of the penalty for a partial breach of the contract." The decision of the Privy Council in the case of *Dimech v. Corlett*³ is not really inconsistent with the law as thus stated, although it was there held that, in the case of an entire non-performance of a contract of affreightment, the party aggrieved was entitled to recover as damages the full amount of freight stipulated for in the instrument. In effect the Court there decided that the estimated amount of freight was to be dealt with as liquidate damages in the event of entire failure to perform the contract. In a later case, that of Godard v. Gray,¹ Blackburn, J., quoted with approval the following passage in Abbott on Shipping: "Such a clause is not the absolute limit of damages on either side; the party may, if he thinks fit, ground his action upon the other clauses or covenants, and may, in such action, recover damages beyond the amount of the penalty, if in justice they shall be found to exceed it. On the other hand, if the party sue on such a penal clause he cannot, in effect, recover more than the damage actually sustained." The decision in the case of Craig,² to which I have already referred, is not, as I read it, in the least degree inconsistent with the principle thus stated, but is entirely on the same lines. I think all the authorities that appear to be to a contrary effect in Scotland may be explained by the passages being elliptical and omitting what is clearly stated in the passage from Abbott, that a stipulated amount of penalty is the maximum amount recoverable if the party aggrieved sues on the penalty clause. It cannot be maintained that a different principle of construction is to apply to a contract of affreightment—which is, after all, the lease of a vessel—from that applicable to the lease of a heritable subject.

¹ 13 East, 343.

² 1 W. Bl. 395.

³ (1858) 12 Moor P. C. Cases, 199.

I have come, therefore, in the end to be very clearly of opinion that the laws of England and Scotland are the same as regards the matter; and that the defender is entitled to recover whatever loss he is able to qualify in respect of the pursuer's breach of contract. We ought, therefore, to recall the interlocutor appealed against; to repel the 1st, 4th, and 5th pleas in law for the pursuer and the second alternative of plea 7; and remit the case to the Sheriff-substitute to allow parties a proof of their respective averments.

Since this case was argued counsel for the pursuer has directed our attention to the case of Webster v. Bosanquet.³ I have accordingly considered the decision of the Privy Council, with the result that I do not think it in any way aids the pursuer's argument. The clause of the contract on which action was there taken is in marked contrast with the one which occurs in the contract between the parties here. It provided for a specified amount to be paid in the event of breach "as liquidated damages and not as penalty." The main value of the decision lies in this, that such a stipulation will be fairly construed; and that the stipulated sum of liquidate damages will not be due unless there has been a substantial breach of the contract; or, to put it another way, that the mere fact that on a literal construction of the clause it might be possible to say that it provided for payment of liquidate damages for any trifling breach was not to be held as converting it into a mere penalty clause, for the Courts must construe a contract according to the presumed intention of the contracting parties. The case lays down no new law but professedly follows the decision in the Clydebank Engineering Company,⁴ to which we were referred in the course of the argument. It does not support to any extent the view that when an action is laid on breach of contract the damages are to be held as limited to the amount stipulated in a proper penalty clause.

Dingwall v.
Burnett.

Lord Salvesen.

¹ (1870) L. R., 6 Q. B. 139.

³ [1912] A. C. 394.

² 1 Macph. 1020.

⁴ 7 F. (H. L.) 77.

June 27, 1912. The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD GUTHRIE concurred.

Dingwall v.
Burnett.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Sustain the appeal and recall the said interlocutor appealed against: Repel the 1st, 4th, and 5th pleas in law, as also the second head of the 7th plea in law, for the pursuer: Remit the cause to the Sheriff in order to allow the parties a proof of their respective averments, and to proceed therein as accords: Find the defender entitled to expenses since the date of the said interlocutor, and remit," &c.

DALGLEISH, DOBBIE, & Co., S.S.C.—A. C. D. VERT, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 154. THE SCOTTISH SHIRE LINE, LIMITED, Appellants.—Munro, K.C.—R. C. Henderson.

June 27, 1912. DAVID CALLUM LETHAM (Surveyor of Taxes), Respondent.—Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

Scottish Shire
Line, Limited,
v. Inland
Revenue.

Revenue—Income-tax—Deductions for wear and tear—Unexhausted deductions—Purchase of old company by new company—Right of new company to unexhausted deductions—Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 13), sec. 26 (3).

The Finance Act, 1907, enacts, section 26 (3), that, where full effect cannot be given to the deduction for wear and tear in any year owing to the profits chargeable with income-tax being less than the deduction, the part of the deduction to which effect has not been given "shall, for the purpose of making the assessment for the following year, be added to the amount of the deduction for wear and tear for that year."

A new company having purchased as a going concern the business of an old company was assessed for income-tax on the average profits of the old company for the three years preceding the purchase. The amount of deductions for wear and tear to which the old company was entitled during these three years had not been given effect to in full, owing to the fact that they exceeded the amount of the taxable income of the old company during that time. Held that the new company was entitled to deduct from its taxable income the balance of the deductions allowable to the old company.

Exchequer
Cause.
2D DIVISION.

THE SCOTTISH SHIRE LINE, LIMITED, was assessed for income-tax under Schedule D of the Income-Tax Acts * for the year ending 5th

* The Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), enacts:—Fourth Rule applying to Cases 1 and 2 of Schedule D of sec. 100. "If amongst any persons engaged in any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, or in any profession, in partnership together, any change shall take place in any such partnership, either by death, or dissolution of partnership as to all or any of the partners, or by admitting any other partner therein before the time of making the assessment, or within the period for which the assessment ought to be made under this Act, or if any person shall have succeeded to any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, or any profession, within such respective periods as aforesaid, the duty payable in respect of such partnership, or any of such partners, or any person succeeding to such profession, trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, shall be computed and ascertained according to the profits and gains of such business derived during the respective periods herein mentioned, notwithstanding such change therein or succession to such business as aforesaid. . . ."

The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 and 42 Vict. cap. 15), enacts:—Sec. 12. "Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any Act relating to income-tax, the commissioners for general or April 1911 on the sum of £31,737, less £23,691 (increased by con- June 27, 1912. sent of parties to £23,885) allowed for wear and tear for the year of assessment, and this assessment was sustained by the Commissioners ^{Scottish Shire} on appeal. The Company, who maintained that the balance of the ^{Line, Limited,} assessment, viz., £7852, should be allowed as a further deduction for ^{v. Inland} wear and tear under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. ^{Revenue.} VII. cap. 13), section 26 (3), requested and obtained a case for the opinion of the Court.

The case set forth the following facts as proved or admitted :—

“1. The appellant Company was incorporated on 7th January 1910, under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, as a private company, limited by shares.

“2. The objects of the appellant Company as set forth in the third article of its memorandum of association are, inter alia, as follows :—
‘(a) To acquire by purchase, as a going concern, the business of the Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited, registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880, and having its registered office in Glasgow, and the goodwill, and the whole heritable and real, and the special purposes shall, in assessing the profits or gains of any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, in the nature of trade, chargeable under Schedule D, or the profits of any concern chargeable by reference to the rules of that Schedule, allow such deduction as they may think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern, and belonging to the person or company by whom the concern is carried on. . . .”

The Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 13), enacts :—

Sec. 26. “(1) For the purpose of enabling deductions for wear and tear to be allowed by the additional Commissioners, claims in respect of those deductions shall be included in the annual statement required to be delivered under the Income-Tax Acts of the profits or gains of the concern for the purpose of which the machinery or plant is used, and the additional Commissioners in assessing those profits and gains shall make such allowances in respect of those claims as they think just and reasonable.

“(2) No deduction for wear and tear or repayment on account of any such deduction shall be allowed in any year if the deduction when added to the deductions allowed on that account in any previous years to the person by whom the concern is carried on, will make the aggregate amount of the deductions exceed the actual cost to that person of the machinery or plant, including in that actual cost any expenditure in the nature of capital expenditure on the machinery or plant by way of renewal, improvement, or reinstatement.

“(3) Where, as respects any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, full effect cannot be given to the deduction for wear and tear in any year owing to there being no profits or gains chargeable with income-tax in that year, or owing to the profits or gains so chargeable being less than the deduction, the deduction or part of the deduction to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall, for the purpose of making the assessment for the following year, be added to the amount of the deduction for wear and tear for that year and deemed to be part of that deduction, or, if there is no such deduction for that year, be deemed to be the deduction for that year, and so on for succeeding years.

“(4) In this section the expression ‘deduction for wear and tear’ means the deduction allowed, or which would be allowed, under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, as representing the diminished value, by reason of wear and tear during the year, of machinery or plant used for the purposes of any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern.”

June 27, 1912.
 Scottish Shire
 Line, Limited,
 v. Inland
 Revenue.

whole moveable and personal property, assets, and rights of the said company; to take over the current contracts of the said company, and to undertake all or some of the burdens and obligations of the business so acquired, and to carry on and develop the said business. (b) To carry on the business of shipowners in all its branches, together with any business or acts or transactions which are either incidental thereto, or which shipowners or shipping companies are wont to carry on or do in connection with, or as auxiliary to, the business of owning and working ships.' The share capital of the appellant Company is £225,000, divided into 18,500 ordinary shares of £10 each, and 4000 five per cent cumulative preference shares of £10 each, of which 12,493 ordinary shares, fully paid, have been issued.

" 3. The Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited (hereinafter referred to as the old company), was incorporated on 27th August 1884, under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880, with an authorised capital of £45,000, which was ultimately increased to £200,000, divided into 10,000 shares of £20 each, of which 9375 had been issued and had been paid up to the extent of £16 per share; and by special resolutions passed and confirmed at extraordinary general meetings of members of the old company, held respectively on 10th December 1909, and 4th January 1910, it was resolved that the old company be wound up voluntarily, and that the liquidator be authorised to sell the assets and undertaking of the old company to a new company.

" 4. By agreement, dated 21st January 1910, between the appellant Company and the old company and the liquidator thereof, a copy of which is appended hereto, and forms part of this case, the appellant Company purchased, as a going concern, the whole of the business of the old company, including the fleet of steamships and all other assets.

" 5. The profits of the steamships of the old company have always been treated as a whole, and only one assessment has been made annually in respect of the whole fleet.

" 6. The prime cost of these steamships was £568,473; the deductions for wear and tear up to 1910-11 (inclusive) amounted to £249,486, of which £25,715 could not be given effect to owing to the profits chargeable for 1907-8, 1908-9, and 1909-10 being less than the deductions. The written-down value of the steamships for income-tax purposes was £318,987, after deducting from the prime cost the full depreciation of £249,486, which includes the before-mentioned £25,715 of unexhausted depreciation.

" 7. The steamships were acquired by the appellant Company at prices totalling £267,400, being the prices standing in the books of the old company.

" 8. The shareholders in the appellant Company and the old company and their respective holdings are as follows:—

Appellant Company.

Names of Shareholders.	No. of Shares.	Value £.
Turnbull, Martin, & Company,	12,051	120,510
David Inglis, nominee of Turnbull, Martin, & Company,	1	10
James Caird,	296	2,960
Henry H. Dawes,	133	1,330
Mrs H. A. Caird,	12	120
	12,493	£124,930

Old Company.

Names of Shareholders.	No. of Shares.	Value £.	June 27, 1912.
			Scottish Shire Line, Limited, v. Inland Revenue.
Turnbull, Martin, & Company,	4,510	72,160
Mrs Lang on behalf of Turnbull, Martin, & Company, in security for loan,	1,799	28,784
D. C. Leck and Others on behalf of Turnbull, Martin, & Company, in security for loan,	2,855	45,680
James Caird,	107	1,712
Henry H. Dawes,	74	1,184
W. A. Moore,	15	240
A. S. M'Lean,	10	160
Mrs H. A. Caird,	5	80
	9,375	£150,000

"9. The assessment was based on the average profits shown by the accounts of the Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited, for the three years ending 31st December 1909.

"10. During the three years ending the 5th April 1910 the sums allowable to the old company in respect of the annual wear and tear of the fleet were respectively £25,007, £24,564, and £24,111, but in respect that the old company's taxable income during each of those years was less than the said sums allowable, the amounts actually allowed were respectively £17,123, £16,554, and £14,290. The balance over the said three years not allowed was thus £25,715, of which £7852 is now claimed by the appellant Company as an additional allowance for the year ending 5th April 1911. . . ."

The case further stated ;—"The Commissioners, on consideration of the facts and arguments submitted to them, refused the appeal and confirmed the assessment, as they were of opinion that the appellant Company succeeded to the business of the old company within the meaning of the Fourth Rule of Rules applying to Cases 1 and 2 of Schedule D of the Act 5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35, section 100, and that there was no authority for allowing the appellant Company a deduction for wear and tear for a period during which their predecessors carried on the business."

The case was heard before the Second Division on 6th June 1912.

Argued for the appellants ;—"In assessing the appellants for income-tax on the three years' basis under Rule 4 of Cases 1 and 2, Schedule D, Income-Tax Act, 1842, section 100, the Commissioners had negatived the view that this was a new business set up within three years. That rule contemplated identity of the business, irrespective of any change in the personnel, and the words "trade or concern" used in section 26 (3) of the Finance Act, 1907, were to be construed in the same way as applying to the business and not to the persons who carried it on.¹ As the Crown for the purpose of assessment had treated the new company as being identical with the old company, it was bound to treat the two companies as identical in a question as to the deductions allowable. In point of fact, except in name and in the proportions in which the shares were distributed among the shareholders, the two companies were, to all intents and purposes, ¹ Ryhope Coal Co., Limited, v. Foyer, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 485, per Grove, J., at p. 494.

June 27, 1912. identical. There was no reason for maintaining that depreciation was a personal allowance; and to construe the section thus would lead to absurd results, e.g., the assumption of a clerk as a partner with a small share in the business would deprive the firm of its claim for depreciation. These deductions would have been allowed to the appellants' predecessors, and the fair reading of the section was that they were allowable to the person or company by whom in succession the business was carried on. Where it was intended to limit the right to deductions to individuals the language of the statutes was quite specific, as in subsection 2 of section 26 and in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, section 12. There was nothing to show that the appellants had received any allowance on the purchase price for the diminished value claimed, or that they had not purchased the claim of the Elderslie Company against the Inland Revenue like any other asset. In any event, the respondent had nothing to do with arrangements made between the Elderslie Company and the appellants as to the disposal of these claims. Both in equity and on the statutes the respondent was wrong.

Scottish Shire
Line, Limited,
v. Inland
Revenue.

Argued for the respondent;—Income-tax was a personal charge, and the deductions allowed for tear and wear were personal allowances. The assessment was made in advance, and was levied on the profits the taxpayer received, or expected to receive, in the year of assessment, i.e., on the profits of the future year. It was not equitable that a purchaser should be allowed to deduct depreciation which had nothing to do with the property bought. The question was one of succession in each case, and the test was whether a business or only an asset of a business was purchased. This was always a question of circumstances.¹ The general effect of section 26 of the Finance Act, 1907, was that the deduction was to be allowed to the owner of the machinery who was carrying on the business with it. With each change in the partnership a new depreciation account was opened. Though for the purpose of assessing income-tax the statute allowed three years' profits of the old business to be taken as a basis, there was no similar provision with regard to depreciation. The relevant sections of the statutes clearly contemplated a personal account for depreciation, based on the depreciation which had actually taken place during the new ownership, and extending up to the price that had been paid for the property. The effect of this was that each new owner got a new fund for depreciation which was not open to his predecessor. In point of fact the whole depreciation up to the date of the purchase was accounted for, so far as the purchaser was concerned, in the diminished price he had paid for the depreciated assets. Subsection 4 of section 26 of the Finance Act, 1907, referred back to subsection 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, which expressly referred to machinery or plant "belonging to the person or company by whom the concern is carried on."

At advising on 27th June 1912,—

LORD DUNDAS.—In this case the Scottish Shire Line, Limited, Glasgow, appeal against an assessment to income-tax for the year 1910—being the year ending 5th April 1911—upon a sum of £7852. That sum is brought out as the difference between £31,737, which represents the average profits June 27, 1912. of the Company (or rather of their predecessors in trade) in the years 1907, 1908, and 1909, and the amount allowed by the Commissioners (as increased by consent of parties) as a deduction for wear and tear in the year of assessment, viz., £23,885. The appellants claim that this difference of £7852 should be allowed as a further deduction for wear and tear, under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1907, section 26 (3). The Commissioners have negatived the claim. Hence the present appeal.

¹ John Wilson & Son, Limited, v. Inland Revenue, (1895) 23 R. 18; Bell v. National Provincial Bank of England, [1904] 1 K. B. 149; Watson Brothers v. Inland Revenue, (1902) 4 F. 795.

Scottish Shire
Line, Limited,
v. Inland
Revenue.
—
Lord Dundas.

The facts proved or admitted are fully set out in the case. The appellant Company was incorporated in 1910 for the purpose of taking over as a going concern and carrying on the business of the Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited. It is not disputed that the appellants' business is the same business, though the legal persona is different; that the shareholders are practically (though not identically) the same; and that the assessment for the year 1910 was based on the average profits shown by the accounts of the Elderslie Steamship Company for the three years ending 31st December 1909. It is common ground that, if the present question had arisen between the Crown and the Elderslie Company, the claim for deduction would be good.

The statutory enactments bearing on the matter are printed in the case. By section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, the Commissioners were directed to allow such deduction as they might think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern, "and belonging to the person or company by whom the concern is carried on." The Finance Act, 1907, section 26 (3), provides that "where as respects any trade . . . or concern, full effect cannot be given to the deduction for wear and tear in any year . . . owing to the profits or gains" chargeable with income-tax "being less than the deduction, the deduction or part of the deduction to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall, for the purpose of making the assessment for the following year, be added to the amount of the deduction for wear and tear for that year and deemed to be part of that deduction . . . and so on for succeeding years." It is on the subsection from which I have just quoted that the appellants found.

It was urged for the Crown that income-tax is a personal tax; that the deduction for wear and tear is a personal allowance; and that the appellants are not entitled to an allowance in respect of the deductions for wear and tear to which full effect could not be given in preceding years while the plant and machinery were the property of their predecessors. I cannot accept this view. The language of the subsection is conceived in broad and general terms and does not (I must assume, intentionally) strike any personal note. The references in subsection 2 to the "person" seem important rather by way of contrast than as supporting the Crown's contention. Again, subsection 4, while it takes one back to section 12 of the 1878 Act, does not repeat, but omits, the words of personal limitation with which that section concludes. The Crown has treated the appellant Company as the old company by taking that company's profits during the preceding years as the basis for assessing the appellants' profits for 1910. I think it would be

June 27, 1912. Scottish Shire Line, Limited, v. Inland Revenue. anomalous if we were to permit the Crown to treat the appellants as a new and different concern when it comes to the matter of the wear and tear deduction. For the reasons now shortly summarised, I think the determination of the Commissioners was wrong, and that the appellants are entitled to succeed.

LORD SALVESEN.—The material facts in this case are within short compass. The appellants' company was formed in January 1910 for the purpose of acquiring by purchase as a going concern the business of the Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited, and the whole assets of that company, undertaking at the same time all its liabilities. The shareholders of the new company were substantially the same as those of the old company, but it is not disputed that it constituted a different persona.

During the three years ending 5th April 1910 the Elderslie Company were entitled to deduct from their taxable income the sums of £25,007, £24,564, and £24,111 in respect of the annual wear and tear of their fleet; but their taxable income was less than the depreciation by £25,715 over the three years.

It is common ground that the new company succeeded to the concern belonging to the Elderslie Company within the meaning of the Fourth Rule applying to Cases 1 and 2 of Schedule D, Income-Tax Act, 1842, section 100; and accordingly fell to be assessed on the average profits and gains of the former company during the three years ending 5th April 1910. It is also common ground that if there had been no change of persona the Elderslie Company would, in returning their profits on this basis, have been entitled to deduct not merely depreciation for the year in which the duty fell to be paid, but also, under the Finance Act, 1907, section 26, subsection 3, the sum of £7852 as a further deduction for wear and tear. The question in this case is whether, owing to the change of persona, this deduction is inadmissible in favour of the appellants; or, in other words, whether, as counsel for the Inland Revenue argued, the additional deduction for wear and tear is an allowance personal to the particular company or copartnership with respect to the depreciation of whose property the claim has arisen. The Commissioners decided that the appellants succeeded to the business of the old company within the meaning of the Fourth Rule already referred to, "and that there was no authority for allowing the appellant Company a deduction for wear and tear for the period during which their predecessors carried on the business."

The main argument in support of this decision was rested on the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, section 12, which empowers the Commissioners to allow such deductions from the profits of any concern "as they may think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern and belonging to the person or company by whom the concern is carried on." If there were no further provision, I agree with the respondent that all that the appellants would be entitled to deduct would be depreciation in respect of wear and tear on plant of which they were the owners, and this would of course exclude the additional deduction which they are now claiming. But subsection 3 of section 26 of the Finance Act of 1907 gives the taxpayer the right to carry forward against June 27, 1912. assessable income any deduction to which effect had not been given owing to the profits or gains being less than the deduction. That provision is absolutely general, and there is no proviso that it is not to apply in the case of a person who has succeeded to any concern, and is thus liable to be assessed according to the profits of his predecessor's business. This limitation is said to be implied by subsection 4, which defines the expression "deduction for wear and tear" as "the deduction allowed . . . under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, as representing the diminished value, by reason of wear and tear during the year, of machinery or plant used for the purposes of any trade, adventure, or concern." It was argued that this reference to section 12 imported the last clause of the section, and excluded any claim for depreciation except in respect of property which belonged to the claimants.

Scottish Shire
Line, Limited,
v. Inland
Revenue.
Lord Salvesen.

I am unable to assent to this argument. Section 12 of the 1878 Act is only referred to in order to define the expression "deduction for wear and tear"; and it is significant that the clause itself stops short just at the point where reference is made to the question of property in the other Act. Subsection 2 of the same section was also appealed to, but the words there used are extremely precise, and are made applicable only to the person by whom the concern is carried on so as to exclude expressly from its operation a new concern which has acquired or succeeded to the machinery and plant of a previously existing trader. The new concern is apparently not affected for the purposes of the claim for depreciation by the aggregate amount of depreciation which has been previously allowed to its predecessors. Where a distinction of this kind is intended to be made it would, therefore, appear that those who framed the Act knew how to express it in clear and distinct terms. On a construction of the various sections, therefore, I have come to be of opinion that there is no ground for holding, as the Commissioners have in effect done, that the privilege introduced by subsection 3 was personal to the old company and did not transmit to the appellants as their successors.

Even in a taxing statute it is legitimate to consider which of two possible constructions is most in accordance with the spirit and intention of the Act. Now the appellants admittedly fall to be assessed for income-tax exactly on the same footing as the Elderslie Company, to whose concern they succeeded. If so, can any reason be suggested why they should not be entitled to the same deductions from those profits as their predecessors, had they remained in business, admittedly would have been entitled to? None was suggested, except that they had acquired depreciated assets for which it was to be assumed that allowance had been made in fixing the purchase price. But the appellants are not liable to be taxed upon their capital, but only upon their profits, and these are not affected in any way for the purposes of income-tax by the amount of capital which they possess. The particular mode of assessing the profits of what is in form a new concern is adopted because of the substantial identity of the new concern with the one that has previously carried on business. If the respondent's argument is good for anything, it would result in this, that an entirely immaterial change in a partnership, either by the death of an existing partner, however

June 27, 1912. small his interest, or by the assumption of a new partner, who was entitled to a share of the profits however fractional, would deprive the remaining partners of the benefit of a deduction to which they were otherwise entitled. I cannot imagine that the Legislature had this in view. On the contrary, it seems to me that the mode of assessing the new concern provided for by the 1842 Act proceeds on the assumption of the substantial identity between it and its predecessor, and that there is no indication of any intention that the new concern is to pay income-tax upon a larger amount than would have been exigible from the old concern if it had continued unchanged in the persons of its owners. I have therefore come to the conclusion that we must reverse the determination of the Commissioners and allow the further deduction claimed by the appellants.

Scottish Shire
Line, Limited,
v. Inland
Revenue.
—
Lord Salvesen.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur. It appears to me that the argument of the Surveyor of Taxes has neither probability nor equity in its favour, because he proposes to treat the appellant Company as identical with or as the successors of the Elderslie Steamship Company, Limited (called the old company in the case), for one revenue purpose, and neither as identical with nor as the successors of the old company for another and not remotely related revenue purpose. The question would be entirely different if the parties had been at issue on the question of the appellant Company's identity with or succession to the old company, but this question, so far as the Act of 1842 (Fourth Rule applying to Cases 1 and 2 of Schedule D) is concerned, is foreclosed by the action of the Surveyor, acquiesced in by the appellant Company. But this consideration can only throw an onus on the Surveyor, for many revenue cases have been decided in favour of the Revenue contrary both to all the probabilities of the case and to equity.

In the sections of the statute of 1907 (including the reference in section 26, subsection 4, to section 12 of the 1878 Act), founded on by the Surveyor, I do not find what he calls the "personal note," on which he relies. On the contrary, where, as in the latter part of section 12 of the 1878 Act, the personal note may be said to occur, the reference to that section in section 26, subsection 4, of the 1907 Act does not incorporate the whole of it, but only such part as contains no such note. I read the words "trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern," used in the 1907 Act, when providing for the mode of dealing with past due deductions, as co-extensive with the same words used in the 1842 Act, when providing for the ascertainment of profits and gains. I therefore think the Commissioners were in error in refusing the appeal.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—When the debate in this case was closed, I formed a very strong opinion in favour of the view which has been expressed by your Lordships. I have had an opportunity of perusing the opinions which have been written, and they so entirely express my views that I do not propose to add anything.

THE COURT reversed the determination of the Commissioners, and allowed the deduction claimed by the appellants.

JAMES GIBSON, S.S.C.—SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

JOHN BROUN BROUN MORISON, Petitioner (Respondent).—

No. 155.

Sandeman, K.C.—J. Smith Clark.

MARSHALL MILLAR CRAIG (Curator ad litem to Eve Muriel de Annand Broun Morison and Another), Respondent (Reclaimer).—Mac-

June 27, 1912.

Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

millan, K.C.—A. R. Brown.

Entail—Disentail—Consents—Entail executed under Private Act—Old or new entail—Entail Amendment Act, 1848 (11 and 12 Vict. cap. 36), sec. 28.

Under the directions of a trust-deed which came into operation in 1842 certain lands were entailed. In 1873 a private Act of Parliament was obtained, under which part of the lands were sold, and others purchased in substitution therefor and entailed on the same series of heirs and under the same conditions and prohibitions. The Act provided that the heirs entitled to succeed to the lands originally entailed, and to the lands directed by the Act to be entailed, should, “notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, be entitled to avail themselves of all the benefits and privileges conferred upon heirs of entail” by the Entail Acts then in force.

In a petition presented in 1912 by the heir of entail in possession for disentail of the substituted lands, the petitioner maintained that he was entitled to disentail under the conditions applicable to an “old” entail dated prior to 1848, viz., with the consent of the next heir only.

Held (1) that the lands in question were entailed under the authority of the private Act of 1873 and not of the trust-deed of 1842, and were accordingly held under a “new” entail; and (2) (rev. judgment of Lord Skerrington) that there was no provision in the private Act of 1873 that the lands in question were to be in the same position as regarded proceedings for disentail as the lands originally entailed; and, accordingly, that the lands could be disentailed only with the consent of the three nearest heirs.

ON 29th February 1912 John Broun Broun Morison presented a petition to the Court of Session for authority to disentail the estate of Murie in the county of Perth.

2D DIVISION.
Lord
Skerrington.

The petition stated that David Morison died in 1842 leaving a trust-disposition and settlement by which he conveyed his whole estate to trustees with directions to invest it in the purchase of lands and to settle the lands by deeds of strict entail upon a series of heirs. In pursuance of the trust the lands of West Errol, Whiteriggs, and Cupargrange were purchased, and deeds of entail were executed in 1856 and 1861. In 1866 the petitioner succeeded to the entailed estate of West Errol, Whiteriggs, and Cupargrange.

In 1873 a private Act of Parliament was obtained, called Morison's Estate Act, 1873.¹ The Act was entitled “an Act for vesting the lands and estate of Cupargrange, in the county of Perth, in trustees for the purposes of being sold, and for the purchase of other lands to be entailed and for other purposes,” and narrated that, as the estates of Cupargrange and of West Errol and Whiteriggs were distant from each other, and there was no mansion-house on either, it was expedient and for the advantage of the petitioner and the heirs of entail in the estate of West Errol and Whiteriggs to sell the estate of Cupargrange, and in lieu thereof to purchase a portion of the estate

¹ 36 and 37 Vict. cap. i.

June 27, 1912. of Murie, which adjoined the estate of West Errol and Whiteriggs and had a convenient mansion-house thereon, and that the estate of West Errol and Whiteriggs, and the portion of the lands of Murie thereto adjoining, would form one compact estate. The Act accordingly authorised the sale of Cupargrange and the purchase and entail of Murie upon the same series of heirs and subject to the same restrictions as the entail of Cupargrange. This was done, and in 1875 a deed of entail of Murie was executed in terms of the Act and recorded.

Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

The Act also contained this provision :—Section 20. “The said John Broun Broun Morison and the heirs of entail entitled to succeed to him in the said entailed estate of West Errol, and the said portion of the estate of Murie hereby directed to be entailed, shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, be entitled to avail themselves of all the benefits and privileges conferred upon heirs of entail by any public Act now in force, and in particular by the Acts 11 and 12 Victoria, chapter 36; 16 and 17 Victoria, chapter 94; 23 and 24 Victoria, chapter 95; and 31 and 32 Victoria, chapter 84.”

The petition further stated that the petitioner was born in 1840, that the only heir of entail whose consent was required to the application was Guy Edward Broun Morison, his eldest son, who was born in 1867, and that he was willing to consent to the application.

The petition was served on Guy Edward Broun Morison. It was also served, according to practice, upon his two children, Eve Muriel de Annand Broun Morison and Rosemary de Annand Broun Morison, who were the two heirs for the time next entitled to succeed to the estate, and as they were both in pupillarity Mr M. Millar Craig, Advocate, was appointed to be their curator ad litem.

The curator ad litem having examined the process lodged a minute in which he submitted that the petition was incompetent in respect that in virtue of the Entail Acts, and in particular the Entail Act, 1848, sections 1, 2, 3, and 28,* and the Entail Act, 1882, section 3, the date of the entail under which the petitioner was heir of entail in possession of Murie was the date on which the Morison Estate Act, 1873, came into operation, namely, 21st July 1873, and that therefore the petitioner was not entitled to acquire the estate of Murie in fee-simple without the consents of his wards, and craved to be heard by counsel at the bar.

On 3rd April 1912 the Lord Ordinary on the Bills (Skerrington) pronounced this interlocutor :—“Finds that the Morison Estate Act, 1873, must be construed as enacting that the heirs of entail in possession of the estate of Murie, by virtue of the entail executed under authority of the Act, shall have the same benefits and privileges under the Public Entail Acts, 1848-1868, available to them with reference to that estate as were available to them with reference to the estate of West Errol, which was entailed pursuant to the trust-

* The Entail Amendment Act, 1848 (11 and 12 Vict. cap. 36), enacts :—Sec. 28. “For the purposes of this Act, the date at which the Act of Parliament, deed, or writing, placing such money or other property under trust, or directing such land to be entailed, first came into operation, shall be held to be the date at which the land should have been entailed in terms of the trust, and shall also be held to be the date of any entail to be made hereafter in execution of the trust, whatever be the actual date of such entail.”

deed of 1842, and which remained so entailed: Therefore repels the objection stated by the curator ad litem in said minute, and decerns." * June 27, 1912.

The curator ad litem reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Salvesen) on 22nd June 1912. Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

Argued for the reclaimer;—The petition was presented on the supposition that the date of the entail under which Murie was held was the date of the original trust-deed in 1842.¹ This view was clearly wrong, and was not now insisted on. The trustees had exhausted their powers under the trust before the private Act was obtained in 1873. The date of the entail was accordingly either 1873, the date of the private Act,² or 1875, the date of the deed executed in terms of the Act.³ The only question which remained was whether there was any provision in the Morison Estate Act, 1873, to the effect that the new entail of Murie "should be taken as of the date of the old entail."⁴ Section 20 of the Act, upon which the petitioner relied, did not have this effect. It was merely a general

* "OPINION.—I have come to the conclusion that the petition to dis-entail the estate of Murie is competent, but I dissent from the assumption of fact made in the petition to the effect that the entail was executed under the authority of a trust-deed which came into operation in the year 1842. The very opposite is the truth. The entail was executed under the authority of a private Act of Parliament which came into force in the year 1873, and which rode rough-shod over the trust-deed of 1842 and what had lawfully followed thereon. It is, however, within the power of Parliament to enact that 'the thing which is not' shall be deemed to exist, and vice versa. I construe section 20 of the private Act not as idle verbiage, but as enacting that the heirs of entail in possession of the estate of Murie, by virtue of the entail to be executed under its authority, should have the same 'benefits and privileges' under the Public Entail Acts, 1848-1868, available to them with reference to that estate as were available to them with reference to the estate of West Errol, which had been entailed pursuant to the trust-deed of 1842 and which remained so entailed.

"In 1873 heirs of entail in possession by virtue of new entails enjoyed only a fraction of the 'benefits and privileges' which the public Acts conferred upon heirs in possession by virtue of old entails. Further, it is implied in the preamble and clauses of the private Act that the estates of West Errol and Murie were intended to form 'one compact estate,' with its mansion-house on Murie, and that they were intended to be held and enjoyed as one estate.

"Three questions therefore had to be determined by the private Act, viz :—(1) Ought the heirs of entail to have different and larger powers as regards West Errol in comparison with their powers as regards Murie? or (2) ought Murie to be considered as held under the original entail? or (3) ought West Errol to be considered as held under the new entail which, for the first time, provided a mansion-house and a compact estate? I interpret section 20 as answering the second question in the affirmative and as deciding in favour of unity and liberty. I accordingly repel the objection stated for the curator ad litem in his minute, No. 15 of process, but as the objection was one which it was his duty to state, I find him entitled to his expenses.

"Counsel for the curator ad litem cited the case of Buchanan, (1883) 10 R. 809. The earlier case of Buchanan, (1864) 2 Macph. 1197, seems to me to be more in point."

¹ Entail Amendment Act, 1848, sec. 28.

² Buchanan v. Jameson, (1883) 10 R. 809.

³ Duke of Athole, (1866) 1 S. L. R. 102.

⁴ Buchanan v. Jameson, 10 R. 809, per Lord Shand, at p. 813.

June 27, 1912. declaration that the entail of Murie should be under the provisions of the Entail Acts. The case of Buchanan,¹ referred to by the Lord Ordinary, was distinguishable. In that case the question arose under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,² and the Rosebery Act,³ and it was held that these Acts directed the lands under the new entail to be held as part of the old entail. There was no such direction or provision in the Morison Estate Act, 1873. The entail of Murie being neither an "old" entail, nor in the same position as the original entail, it followed that the consent of the next heir was not sufficient, and that the consents of the curator's wards were also required.

Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

Argued for the respondent;—The respondent did not now maintain that the date of the Murie entail was the date of the original trust-deed. But having regard to the whole circumstances, and in particular to section 20 of the private Act of 1873, the Murie entail fell to be treated as part of the original entail. Murie was bought in substitution for Cupargrange, which was entailed under the deed of 1842. Section 20 placed West Errol and Murie on the same footing, and provided that they were to have equal privileges under the Entail Acts, and West Errol had the privileges of an "old" entail. There was no other construction which gave effect to the section. The petitioner was therefore entitled to disentail Murie with the same consent as would be required for the disentail of West Errol, and the petition was competent.

At advising on 27th June 1912,—

LORD DUNDAS.—The point here raised is a short and sharp one. The petitioner maintains that he is entitled to disentail with the sole consent of his son, who is his heir-apparent. The curator ad litem appointed to the two pupil children of that son, who are the next heirs of entail for the time being, contends that the petitioner cannot lawfully disentail unless the consents not only of his son, but of the two grandchildren, be obtained, or duly dispensed with in terms of the Entail Acts. To put the matter in other words, the question is, whether the lands sought to be disentailed are held by the petitioner, as heir of entail in possession, under an "old" or a "new" entail. Prima facie the latter is the case; for the deed of entail is dated in 1875, and proceeds upon the narration and under the authority of the private Act of Parliament obtained in 1873. But the theory of the petition is based upon section 28 of the Rutherford Act, by which it is enacted that, for the purposes of that Act, the date at which the Act of Parliament, deed, or writing, placing money or other property under trust, or directing land to be entailed, first came into operation, shall be held to be the date at which the land should have been entailed in terms of the trust, and shall also be held to be the date of any entail to be made thereafter "in execution of the trust," whatever be the actual date of the entail. The Lord Ordinary has held that this section has no application to the present case, because the deed of entail in 1875 was not executed under the authority of the original trust-deed of 1842, but under the authority of the private Act of 1873, which, as his Lordship puts it, "rode rough-shod over the trust-deed of 1842, and what had lawfully followed June 27, 1912. thereon." I understood Mr Sandeman, for the petitioner, ultimately to concede that this view could not be successfully resisted; and whether he did so or not, it is, in my judgment, plainly right. The basis of the petition, as framed, is therefore undermined.

¹ (1864) 2 Macph. 1197.

² 8 and 9 Vict. cap. 19.

³ 6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 42.

Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

Lord Dundas.

The Lord Ordinary, however, has decided in the petitioner's favour upon another and different ground. He "finds that the Morison Estate Act, 1873, must be construed as enacting that the heirs of entail in possession of the estate of Murie, by virtue of the entail executed under the authority of the Act, shall have the same benefits and privileges under the Public Entail Acts, 1848 to 1868, available to them with reference to that estate as were available to them with reference to the estate of West Errol, which was entailed pursuant to the trust-deed of 1842, and which remained so entailed." I am unable to agree with the Lord Ordinary in this view. The matter turns upon the construction to be put upon section 20 of the private Act. There is, in my judgment, no need to construe the language of that section as "idle verbiage" if it is not to be read as the Lord Ordinary seeks to read it. I think the section may quite possibly have been introduced in order to make it clear that the deed of entail which was to be executed, though not of the normal kind but proceeding upon the terms and authority of a private Act of Parliament, was to be deemed and treated as in all respects falling under the provisions of the Public Entail Acts. Such a provision may have been unnecessary, but it is intelligible; and a similar anxiety to be upon the safe side may be noticed elsewhere in the private Act, e.g., in sections 21 and 22. But assuming the intention of the private Act, and particularly section 20, to have been what the petitioner now says it was, one must, I apprehend, in order to give effect to his contention, find words in the Act sufficient to give effect to the intention either expressly or by reasonably clear implication; and these are, I think, wanting. I am unable to attribute such effect to the words occurring in section 20, "notwithstanding anything in this Act contained," or to read the section as definitely assimilating the rights and position of the heirs under the contemplated deed of entail of Murie to those of the heirs of entail under the subsisting deed regulating the succession to West Errol. The petitioner's construction of section 20 seems to me to be violent and inadmissible. I find support for the view I hold in the case of Buchanan,¹ and particularly in the observations of Lord Shand. If the petitioner's view is correct, it might very easily have been expressed in section 20; but this has not been done.

The curator ad litem in his minute submits that, if his contention is correct, as I hold it to be, the petition is incompetent. It would be unfortunate if all the trouble and expense which have been incurred must be thrown away, and proceedings begun de novo, because a mistake has been made as to the conditions upon which the petitioner is legally entitled to disentail these lands. I do not see that we are driven to the necessity of throwing the petition out of Court. I think we ought to recall the interlocutor; find that the petitioner is not entitled to acquire the estate in fee-

¹ 10 R. 809.

June 27, 1912. simple unless the consents of the two wards respectively are obtained, or are legally dispensed with as provided for by the Entail Acts; and remit the petition to the Junior Lord Ordinary to proceed therein as seems to him just. His Lordship will consider whether it may not be possible, as I should think it may be, to utilise the framework of the existing petition, adapting it, with the aid of such amendments as he may judge necessary, to the situation involved in our present judgment. The curator ad litem must have his expenses in both Courts.

Morison v.
Morison's
Curator.

Lord Dundas.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur. If I had thought the Lord Ordinary right in holding that the petitioner's construction of section 20 of the Morison Estate Act of 1875 was the only construction which was intelligible in its origin and effect, and that the construction put upon it by the curator ad litem for the petitioner's grandchildren reduced the section to what the Lord Ordinary calls "idle verbiage," I should have decided as he has done. But I think the view Lord Dundas has taken of its origin and of its probable, or at least reasonably possible, effect removes the section, as construed by the curator ad litem, from the category in which the Lord Ordinary has placed it. The Lord Ordinary enforces his view thus:—"Further, it is implied in the preamble and clauses of the private Act that the estates of West Errol and Murie were intended to form 'one compact estate,' with its mansion-house on Murie, and that they were intended to be held and enjoyed as one estate." I agree with the Lord Ordinary's statement of fact, but I do not see any assistance to be had for the construction of the section from this consideration which is as fully satisfied under the one view as the other. What the petitioner needs is to find expression of the view that Murie was to be put in all respects, including all proceedings for disentail, into the same position as Cupargrange, for which it was, no doubt, in several ways, a surrogatum. That might have been natural, but it did not necessarily follow. It could have been easily said, but it is not said in section 20, nor elsewhere in the Act; and I do not think there is sufficient reason for inferring it when there is another intelligible view of the meaning of the section.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—That is my opinion also.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Recall the said interlocutor reclaimed against: Find that the petitioner is not entitled to disentail the lands and estate of Murie without the consents of Eve Muriel de Annand Broun Morison and Rosemary de Annand Broun Morison, and with this finding remit the petition to the said Lord Ordinary to proceed therein: Find the curator ad litem entitled to his expenses between agent and client, and remit," &c.

M. J. BROWN, SON, & Co., S.S.O.—COCKBURN & MEIKLE, W.S.—Agents.

THE GOVERNORS OF GEORGE HERIOT'S TRUST, Pursuers (Respondents).—Constable, K.C.—Chree—Thorburn.
MRS FRANCES ELIZABETH PATON AND OTHERS (James Paton's Trustees), Defenders (Reclaimers).—Murray, K.C.—
Hon. W. Watson.

No. 156.

June 29, 1912.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

Superior and Vassal—Composition—Mid-superiority—Part redemption of subfeu-duty—Measure of composition due on entry to mid-superiority.

In 1817 a vassal subfeued his lands for a feu-duty of £20, which was an adequate return on the value of the lands as at that date. The feu-duty was subsequently redeemed to the extent of £19, 15s., in virtue of a proviso in the feu-disposition, by payment at the rate of twenty years' purchase.

On the entry of a singular successor to the mid-superiority in 1908 the superior, on the ground that the existing subfeu-duty of 5s. was illusory, demanded payment of a composition of one year's rent of the lands, amounting to £936. The singular successor tendered £20, either as representing the original subfeu-duty, or as representing the existing subfeu-duty of 5s., plus 5 per cent on the redemption price paid.

Held that the superior was not entitled to a composition of a year's rent, but was bound to accept the £20 tendered,

Campbell v. Westenra, (1832) 10 S. 734, approved.

City of Aberdeen Land Association v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, (1904) 6 F. 1067, overruled.

Earl of Home v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton, (1903) 5 F. (H. L.) 13, commented on and distinguished.

ON 7th December 1910 the Governors of George Heriot's Trust, the superiors of certain subjects at the corner of Shandwick Place and Queensferry Street, Edinburgh, brought an action against Mrs Frances Elizabeth Paton and others, the trustees of the late James Paton, for payment, inter alia, of £936.

1st Division, with three consulted Judges.
Lord
Skerrington.

The following narrative is quoted from the opinion of the Lord President :—

"This is an action for payment of a composition by Heriot's Hospital, the superiors of ground now forming part of the houses and streets of Edinburgh, directed against the trustees of the late James Paton, who are the mid-superiors of the same, and liable in a composition as singular successors of the last-entered vassal, the said James Paton.

"The lands consist at present of various houses, all held under feu-contracts and charters of subinfeudation. No question arises except as respects one part of the lands ; as regards the rest the pursuers are content to demand a payment of a sum equal to a year's feu-duty receivable by the defenders. But as regards one portion of the lands now known as 1 Shandwick Place, being those originally subfeued to one Andrew Ferris, the parties are at issue.

"The history of these lands is as follows :—By feu-disposition, of date 14th and 16th August 1816 and 1st October 1817, Mr Russell, commissioner and factor for Cockburn Ross, the then proprietor of the dominium utile of the said subjects, subfeued to A. Ferris the stance No. 1 for the feu-duty of £20. The deed contained a clause allowing the feuar to redeem the feu-duty at any time up to the extent of £19, 15s., at the rate of twenty years' purchase. This power

June 29, 1912. was, at certain dates ending in 1841, taken advantage of, and the feu-duty at present stands at 5s.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

"The pursuers contend that, as the existing feu-duty is only 5s., which sum does not represent the yearly value of the lands at the time they were feued, they are entitled to demand a sum equal to a year's rent of the lands as they would let at the present time, a sum which may be taken as fixed by the Valuation-roll. In other words, they demand as a condition of entry to an estate which can only bring in to the vassal 5s. a year a payment of the capital sum of £936.

"The vassal tenders the sum of £20, being content to admit that to the 5s. he yearly receives he must add £19, 15s.—which may be looked upon either as making up the original feu-duty of £20, or as representing 5 per cent on the redemption price paid."

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—3. The composition payable by the defenders being (1) the subfeu-duties payable to them for subjects feued out without payment of grassum, and of which no part has been redeemed, and (2) the year's rent where the subfeu-duties now payable to the defenders do not form the whole consideration for which the subfeu-rights were granted, the pursuers are entitled to decree as concluded for. 4. In the event of it being found that the pursuers are not entitled to a full year's rent of those parts of the defenders' feu in respect of which the feu-duty has been commuted or redeemed, the pursuers are entitled to interest upon the redemption price of, or other compensation for, the loss of such feu-duties.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—3. The sum payable by the defenders, as trustees foresaid, to the pursuers in respect of the defenders' implied entry in the subjects referred to in the summons being (a) the amount of the subfeu-duties actually received and payable to the defenders as trustees foresaid in respect of said subjects, under deduction of the said over feu-duty and sums in commutation of casualties, or separatim (b) the amount of the original subfeu-duties, or alternatively the amount of the subfeu-duties actually payable to the defenders as trustees foresaid, together with a sum equal to a year's interest at 5 per centum per annum on the sum received by the defenders' predecessor in redemption of the subfeu-duty on Ferris's feu to the extent foresaid under deduction as aforesaid, and the defenders having previously tendered, and having now consigned, the amount thereof, the pursuers are only entitled to decree for the sum consigned, and the defenders are entitled to expenses.

On 25th May 1911 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) pronounced an interlocutor finding that a casualty of composition was due, and that, as regarded the subjects referred to, "the composition is to be measured by the actual rent, subject to the usual deductions"; continued the cause, and granted leave to reclaim.*

* "OPINION.—[After narrating the facts]—The pursuers' counsel maintained that, in measuring the composition due to his clients, the subfeu fell to be disregarded, and that upon two grounds. He maintained, in the first place, that it appeared from the narrative of the feu-disposition in favour of Ferris that Ferris had paid his superior a grassum of £105. If such was the real nature of the transaction the feu-duty cannot be accepted as the measure of the casualty. Though a feu-duty of £20 is not illusory, it seems to follow from the ratio of the decision as to the 'brown lands' in the case of City of Aberdeen Land Association, Limited, v. Magistrates of Aberdeen,

The defenders reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First June 29, 1912. Division on 13th and 14th December 1911.

On 19th December 1911 the Court ordered the cause to be argued before seven Judges, and the case was accordingly re-heard before the First Division, with Lord Dundas, Lord Salvesen, and Lord Guthrie, on 2nd and 9th February 1912.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The ascertainment of the composition due was regulated by the Act 1469, cap. 36, and was therein fixed at "a year's mail, as the land is set for the time." The fact that the original subfeu-duty had been partly redeemed did not exclude inquiry as to whether the remaining 5s. was the year's mail as the land was set for the time. In determining the amount of composition two questions arose, viz., (a) Is the land "set for the time"? and (b) Can the superior claim more than the vassal can draw for himself? An examination of the Scots Acts¹ showed that the first

(1904) 6 F. 1067, that £20 cannot be regarded as the true rent or annual value of the subjects if, in point of fact, a capital sum was paid by the feuar to the mid-superior in return for obtaining the feu right. [His Lordship then examined the circumstances with regard to the payment of £105, and stated his reasons for holding that the payment was not of the nature of a grassum.]

"Assuming, however, that £20 is to be regarded as the full annual value of the subjects at the date of the feu-disposition, the pursuers' counsel further argued that the presently existing rate of feu-duty was only 5s., which could not be so regarded, and that accordingly the actual present rental of the subjects must be resorted to in fixing the composition. The point would be decided in terms by the judgment of the Second Division in the Aberdeen case with reference to certain of the 'brown lands' were it not for the fact that in the present case the redemption of the greater part of the feu-duty took place under a reserved power contained in the original feu-disposition, whereas in the Aberdeen case the redemption involved a new contract between the mid-superior and the vassal. I confess that I am unable to appreciate the importance of this distinction. The material fact is that the feu-duty now actually exigible from the subjects is an illusory one and cannot possibly be regarded as representing the just annual value. It seems to me irrelevant to inquire how that state of matters has been brought about. The defenders' counsel argued that the feu-duty of £20 must be regarded as still continuing, and that what had taken place was really of the nature of an anticipatory payment of that feu-duty. This suggestion seems to me to be erroneous in fact and in law. There is all the difference in the world between a payment in advance of rent or feu-duty which has not yet accrued due and an alteration in the amount of rent or feu-duty exigible under a lease or feu-charter. In the present case what the feuar had right to do, and purported to do, was to redeem the feu-duty of £20 to the extent of £19, 15s., and unless on the footing that the transaction was invalidly carried out, I do not see how it can be successfully maintained that there was merely a payment of feu-duty in advance. I am accordingly of opinion that the present case is ruled by the decision in the Aberdeen case, and I shall pronounce a finding to the effect that as regards the subjects included in the feu-disposition to Ferris, the composition is to be measured by the actual rent subject to the usual deductions.

"Two other alternative views are stated by the defenders in their third plea in law, but counsel for the defenders admitted that the Aberdeen case directly ruled these two points, and that accordingly he felt unable to argue them before me."

¹ Acts 1449, cap. 18, 1469, cap. 36, 1669, cap. 18, 1672, cap. 19, 1681, cap. 17, and 20 Geo. II. cap. 50, sec. 13.

June 29, 1912. Governors of George Heriot's Trust v. Paton's Trustees. question must be answered in the affirmative and the latter in the negative. The Act 1449, cap. 18, secured fixity of tenure for tenants, and the Act 1469, cap. 36, protected their moveables from being carried off for their landlord's debts by a brieve of distress, and restricted the liability to the amount of the debtor's interest.¹ These benefits were extended to lands set in feu-farm, under authority of the Act 1457, cap. 71,² though not to those held blench. Consequently a superior entering on his vassal's feu took it, for better or worse, as it stood in the vassal's hands. These provisions applied to the present case, because this subfeu was a feu in feu-farm for an adequate return at the time it was granted, and the subsequent redemption of part of the feu-duty did not make it a blench holding, which to be effective must be so described in the grant thereof.³ It was maintained against the reclaimers that the words of the statute were not exhaustive, but were to be qualified by the proviso that the lands must be set for an adequate return. The dicta, however, to that effect in *Cockburn Ross v. Heriot's Hospital*⁴ were merely obiter, and there was nothing in the Act itself to infer such a qualification.⁵ The only question under the Act was, Is there a "year's mail," and if so, what is its amount? The Court had, indeed, dealt with the matter of composition in certain circumstances without reference to the terms of the Act. As, for instance, in cases not provided for by the Act, such as where the vassal himself was in possession,⁶ or where the lands were unlet,⁷ or where there was a grassum.⁸ There were also cases of renunciation or discharge or redemption, all of which were discussed in Home v. Belhaven.⁹ But in none of these instances did the decisions or the opinions of the Court justify the claim made by the respondents here. The Court had also, in fixing the amount of the composition due, given effect to equitable modifications of the sum that was prima facie exigible.¹⁰ But in none of these cases was authority to be found for the respondents' extravagant demand. The circumstances in which the Court would exercise its jurisdiction in extending an old statute by construction were laid down in Johnston v. Stotts,¹¹ and there were ¹ Ersk. ii. 8, 33.

² Stair, ii. 4, 32, iii. 2, 27; Cowan v. Elphinston, (1636) M. 15,055; Monkton v. Yester, (1634) M. 15,020; Cockburn Ross v. Heriot's Hospital, (1820) 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815, 6 Pat. App. 640; Earl of Home v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton, (1903) 5 F. (H. L.) 13, Lord Davey, at p. 16.

³ Stair, ii. 3, 33; Ersk. ii. 4, 7; Bankton, ii. 3, 52.

⁴ 2 Ross's L. C., Lord Meadowbank, at p. 198-9, F. C., June 6, 1815, Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle, at p. 410.

⁵ Alison v. Ritchie, (1790) M. 15,196.

⁶ Aitchison v. Hopkirk, (1775) M. 15,060, 5 Brown's Supplement, 613, 2 Ross's L. C. 183.

⁷ Stewart v. Bulloch, (1881) 3 R. 381.

⁸ Anderson v. Marshall, (1824) 3 S. 334 (N. E. 236); Campbell v. Westerra, (1832) 10 S. 734, 2 Ross's L. C. 206, F. C., June 28, 1832, 8vo, 560, at p. 562.

⁹ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

¹⁰ Aitchison v. Hopkirk, M. 15,060; Reid v. Fullerton, (1819) 2 Ross's L. C. 189; Thomson v. Simson, (1825) ibid; Paterson v. Murray, (1637) M. 15,055; Almond v. Hope, (1639) M. 15,056.

¹¹ (1802) 4 Pat. App. 274, Lord Chancellor Eldon, at p. 285.

no circumstances here calling for the exercise of that jurisdiction. June 29, 1912. On a strict view of the statute all that the superior was entitled to was what the vassal drew—in this case 5s.—entirely independently of whether it was more or less than a fair value for the lands.¹ But in the present case the vassal had tendered £20, and that was the utmost—in view of every equitable consideration that might be given effect to—to which the superior could lay claim. There was no question that £20 was an adequate return for the lands at the time they were subfeued; and if the redemption of the feu-duty fell to be regarded as a grassum, the £20 tendered was the proper return calculated on the basis that was approved in Campbell v. Westenra.² The grounds of the decision in the case of The City of Aberdeen Land Association v. Magistrates of Aberdeen,³ with reference to the brown lands, could not be supported and should be reconsidered.

Argued for the respondents;—(1) The subfeu-duty of 5s. actually received by the defenders was not a “year’s mail, as the land is set for the time,” within the meaning of the Act 1469, cap. 36, because, having regard to the value of the subjects either at the date when the subfeu was granted or when the implied entry took place, it was not a fair return for the subjects, but was illusory. If the consideration had been payable under a lease instead of a subfeu, it would not have satisfied the statute. An illusory consideration would not protect a lease under the statute 1449, cap. 18.⁴ In a question under the statute 1469, cap. 36, a subfeu was in no better position than a lease. Until 1815 it was a disputed point whether vassals holding in feu-farm had any right to subfeu at all.⁵ In any case, in 1469, and long afterwards, feu-farm tenure was practically unknown.⁶ The earliest decision as to the right of an appriser to tender a subfeu-duty as composition under the statute 1469, cap. 36, was in 1634.⁷ In 1636 came the decision in Cowan v. Elphinston, the reports of which absolutely contradicted one another.⁸ The rule on the subject was not authoritatively established until the case of Cockburn Ross v. Heriot’s Hospital,⁹ and it was then conceded in argument, and approved by the Court, that in order to satisfy the statute the duty must be fair in amount. The principle that the subfeu-duty must be “full adequate value at the time” was also affirmed in Campbell v. Westenra,² and the offer of the vassal to pay 5 per cent on the grassums originally paid for the subfeus was based on its recognition. The rule that the feu-duty must be fair in amount probably arose from the origin of feu-farm tenure as a species of location,¹⁰ and the earliest statutory reference to it was in the Act of 1457, cap. 71, which authorised freeholders to set in feu-farm for “a competent avail.” It was in accordance with this rule that the duty under

Governors of
George
Heriot’s Trust
v. Paton’s
Trustees.

¹ Campbell v. Stuarts, (1884) 22 S. L. R. 292; Earl of Home v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton, 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

² 10 S. 734.

³ (1904) 6 F. 1067.

⁴ Craig, ii. 10, 2; Bankton, ii. 9, 6 and 7; Ross’s Lectures, ii. 494; Bell’s Com. i. 69; Alison v. Ritchie, (1730) M. 15,196; Sir George Mackenzie, i. 209.

⁵ Ersk. ii. 5, 7; Cockburn Ross v. Heriot’s Hospital, F. C., June 6, 1815, Lord Bannatyne, at p. 408, Lord Meadowbank, at p. 409.

⁶ Ersk. ii. 4, 5; Ross’s Lectures, ii. 142, 156-7.

⁷ Monktoun v. Yester, M. 15,020.

⁸ M. 202, 15,055.

⁹ F. C., June 6, 1815, 2 Ross’s L. C. 193.

¹⁰ Stair, ii. 3, 34.

June 29, 1912. a subaltern blench infeftment would not satisfy the statute.¹ Similarly in the tenure of ward-holding recognition was incurred by subinfeudation "for an elusory or an inconsiderable or unproportionable feu-duty."² The main ground of judgment in *The City of Aberdeen Land Association, Limited, v. Magistrates of Aberdeen*³ was thus well founded on principle and authority. It was not affected by the dicta of Lord Davey and Lord Robertson in *Earl of Home v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton*⁴ to the effect that the superior could not draw more than the vassal in the year of entry, because the question of an illusory rent or duty was not there under consideration. (2) The defenders were equally out-with the statute in tendering as composition the original subfeu-duty of £20. That was no longer the year's maill as the subjects were set at the time of implied entry. The rule laid down in *Campbell v. Westenra*⁵ that the interest on a grassum might be added to the existing duty in order to satisfy the statute had been overturned by the House of Lords in Earl of Home v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton,⁴ which had conclusively settled that under the statute the year of entry was the only time that could be considered. (3) If neither the illusory duty of 5s. nor the original duty of £20 would satisfy the statute the result was that, in accordance with a well settled rule⁶ which had been approved of by the House of Lords,⁴ the value of the subjects in the year of entry must be taken as the composition. The result would involve no real hardship, because in the case of a subfeu with an illusory duty the mid-superior might simply stand aside and allow the subvassal to enter directly with the over-superior.⁷

At advising on 29th June 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—[After the narrative quoted supra—]The demand as made is a startling demand, and is a complete departure from the demand made by the pursuers on the last entry, namely, that of the deceased Mr Paton in 1904, when the pursuers were content to accept the sum now tendered. It is admitted that no instance of such a demand being made can be found in any known practice, nor is there any authority to support it until the case of The City of Aberdeen Land Association v. The Magistrates of Aberdeen,³ decided by the Second Division, which reversed the judgment of the Lord Ordinary. The Lord Ordinary has held the present case to be ruled by the decision as to the parcel of what were called the Brown Lands in that case, and he is clearly right in so doing. It is to reconsider the soundness of that decision that this case has been sent to a Court of seven Judges.

I wish to explain again what I mean in saying that the demand is supported by neither authority nor practice. I mean that there is no instance in practice, or authority in the books, for a person who seeks an entry from his superior being called on to pay in composition more than he gets or could get in yearly value from the estate to which he seeks an entry.

¹ Stair, iii. 2, 27.

² Stair, ii. 11, 13, 14.

³ 6 F. 1067.

⁴ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

⁵ 10 S. 734

⁶ Aitchison v. Hopkirk, M. 15,060; Lord Blantyre v. Dunn, (1858) 20 D. 1188, Lord Curriehill, p. 1198; Stewart v. Bulloch, (1881) 8 R. 381.

⁷ Bell's Lectures, ii. 788.

Only two of the learned Judges of the Second Division delivered opinions June 29, 1912. in the Aberdeen case.¹ The decision admittedly was counter to and therefore overruled a decision of the same Division more than seventy years previously—a decision which had regulated the practice of the profession ever since, and was quoted in every text-book on conveyancing—the case of Campbell v. Westenra.² Lord Trayner did so on the ground, first, that *Campbell*² was a case which had no authority to warrant it in either the decisions or the text-writers; and, secondly, that it had been disapproved in the House of Lords in the recent case of Belhaven.³ Lord Moncreiff based his judgment on the latter point alone. I shall examine each of these grounds; but before I do so it will perhaps be better first to set forth historically the enactments and decisions on which the determination of the question turns. Much of this is trite law, and to be found in many decisions with greater fulness. I shall therefore do no more than recapitulate what may be found at length elsewhere, and notably in the opinions of the majority of the Judges in the well-known case of Cockburn Ross,⁴ decided in 1815, and affirmed in the House of Lords.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Ld. President.

It is notorious that in very early times a feu was a mere personal right, and that the first encroachment upon that position was to consider a feu as descending of right to heirs, but with no power in the vassal to transfer his feu to a singular successor. It is equally certain that the original and proper feudal tenure was that of ward, and that feu-farm was, so to speak, an innovation. It is also certain that the rigour of the proper feudal casualties, and in particular of recognition, and the severity of the laws as to the recovery of feudal debts, brought as a concomitant extreme hardship upon the persons who actually cultivated the land. The trend of progress was to affirm the full right of property in the vassal and to protect the cultivator. That progress may be traced in the Acts of the Scots Parliament. The first of the series is the oft-quoted Act of 1449, cap. 18, in favour of "the puir people that labouris the ground," which made tacks enure against the purchaser. The next is the Act of 1469, cap. 36, which is headed, "That the puir tennentes sall pay na farther, then their termes maill for their lordis debt, be the briefe of distresse," and is mainly concerned with that topic. As a compensation to the creditor whose right was thus being curtailed, it went on to provide for an apprising, and then, only as a concomitant to that, concludes with the words, "And also the over-lord sall receive the creditour or ony uther byer, tennent till him, payand to the over-lord a zeire's maill, as the land is set for the time. And failzieng thereof, that he take the said land till himselfe and undergang the debtes." Of this statute Lord Stair says (ii. 4, 32) that before it "no superior could be compelled to receive any other vassal than the heir of the first vassal provided by the investiture." He goes on to relate how by custom this compulsitor upon the superior to receive the new proprietor as his vassal came to be extended to the newer form of action—adjudication—which was introduced, and gradually superseded apprising. Yet at first it seems that the custom introduced the compulsitor without the concomi-

¹ 6 F. 1067.

² 10 S. 734.

³ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

⁴ 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815, 6 Pat. App. 640.

June 29, 1912. Governors of George Heriot's Trust v. Paton's Trustees. Ld. President. tant solatium in the form of the payment of the year's rent. Probably the practice as to this varied, and though the Lords of Session (after the Session was established), who, as Stair says, had always taken a latitude in the modification of the year's rent, thought that the equity of the matter demanded equal treatment of the superior whether the entry was forced upon him by means of adjudication or apprising, yet, when put to solemn decision, they decided that upon adjudication no composition was due—Grier v. Laird of Closeburn.¹ For remeid whereof the Act of 1669, cap. 18, was passed, which fixes the payment in adjudications at one year's rent in the same manner as in apprisings. So matters remained for one hundred years, practice (that is, practice as to payment on obtaining a voluntary entry), as Duff puts it, following the analogy of the statutes, till the matter was finally regulated by 20 Geo. II. cap. 50, which forced the superior to give an entry, on production to him of a disposition flowing from the former proprietor and containing a procuratory of resignation, provided (section 13) that he was paid or tendered "such fees or casualties as he is by law entitled to receive upon the entry of such . . . purchaser." This therefore legally relegated the measure of composition to the fees commonly exacted over a practice of two hundred years, which had based the determination of the composition on the sum which had been fixed by the old Act of 1469.

Now land, so far as the vassal of the overlord is concerned, might be in one of three positions: (1) it might be set in tack to the poor people that labour the ground (that is the position directly dealt with by the Act of 1469); or (2) it might be in personal possession; or (3) it might be subfeued. As regards both of these latter positions, the matter came to controversy and decision.

As regards personal possession, the Court, holding that they were entitled equitably to interpret the statute, held that "set" was equivalent to "might be set," and that consequently whatever enhanced value the lands bore, the superior got his year's rent as they could be let by the superior or proprietor at the time. This was finally settled by the case of Aitchison,² and has never been doubted since. Now, it is noticeable in that case that in the Faculty Reports it is added that it was reports on the practice which chiefly weighed with the Court.

As regards lands which had been feued, the matter was decided as early as 1634 in the case of Monktoun v. Yester,³ and the judgment was repeated two years later in Cowan v. The Master of Elphinstoun.⁴ In both cases the judgment was put on the same ground, namely, that the superior could not ask for more than the yearly value of the estate to which alone an entry was sought. Accordingly this is treated by Stair (iii. 2, 27) as settled, though he goes on to give his view that if lands were feued blench, the result might be different. It is probable that in the early cases the difference of value between the value of the ground at a yearly rent and the feuduty was not great. The regular building feu was at that time practically unknown; but when towns began to grow, and the professional builder

¹ (1637) M. 15,042.

³ M. 15,020.

² F. C., Feb. 14, 1775, M. 15,060.

⁴ M. 15,055.

came on the field, the practical interest in the question altered, and it is June 29, 1912. therefore not to be wondered at that, in spite of the authority of these older cases and of Stair, another attempt was made by the superior (the same superior as in this case, and in respect of the very same ground) in the case of Cockburn Ross v. Heriot's Hospital.¹

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

I need not take up your Lordships' time describing that case. It is dealt with in great fulness by Mr Ross in his Leading Cases. The majority of the Court included Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle and the first Lord Meadowbank, both eminent feudalists who had been brought up in the practice of the feudal system of conveyancing as yet untouched by modern reforms. It was affirmed in the House of Lords, and settled the question so far authoritatively. The actual fact, however, was that the feu-duty in that case represented an admittedly competent rent as at the time it was fixed, and the entry of the subvassal was taxed. Now, that the decision in *Cockburn Ross*¹ was in accordance with the understanding of the profession is certain. It is instructive to see the view of the profession at the time as to what the decision really amounted to. The conveyancing book of the period, indeed the only one of authority that had been published since Walter Ross's lectures, was Bell's treatise on the Sale of Land to a Purchaser, which was published just at the time *Cockburn Ross*¹ was decided, viz., in 1815. Mr Bell was the first lecturer on conveyancing appointed by the Writers to the Signet when the lectureship—which afterwards became the professorship—was founded in 1793, and he is well known as the compiler of the Law Dictionary and as the author of various treatises, and what he says (at p. 294) is,—“It is further to be considered that the person who has feued out the ground for building, and who has the mid-superiority, has no other estate than the feu-duty arising from that mid-superiority; and, therefore, when he sells that feu-duty, all that the purchaser acquires is the feu-duty; and when he offers its amount as entry-money, he gives a year's rent of the estate, to which he demands a title from the superior. This is all that the statute requires; and all that the decisions of the Court have authorised, though under circumstances very different from the present.” So far the text. He adds in a note,—“On these grounds I many years ago gave an opinion relative to the entry-money in some very valuable urban property of this description in this city. And I am happy in finding that while these sheets are going through the press, judgment has been pronounced by the Court of Session, holding the feu-duty to form the only rent which the superior is entitled to demand.” This is Cockburn Ross's case,¹ and he goes on to quote from Lord Meadowbank's judgment. This was written in 1815, and repeated in the second edition in 1828.

Ld. President.

In 1832 the question of what was to be done when a grassum had been paid arose in the case of Campbell v. Westerra.² The mid-superior offered the feu-duty plus five per cent on the grassum. The superior contended that he should have the yearly value of the subjects not as they were to the mid-superior, but to the owner of the dominium utile, and the Court decided in favour of the mid-superior. Two of the Judges who formed the

¹ 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815, 6 Pat. App. 640.

² 10 S. 734.

June 29, 1912. Court were survivors of the same Court as decided Cockburn Ross,¹ Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle and Lord Glenlee. It is very important to see that they and the two others, Lord Cringletie and the second Lord Meadowbank, all treated the case as the logical result of the judgment in Cockburn Ross.¹ I shall deal hereafter with the question upon principle; at present I am only speaking of authority. Lord Glenlee was the Judge who in Cockburn Ross's case¹ read the passage from the old annotated edition of Stair, the notes to which have always been understood to be written by Lord Elchies. It is quoted in Ross's Leading Cases, and will be found to be an admirable statement of the argument on both sides, ending with a determination in favour of the vassal mid-superior. That the case was at once accepted by the profession is certain. It was, as I have already shown, in accordance with the opinion of the teaching authority of the day in conveyancing. It was repeated in his second edition, and it was stated as undoubted law in the next book—a book of high authority, which has been quoted again and again by generations of Judges, and was indeed the foundation of all the regular conveyancing treatises—I mean Duff's Feudal Conveyancing. Duff's work in time was followed by that of Menzies, and that again by the work of Montgomery Bell. In all of these the point is treated as indubitably settled, and *Campbell v. Westerra*² recognised as undoubted authority; and this is the case which Lord Trayner says is devoid of authority. Not only did it rule the teaching of the profession and the practice for seventy years without a question, but, apart from that, and from the question whether it is not the necessary sequel to the opinions of Stair and Erskine and the older cases and the case of Cockburn Ross,¹ there is the authority of the Court itself which decided it. Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle and Lord Glenlee, not to speak of Lord Cringletie and the second Lord Meadowbank, were men who had been brought up under the untouched and unmodified feudal system at a time when the bulk of the work in Court consisted of cases of that description. We are of a generation which cannot pretend to such experience, and if testimonia ponderanda sunt, I cannot help saying that, upon a question which is nothing but one of correct feudal practice, the opinion of the Second Division in 1832 far outweighs the dictum of the most eminent of commercial lawyers in 1904.

It is said, however, that the case of *Campbell*² is overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in the case of *Belhaven*³ decided in 1902. Now, whatever might be one's view of the soundness of a House of Lords decision, if it really decided the point, we should be bound in this Court loyally to follow it in other cases. It is equally true, however, that we are not bound by the dicta of noble Lords however eminent, and a recent example is given of this position by the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Thompson v. Goold & Company,⁴ where they reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal in England, and incidentally of both Divisions of this Court, although in the case of *Powell v. Main Colliery Company*⁵ Lord Halsbury in the House of Lords had expressly approved

¹ 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815, 6 Pat. App. 640.

² 10 S. 734.

³ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

⁴ [1910] A. C. 409.

⁵ [1900] A. C. 366.

of the case of Bennett v. Wordie & Company,¹ the case in the Second Division which was overruled. June 29, 1912.

But it is perfectly clear that the decision in the Belhaven case² did not touch the question. The question in that case was as to the amount of the composition to be paid in respect of the minerals. There was no subfeud. The vassal was himself in possession of some of the lands let, but the minerals were set to a tenant, who paid a large sum, as is often the case in mineral lets, by way of royalties. The superior contended that he was entitled to the actual return or royalty which the vassal got in the year of entry. The vassal contended for an average of years, and further, offering to prove that the minerals in the field were on the point of exhaustion, said that that fact should be taken into account. The majority of the Court gave effect to the vassal's contention, and this judgment was reversed by the House of Lords. Now all that was decided in that case was that the superior in the year of entry is entitled to get what the vassal gets. So far, therefore, as it is a decision, it seems to me against, and not in favour of, the superior's contention in the present case. It was natural that the case of *Campbell v. Westenra*³ should be attempted to be used by the vassal in Belhaven's case² in argument as an illustration of the power—which he contended resided in the Court—of equitable modification, and it was in consequence of this that the case was commented on by Lord Davey and Lord Robertson. It was not necessary to attack the case in order to justify the decision of the House in the Belhaven case.² The ground of that judgment is plain enough. The words of the statute were directly applicable to the case. The estate of the vassal was set at the time, and the vassal actually received the sum sued for in the year of entry. There had been no long-continued interpretation in the matter of mineral rents, which, as Lord Davey said, would have made him follow that interpretation, whatever he had thought of it if he was approaching it de novo. The earliest case was only in 1878, and a report obtained in it disclosed that there was really no practice to guide the Court.⁴ In these circumstances the House of Lords held that the Court was bound to follow the words of the statute.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Ld. President.

Lord Robertson dismisses the case of *Campbell v. Westenra*³ with the remark that the Court of Session had omitted to notice that the payment of the interest on the grassum was a concession on the part of the vassal. But with deference, the case cannot be thus dismissed, for the superior contended that he was not bound to accept the feu-duty plus interest on the grassum, but that since it was shown that the feu-duty did not represent the whole value, then the lands were not set for the feu-duty, but must be held to be set for the yearly value as that value existed, not to the vassal who craved an entry, but to his subvassals, who held the dominium utile. That was decided against the superior, as I have already set out. Lord Davey simply says he cannot reconcile the case with the statute. Now, if you are to take the statute, and keep close to the words used, the result would not be, when the feu-duty is inadequate, to throw the whole thing loose and allow the superior to inquire as to what is the actual value

¹ (1899) 1 F. 855.

² 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

³ 10 S. 734.

⁴ Allan's Trustees, 5 R. 510.

June 29, 1912. to the subvassal, but would be to take the feu-duty, however inadequate it might be; and this really seems Lord Davey's view, for he says,—“The importance of these cases is, first, that they affirm that a feu is within the expression ‘as the lands are set’; and, secondly, they affirm that what the superior is to get for this composition are only the fruits for the year which the vassal himself would be entitled to, notwithstanding that the lands may have been covered with buildings producing a vastly higher rent to the subfeuar; or, in other words, that the superior stands in the place of the vassal as regards the maills or rent for the year, for better or for worse.” And again,—“The superior is entitled to the year's fruits which the vassal himself receives, or is entitled to receive, in the year of entry. The superior is confined to this when it is to his disadvantage, as in the case of a subfeu, and he is entitled to the benefit of the principle when it is in his favour.” And indeed the superior in his argument here seems to me to blow hot and cold. He says *Campbell v. Westenra*¹ is wrong, because the Court exercised a power of equitable modification, which, he says, they have not got. But when then asked to take the exact sum at which the lands are set, namely, 5s., he says that is not equitable, because “set” must mean “set for an adequate rent,” and accordingly he really asks the Court to modify equitably the sum due in his favour. In any view, and with great respect to the Lords Davey and Robertson, they had no need to attack Campbell v. Westenra,¹ and I think they did not do justice either to the authority or to the ratio of the case.

I do not myself quarrel with the decision of Belhaven,² though that is immaterial, because it would be binding upon me whatever my own opinion might be. But it seems to me to be clearly based upon sound principle, and to have two reasons for it, either of which would be sufficient: first, that it was a case to which the words of the old statute directly applied and required no construction at all. The lands which formed the estate to which the entry was sought were set, and set at an adequate rent. The moment that you settle that mineral royalty is truly rent for the lands, the result follows. Second, the decision merely affirmed what the Court had held more than two hundred years ago in *Monktoun*³ and Cowan,⁴ namely, that the superior should get just such a composition as he would get out of the lands if for the year of entry he was in the vassal's shoes.

But there are cases to which the words of the old statute do not directly apply. Lord Davey himself admits this when he deals with the case of land in the vassal's own possession. If you had to take the literal words used they would not apply: it would be a casus improvisus, and the superior would get nothing; in point of fact you would pronounce a judgment analogous to that of Grier,⁵ where, an adjudication not being an apprising, the superior was left without a composition. But the Court did not do this. Practice, as it was said, cleared the point, and Aitchison's case⁶ was decided with the approval of all, and of Lord Davey. I think the Court behaved in exactly the same way in Campbell v. Westenra.¹ In truth, what lies behind it all is the question of the interpretation of a very old statute of the Scots Parliament. Such statutes were passed under a totally different state of affairs, with language that does not always fit modern life. The function of the Court in interpreting them is not that of modification: it is truly interpretation, but necessarily, in such a case, of the spirit and not of the letter. The books are full of instances of this. Look at the decisions on the triennial prescription and the interpretation of "men's ordinaries." That this is legitimate has been again and again recognised not only by the Court but by the House of Lords; e.g., Lord Eldon in the case of Johnstone v. Stotts.¹ It is necessarily the case when any Court deals with a very old statute. The English decisions on the Statute of Frauds form a good example, and the Scottish Courts had to deal with a body of statute law which was passed by a Parliament whose powers were never constitutionally defined, and whose political power and influence varied by much at different epochs. In view of this undoubted fact, it is difficult to understand Lord Robertson's allusion to the case of *Wardlaw*² which, he says, brings its own lesson against the Court meddling with the terms of a statute. In the first place, the Court of Session did not give effect to the argument of the losing counsel on the clause in the Trusts Act, and their judgment was affirmed (not reversed) by the House of Lords. But apart from that, it is, I think, impossible to treat the interpretation of the Trusts Act, 1867, by a Court in 1882 as in pari materia with the interpretation of a Scots Act of 1469.

¹ 10 S. 734.² 5 F. (H. L.) 13.³ M. 15,020.⁴ M. 15,055.⁵ M. 15,042.⁶ F. C., Feb. 14, 1775, M. 15,060.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Ld. President.

Let me now come, last of all, to the principle of the thing. The whole secret, I think, lies in the idea that the superior should get what is equivalent to an escheat of the vassal's property for a year. That is what is meant by the term "a year's mail" as the lands are set: for, be it remembered, this is not a proper casualty or prestation. The superior's rights in proper casualties or prestations cannot be affected by anything the vassal can do. In so far as his rights are represented by money (which they always are in the tenure of feu-farm), he has his poinding of the ground, and his irritancy ob non solutum canonem, and they are untouched by anything the vassal can do. Composition, on the other hand, is a mere acknowledgment to the superior for his trouble in granting an entry to a vassal who is a stranger to the standing investiture. It is a payment for what the vassal gets. Now, all the vassal can get is an entry to the estate to which he enters, and if this estate is a mid-superiority, why should he pay more than a year's value of that mid-superiority? It is true that if value was rising the superior would have got more if the lands had not been subfeued; so would the mid-superior, if I may so express it, if he had never turned himself into a mid-superior. But the reason of all this is the power of subfeuing lands in feu-farm, and that was part of the gradual march of the law which I described at the outset. The early history of subinfeudation as given in Walter Ross need scarcely be taken into account: first, because he is then dealing with a period when ward was the regular holding; and secondly, because he wrote before the days of Thomas Thomson, and it now seems doubtful whether the statute of

¹ 4 Pat. App. 274.

² 9 R. 725, 10 R. (H. L.) 65.

June 29, 1912. Robert I., equivalent to quia emptores, ever existed. Lord Stair¹ gives a history of subinfeudation from which it appears that the practice was sometimes allowed and sometimes attacked by the Legislature. But all this legislation had only to do with ward holdings. As regards feu holdings, no prohibition of subinfeudation was ever made by statute. It is probably safe to say that the precise position which we have here was never in the minds of those who framed the statute of 1469. We are dealing with a very early period, nearly 150 years before the institution of the Register of Sasines, and I cannot say I am able to state with certainty how matters stood. How far subinfeudation was common at that date I hesitate to say. It is certain, however, that the tenure of feu-farm was at that period not very common. Ward was still the regular holding, and it is only when you have the conjunction of feu-farm with subinfeudation that this question can arise. I would not like to say that in 1469 such a conjunction necessarily existed at all; that it was not common may be inferred from the fact that the case of *Monktoun*² did not occur till 1635, that is, 165 years after the statute. It does not, however, become necessary to find out these matters, because once the case of *Monktoun*² settled as it did that the words of the statute "as set" by their own force included the position of a subinfeudation of a feu-farm tenure, the inquiry becomes immaterial. In so settling, *Monktoun*² was put upon the right principle as expressed in the judgment, namely, that the superior could not ask for more than the yearly value of the estate to which alone an entry was sought. That being the true view, the question was solved as regards lands feued for a competent avail.

But what of the case where a grassum was given? I think the Court of Session took the view that the grassum must be looked on as a capitalisation of the feu-duty, and that therefore the true yearly value to the mid-superior was the feu-duty plus the interest on the grassum. In so holding, in my humble opinion, they were not modifying the statute of 1469, but interpreting it to fit the state of changed circumstances, being no more than they had done in the case of Aitchison.³ I therefore think that *Campbell v. Westenra*⁴ is good law, and that it was not overruled by the House of Lords judgment in Belhaven,⁵ though it cannot now be cited as an authority for a general power of modification being supposed to reside in the Court, to enable the Court to override the exact words of the statute of 1469.

As regards the present case, I am further of opinion that it is not necessary actually to apply the case of Campbell v. Westenra.⁴ When the mid-superior feued out the lands for £20, it seems to me that he fixed the true yearly value of the estate of mid-superiority which by his act he created, and that the power of redemption which he gave to the subvassal did not alter the value of the estate, though it did give the subvassal a power of getting rid by a capital payment of all further liability on his part. In either view it follows, in my opinion, that the claim of the superior as made is bad; that the case of the Brown Lands in the Aberdeen case⁶ was wrongly decided; and that, £20 being tendered by the mid-superior vassal, he should be assoilzied from the conclusions of the summons.

¹ II. 11, 13, et seq.

⁴ 10 S. 734.

² M. 15,020.

⁵ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

³ F. C., Feb. 14, 1775, M. 15,060.

⁶ 6 F. 1067.

LORD KINNEAR.—I have had the advantage of reading the opinion which June 29, 1912, has just been delivered, and also of repeated conferences with the Lord President upon the question which we have got to decide, and I content myself, therefore, with saying that I agree entirely with what the Lord President has said.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

LORD DUNDAS.—I am of the same opinion. Your Lordship has probably expressed all that need be said upon the matter; but, as I had prepared a separate opinion of my own, I shall deliver it.

It is admitted that a composition is due and payable by the defenders, Paton's trustees, to the pursuers, the Governors of Heriot's Hospital. But the parties differ widely as to the basis on which the composition is to be ascertained, and consequently as to the amount to be paid. The defenders' position is that of mid-superiors, between their over-superiors, the pursuers, on the one hand, and their own subvassals on the other hand. The pursuers' demand is for a year's rent of the subjects, which, as these are situated in a busy part of the city of Edinburgh, amounts to a large sum—over £900. The defenders take up alternative lines of defence. They say that, in strict law, the amount of the composition due is 5s., which was, when Mr Paton acquired the mid-superiority in 1893, and still is, the subfeu-duty exigible in each year by the mid-superior from the actual proprietors. But they have offered on record to pay £20, being the amount of the feu-duty stipulated in the original feu-disposition in 1816-17 by the defenders' predecessor in title, Mr Cockburn Ross, of the subjects now in question, which contained a power (since exercised) to redeem the feu-duty to the extent of £19, 15s. at twenty years' purchase. The defenders alternatively state their willingness to pay the actual subfeu-duty of 5s., together with a sum representing interest at 5 per cent on the capital value of the redemption price of the redeemed portion of the original feu-duty, which sums would together work out at £20.

The Lord Ordinary decided that "the composition is to be measured by the actual rent subject to the usual deductions." He considered (and rightly) that he was bound so to hold in accordance with the decision of the Second Division in the Aberdeen case,¹ and that case in its turn bore to proceed upon the decision of the House of Lords in Home v. Belhaven.² We are in a position to review the Aberdeen case,¹ but the judgment of the House of Lords is, of course, binding upon us. One must, therefore, consider what it was that the House of Lords decided in the important case of Home v. Belhaven.² Upon a prima facie view of it, there would certainly seem to be some ground for holding that in *Home v. Belhaven*² much that had for a very long time previously been considered to be law was decided by the House of Lords to be not law, and that the manner in which this Court had been in use to consider and deal with Scots Acts such as 1469, cap. 36, as well as some of the methods by which compositions had been in use to be ascertained or adjusted, were erroneous. But though there are passages in the opinions of some of the noble and learned Lords which seem to support such a view, I have come to think that the actual decision of

¹ 6 F. 1067.

² 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

June 29, 1912. the House in *Home v. Belhaven*¹ was not of so far-reaching a character. It seems to me that all that was decided (apart from what may have been expressed by way of opinion or illustration) was that, in arriving at "a zeires mail, as the land is set for the time," there must be included money rents or royalties from minerals, actually due to the vassal for the year in question, without regard to the state of exhaustion of the minerals. I shall revert later on to this matter.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Lord Dundas.

In the Aberdeen case,² Lord Trayner, who gave the leading opinion, deduced from the authorities down to and including Home v. Belhaven,¹ two rules which formed the basis of his judgment so far as here relevant. These rules were stated at length by his Lordship,³ and I need not here quote them. But I am, with all respect, unable to accept them as correctly embodying the result of the decisions. Lord Trayner does not analyse these, and one cannot, therefore, pursue the matter in detail. But I know of no warrant for the view that, if the subfeu-duty is illusory, the superior is eo ipso entitled to a year's actual rent in name of composition. I humbly think that the decision in the Aberdeen case,² so far as it affects the present question, was wrong. It seems to me that the learned Judges fell into error because they attributed too wide and sweeping a result to the decision of the House of Lords in the Belhaven case.¹

The most important case, prior to Home v. Belhaven,¹ upon this matter, is probably that of Cockburn Ross v. Heriot's Hospital.⁴ It may be said, by the way, to warrant the main portion (though not, I think, the last sentence) of Lord Trayner's second "rule." The rubric, which seems to me to give correctly the gist of what was decided in the Court of Session, bears that, when a vassal subfeus his possession for its full adequate value at the time, it is only a year's subfeu-duty, not a year's rent, which he is bound to pay his superior as a composition for an entry to a singular successor. It is unfortunate that we have no adequate record of the grounds upon which the House of Lords affirmed the judgment, beyond a bare statement by the Lord Chancellor (Eldon) that he could not find reason to advise the House to disturb it. But it is, I think, clear that the fact that the subfeu-duty represented the "full adequate value at the time" was not a mere incident in the case, but entered materially into its decision. The interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary (Meadowbank) bears on its forefront that it was not controverted that the subfeus were "made for a full and adequate avail of the subject." In the Second Division, the Lord Justice-Clerk (Boyle) expressly said: "I have always looked at the case under the special circumstances in which it presents itself, in which I find nothing but the utmost bona fides on the part of the pursuer, a full and adequate duty having been stipulated and offered by him to his over-lords. . . . Everything has been fair on his part; no elusory feu-duties are stipulated, but a full and valuable consideration is secured, for the advantage of the superior. I certainly wish it to be understood, as my opinion, that if there had been any attempt to diminish the interest of the superior, by taking grassums or a price, and making the feu-duties elusory, a very different question might have arisen, but one which we are not here called upon June 29, 1912. to decide." Seventeen years later, the decision of *Campbell v. Westenra*¹ was pronounced, in which two of the learned Judges who had decided Cockburn Ross,² took part—viz., Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle and Lord Glenlee—and which formed, indeed, the logical sequel of the earlier judgment. Lord Meadowbank secundus said³: "The pursuer admits in the record, that the reserved feu-duty and grassum together were the full value of the lands at the time when the subfeus were granted. I therefore cannot see that he is entitled to demand more than the defender has already offered, under the principle of the decision in the case of Cockburn Ross.²" The Lord Justice-Clerk, also alluding to that case, said⁴ it was "decided that no more was exigible than the annual feu-duty." I think, therefore, that *Cockburn Ross*² is a binding authority for the proposition that the superior cannot exact more in name of composition than the subfeu-duty, where it is admitted or proved (and in the present case the admission was expressly made at the bar) that it represents the full adequate value of the subjects at the time of the subfeu.

¹ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.² 6 F. 1067.³ 6 F., at p. 1085.⁴ 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.

Lord Dundas.

If, then, the feu-duty of £20 had still been exigible, a tender of its amount would, I apprehend, have been a complete answer to the pursuers' demand for a composition. But the fact that it has been redeemed, except to the extent of 5s., gives room, on the one hand, for the pursuers' suggestion that the subsisting feu-duty being plainly inadequate and illusory, they are entitled (as Lord Trayner held) to a full year's rent; and, on the other hand, to the defenders' contention that the 5s., being in fact the subsisting yearly maill or avail received by them, must—equitable considerations having been ruled out of account by the recent decision in the House of Lords—be accepted by the pursuers in full of their composition.

As regards the first of these views, I think that in accordance with the "principle" of Cockburn Ross,² as explained by Lord Meadowbank, £20 must represent the maximum of the pursuers' claim, being the "full adequate value" of the subjects when subfeued. The case of *Cockburn Ross*² and (its logical sequel) that of Westenra,¹ to which I shall again advert in a moment, afford, to my mind, a sufficient answer to the pursuers' demand for a full year's rental; and I think the Aberdeen case,⁵ which the Lord Ordinary followed, must be overruled, in so far as it forms a precedent for such a demand.

But the question remains whether, looking to the most recent decision, Home v. Belhaven,⁶ in the Court of last resort, the pursuers can, in this case, legally claim even £20; or whether they must not, apart from tender, be content with 5s. I was at first disposed to think that the latter alternative was the correct one. In *Cockburn Ross*² it was held that a feu was a "set" of the lands; and that, if the subfeu-duty represented their full value at the time, the superior could thereafter claim no higher amount in name of composition. I thought, at first, that in *Home v. Belhaven*⁶ the House

¹ June 28, 1832, 10 S. 734, also reported 7 Fac. (8vo.), 560.

² 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815.

³ 7 Fac. (8vo.), at p. 563.

⁵ 6 F. 1067.

⁴ 10 S., at p. 736.

⁶ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

June 29, 1912. of Lords had carried the matter a long step further; and decided that the amount of the subfeu-duty actually exigible during the year in question—whether adequate or illusory, permanent or temporary—forms the measure of the superior's claim, such being the rule prescribed by statute, and considerations of supposed equity hinc inde being out of place and inadmissible. There are passages in the opinions of Lord Davey and Lord Robertson which appear to justify the conclusion indicated. But having studied the case of *Home v. Belhaven*¹ as carefully as I can, with the endeavour to discriminate between actual decision, on the one hand, and matters of opinion merely, on the other, I have come to think (as earlier stated), that the actual decision involved no more than the propositions (1) that (as the Court of Session had laid down in *Allan's Trustees v. Duke of Hamilton*²), the annual value of minerals in course of being worked is not to be excluded in the computation of "a zeires mail," within the meaning of the Act 1469, cap. 36; and (2) that the actual amount of the rents or royalties due to the vassal for the particular year must be taken, without having regard to approaching exhaustion of the minerals, or recourse to "equitable" methods of estimating, by a calculation based on averages or otherwise, what might be a fair and reasonable payment in the whole circumstances of the case. If this view is correct, *Home v. Belhaven*¹ seems really to have no bearing whatever, as a direct decision, upon the case now before the Court, and, in particular, to afford no support to the defenders' argument, that they are liable in no higher payment than the 5s. subfeu-duty.

It would, I apprehend, be open to us to apply here, if it were necessary to do so, a method corresponding to that adopted by the Court in Campbell v. Westenra,³ as the defenders, according to one of their alternative pleas, invite us to do so, viz., to fix the composition payable at £20, on the basis of the actual subfeu-duty of 5s., together with interest at 5 per cent on the capital value of the redeemed portion of the original feu-duty of £20. It is true that in Home v. Belhaven,¹ Westenra's case³ was commented on with some measure of disapproval. Lord Davey said that he did not pretend to explain it, or reconcile it with the terms of the statute. Lord Robertson observed that "It was not the Court that decided, but the vassal who conceded, that interest on a grassum should be included in the composition, this being done to parry a demand for a year's rent." His Lordship's view would apparently result in this, that the superior was not legally entitled to receive as composition more than the subfeu-duty, whatever it was, apart from the "conceded" interest. But I think these observations must be read secundum subjectam materiam, and their Lordships' condemnation of Westenra's case³ limited to it being founded on as in justification of an estimate or calculation, by which the supposed yearly value of a wasting subject was sought to be substituted, in computing the amount of a composition, for the actual return from that subject in the year of assessment. In this sense, and to this extent and effect, it seems that *Westenra*³ was disapproved by the judgment as well as by the opinions in *Home v. Belhaven*¹; but I cannot hold it to have been utterly and to all effects written out of our books. On the contrary, I regard it as being June 29, 1912. (subject to the observation just made), a subsisting decision of very high authority, looking not only to the eminence of the learned Judges who decided it, but also to its place (which your Lordship in the chair has fully explained) in the history of our law and the practice of the legal profession in Scotland. I think Westenra's case¹ still stands as illustrating what might, under given circumstances, be a legitimate and proper method of arriving at the full and adequate annual value of lands at the time when the subfeu was granted, which, according to the principle of Cockburn Ross's case,² is the maximum that the superior is entitled, when the lands have been so set, to receive as composition. Here, however, there is no need to rely on such cases as *Westenra*¹; for we know, and it is admitted, that £20 not only was the actual amount of feu-duty stipulated for the subjects in question, but represented their full and adequate annual value at the time. For the reasons stated, I think the pursuers are entitled to a composition of £20, but no more.

¹ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.² 5 R. 510.³ 10 S. 734.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Lord Dundas.

LORD JOHNSTON.—The question in the present case is, What effect is to be attributed to a partial redemption of a subfeu-duty in estimating the composition to be paid on the entry of a singular successor in the mid-superiority?

The predecessor of the mid-superior granted in 1817 a feu-disposition in favour of a subvassal in consideration of a feu-duty of £20, which ex hypothesi was an adequate value of the lands at the time. But the grant contained the proviso that the vassal might at any time redeem this feu-duty to the extent of £19, 15s. at twenty years' purchase.

In the case of Cockburn Ross,² on a combined consideration of the right, on the one hand, of a vassal to subfeu, introduced by the Act of 1457, cap. 71, and extended by the common law, and of the right, on the other hand, of a singular successor to require an entry on payment of "a year's maill, as the land is set for the time," established by a series of Acts commencing with 1469, cap. 36, it was decided that where lands are subfeued for their adequate value at the time, all that the superior can demand in name of a "year's maill" is the subfeu-duty which the mid-superior receives. It is obvious that were such construction not to be put on the superior's right to exact a composition for an entry, the vassal's right to subfeu, if not rendered nugatory, would, at least in the case of building land, be seriously prejudiced. The rule of Cockburn Ross's case,² which has regulated conveyancing practice since that date, was a simple application of the statutory provision regarding the consideration to be paid for an entry to the case where the vassal has granted a subfeu.

I do not think that in the present case it is necessary to go beyond this authority. The original feu-duty here was admittedly adequate at the time the subfeu was granted. It is no concern of the superior that his vassal has debarred himself by agreement with his subvassal from exacting it in full. He undertook, by the terms of the feu-disposition, that he would debar himself on demand. He might have done so at any time by a

¹ 10 S. 734.

² 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815.

June 29, 1912. subsequent voluntary agreement. He might have done so even for a limited term of years. He has done so in perpetuity. But the full feu-duty of £20 still stands disclosed on the face of the title, and is the law of the title. The deed of restriction is not a link in the title. It is only a discharge ab ante, and in perpetuity, of the recurring feu-duty so far as the £19, 15s. redeemed is concerned, which, on its entering the Register of Sasines, is notice to anyone dealing with the mid-superior.

Governors of
George
Heriot's Trust
v. Paton's
Trustees.
Ld. Johnston.

I have confined myself to the consideration of the case of Cockburn Ross,¹ because I think that its authority is all that is necessary for the judgment in the present case. But the object of consulting the present Court was that the decision in the case of *Westenra*² might be reconsidered. I have experienced much difficulty—though in view of your Lordship's exhaustive exposition of the law, concurred in as it is by my learned brother on your Lordship's right [Lord Kinnear], I hesitate to express that difficulty—in satisfying myself, that the judgment in the case of *Westenra*² was, having regard to the terms of the statutes 1469, cap. 36, &c., a justifiable extension of the decision in Cockburn Ross's case¹ in a different set of circumstances. But I am sensible of the difference, to which your Lordship has adverted, between the manner in which the Scots Courts have regarded the statutes of the Scots Parliament, and particularly the earlier ones, and that in which we are bound to regard the fruits of modern legislation. The decision in the case of *Westenra*² leads to an equitable result; it has ruled practice for seventy years; and it ought not, I think, to be lightly disturbed, particularly where the question is not one of principle, but of the application of accepted principle to particular circumstances.

LORD SALVESEN.—I concur with your Lordship in the chair.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The amount of the composition demanded by the pursuers from the defenders, who are vested in the mid-superiority of the subjects in question, is a year's rent. The year's rent is £936, all that the defenders receive is 5s., the amount of the subfeu-duty. The pursuers' demand is based on the Act 1469, cap. 36. Now, if the superior was in a position to say that the subfeu was not binding upon him, he could disregard the reddendo under which the defenders now draw 5s.; but admittedly he cannot, for the subfeu is binding on him. The true test is what could the superior himself draw if he entered into possession? If the subfeu is binding on him he could draw no more than the mid-superior was entitled to get, and in no view could he be entitled to the full year's rent of £936. A question arises however as to whether he is entitled to 5s., the present amount of the subfeu-duty, or £20, the amount of the subfeu-duty when the subfeu was originally given off—the difference of £19, 15s. has been redeemed under powers in the feu-contract. The argument in favour of the £20 is based on the case of Campbell v. Westenra,² where the superior was held entitled to get from the mid-superior a year's feu-duty and a year's interest of the grassums paid. In the present case the year's interest on the grassums would be represented by the year's interest on the redemption money. The argument in favour of the 5s. is based on the judgment of the House of Lords in the Earl of Home's case,¹ which pro- June 29, 1912.

¹ 2 Ross's L. C. 193, F. C., June 6, 1815.

² 10 S. 734.

 ceeded on the view, as expressed by Lord Davey, that "the superior is entitled to the year's fruits which the vassal himself receives, or is entitled to receive, in the year of entry. The superior is confined to this when it is to his disadvantage, as in the case of a subfeu, and he is entitled to the benefit of the principle when it is in his favour." Logically, therefore, the superior is only entitled in the present case to 5s. The dicta, however, in Lord Home's case,¹ which disapprove of the principle laid down in Campbell v. Westenra,² are obiter. The latter is a decision on an old Scottish statute which laid down a rule of practice, and is in a different position from a case upon a modern Act of Parliament. The distinction is pointed out by Lord Eldon in *Johnstone, &c., v. Stotts, &c.*³ The case of *Westenra*² provided for a situation in regard to which the statute was silent, just as has been done in other classes of cases, e.g., when the lands are unlet or in the natural possession of the vassal. I therefore consider it a precedent for allowing £20 here—the amount tendered. If, on the other hand, it were not open to found on that case, then I should consider the pursuers are entitled to 5s. It follows that, in my opinion, the view taken in the Aberdeen case⁴ in regard to the brown lands is not supported by previous authority. I therefore agree with your Lordship in the chair that the pursuers are only entitled to £20.

Governors of
 George
 Heriot's Trust
 v. Paton's
 Trustees.
 Lord Mac-
 kenzie.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I agree with your Lordship in the chair.

THE COURT pronounced an interlocutor in the following terms:—

"Recall said interlocutor: Find that there is a casualty of composition due to the pursuers by the defenders, the trustees of the late James Paton mentioned in the summons, in respect of his death, and that as regards the subjects included in the feu-disposition by John Cockburn Ross in favour of Andrew Ferris, dated 14th and 16th August 1816 and 1st October 1817, the composition is to be measured by the sum of £20 tendered by the defenders to the pursuers, and with this finding remit the cause to the Lord Ordinary to proceed. . . ."

PETER MACNAUGHTON, S.S.C.—MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

¹ 5 F. (H. L.) 13.

³ 4 Pat. App. 274, at pp. 283-4.

² 10 S. 734, 2 Ross's L. C. 206.

⁴ 6 F. 1067.

No. 157. MRS ISABELLA JOINER OR ANDERSON, Petitioner.—Dunbar.

July 3, 1912. Process—Proof—Deposition of witness to lie in retentis—Divorce—Pursuer going abroad—Pursuer's evidence and oath de calumnia taken on commission before case called.
Anderson.

The pursuer in an action of divorce, who was employed abroad but had returned to Scotland for the purpose of raising her action and had been admitted to the poor's-roll, presented a petition in which she stated that she was compelled to return to her employment before the summons could be called (which, owing to the fact that her husband resided in Australia, could not be done within three months), and craved the Court to appoint a commissioner to take her oath de calumnia and her evidence, her deposition to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Court.

The Court granted the prayer of the petition.

2D DIVISION. THIS was a petition at the instance of Mrs Isabella Joiner or Anderson, domestic servant, New Haven, Connecticut, U.S.A., but residing at the date of the petition at Arbroath, in which she craved the Court to appoint a commissioner to administer to her the oath de calumnia, and to take her evidence, her deposition to lie in retentis, in an action of divorce at her instance against her husband, Alexander Matthew Anderson, tanner, residing formerly in Arbroath, and, at the date of the petition, at Botany, Sydney, Australia.

The petition set forth:—"That of this date (15th June 1912), the petitioner was found entitled to the benefit of the poor's-roll to raise an action of divorce on the ground of adultery against the said Alexander Matthew Anderson, her husband. The petitioner is employed as a domestic servant at New Haven, Connecticut, and recently returned to this country in order to raise the said action. That after their marriage in 1904 the parties resided together for some time in Arbroath but the defender is now resident in Australia. The petitioner has discovered an address which may possibly find him, and edictal citation is accordingly inappropriate. That, of this date (1st July 1912), the summons in said action was signeted, and a service copy of the summons was posted to Australia with a view to service upon the defender. Before the summons can call it is probable that at least three months must elapse. That the petitioner has left her only child in New Haven, Connecticut, and has to pay for her board. Her money is nearly done, and she cannot afford to stay in this country for more than a few weeks. Moreover, her employer in New Haven has informed her that unless she can sail for America by the middle of July, her situation must be forfeited."

On the petition appearing in Single Bills of the Second Division on 3rd July 1912, the petitioner moved the Court to grant the prayer.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—" . . .

Remit the cause to Lord Dewar to take the evidence of the petitioner, said evidence to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Lord Ordinary, or to appoint a commissioner to administer to the petitioner the oath de calumnia and to take her evidence; to dispense with interrogatories and with the reading in the Minute-book, and to order the deposition of the petitioner and productions, if any, to be sealed up by the commissioner and transmitted to the Clerk of Court to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Lord Ordinary."

ROBERT GIBB, W.S., Agent.

CHARLES FREELAND, Appellant.—Moncrieff, K.C.—Fenton.
 SUMMERLEE IRON COMPANY, LIMITED, Respondents.—Munro, K.C.—
Carmont.

No. 158.

July 5, 1912.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sec. 1 (3)—Act of Sederunt, 26th June 1907, (2)—Arbitration—Competency—"Question" as to duration of compensation.

Freeland v.
 Summerlee
 Iron Co.,
 Limited.

The employers of a workman who had been totally incapacitated by an accident admitted liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, tendered the amount of compensation due (as to which there was no dispute), and requested the workman to sign a receipt which contained this clause:—"At the first or any subsequent payment liability is admitted only for the compensation to date of payment. Further liability, if any, will be determined week by week when application for payment is made." The workman objected to this clause on the ground that he was entitled to have an unqualified admission of liability, refused to sign the receipt, and initiated arbitration proceedings. The employers maintained that the arbitration was incompetent as no question had arisen between the parties.

Held that there was a question between the parties as to the duration of the compensation which had not been settled by agreement, and, accordingly, that the arbitration was competent.

In an application for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, at the instance of Charles Freeland, miner, Larkhall, against The Summerlee Iron Company, Limited, coalmasters, Larkhall, the Sheriff-substitute of Lanarkshire at Hamilton (Shennan), dismissed the application, and at the request of the workman stated a case for appeal.

2D DIVISION.
 Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

The case set forth:—

"This is an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in an application by the appellant to recover compensation in respect of injuries sustained by him through an accident to his right eye in the course of his employment with the respondents as a miner in their Summerlee Colliery at Larkhall.

"I heard parties' procurators on the 30th January 1912, when the following facts were admitted:—(1) The accident occurred on 13th December 1911, and it arose out of and in the course of the appellant's employment with the respondents as a miner. The appellant has been totally incapacitated since said date. (2) The respondents are liable to pay the appellant compensation at the rate of 14s. 9d. per week in respect of total incapacity. (3) On 29th December 1911 the respondents admitted liability and tendered payment of the compensation then due. They requested the appellant to sign a receipt therefor, but the appellant objected to the terms of the receipt and refused to sign it. (4) The part of the receipt to which the appellant objected was contained in a note printed above the columns provided for a record of the dates and the amounts paid week by week. The part of the note objected to was the following:—'At the first or any subsequent payment liability is admitted only for the compensation to date of payment. Further liability, if any, will be determined week by week when application for payment is made.' Copy of the form of receipt is given in the appendix hereto.

"The appellant objected to the form of the receipt on the ground that he was entitled to have from the respondents a simple and

July 5, 1912.

Freeland v.
Summerlee
Iron Co.,
Limited.

unqualified admission of liability, such as he could embody in a memorandum of agreement for the purpose of recording. He therefore invoked arbitration on the ground that a question had arisen as to the duration of the compensation."

The Sheriff-substitute was of opinion that no question had arisen between the parties which fell to be settled by arbitration, and, accordingly, he dismissed the application.

The questions of law for the opinion of the Court were:—"1. Do the foregoing facts disclose any question between the parties on which arbitration can competently be invoked? 2. Was the Sheriff-substitute right in dismissing the appellant's application for arbitration?"

The case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 5th July 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—There was a question between the parties which fell to be settled by arbitration, since it had not been settled by agreement. This dispute was as to the duration of compensation. The employers had made an offer which in effect meant that the workman would get compensation, not during incapacity, as was his right,¹ but only so long as the employers thought he was incapacitated. This offer was not one which the workman was bound to accept, for it would give him less than he was entitled to under the Act. Under the Act the employers were bound to continue paying compensation till an application for review had been presented,² whereas in the present case the employers were frankly seeking to place themselves in the position of being able to stop the compensation at their own hand. An agreement to pay compensation which introduced conditions other than those contained in the statute could not be recorded.³ If, then, there was any agreement at all, it was not a recordable agreement, and the workman was entitled to apply for an award, since in one way or the other he was entitled to have the means of enforcing his claim to compensation.⁴

Argued for the respondents;—It was common ground that the workman was entitled to compensation only so long as his incapacity lasted, and it followed that his employers were entitled to stop paying as soon as he had recovered. So far as his present condition was concerned—which was all that could be considered in the meantime⁵—there was no question between the parties either as to his right to compensation or as to the amount of it; and accordingly arbitration was excluded.⁶ If and when the employers stopped payment, a question might arise as to the duration of the compensation, but that was a future and hypothetical question, and all that arbitration was provided for was an existing question. No such question was to be found here, for the employers and the workman were agreed on all the essential points, and a memorandum of this agreement, even

¹ Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, First Schedule (1) (b).

² Donaldson Brothers v. Cowan, 1909 S. C. 1292, per Lord President Dunedin, at pp. 1297, 1298.

³ M'Ewan v. William Baird & Co., Limited, 1910 S. C. 436, per Lord Kinnear, at p. 442.

⁴ Hunter v. John Brown & Co., Limited, supra, p. 996.

⁵ Allan v. Thomas Sprowart & Co., Limited, (1906) 8 F. 811.

⁶ Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, sec. 1 (3); Act of Sederunt, June 26, 1907, (2); Gourlay Brothers & Co., Limited, v. Sweeney, (1906) 8 F. 965; Field v. Longden & Sons, Limited, [1902] 1 K. B. 47.

though there might be a qualification as to the future, could have July 5, 1912. been recorded.¹

Freeland v.
Summerlee
Iron Co.,
Limited.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The case stands in this position. The appellant met with an accident and has been totally incapacitated since its date, and the respondents are liable to pay him 14s. 9d. per week in respect of total incapacity. These are facts found about which there is no dispute. On 29th December the respondents admitted liability, and tendered payment of the compensation then due,—that is to say, they admitted to the injured man that they were liable and tendered the payment which was due up to that date. They requested the appellant to sign a receipt therefor, but the appellant objected to the terms of the receipt, and refused to sign it.

In these circumstances, the question is—were the parties in agreement so that a memorandum of agreement could be registered? In my opinion they were not.

The appellant comes forward and says that, as there is no agreement of which he can make use for the purpose of enforcing his claim, he has the right to raise an arbitration in the ordinary way, a question having arisen as to the duration of the compensation. I can see no ground whatever for excluding him from that. He is perfectly entitled to proceed by arbitration, as I am satisfied that there has been no agreement made between the parties which he is entitled to register.

LORD SALVESSEN.—I am of the same opinion. A workman who is injured in the course of his employment is entitled, by the Workmen's Compensation Act, to present an application to an arbitrator to determine whether he is entitled to compensation under the Act, and the amount of that compensation. If the employers admit liability, then we have held that he is not entitled to put them to the expense of such an application. But the admission must be an unqualified one, and not a qualified admission which would debar him from the right of going to the Sheriff-clerk with a memorandum of his agreement and getting it registered, so as to be able to charge upon it.

It is said that he may record a qualified agreement if it has been come to. I do not doubt that he can, but a qualified agreement will not give him the rights that he possesses either under an unqualified agreement or under an award which he has obtained from the arbitrator. The respondents here made no secret of the fact that they desired, by the qualification which they put into this receipt which they wished the man to sign, to invert the position of the workman and put him in petitorio when he partially recovered from his accident, instead of being themselves in the position of having to pay him compensation until they presented an application to have his compensation diminished or ended.

It is obvious, therefore, that there is here a very substantial question, and one which is of interest to both employers and employed, but it is not a question that appears to me to be attended with any difficulty. One could conceive of difficulty arising if there had been payments made and

¹ M'Lean v. Allan Line Steamship Co., Limited, supra, p. 256.

July 5, 1912. accepted; but in the present case we were informed, without contradiction, that the employers refused to make any payments except upon the terms of the receipt, which qualified their obligation, putting them in the position of being able to terminate the compensation when they judged the workman to be partially or wholly recovered, whereas the Act gives the workman the right, after his position has been formulated either by an unconditional agreement or by an award, to have his compensation continuously paid until the employer presents his application for review.

Freeland v.
Summerlee
Iron Co.,
Limited.

Lord Salvesen.

I think here the employers were quite wrong. There was a question between the parties as to the duration of the compensation which had not been settled by agreement. Therefore the workman was entitled to proceed by way of arbitration, and is not excluded by the admissions of the employer as regards two only of the three points on which there must be agreement if arbitration is to be excluded.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I agree. It is common ground that in a sense there is a question between the parties, but the Sheriff-substitute seems to have held that the only question that the workman raised was so frivolous that it could not be dealt with as a question in any real or substantial sense. It seems to me, agreeing with your Lordships, that the question raised between the parties is a very substantial question. It is perfectly natural that the employers should seek by such a receipt as we have before us to bring about a very favourable state of matters for them, namely, that they should be entitled, whenever they think a workman has recovered, to stop payment, putting it upon the workman then to take arbitration proceedings, which might be very lengthy before any decree was given. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the workman has a very substantial motive for getting an agreement which could not only be recorded but on which he could charge, so that his compensation should run on until the employer had to take proceedings to end or alter it.

The result is that if there was a substantial question then the parties are agreed that it cannot be held that there was an agreement, and agreeing as I do with your Lordships that there was a substantial question, I think the only course open to the workman, in the absence of agreement, was to take proceedings for arbitration.

THE COURT answered the first question of law in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, and remitted to the arbitrator to proceed.

SIMPSON & MARWICK, W.S.—W. & J. BURNES, W.S.—Agents.

ROBERT WALKER, Pursuer (Appellant).—Fenton.

No. 159.

JOHN JAMES SMITH, Defender (Respondent).—D. Anderson.

July 6, 1912.

Poor's-Roll—Reporters equally divided in opinion—Appeal from Sheriff Court.

Walker v.
Smith.

Where the reporters on probabilis causa reported to the Court that they were equally divided in opinion as to the admission to the poor's-roll of an applicant who desired to prosecute an appeal against two adverse judgments in the Sheriff Court, the two advocates being in favour of, and the two law agents against, the applicant's admission,—

The Court refused the application.

IN an action in the Sheriff Court at Perth at the instance of Robert Walker, labourer, Perth, against John James Smith, baker, Pitlochry, the Sheriff-substitute (Sym) assolzied the defender, and on appeal the Sheriff (Johnston) adhered. 2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of Perth.

The pursuer appealed to the Court of Session, and presented an application for admission to the poor's-roll.

This application having been remitted to the reporters on probabilis causa litigandi, they reported that they were equally divided in opinion as to whether the applicant had or had not a probabilis causa litigandi, and appended a note in which they stated: "Mr Thomson, Advocate, and Mr Boase, Advocate, are of opinion that the applicant has, while Mr Lorimer, W.S., and Mr Whyte, S.S.C., are of opinion that the applicant has not, a probabilis causa litigandi, and we respectfully crave your Lordships to dispose of the remit in the circumstances. We beg respectfully to refer your Lordships to the following cases:—Edgar v. Johnston, (1904) 6 F. 825; Ormond v. Henderson & Sons, (1897) 24 R. 399; Marshall v. North British Railway Company, (1881) 8 R. 939; Carr v. North British Railway Company, (1885) 13 R. 113; and Watson v. Callander Coal Company, (1888) 16 R. 111."

The case was heard in the Single Bills of the Second Division (without Lord Guthrie) on 6th July 1912, when, in addition to the authorities noted by the reporters, the case of Clark v. Campbell,¹ was cited.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The difficulty in this case arises from the decision in Marshall v. North British Railway Company,² where the Court admitted a person to the poor's-roll, although there was not a majority of the reporters in favour of her admission. But, when the facts of that case are examined, I think the difficulty disappears; for the report of the case shows that the applicant there was suing in the Supreme Court, and was not in the position of the applicant here of having two judgments standing against her by the Sheriff and his substitute.

Now where, as here, the action is brought in the Sheriff Court and both the Sheriff-substitute and the Sheriff have decided against the party applying for the benefit of the poor's-roll, it is decided by *Carr*³ and *Watson*⁴ that the party is not entitled to be admitted to the roll. In the former case,

¹ (1833) 11 S. 908.

² 13 R. 113.

³ 8 R. 939.

⁴ 16 R. 111.

July 6, 1912.

Walker v.
Smith.

Lord Justice-
Clerk.

which was exactly the same as the present, the Lord President observed:—
“I think there are very clear grounds for distinguishing between this case and the case of Marshall.¹ The applicant there asked the Court for admission to the poor's-roll for the purpose of carrying on an action in this Court. The reporters were equally divided in opinion, and in the circumstances we admitted the applicant”; and then his Lordship pointed out that in the case before the Court there were two judgments against the applicant and concluded that the application should be refused. In Watson's case,² again, the decision was the same, the Court holding itself bound by the decision in Carr.³ Since those cases there have been two other cases, both in this Division, namely, *Ormond*⁴ and Edgar,⁵ in which the earlier decisions were held to settle the rule in this matter. Now here the applicant, as I have stated, has two judgments against him, and this being so, I can only say, in the words of Lord Rutherford Clark in Watson's case,² that we are bound to follow the decisions, unless we send the case to the whole Court. I am not prepared to do so here, and, therefore, the only course open to us is to refuse the motion, and I so move your Lordships.

LORD DUNDAS.—I agree. I think the rule as your Lordship has put it, is sound and salutary; and if the current of previous decisions has not been absolutely uniform—and I am not satisfied that it has been so,—the decision in the present case will go to strengthen and establish the rule.

LORD SALVESEN.—I am of the same opinion. There are four decisions—three in this Division and one in the First Division—to the effect that where there is an equal division of opinion among the reporters, the applicant is not to be admitted to the poor's-roll if there are adverse decisions by the Sheriff-substitute and Sheriff. I do not think that there is any specialty in the fact that the two advocates among the reporters were in the applicant's favour, while the two who were against him are the members of the other branch of the profession. The special facts of this case we are not entitled to consider; they have already been considered by the reporters, whose duty it was to do so. The decisions lay down the rule that when, under the circumstances that we have here, there is an equal division among the reporters the onus placed on the applicant of showing a probabilis causa has not been satisfied.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—“ . . .

Refuse the benefit of the poor's-roll to the applicant and appoint the applicant to print his appeal and that within fourteen days from this date.”

ROBERT GIBB, W.S.—J. MILLER THOMSON & Co., W.S.—Agents.

¹ 8 R. 939.

² 16 R. 111.

³ 13 R. 113.

⁴ 24 R. 399.

⁵ 6 F. 825.

THE SOCIETY OF PROPRIETORS OF THE ROYAL EXCHANGE BUILDINGS, No. 160.
GLASGOW, LIMITED, Petitioners (Respondents).—Constable, K.C.—
C. H. Brown.

July 9, 1912.

MARY SMYTHE COTTON AND ANOTHER, Objectors (Appellants).—
D.-F. Dickson—D. P. Fleming.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

Servitude—Altius non tollendi—Property—Building restriction—Title and interest of singular successor in dominant tenement to enforce.

A proprietor disposed to two purchasers two adjacent portions of his property, the dispositions containing mutual restrictions altius non tollendi imposed on each portion for the benefit of the other. On one of the purchasers proposing to erect buildings on his portion beyond the specified height, the singular successor of the purchaser of the other portion, which was situated ex adverso of the proposed buildings, and was separated therefrom by a distance of 60 feet, objected to the erection. He did not aver that any specific injury would be done to his property if the buildings were erected beyond the specified height.

Held that the dispositions had created a servitude altius non tollendi, which the singular successor in the dominant tenement had both a title and, in virtue of the propinquity of his property, an interest to enforce.

Observations in Gould v. M'Corquodale, (1869) 8 Macph. 165, commented on and explained.

ON 22nd March 1911 the Society of Proprietors of the Royal Exchange Buildings, Glasgow, Limited, presented a petition in the Dean of Guild Court there for warrant to make certain alterations on and additions to the Royal Exchange Buildings, which involved increasing their height.

1ST DIVISION.
Dean of Guild Court,
Glasgow.

Objections were lodged by Mary Smythe Cotton and another, proprietors of subjects ex adverso of one side of the Royal Exchange Buildings.

In a statement of facts for the objectors it was averred :—(Stat. 1) “ In the year 1827 the Royal Bank of Scotland were proprietors of a large piece of ground on the west side of Queen Street, Glasgow, comprising not only the ground now belonging to the petitioners, but also the ground surrounding said ground on the north, south, and west, including the ground on the north now belonging to the objectors.”

(Stat. 2) “ By contract of sale, dated 20th, 21st, 26th, and 27th days of September, and 2nd, 9th, and 25th days of October, all in the year 1827, entered into between the Royal Bank of Scotland of the first part, and petitioners' predecessors, the subscribers for establishing Exchange Buildings in Queen Street, Glasgow, of the second part, the first party thereto in consideration of the price therein mentioned bound themselves to deliver to the second party thereto a valid disposition of All and Whole that area or plot of ground on the west side of Queen Street, Glasgow, . . . now belonging to the petitioners, together with the buildings then erected on the said area or plot of ground. These buildings consisted of a building fronting Queen Street that was then occupied as a bank and which is now the eastern portion of the present Royal Exchange, belonging to the petitioners.” (Stat. 3) “ In the said contract of sale it was provided that, for the mutual accommodation of both parties to said deed, in securing light, air, access, and amenity to their respective properties ” a space of 60 feet in width on the north and

July 9, 1912.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

south sides of the plot of ground should be left vacant and formed into a carriageway and pavement, and "the building then occupied on the area or plot of ground by the first party as aforesaid should not thereafter be raised to a greater height than it was then, unless for the sake of a centre cupola or ornament to be approved of by the first party thereto, and that the side walls and the west end front of any buildings to be erected to the west of the said building should not exceed 40 feet in height, excepting a space in the centre thereof not exceeding 35 feet wide, which might be raised to the height of the then bank, unless it should be deemed advisable to carry the said new erections 2 feet higher for the sake of architectural effect or ornament, and unless the same should be first approved of by the first party, and that in like manner the buildings to be erected by the first party or their successors upon their property fronting each of the north, south, and west sides of the plot or area of ground should form a handsome range of buildings not exceeding three storeys in height above the sunk storey, unless where it might be deemed expedient and proper to carry the said buildings higher for ornament or architectural effect . . ."

(Stat. 4) "By the said contract of sale it was stipulated that the said provisions and declarations, with the servitudes, restrictions, and conditions therein before written and in the foregoing articles of this condescendence specified, should be as they were declared to be real burdens and liens affecting the said subjects thereby sold in so far as applying to them, and also affecting the subjects belonging to the said first party adjacent in so far as applying to them, and should as such be inserted in the disposition to be granted by the first party to the second party, and in any disposition to be granted by the first party of any part of the said subjects adjacent, and in the infestment on the disposition foresaid, and in the whole other dispositions, charters, and infestments of the said premises, otherwise the dispositions, charters, and infestments in which they might be wholly or partially omitted should be void and null."

(Stat. 5) "By disposition, dated 12th November 1833, granted by the Royal Bank of Scotland in favour of the petitioners' predecessors, the Proprietors of the Royal Exchange Buildings of Glasgow, the said Royal Bank, in implement of the foregoing contract of sale disposed to the petitioners' predecessors the said area or plot of ground containing 3871 square yards or thereby (on which the Exchange buildings had then been erected in consequence of the undertaking contained in the foregoing contract of sale)." (Stat. 6) "In the said disposition the provisions, declarations, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions above set forth as contained in the said contract of sale are repeated ad longum; and . . . it was provided and declared that the whole provisions, declarations, burdens, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions therein before recited and as therein above explained were and should be real liens and burdens affecting the subjects thereby disposed in so far as applicable to the subjects thereby disposed, and affecting also the subjects then belonging or which belonged to the Royal Bank bounding the plot or area of ground thereby disposed on the north, south, and west in so far as applicable to the said surrounding subjects, and in so far as applicable to the said respective subjects, should as such be inserted in the instrument of sasine to follow thereupon, and in any disposition to be granted by the Royal Bank of any part of the said subjects adjacent, and in all the other and future infestments, dispositions, and conveyances of the whole or of parts of the said respective subjects, and in the instruments of sasine to follow thereon in so far as applicable to the said respective subjects, under the pain of nullity: And it was further provided and declared that the buildings already erected . . . on the ground purchased from the Royal Bank by John Smith, situated on the north side of the said square (now the property of the objectors), should be maintained and upheld in exact conformity with the present elevations thereof. . . .”

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

(Stat. 8) “By contract of ground-annual, dated 1st, 19th, and 20th August, all in the year 1835, entered into between the Royal Bank of Scotland on the one part, and” certain disponees “of the other part, the said first party, under the burden of a ground-annual of £575 sterling, sold and disposed with consent of the said John Smith to the second party All and Whole that piece of ground situated on the west side of Queen Street, Glasgow, containing 1969 square yards and 2 square feet or thereby, being the said subjects on the north side.” (Stat. 9) “By said contract of ground-annual it was declared that the same was granted with and under the whole provisions, declarations, restrictions, conditions, and servitudes contained in the titles of the subjects, and with and under the burdens, limitations, provisions, and declarations contained in the said contract of sale between the new Exchange Company and the Royal Bank . . . the second party being always entitled to the benefit of the privileges or burdens stipulated or imposed by the said contract with the new Exchange Company on the said Royal Bank and the new Exchange proprietors; and it was also provided that the said contract of ground-annual was further granted under the conditions, provisions, declarations, restrictions, and prohibitions thereafter written which were thereby declared to be real liens and burdens affecting the subjects disposed, namely, that the tenements erected on the subjects should be maintained and upheld in exact conformity with the then elevation thereof so as the said tenements might form one entire and uniform compartment in all time coming . . . all which provisions, declarations, restrictions, prohibitions, and servitudes were appointed to be inserted as real liens and burdens affecting the subjects in the instrument of sasine to follow on the said contract of ground-annual, and in all the future dispositions and conveyances of the said subjects and infestment following thereon, otherwise the same should be void and null. . . .”

(Stat. 12) “The objectors have succeeded to the said piece of ground on the north side of Royal Exchange Square, containing 1969 square yards and 2 square feet or thereby, conform to the deeds, an inventory of which is annexed hereto.”

(Stat. 13) “The plans produced by petitioners disclose that petitioners are proposing to raise the height of their buildings very considerably above the present height and otherwise alter the style and elevations of their buildings; and the objectors intimated to the petitioners, prior to their presenting this petition, that they objected to the said alterations on and additions to these buildings. To these objections the objectors adhere.”

The petitioners pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The objectors’ averments are irrelevant. (2) No title to sue.

The objectors pleaded, inter alia;—(2) In respect of the servitude non altius tollendi under which the petitioners are in a question with

July 9, 1912.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

south sides of the plot of ground should be left vacant and formed into a carriageway and pavement, and "the building then occupied on the area or plot of ground by the first party as aforesaid should not thereafter be raised to a greater height than it was then, unless for the sake of a centre cupola or ornament to be approved of by the first party thereto, and that the side walls and the west end front of any buildings to be erected to the west of the said building should not exceed 40 feet in height, excepting a space in the centre thereof not exceeding 35 feet wide, which might be raised to the height of the then bank, unless it should be deemed advisable to carry the said new erections 2 feet higher for the sake of architectural effect or ornament, and unless the same should be first approved of by the first party, and that in like manner the buildings to be erected by the first party or their successors upon their property fronting each of the north, south, and west sides of the plot or area of ground should form a handsome range of buildings not exceeding three storeys in height above the sunk storey, unless where it might be deemed expedient and proper to carry the said buildings higher for ornament or architectural effect . . ."

(Stat. 4) "By the said contract of sale it was stipulated that the said provisions and declarations, with the servitudes, restrictions, and conditions therein before written and in the foregoing articles of this condescendence specified, should be as they were declared to be real burdens and liens affecting the said subjects thereby sold in so far as applying to them, and also affecting the subjects belonging to the said first party adjacent in so far as applying to them, and should as such be inserted in the disposition to be granted by the first party to the second party, and in any disposition to be granted by the first party of any part of the said subjects adjacent, and in the infestment on the disposition foresaid, and in the whole other dispositions, charters, and infestments of the said premises, otherwise the dispositions, charters, and infestments in which they might be wholly or partially omitted should be void and null."

(Stat. 5) "By disposition, dated 12th November 1833, granted by the Royal Bank of Scotland in favour of the petitioners' predecessors, the Proprietors of the Royal Exchange Buildings of Glasgow, the said Royal Bank, in implement of the foregoing contract of sale disposed to the petitioners' predecessors the said area or plot of ground containing 3871 square yards or thereby (on which the Exchange buildings had then been erected in consequence of the undertaking contained in the foregoing contract of sale)." (Stat. 6) "In the said disposition the provisions, declarations, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions above set forth as contained in the said contract of sale are repeated ad longum; and . . . it was provided and declared that the whole provisions, declarations, burdens, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions therein before recited and as therein above explained were and should be real liens and burdens affecting the subjects thereby disposed in so far as applicable to the subjects thereby disposed, and affecting also the subjects then belonging or which belonged to the Royal Bank bounding the plot or area of ground thereby disposed on the north, south, and west in so far as applicable to the said surrounding subjects, and in so far as applicable to the said respective subjects, should as such be inserted in the instrument of sasine to follow thereupon, and in any disposition to be granted by the Royal Bank of any part of the said subjects adjacent, and in all the other and future infestments, dispositions, and conveyances of the whole or of parts of July 9, 1912.

 the said respective subjects, and in the instruments of sasine to follow thereon in so far as applicable to the said respective subjects, under Proprietors of Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.
 the pain of nullity: And it was further provided and declared that the buildings already erected . . . on the ground purchased from the Royal Bank by John Smith, situated on the north side of the said square (now the property of the objectors), should be maintained and upheld in exact conformity with the present elevations thereof. . . .”

(Stat. 8) “By contract of ground-annual, dated 1st, 19th, and 20th August, all in the year 1835, entered into between the Royal Bank of Scotland on the one part, and” certain disponees “of the other part, the said first party, under the burden of a ground-annual of £575 sterling, sold and disposed with consent of the said John Smith to the second party All and Whole that piece of ground situated on the west side of Queen Street, Glasgow, containing 1969 square yards and 2 square feet or thereby, being the said subjects on the north side.” (Stat. 9)
 “By said contract of ground-annual it was declared that the same was granted with and under the whole provisions, declarations, restrictions, conditions, and servitudes contained in the titles of the subjects, and with and under the burdens, limitations, provisions, and declarations contained in the said contract of sale between the new Exchange Company and the Royal Bank . . . the second party being always entitled to the benefit of the privileges or burdens stipulated or imposed by the said contract with the new Exchange Company on the said Royal Bank and the new Exchange proprietors; and it was also provided that the said contract of ground-annual was further granted under the conditions, provisions, declarations, restrictions, and prohibitions thereafter written which were thereby declared to be real liens and burdens affecting the subjects disposed, namely, that the tenements erected on the subjects should be maintained and upheld in exact conformity with the then elevation thereof so as the said tenements might form one entire and uniform compartment in all time coming . . . all which provisions, declarations, restrictions, prohibitions, and servitudes were appointed to be inserted as real liens and burdens affecting the subjects in the instrument of sasine to follow on the said contract of ground-annual, and in all the future dispositions and conveyances of the said subjects and infestment following thereon, otherwise the same should be void and null. . . .”

(Stat. 12) “The objectors have succeeded to the said piece of ground on the north side of Royal Exchange Square, containing 1969 square yards and 2 square feet or thereby, conform to the deeds, an inventory of which is annexed hereto.”

(Stat. 13) “The plans produced by petitioners disclose that petitioners are proposing to raise the height of their buildings very considerably above the present height and otherwise alter the style and elevations of their buildings; and the objectors intimated to the petitioners, prior to their presenting this petition, that they objected to the said alterations on and additions to these buildings. To these objections the objectors adhere.”

The petitioners pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The objectors’ averments are irrelevant. (2) No title to sue.

The objectors pleaded, inter alia;—(2) In respect of the servitude non altius tollendi under which the petitioners are in a question with

July 9, 1912.
Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

the objectors, the petitioners are not entitled to raise their buildings as they are proposing to do without the consent of the objectors. (3) In respect of the real liens, burdens, conditions, restrictions, servitudes, and others contained in the titles of the petitioners and objectors, or one or other of them, all as condescended on, the petitioners are not entitled to make the alterations on or additions to their buildings which they are proposing to do without the consent of the objectors.

On 25th April 1912 the Dean of Guild pronounced an interlocutor, in which, after findings in fact to the same effect as the passages above quoted from the objectors' statement of facts, he found in law as follows:—"Finds in law that as the objectors do not aver that the proposed operations of the petitioners will, if carried out, damage or injuriously affect the property belonging to them, they are not entitled to object to these proposed operations being carried out: Therefore sustains the plea in law for the petitioners that the objections are irrelevant: Repels the objections, and grants the lining craved."*

* "NOTE.—The parties were heard upon an open record, and in the course of and at the conclusion of the debate the agent for the objectors was asked whether he wished to add to the objections an averment or averments to the effect that the proposal of the petitioners if carried out would damage or injuriously affect the property belonging to his clients; but he declined to do that, and maintained that it was not necessary in order to entitle him to plead servitude or real burden to say that he would be injured by a contravention of the servitude or real burden. The Dean is advised that that position is not sound. It is trite law that to enforce a real burden interest is necessary, and as regards the position under servitude proper the Dean of Guild thinks it only necessary to refer to the case of The Braid Hills Hotel Company, Limited, v. Manuels, 10th November 1908, 1909 S. C. 120. There the matter is put in this way by the Lord President,—‘If you find a known servitude in the titles of a servient tenement, I think, in order to show a title to sue, you have only really got to discover two things. You have first of all got to discover from the servitude itself that there is a proper dominant tenement. Nobody coming forward without something to which he can appeal as a proper dominant tenement would have a title to enforce this right. And then, secondly, over and above that, he must also, of course, show interest, or else he will fail on the well-known doctrines laid down in the case of Gould v. M'Corquodale, 8 Macph. 165, where it was held that the servitude was perfectly well constituted, but that if the pursuers could not show an interest their right to enforce it fell.’ It is to be noted that in the case of Gould v. M'Corquodale the proprietor pleading the servitude expressly averred that the buildings there proposed would injuriously affect his property; and in the case of Cowan v. Stewart, (1872) 10 Macph. 735 (founded on by the objectors here), injurious interference with the lights of the complaining proprietor is expressly mentioned in that proprietor's answers. It may be that the provisions founded on here do not on the ground suggested by the Lord President at the end of his opinion in the Braid Hills case constitute a servitude proper. If they do not, then the objectors are thrown back upon real burden. Their pleas in law deal only with real burden and servitude, and an averment of damage or injurious affection being necessary in either case the Dean has sustained the petitioners' plea that the objections are irrelevant. It may be, of course, that the objectors declined to aver damage or injurious affection, because they may not be confident that they would be able to prove, if a proof were allowed, or to convince a practical Court, that there

The objectors appealed to the Court of Session, and the case was heard before the First Division (without the Lord President) on 2nd and 3rd July 1912.

Argued for the appellants ;—The respondents could not raise the height of their buildings without the appellants' consent. By the disposition to the respondents a mutual servitude had been imposed upon, and submitted to by, both parties thereto. The appellants, as disponees of the Royal Bank, were entitled to enforce that servitude or real burden, because, on parties' titles, it was clearly enforceable for the benefit of the heritable subjects, and not merely as a personal right.¹ It was not necessary, therefore, for the appellants to aver or show an interest to enforce it ; but, in any case, the fact that they were ex adverso proprietors was sufficient to qualify an interest.² Further, the respondents did not aver that there had been any change of circumstances, and accordingly the position was the same as if the present question had been raised immediately after the respondents had acquired their property from the Royal Bank, at which time it could not have been maintained, in face of the terms of their disposition, that an ex adverso proprietor had no interest to enforce the contract. The appellants' right was not a jus quæsitum, but rested upon direct contract with those whom they now represented ; and the burden of proving interest was not on them, but it was for the respondents in pleading release from the contract to show that any interest that the appellants had had ceased to exist.³ In point of fact, in their pleadings the respondents had nowhere averred that the appellants had no interest.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

Argued for the respondents ;—Whatever view might be taken of the restrictions there was undoubtedly an onus upon the appellants to show an interest to enforce them. On a sound construction of the deeds here in question there was no contractual relationship between the appellants and the respondents. The appellants had only a jus quæsitum to enforce the restrictions ; and to enable them to do so they must qualify an interest.⁴ The question in the case of *Nicholson v. Glasgow Blind Asylum*⁵ was one of title, not of interest, and that case therefore did not affect the present question. Further, it was necessary for the appellants to show that their interest to enforce was a would be damage. The Dean is very familiar with the neighbourhood and the properties of the parties, but he has thought it better not to apply his mind to that matter at present. He will deal with the points involved if and when the question comes before him.

"The cases cited by the parties at the debate were—by the objectors, Cowan v. Stewart, quoted supra ; and by the petitioners, Mactaggart v. Roemmele, 1907 S. C. 1318, and Hislop v. MacRitchie's Trustees, 3 R. (H. L.) 95."

¹ Nicholson v. Glasgow Asylum for the Blind, 1911 S. C. 391 ; Braid Hills Hotel Co., Limited, v. Manuela, 1909 S. C. 120 ; Mayor, &c. of Bradford v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587, Lord Watson, at p. 598 ; Finnie v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co., (1857) 3 Macq. 75.

² Gould v. M'Corquodale, (1869) 8 Macph. 165.

³ Mactaggart & Co. v. Roemmele, 1907 S. C. 1318, Lord President, at p. 1322.

⁴ Maguire v. Burges, 1909 S. C. 1283, Lord President, at pp. 1290, 1291 ; Braid Hills Hotel Co., Limited, v. Manuela, 1909 S. C. 120, Lord President, at p. 126.

⁵ 1911 S. C. 391.

July 9, 1912. substantial interest,¹ and such an interest could not be implied in favour of any subjects. As there were no averments here to support a substantial interest, or, indeed, any interest, the objections fell to be repelled. The appellants ought to make specific averments of the damage that would be done to them, and it would then be for the Dean of Guild to consider whether they had qualified a sufficient interest or not.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

At advising on 9th July 1912,—

LORD KINNEAR.—I am unable to agree with the Dean of Guild in this case, and I think that his decision cannot be upheld.

The case begins with an application for a lining at the instance of the Proprietors of the Royal Exchange Buildings of Glasgow, who desire to make certain proposed additions and alterations upon their buildings according to a plan. Certain proprietors of the property lying immediately to the north of the Exchange Buildings object, on the ground that they have a right of servitude against raising the Exchange Buildings higher than they are at present, which would be violated were the lining to be granted. The Dean of Guild has repelled the objections and granted the lining.

The first question, therefore, to be considered is whether the objectors have a substantial right and interest to enforce the servitude against the building. Now, that depends upon the title of the petitioners. We have on record a history of the title, from which it appears that the former proprietors of the ground now belonging to the Royal Exchange and of some adjoining ground entered into a contract of sale with the persons whom the present petitioners now represent, and the record sets forth at some length certain conditions which were contained in the contract of sale for the purpose of imposing mutual servitudes, conditions, and restrictions upon vendor and vendee. It is not really material to examine the terms of the contract, because it is completely superseded by the disposition which was granted by the sellers to the buyers. But then that disposition narrates at full length all the conditions contained in the contract and imposes them upon the disponees. Therefore there is no inconvenience in taking the terms of the condition, which is the subject of consideration, from the contract, because it is printed at full length, whereas we have got only excerpts from the disposition before us.

I take it, therefore, without going into the matter in any more detail, that the disponers set out, in the first place, that, for the mutual accommodation of both parties in securing light, air, access, and amenity to their respective properties, they conveyed to the disponees under certain restrictions. To come to the particular restriction that is now applicable—that the side walls and the west-end front of any building to be erected to the west of the said building should not exceed 40 feet in height, excepting a space in the centre thereof not exceeding 35 feet wide, which might be raised to the height of the then bank, unless it should be deemed advisable July 9, 1912. to carry the said new erections two feet higher for the sake of architectural effect or ornament.

¹ Rankine on Land Ownership, 4th ed., pp. 465, 473, 474; Corporation of Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts, (1834) 13 S. 226, 2 Sh. & M.L. 609, 1 Rob. 296; Gould v. M'Corquodale, 8 Macph. 165, Lord President Inglis, at p. 170, Lord Deas, at p. 171; Hislop v. MacRitchie's Trustees, (1881) 8 R. (H. L.) 95, Lord Watson, at p. 102.

The application to the circumstances is this, that at the time of the sale a certain portion of the ground was occupied by the disponers as the Royal Bank Buildings, and the restrictions began, in the first place, by saying that that portion is not to be raised to a greater height than it was at the time except for a certain purpose; and then they go on to impose the restriction which I have read as to the building to be erected on the remaining ground, which, as a matter of fact, formed a continuation of the buildings already erected belonging to the Royal Bank. The material point is that the restrictions are, in terms, made real burdens affecting the subjects thereby disposed. That restriction, however, was imposed, as I have already said, as part of an arrangement whereby restrictions were to be imposed in like manner upon ground retained by the sellers, because the whole restrictions on the buildings were set out to be for the mutual accommodation of both parties in the respect specified. And accordingly the disponers, in laying these real burdens upon the subjects disposed, undertook also that they should burden the subjects which they still retained in the same way.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

Lord Kinnear.

Now, if nothing had followed upon that disposition by way of explaining the full extent and meaning of the restriction, the only question that could have been raised would have been whether, upon a fair construction of the disposition, the restrictions imposed upon the disponees were intended for the benefit of the disponent personally or for the benefit of his property. And I apprehend there cannot be the slightest doubt, upon the construction of the disposition, that the object was to make restrictions upon the property sold for the benefit and advantage of the property which was not sold but still retained, into whose hands soever it might come. There is nothing personal between disponent and disponee, but there is a real burden imposed upon the subjects preventing the erection of buildings above a certain height for the benefit of a certain specified tenement. Now, that is simply the servitude altius non tollendi. The question whether the present owners are entitled to enforce it would prima facie, to my mind, depend upon whether they are singular successors of the disponers in the property for the benefit of which the servitude was laid on; in other words, are they now the proprietors of the dominant tenement, because the moment it is settled that the burdens are intended for the benefit of a property and not for the benefit of a person, you have then in that specific property all that is necessary to constitute a right of servitude.

But, then, the appellants rely further upon the terms of their own title—and I think their argument upon that point was perfectly legitimate, although I am not prepared to say that it was absolutely necessary for the establishment of their right—because they say that when the disponers, the Royal Bank, came to sell to them or their predecessors the property on the north of the Royal Exchange Buildings, they in the first place assigned to them their rights in the burdens and restrictions imposed on the property previously sold to the predecessors of the petitioners, and in the second place they imposed burdens, conditions, and regulations for the purpose of

July 9, 1912.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

—
Lord Kinnear.

restricting building upon the property sold and now belonging to the appellants, in performance of their obligation to their previous disponees whose property they had made subject to the same restrictions.

I cannot say that there seems to me to be any question, in that state of the titles, that the appellants have a right and title to object to the lining in respect that it violates restrictions imposed upon the subjects themselves for the benefit of the property belonging to them. I think the Dean of Guild has so far accepted this view, because, after setting out in somewhat more detail than I have done the condition of the title, he goes on to find "That the proposed operations of the petitioners for which authority is asked will raise the height of the petitioners' buildings and alter the style and elevation of these buildings, and will contravene the restrictive provisions before mentioned." I do not think that that finding was seriously challenged by the respondents, who, otherwise, are maintaining the Dean of Guild's judgment. But then he goes on to say that the objectors do not aver that the proposed operations of the petitioners will in any way damage or injuriously affect the property belonging to the objectors, and then he finds that, as they do not make that averment, they are not entitled to object to these proposed operations being carried out.

That, at first sight, appears to be a finding rested upon a technical point of pleading rather than anything else; but it is obvious, on reading the Dean of Guild's judgment, that he had no intention of proceeding upon any such ground as that, but that he intended to decide, as matter of substantial right, that the objectors could not prevail in this objection because they had no interest to maintain the restrictions. Now, I apprehend that there can be no question—it is perfectly well-settled law, and, indeed, is elementary and fundamental—that there can be no effective prædial servitude in favour of anybody who has not an interest to enforce the restrictions which the servitude creates. The servitude must be for the benefit and advantage of a dominant tenement; and unless it can be shown that the enforcement of it is for such benefit there is no effective servitude. But that there is a right in the proprietor of the dominant tenement appears to me to be made clear upon the statement of the facts to which everybody has agreed. It depends upon the relation of two pieces of ground to one another. The appellants' ground lies to the north of the area occupied by the respondents' buildings. The two lines of buildings are separated by a space of 60 feet from building line to building line. The appellants' ground is directly opposite the building which it is intended to raise, and, upon that statement alone, it is to my mind obvious that there is a sufficient interest to support a servitude altius non tollendi. That is the benefit to these specific buildings which the servitude was intended to protect.

That that is an interest recognised by law is beyond all question—it is not open to dispute. It is indeed so obvious and clear an interest that the servitude, being one of the known servitudes, might have been imposed upon the servient tenement by instruments which did not enter the infestment at all, or did not enter the records just because the mutual interests of the owners of buildings, separated from one another by a narrow space in a town, are so clear and notorious that a purchaser must take into account the probability of such an interest having been protected by a servitude, and must make his own inquiry as to the existence of such a servitude, July 9, 1912. although he finds no notice of it on the records, if he is to escape the burden which it imposes. I am therefore of opinion that there is really no ground for the Dean of Guild's rejection of the objections on the ground of want of interest.

But then it was said that, besides the general interest which is necessary to support a servitude, or to support a right to enforce a building restriction which is founded upon jus quæsitum tertio, or again to support a real burden, you must have, over and above, an interest which enables the complainer to show that there is some special damage or injury to be done to his property in the actual circumstances of the case by the erection of the building of which he complains. I am not aware of any authority or any reason to support that argument. I think it was founded altogether upon a misleading practice of picking out a single sentence from a judgment without reference to the circumstances or the context in which it was said, and founding upon it as if it had been propounded as a solitary dogma to be followed in all cases without qualification.

The cases in which it has been held that notwithstanding an apparently well-constituted servitude or real burden the person founding upon it could not be allowed to enforce it in respect of no interest, have, as I think, been resolvable, all of them, into the question whether the particular thing complained of was or was not within the scope of the servitude, or whether the complainer's tenement was so placed as to be exposed to the mischief which the servitude was intended to guard against. I see no authority for holding that you have first to find that there is a sufficient interest to support a real burden or a servitude and then affirm that, in the special circumstances of the case, the party in whom that interest is vested will suffer some special damage if it is not enforced. If he has a right recognised by the law, it is for him to consider whether in any particular case he will enforce it; and I cannot hold that any Court of law or Dean of Guild Court can have any authority to decide that if, in the whole circumstances, it appears to the Court that the thing he complains of will do him no serious harm and will be for the benefit of his neighbours, therefore his right is not to be enforced.

I think that is brought out very clearly in the case to which the Dean of Guild refers us (although we had a long series of decisions quite properly brought before us, I think it is enough to refer to this one), namely, Gould v. M'Corquodale,¹ where Lord President Inglis laid down the doctrine very clearly. In that case it was said that a singular successor had not an interest to enforce a certain restriction against building. The Lord President said that he thought that the title did effectually create a servitude altius non tollendi in favour of the property on the south of Fox Street (the street in question) as a burden on the subjects on the north. Then he goes on to say: "To what extent such a restriction can be enforced is another matter"—whether the right thus given could be enforced all along the side of the street, that is, enforced not only in favour of the subjects directly on the south as against subjects directly on the

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

Lord Kinneir.

¹ 8 Macph. 165.

July 9, 1912. north, but against other subjects further along the street which did not face the dominant tenement. And he says: "I am inclined to think that, in the case of a servitude altius non tollendi, if the owner of the dominant tenement had no interest to enforce it, the Court would not be disposed to sustain it, if nimiously sought to be enforced in æmulationem vicini," that is, they would not enforce a restriction which hurts the servient owner and does not benefit the dominant owner. But then his Lordship goes on to say: "But that question does not occur here, for the buildings objected to are ex adverso of the advocator's property; and, therefore, if this servitude is good for any purpose, it must be effectual to keep down the height of the buildings opposite the ground belonging to the advocator." I think that sentence is directly applicable to the present case. If the servitude is good for any purpose—and it is conceded that it is a good servitude—it must be effectual to keep down the height of the buildings which are directly opposite the buildings belonging to the appellants and which the respondents propose to raise beyond the permitted height.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Ootton.

Lord Kinnear.

But I think the force and extent of the doctrine of interest the Lord President was there explaining is brought out very clearly by another point in the case, because it was said that the dominant owner in that case had lost his right by allowing buildings to be erected at a different part of the street, and upon that question the Lord President says: "It must be shown (1) that Gould had a good title to object, and (2) that he had as good an interest to object to these buildings as he has in the . . . case" actually in question. "For," he says, "I do not understand anyone being bound by acquiescence to allow the erection of buildings which obstruct his light, merely because he has made no objection to buildings erected at a distance, which do him no harm. If no harm was done him by the buildings, it would be embarking in a very foolish litigation if he attempted to stop them. It therefore appears to me that the plea of abandonment cannot be sustained. Even if Gould had a right to object to the previous buildings, he had comparatively little interest, but he has an obvious interest now." This only shows that although a servitude may be expressed in terms for the general benefit of a certain estate, it may still be a question whether a particular house within the protected area is so situated as to take any advantage from the restriction.

Now, in the application of that judgment, I think that the buildings proposed to be erected run counter to the purpose for which the restriction was laid on the respondents' land, because what was intended to be secured to the appellants' property was that the space already open for air and light in front of their buildings should not be diminished or restricted by the erection of higher buildings on the opposite side of the street. I am therefore of opinion that the Dean of Guild's judgment must be recalled, and that we should remit to him to sustain the appellants' objections and to refuse the petition.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I think that this is a case of proper servitude, and that it is better to treat it as such, and not to allow the question at issue to be confused by reference to the law of real burdens, or of mutuality of restrictions, although I am far from saying that the case might not also be decided July 9, 1912. on these latter considerations had it been necessary. There is a clear servitude altius non tollendi created on the petitioners' property as servient tenement in favour of the remaining property of the Royal Bank, the petitioners' authors, and every part of it, into whosoever hands it might come, as dominant tenement. It is none the less a servitude that a counter servitude was imposed on the dominant tenement in favour of the servient. The objectors are in right of part of the Royal Bank's remaining property, and are therefore entitled to enforce the first-mentioned servitude against the petitioners. The Dean of Guild has, I think, misapprehended the reference by your Lordship in the chair * in a recent case ¹ to the case of Gould v. M'Corquodale,² and perhaps still more misapprehended that case itself. In that case the Lord President (Inglis) certainly says that he was "inclined to think that, in the case of a servitude altius non tollendi, if the owner of the dominant tenement had no interest to enforce it, the Court would not be disposed to sustain it." This is not in itself a very decided statement. But the Dean of Guild has not observed that it was conditioned by his Lordship thus, "if nimiously sought to be enforced in æmulationem vicini." And Lord President Inglis goes on to say, in words which exactly cover the present case,—“That question does not occur here, for the buildings objected to are ex adverso of the advocator's property, and therefore, if this servitude is good for any purpose, it must be effectual to keep down the height of the buildings opposite the ground belonging to the advocator.”

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

—
Ld. Johnston.

But the Dean of Guild also nonsuits the objectors on the ground that they did not aver, and in fact refused to be drawn into averring, that the petitioners' proposed operations would, if carried out, injuriously affect their property. I think the objectors were right in the attitude they maintained. The words of Lord Watson in the case of the *Earl of Zetland v. Hislop*³ are as applicable to the case of co-disponees as to that of superior and vassal. The onus lies upon the disponent who is pleading a release from his obligation to allege and prove that his co-disponent's interest to enforce it has ceased to exist, and not on the latter to allege and prove his continuing interest.

For these reasons I agree with your Lordship that this appeal should be sustained.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The objectors here are proprietors of property immediately ex adverso of the existing Royal Exchange Buildings in Glasgow. They contend that there is in the title of the petitioners a servitude altius non tollendi which they, as owners of the dominant tenement, are entitled to plead. It was admitted that what is proposed to be done would be a contravention of the restrictions in the petitioners' title.

It appears to me that a servitude was well constituted by the terms of the disposition granted by the Royal Bank in favour of the petitioners' predecessors, and that it was conceived in favour of the property now owned by the objectors. We are informed in the pleadings in this case that the

* The Lord President who, though absent at the hearing, was present at advising.

¹ Braid Hills Hotel Co., Limited, v. Manuela, 1909 S. C., at p. 126.

² 8 Macph. 165.

³ (1882) 9 R. (H. L.) 40, at p. 47.

July 9, 1912.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

—
Lord Mac-
kenzie.

whole provisions, declarations, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions contained in the contract of sale entered into in 1827 between the Royal Bank of Scotland and the petitioners' predecessors are repeated ad longum in this disposition. The contract of sale proceeds on the narrative that it was for the mutual accommodation of both parties in securing light, air, access, and amenity to their respective properties, first, that spaces of a certain width should be laid off on the north, south, and east sides of the property conveyed, which were to remain vacant and unbuilt upon in all time coming for the use, benefit, and advantage of the said respective properties—the parties being bound at mutual expense to convert the vacant spaces into a carriageway and pavement. Then follows a provision in regard to the height of the buildings, and, as I read the deed, this also was for the mutual accommodation of both parties in securing light, air, and amenity to their respective properties. In the contract of sale the restriction is (1) as regards the existing building, which it was provided should not be raised to a greater height than it was then unless for the sake of a centre cupola or ornament to be approved of by the first party; and (2) that the side walls and the west-end front of any buildings to be erected to the west of the said building should not exceed 40 feet in height, excepting a space in the centre thereof not exceeding 35 feet wide which might be raised to the height of the then bank, unless it should be deemed advisable to carry the said new erections 2 feet higher for the sake of architectural effect or ornament, and unless the same should be first approved by the first party. As the disposition was granted after buildings satisfactory to, and having the sanction of, all parties had been erected by the petitioners' predecessors, the servitude was made applicable to the buildings which had been erected. By the contract of sale it was provided by the same clause that "in like manner" the buildings fronting each of the north, south, and west sides of the plot or area of ground should form a handsome range of buildings not exceeding three storeys in height above the sunk storey unless where it might be deemed expedient and proper to carry the said building higher for ornament or architectural effect. It was declared by the disposition that the whole of the provisions, declarations, burdens, servitudes, restrictions, and conditions should be real liens and burdens affecting the subjects.

By these provisions, in my opinion, an effectual servitude was constituted in favour of the objectors' property. It was one of the known servitudes—altius non tollendi—and imposed a valid restriction on the petitioners' property. The objectors, as owners of their property, have thus a title to plead it. It does not appear to me to be necessary that they should have any assignation from the Royal Bank, who made the original contract with the Royal Exchange Company. In the contract of ground-annual, dated in 1835, under which the objectors' authors acquired right to the property, it was provided that these predecessors should be always entitled to the benefit of the privileges or burdens stipulated or imposed by the contract of sale above referred to. This clause does not appear to me to make the objectors' case better or worse. Their right is as owners of a dominant tenement, and is independent of assignation.

The petitioners, however, argue that the objectors do not aver any damage or injury which will be done to their property by the operations proposed, July 9, 1912. and are therefore not entitled to plead the servitude. There is no allegation by the petitioners of any change of circumstances. If, therefore, the petitioners' argument is good now, it must have been equally good immediately after the disposition was granted in 1833. The petitioners say the onus is upon the objectors. In my opinion the petitioners' predecessors when they accepted the disposition in 1833 of the servient tenement conceded that the owners of the dominant tenement had an interest to enforce the restriction. It is for the petitioners to aver and prove facts and circumstances sufficient to show that that interest has now been lost. This they are unable to do. The facts speak for themselves. The petitioners' property is to the south, that of the objectors is immediately ex adverso to the north. The distance between is only 60 feet. In these circumstances it would be out of the question to say that a servitude altius non tollendi is not a benefit to the objectors' property. It is plain that they have an interest, and can therefore enforce the servitude against the petitioners.

Proprietors of
Royal
Exchange
Buildings,
Glasgow,
Limited, v.
Cotton.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

THE COURT sustained the appeal, and remitted to the Dean of Guild to sustain the appellants' objections and to refuse the petition.

FORRESTER & DAVIDSON, W.S.—H. B. & F. J. DEWAR, W.S.—Agents.

EULIFF SORENSEN, Appellant.—J. A. Christie.
JOHN GAFF & COMPANY, Respondents.—Carmont.

No. 161.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), First Schedule, (3)—Amount of weekly payment—"Benefit" received from employer—
Payment of hospital charges.

July 10, 1912.
Sorensen v.
John Gaff &
Co.

The Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, enacts, First Schedule (3):—
"In fixing the amount of the weekly payment, regard shall be had to any payment, allowance, or benefit which the workman may receive from the employer during the period of his incapacity. . . ."

Held that payment by employers of an account rendered to them for the maintenance of an injured workman in hospital was a "benefit" received by the workman in the sense of this section, which fell to be taken into account in fixing the amount of his compensation.

IN an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, between Euliff Sorensen, seaman, and John Gaff & Company, ship-owners, Glasgow, the Sheriff-substitute of Lanarkshire at Glasgow (Lyell) pronounced certain findings in fact and in law, and at the request of the workman stated a case for appeal.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

The case set forth:—(1) That the appellant, who was a seaman in the employment of the respondents on board the s.s. 'Shakespeare,' was injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, while the said s.s. was at sea on 23rd December 1911. (2) That on the said 23rd December 1911, on the arrival of the said s.s. in Falmouth Harbour, the appellant entered the Falmouth Cottage Hospital, and was maintained and medically treated there until 16th February 1912. (3) That in respect of such maintenance and treatment the said hospital rendered to the respondents prior to the raising of the arbitration proceedings an account for £9, 5s., which the respondents

July 10, 1912. settled in full, subsequent to the raising of the arbitration proceedings, by a payment of £6, 10s. 7d. (4) That the weekly earnings of the appellant averaged at 34s. 6d. (5) That the respondents paid the appellant compensation at the rate of 17s. 3d., being fifty per cent of 34s. 6d., from the said 16th February 1912 up to 5th April 1912, at or about which latter date they aver that the appellant's incapacity came to an end.

Sorensen v.
John Gaff &
Co.

"The only question upon which the parties desired judgment meantime was as to whether the payment by the respondents of the appellant's maintenance and treatment in Falmouth Cottage Hospital from the date of the accident to his discharge on 16th February was a benefit which the appellant received from the respondents during his incapacity, to which regard must be had in fixing the amount of compensation.

"I found in fact and law (1) that the said payment of £6, 10s. 7d. for the appellant's maintenance and treatment in the said hospital was not payment of a debt due by the respondents to the appellant under the Merchant Shipping Acts or otherwise; (2) that the said payment was a benefit received by the appellant during the period of his incapacity, and in respect of a period of incapacity covered by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and I found in law (1) that in fixing the amount of the weekly payment regard must be had to the said payment of £6, 10s. 7d.; (2) that the respondents' liability to pay compensation to the appellant should be assessed at one penny per week from 26th December 1911 to 16th February 1912, and at 17s. 3d. per week from 16th February 1912 during the appellant's total incapacity, and with these findings I continued the cause."

The question of law for the opinion of the Court was:—"Whether the payment by the respondents of the appellant's maintenance and treatment in Falmouth Cottage Hospital from the date of the injury by accident to his discharge on 16th February 1912 was a benefit received by the appellant from the respondents during the period of his incapacity to which the arbitrator was bound to have regard in fixing the amount of the weekly payment, by virtue of the provisions of paragraph (3) of Schedule 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906."

The case was heard before the First Division on 10th July 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—The payment in question was that of a debt due to the injured man and was not a benefit in the sense of paragraph (3) of the First Schedule. That section required that the payment or benefit should be received by the workman, not by his creditor. To admit the deduction of a payment made to a creditor would be to allow a claim to be set off against the weekly payment, in contravention of paragraph (19) of the same schedule.¹

Counsel for the respondents was not called upon to reply.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I think this is a plain case. By the third head of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, "in fixing the amount of the weekly payment regard shall be had to any payment, allowance, or benefit which the workman may receive from the employer during the period of his incapacity.” Now in this case the arbitrator has found as a matter of fact that the workman obtained a certain benefit, and that this benefit should be taken into account in settling compensation. The only point for us is whether on the facts as stated by the arbitrator there are no facts that would entitle a reasonable man to say that this was a benefit. I think, on the contrary, that all the facts point to the conclusion that this was a benefit, and accordingly I think that there is no case at all for the appellant.

¹ *The following authorities were referred to:—*Suleman v. Owners of the "Ben Lomond," (1909) 2 Butterworth, 499; Kempson v. Owners of "Moss Rose," (1910) 4 Butterworth, 101; M'Dermott v. Owners of "Tintoretto," (1910) 4 Butterworth, 123; Simmonds v. Stourbridge Glazed Brick and Fireclay Co., Limited, [1910] 2 K. B. 269.

LORD KINNEAR, LORD JOHNSTON, and LORD MACKENZIE concurred.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the affirmative.

ST CLAIR SWANSON & MANSON, W.S.—J. & J. ROSS, W.S.—Agents.

SIR RALPH ANSTRUTHER AND OTHERS (Sir Windham R. C. Anstruther's Trustees), Appellants.—Blackburn, K.C.—C. H. Brown.
THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, Respondents.—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

WILLIAM ROGER PATON, Appellant.—Chree, K.C.—
Hon. W. Watson.
THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, Respondents.—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

No. 162.
July 10, 1912.
Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Revenue—Duties on land values—Provisions as to minerals—Meaning of expression “minerals”—Felsite whinstone—Granite—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. VII. cap. 8), secs. 20, 22, 24.

Held that all substances obtained from the crust of the earth, other than the surface soil, by mining, quarrying, or open working are minerals in the sense of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, with the exception of those substances expressly excepted in the Act; and accordingly that Felsite whinstone and granite, not being among the excepted substances, were minerals, and subject to mineral rights duty.

I.—Anstruther's Trustees.

THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, acting under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910,* made the following assessment of mineral rights

Valuation Appeal Court.
Ld. Johnston.
Lord Salvesen.
Lord Cullen.

* The Finance Act (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. VII. cap. 8), enacts:—

Sec. 20. “Mineral Rights Duty.—(1) There shall be charged, levied, and paid for the financial year ending the thirty-first day of March Nineteen hundred and ten, and every subsequent financial year, on the rental value of all rights to work minerals and of all mineral wayleaves, a duty (in this Act referred to as a mineral rights duty) at the rate in each case of one shilling for every twenty shillings of that rental value. . . . (5) Mineral rights duty shall not be charged in respect of common clay, common brick clay, common brick earth, or sand, chalk, limestone, or gravel.”

Sec. 22. “Special Provisions as to Increment Value Duty and Reversion Duty in the case of Minerals Worked or Leased.— . . . (8) Nothing in this section shall apply to minerals which are exempt from mineral rights duty under this Act.”

Sec. 24. “Definitions for purpose of Mineral Provisions.— . . .

July 10, 1912. duty on the trustees of Sir Windham R. C. Anstruther for the year ending 31st March 1911 :—

Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Mineral Rights and Wayleaves chargeable.	Rental Value assessed by the Commissioners.	Mineral Rights Duty at one shilling in the pound on the Rental Value.
1.	2.	3.
Stone : Cairngryffe.	£ 753	£ 37	s. 13	d. 0

Sir W. R. C. Anstruther's trustees appealed under section 33 of the Act to a referee, on the ground that the stone in question (Felsite stone) was not a mineral.

The decision of the referee was in the following terms:—"The stone or rock called a 'Felsite' stone, taken from Cairngryffe Quarry, is, in terms of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, a mineral.

DAVID RANKINE, Referee."

Sir W. R. C. Anstruther's trustees appealed, by stated case, under sections 33 and 42 of the Act, to the Judges of the Court of Session named for the purpose of hearing appeals under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts.

The facts of the case are contained in the following excerpt from a note by the referee which was included in the stated case:—

"The stone or rock as to which the appeal has been taken is leased by Sir Windham Robert Carmichael Anstruther, of Anstruther and Carmichael, Baronet, to the Upper Ward District Committee of the County Council of the county of Lanark. The subjects are described in the lease as All and Whole the whinstone quarry situated on the estate of Carmichael, in the parish of Pettinain and county of Lanark, near the top of the hill called Cairngryffe, and known as the Cairngryffe Quarry, together with the land necessary to form a double line of rails or hutch road from the aforesaid quarry to the loading bank to be formed on the west side of the Caledonian main line of railway. The tenants are also given the use of certain other lands and facilities necessary for the purpose of working, breaking, and carrying away the stone. . . .

"The stone or rock is a red-coloured hard Felsite rock, which is a form of whin, and it is of igneous origin. It is quarried or roughly broken by explosives, and is thereafter generally broken on the quarry floor by hand labour to a size suitable for being passed through a stone-breaking machine, a small portion of it being broken into two sizes of handmade road metal, from which the 'Grush' is extracted. The greater bulk of the roughly broken rock, amounting, I was informed, to 120 tons per day, is carried by tramway a distance of two miles or thereby to works placed near the public railway, where it is Where any minerals are at any time being worked by means of any colliery, mine, quarry, or open working, all the minerals which belong to the same proprietor, if the minerals are being worked by the proprietor, or which the lessee has power to work if the minerals are being worked by a lessee, and which would in the ordinary course of events be worked by the same colliery, mine, quarry, or open working, shall be deemed to be minerals which are being worked at that date. . . ."

broken by machinery and screened into three sizes, the proportions July 10, 1912. produced, as I was informed, being:—

“Ten parts of large sized, or 2½-inch road metal, which is used on main roads. Anstruther's Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

“Three parts of 1¼ to 1½-inch road metal, called seconds, which is used for side roads. Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

“Two parts of ‘Grush,’ that being the small particles of the material passing through a 7/8th scree or riddle. The Grush is used for blinding or surfacing the metal on roads and for the surfacing of footpaths.

“Expressing the proportions in percentages they become roundly, 67 per cent of large sized or 2½-inch road metal; 20 per cent of seconds or 1½-inch road metal; and 13 per cent of Grush.

“In the course of argument by counsel for the appellant it was maintained that the inventory or list of excepted minerals or substances contained in section 20, subsection 5, of the Finance Act, was not intended to be final nor limited to the substances therein named, and that it is to be extended to substances ejusdem generis with those named, and further extended to those contained in a letter received by the agents for the appellant from Mr Gillespie, Surveyor of Taxes, Hamilton, which shows that the list of exempted minerals has been added to by the Revenue Authorities. The following is a copy of the copy letter which was produced:—

“Copy Letter, The Surveyor of Taxes, Hamilton, to Messrs Russell & Dunlop, W.S.

“‘2nd August 1910.

“‘Dear Sirs,—I am in receipt of yours of yesterday. I assume that the “soft stone” you refer to has to be crushed or broken up in some way before it is fit for road-making. Please say if I am right in this. If my assumption is correct, I think the article must be considered as stone and not as gravel.

“‘I may mention for your information that the following mentioned substances are treated as not liable for mineral rights duty:—

Hearthstone. } (Derived from Upper Greensand.)
Firestone. }

Flint.

Portland Stone.

Carstone. (Derived from Lower Greensand.)

Sandstone.

Freestone.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) T. GILLESPIE,
Surveyor.’

“Counsel for the Commissioners explained that the letter was not to be held as extending the list of exempted minerals, but is to be taken simply as a concession made by the Commissioners in an individual case. I would add that I have not been officially advised in respect of that letter, and all I have for my guidance in arriving at a decision are the Act and the statutory rules. . . .”

II.—Paton.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue assessed William Roger Paton, of Grandhome, Woodside, Aberdeen, for mineral rights duty under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, in respect of two granite quarries of which he was the owner. The referee to whom he

July 10, 1912. appealed having decided that granite was a mineral within the meaning of the Act, Paton appealed by stated case to the Judges of the Court of Session named for the purpose of hearing appeals under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts.

Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

The facts, as stated by the referee in the case, were as follows:—

"I found the subjects on which the assessment has been made consist of two quarries. These quarries are let under separate leases by the appellant, the one to George Hall and the other to John M'Adam & Sons. . . .

"On the occasion of my visit, I found that Messrs M'Adam & Sons were not quarrying any solid rock, and I understand they had not done so. They were turning over the rubbish laid aside in the former working of the quarry, which rubbish apparently consists partly of inferior rock and partly of a harder rock, and they were selecting the harder portions and passing them through a breaking machine, from which it passed through a screen, the broken stuff being thereby separated into:—

Dust.

$\frac{3}{8}$ th-inch chucks.

$\frac{1}{2}$ -inch chucks.

$\frac{3}{4}$ -inch chucks.

$1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch metal.

$2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch metal.

"The metal is again passed through the breaker unless there should be an order for it, but the production for which there is most demand is chucks, which are used partly for concrete work and partly for footwalks, the dust being used as a lime sand or for blinding roads.

"Mr Hall's operations are confined to quarrying the stone and cutting it up and dressing it for building purposes. I understand that some of the chips which are produced in the course of cutting up and dressing the stones are occasionally disposed of for use on roads. . . .

"In the quarry now in operation the post of granite is overlain by several feet of soil and subsoil, and I do not see wherein this granite can be said to be part of the soil. No doubt the granite extends over a large area in the locality in question, and it may possibly be that granite in the ordinary use of the term might be held to be the common rock of the district. But the granite in the district varies in quality, and hence it is that search by pitting or otherwise has to be made so as to discover where it is to be found of a quality fit for being profitably worked. There is evidence in the district of numbers of abandoned openings, thus showing that the good granite may be said to lie in pockets or areas of variable size. The quarry in question is of that class, the good rock being apparently of limited extent."

The two cases, Anstruther's Trustees and Paton, were heard together on 22nd June 1912.

Argued for the appellants in both the cases;—The substances in question were not minerals within the meaning of the Act and were not liable to duty. They were not minerals in the ordinary and popular acceptation of the term, and they were not minerals in the somewhat special sense which had been given to the word by the decisions of the Courts in questions arising in common law conveyances and under Railways, Canals, and Waterworks Clauses

Acts.¹ If, accordingly, they were minerals they must be so in a new July 10, 1912. sense of the term invented by the Finance Act. That the Act should have invented a second "legal" meaning for minerals was highly improbable, seeing that it would lead to the very anomalous result that a land-owner might have to pay mineral rights duty for substances which he could not claim as minerals under the Railways Clauses Acts. The presumption was that the Act had used "minerals" in the ordinary signification given to it in legal decisions, and there was no reason to assume that it had given the word a special meaning. It did not contain a definition of the word, and the explanation of subsection 5 of section 20, upon which the respondents so strongly founded, was to be found in the fact that doubts had recently been entertained about the precise position of the substances there exempted.² This was a taxing statute, and should be construed strictly and in the way least burdensome to the taxpayer.

Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.
Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Argued for the respondents;—The substances were minerals within the meaning of the Act and liable to mineral rights duty. It was clear from the Act that the word "mineral" was used in its popular signification of any constituent of the earth's crust other than mere surface soil. Section 24 showed that minerals included substances got by quarrying and surface working as well as mining. The only reasonable explanation of subsection 5 of section 20 was that the term mineral included all mineral substances except the substances there enumerated, which would have been minerals also had they not been expressly excepted. It was to be noted too that in one case granite had been expressly held to be a mineral.³ The purpose of the statute was to tax landowners for all profits, other than agricultural profits, made out of the earth, and these included the profits assessed here.

At advising on 10th July 1912,—

I.—Anstruther's Trustees.

LORD JOHNSTON.—One of the new duties imposed by the Finance Act of 1910 is the mineral rights duty. The present case raises the question whether that duty attaches to the product of a quarry belonging to Sir W. R. Carmichael Anstruther's trustees, in which a particular species of whinstone called Felsite is worked for road metal, under a lease by the trustees to the road authority of the Upper Ward of Lanarkshire. I do not think that it is necessary to enter upon the details, whether relating to the species of rock, or to the mode in which it is worked, or to the terms of the lease to the road authority, which are set forth by Mr Rankine, the referee, in the case which he has stated. The simple question is whether this species

¹ North British Railway Co. v. Budhill Coal and Sandstone Co., 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glenboig Fireclay Co., 1911 S. C. (H. L.) 72; Forth Bridge Railway Co. v. Incorporation of Guildry of Dunfermline, 1909 S. C. 493; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington, 1911 S. C. 552, 1912 S. C. (H. L.) 9; Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie, (1888) 15 R. (H. L.) 94; Midland Railway Co. v. Checkley, (1867) L. R., 4 Eq. 19; Great Western Railway v. Carpalla United China Clay Co., Limited, [1909] 1 Ch. 218, [1910] A. C. 83.

² MacSwinney on Mines, Quarries, and Minerals, 4th ed. 565; Scott v. Midland Railway Co., [1901] 1 K. B. 317.

³ Attorney-General v. Welsh Granite Co., (1887) 35 W. R. 617.

July 10, 1912. of rock is a mineral in the sense of the statute, and whether, therefore, the mineral rights duty is exigible from Sir W. R. Carmichael Anstruther's trustees as the lessors.

Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. Johnston.

The Finance Act, 1910, section 20 (subsection 1), sets forth that there shall be charged, levied, and paid for each financial year ending 31st March "on the rental value of all rights to work minerals and of all mineral way-leaves, a duty (in this Act referred to as a mineral rights duty), at the rate in each case of one shilling for every twenty shillings of that rental value."

The same section (subsection 3) provides that every proprietor of any mineral shall, upon notice being given to him by the Commissioners requiring him to give particulars of the amount received by him in respect of the right to work minerals, make a return in the form required by the notice; and subsection 4, that mineral rights duty shall be assessed by the Commissioners on said return.

Had we to determine, without any further assistance from the statute, what is a mineral in the sense of the statute, the various considerations which have led the Court, in cases of voluntary transmissions of land reserving minerals and of compulsory purchases of land under statutory powers with statutory reservations of minerals, to determine what are and what are not minerals in the sense of the grant or of the statute would form a guide to the determination, and I think would lead to the undoubted conclusion that the Felsite rock in question was not a mineral in the sense of this statute, but was one of those ordinary substances composing the crust of the earth which was of the nature of the common rock of the district. But we are not left by the Finance Act, 1910, in that position. The same section (subsection 5) declares that "mineral rights duty shall not be charged in respect of common clay, common brick clay, common brick earth, or sand, chalk, limestone, or gravel." That is to say, these substances are by the statute excepted from the general description "minerals"; and the first suggestion, therefore, which the statute conveys is that, if it were considered necessary to except these substances from the general description of minerals, that general description must be intended to include everything else which can be wrought beneath the surface.

Passing to section 22, which provides rules for the charging of a different duty, viz., increment duty, in the case of minerals, subsection 8 provides that "nothing in this section shall apply to minerals which are exempt from mineral rights duty under this Act." This, again, indicates that in the sense of the statute all the component parts of the crust of the earth beneath the surface which can be worked, and are not within the exception above quoted, are to be deemed minerals. Further, there is an interpretation clause (section 24) having reference to the provisions of the statute imposing the mineral rights duty, &c., but it contains no definition of the term "mineral." It does, however, contain this important clause: "Where any minerals are at any time being worked by means of any colliery, mine, quarry, or open working, all the minerals which belong to the same proprietor, if the minerals are being worked by the proprietor, or which the lessee has power to work if the minerals are being worked by a lessee, and which would, in the ordinary course of events, be worked by the same colliery, mine, quarry, or open working, shall be deemed to be minerals which are being worked at that date." This clause disposes of any possibility of distinction between those substances which can only be worked by mining in the ordinary sense of that term, and those which can be worked by quarrying or open working.

Having regard to the various provisions of the statute to which I have above referred, I can have no hesitation in holding that the term "minerals" in the sense of the statute does not bear the restricted meaning which it does in reservations of minerals, either in voluntary transactions regarding land or in compulsory purchases under railway, canal, and waterworks or similar Acts, and that in the sense of the statute, any substance, other than those excepted specially, which is obtained from the crust of the earth beneath the surface, by mining or quarrying or open working, and for which a consideration of the nature of rent or royalty is paid, is a mineral in the sense of the statute; and that upon the rights to work such substances the mineral rights duty imposed by the statute is payable under the statute.

The only difficulty that I experience is in understanding and appreciating the bearing of the letter which the referee quotes, addressed by the Surveyor of Taxes at Hamilton to the appellants' agents, in which the surveyor states, presumably under instructions, for the information of the latter, that the following mentioned substances "are treated as not liable for mineral rights duty," namely, certain of the greensand rocks, flint, Portland stone, sandstone, and freestone. And the appreciation of this statement is not made any easier by the explanation made on the part of the Commissioners that the letter is "not to be held as extending the list of exempted minerals, but is to be taken simply as a concession made by the Commissioners in an individual case." It is not to be wondered at that the appellants regarded this letter as a contemporaneous interpretation of the statute, by those who ought best to know its intention, which leads a fortiori to the conclusion that Felsite used for road metal ought not to be treated as a mineral under the statute. But I have searched the statute in vain for any authority conferred upon the Commissioners to treat as not minerals what the statute treats as minerals, or to make concessions in individual cases. I readily concede to the appellants that if the substances which, in the letter quoted, the Commissioners assume to treat as not minerals, are not minerals in the sense of the statute, a fortiori Felsite and the other road metals are not minerals. And, but for reasons which readily suggest themselves, I would have expected the Commissioners in common fairness to extend their discrimination to the road metals. But I do not find that I am authorised, any more than the Commissioners, either to exempt any particular substances from the general term "minerals" which are minerals in the sense of the statute, or to include any substances under the term "minerals" which are not minerals in the sense of the statute. And therefore, as I must hold for the reasons above given, that, whether ordinarily regarded as a mineral or not, Felsite must be deemed a mineral in the sense of this statute, I propose to your Lordships that we affirm the determination of the referee.

LORD SALVESEN.—I concur with your Lordship in the chair. I think there is really no doubt as to the true construction of the Act, and that,

July 10, 1912.
Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. Johnston.

July 10, 1912. for the purposes of the mineral rights duty thereby imposed, all substances in the earth, apart from the surface soil, must be treated as minerals excepting the substances specially exempted.

Anstruther's
Trustees v.
Inland
Revenue.

Paton v.
Inland
Revenue.

Lord Salvesen.

The main difficulty in the case is occasioned by the letter from the Surveyor of Taxes, to which your Lordship has referred, in which the appellants were informed that certain substances were to be treated as not liable for mineral rights duty. If this letter is to be regarded as an authoritative exposition of the Act, there appears to me to be no conceivable reason why stone which is only useful for road making should be treated as a mineral, while various forms of stone, of apparently far greater value, used for building are not to be treated as such. I associate myself with what your Lordship has said as to the apparent illegality of these exemptions on the construction of the Act for which the Inland Revenue has contended here, and which we hold to be correct. If such exemptions are to be granted, they should be made the subject of legislative enactment, and it would seem to be an entire novelty, in the levying of taxes imposed by an Act of Parliament, that the officials who have to administer it should take upon themselves the right of granting exemption to a large body of taxpayers, and so to sacrifice a considerable revenue which Parliament has directed to be collected. It is the interest of every taxpayer in the country to see that all persons who are liable to the tax which he pays are made to contribute on exactly the same footing. No Government departments have any power, unless expressly conferred by some statute to which we were not referred, to grant exemptions to one body of taxpayers and so to override the Act of Parliament which it is their duty to execute.

LORD CULLEN concurred.

II.—Paton.

LORD JOHNSTON.—In the case of William Roger Paton of Grandhome the appeal relates to a different class of stone from that dealt with in the last case, namely, granite. The same considerations apply to this case also, and judgment will follow accordingly.

LORD SALVESEN and LORD CULLEN concurred.

THE COURT found in each case that the decision of the referee was right, and dismissed the appeals.

RUSSELL & DUNLOP, W.S.—MARTIN, MILLIGAN, & MACDONALD, W.S.—
SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

WILLIAM JAMES WOOD, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—M^r Lennan, K.C.— No. 163.

Kemp.

THE WESTERN CEMETERY COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Respondents). July 10, 1912.

—Murray, K.C.—D. Anderson.

Wood v.
Western

Local Government—Rates and assessments—Exemptions—“Ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground”—Cemetery only partially occupied and earning profit—Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874 (37 and 38 Vict. cap. 20), sec. 1. Cemetery Co., Limited.

The Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1, exempts from assessments and rates “any ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground.”

Held (dub. Lord Johnston) that the whole of a portion of ground belonging to a cemetery company fenced off and enclosed for burial purposes, was “exclusively appropriated as burial ground,” and accordingly exempted, notwithstanding the facts (1) that the lairs into which it was divided were only in course of being sold and occupied; (2) that the company derived a profit from the sale of lairs.

ON 7th June 1910 William James Wood, collector of poor and school rates for the parish of Glasgow, brought an action against the Western Cemetery Company, Limited, for payment of £144, 11s. 3d., being the amount of assessments for poor, school, and other rates imposed on the defenders by the Parish Council of the parish of Glasgow for the year ending Whitsunday 1910, as owners and occupiers of the Western Cemetery, Maryhill, Glasgow. 1ST DIVISION.
Lord
Skerrington.

The pursuer averred that the defenders acquired and carried on the cemetery with the object of making profit by selling to the public rights of sepulture; that they earned large profits by the undertaking, and that no restrictions were laid upon them by their titles as to the uses to which they might put the ground. He denied that the ground was “exclusively appropriated as a burial ground,” and as such exempted from rates and assessments under the Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1.*

The defenders averred that the ground was exclusively appropriated as burial ground within the meaning of the section.

They pleaded;—(1) The pursuer’s averments being irrelevant and insufficient to support the conclusions of the summons, the action should be dismissed. (2) The defenders’ property, in respect of which the assessments now sought to be recovered were imposed, being exclusively appropriated as burial ground, and consequently exempt from assessment in terms of the Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, the defenders should be assoilzied, with expenses.

On 1st November 1910 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.†

* The Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874 (37 and 38 Vict. cap. 20), enacts:—Sec. 1. “No assessment or rate under any general or local Act of Parliament for any county, burgh, parochial or other local purpose whatsoever, shall be assessed or levied upon or in respect of . . . any ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground.”

† “OPINION.—The question in this case is whether a cemetery which belongs to a cemetery company and is used for the purpose of making profit by selling rights of sepulture therein is exempted from local taxation as being ‘exclusively appropriated as burial ground’ within the meaning of July 10, 1912. The pursuer reclaimed.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

The case, having come up for hearing before the First Division, was continued to give parties an opportunity of lodging a joint minute of admission of facts.

The facts stated in the minute which was thereafter lodged were summarised by Lord Mackenzie as follows:—

“ The total extent of the land acquired by the defenders extended to 54·35 acres. They originally fenced off or enclosed as cemetery ground 14½ acres or thereby. The remainder of the total area, excepting a road, was then let by the defenders for agricultural purposes. From time to time the defenders have increased the extent of the ground fenced off for burial purposes, and there are now 27·71 acres so enclosed. The following subjects have been entered separately in the Valuation-roll, and assessments thereon duly paid—(1) the lands leased for agricultural purposes; (2) the cemetery superin-

the Act 37 and 38 Vict. cap. 20. I was informed that in practice such exemption has been allowed. The same statute exempts churches, &c., ‘exclusively appropriated to public religious worship.’ This latter exemption was considered by the Court in the case of Trustees of College Street U.F. Church v. Parish Council of Edinburgh, Jan. 31, 1901, 3 F. 414. There does not, however, appear to be any decision as to the exemption of cemeteries from taxation.

“ Counsel for the pursuer (a collector of rates) argued with great force that the exemption from taxation of a cemetery used as a source of profit to its owners was an anomaly and constituted an injustice to the other rate-payers, which Parliament could not have contemplated. He argued that the words of the statute were satisfied by holding that the exemption applied to public cemeteries such as parish churchyards or burial grounds established under the Burial Grounds Act of 1855, and (possibly) to cemeteries which are dedicated as such by private trust. In such cases there is no question of making a profit out of the burying ground; and, further, the dedication is complete because the public, or certain sections of the public, are entitled to insist upon the whole of the ground being used for burial purposes. In the case of a private cemetery like the one under consideration, the pursuer’s counsel did not dispute that the portion of the ground actually occupied by lairs is exclusively appropriated as burial ground not merely de facto but also de jure. The law forbids any wanton disturbance of a grave, and it might be invoked not merely by a lair-holder but also by a relative of the deceased. But he argued that the ground already given off for lairs is practically of no value to the Cemetery Company, and that the value of the cemetery as a profit-producing subject consists in the portion of the ground which has not yet been given off or ‘appropriated as burial ground.’ This argument does not, in my opinion, give sufficient weight to the fact that when the owner of a private cemetery has once allowed interments to take place he subjects himself to serious restrictions as to the use which he can lawfully make of the remainder of the ground.—See Cunningham v. Edmiston, June 23, 1871, 9 Macph. 869, per Lord Gifford (Ordinary), p. 875, and Lord Deas, p. 885. In the absence of any relevant averments to the contrary, I must assume that the only profitable use which the defenders, the Cemetery Company, could lawfully make of the unoccupied portion of the ground would be to use it as burial ground, a phrase which, in my opinion, is not confined to actual interments, but might include other uses appropriate to a burial ground, such as the erection of a mortuary chapel or a cenotaph.

“ In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the defenders’ cemetery is de facto exclusively appropriated as burial ground, and that it is immaterial to point out that the defenders may, if they please, cease to sell lairs tendent's house and offices; (3) ground feued to the Scottish Burial July 10, 1912. Reform and Cremation Society, Limited; and (4) a mortuary chapel, within the fence enclosing ground set apart for burial purposes, used in connection with the portions thereof set aside for several of the Jewish synagogues. Wood v. Western Cemetery Co., Limited.

"The twelfth article of the minute of admissions is as follows:— 'That the whole area of 27·71 acres or thereby now fenced off or enclosed for cemetery purposes, and enclosed within the boundaries coloured purple on said plan, is laid out as lairs for burial, with the necessary carriage drives, walks, grass, and flower plots, and the said superintendent's house, &c.; that said 27·71 acres are divided into various sections containing lairs, the right of burial in which has been or is in course of being sold by the defenders on the terms and conditions and at the varying scales of prices set forth in the rules and regulations, of which No. 22 of process is a copy, and common lairs in which interments have been and are being made for a pecuniary consideration, as stated in said rules and regulations; that the whole subjects before referred to, viz., (1) those let for agricultural purposes; (2) those feued to the Cremation Society; (3) the Jewish mortuary chapel; and (4) the superintendent's house and offices, do not form any part of the subjects entered in the Valuation-roll as the Western Cemetery, about the assessability of which the present action has been raised.'"

The case was heard before the First Division (without the Lord President) on 3rd and 4th July 1912.

Argued for the reclaimer;—The ground was not "exclusively appropriated as burial ground" for the following reasons:—(1) The primary object of the defenders' Company was the earning of profits. This element of commercial enterprise was wholly inconsistent with "exclusive" appropriation as a burial ground.¹ Further, it was quite obvious that it could not have been the object of the Legislature, by the Act of 1874, to free a profit-making concern from the ordinary burdens. What it had in view was the old parochial burying ground or its statutory equivalent. That this must have been so was clear from the course of legislation prior to 1874 on the subject of exempand so allow the unoccupied ground to remain unprofitable. The view above expressed as to cemeteries is consistent with the construction which I should be disposed to place upon the exemption of churches or premises exclusively appropriated to public religious worship. I do not think that it is a condition for obtaining the exemption that the church should be held under a title which forbids it to be used for any purpose except public worship. It is, I think, enough that it is de facto so used under circumstances which give rise to the inference that the user is of a more or less permanent character. The case of a cemetery is really a fortiori of the case of a church. As I have already explained, the vacant portion of the cemetery cannot (generally speaking), either de facto or de jure be put to a profitable use for secular purposes, whereas there are voluntary churches in Scotland which might be used for secular purposes without alteration of their structure or violation of the law.

"I accordingly dismiss the action, but it will be open hereafter to the pursuer to allege and prove, if he can, that there are portions of the so-called cemetery which are not in any reasonable sense appropriated as burial ground."

¹ Trustees of College Street United Free Church v. Parish Council of Edinburgh, (1901) 3 F. 414, Lord President Balfour, at p. 418.

July 10, 1912.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

tions from assessment, and burial grounds.¹ (2) The ground could not be "exclusively appropriated" so long as it was, as now, only partially occupied. It was not enough that it had been fenced off and enclosed. It could not be "exclusively appropriated" until all the lairs were occupied or sold. At present it was only partially appropriated. (3) Exclusive appropriation in the sense of the Act of 1874 meant appropriation de jure and not merely de facto, and could only take place where there was a perpetual dedication to burial ground purposes either by common law or by Act of Parliament. In the present case there was nothing to prevent the Cemetery Company using the unoccupied ground for other purposes, and there was thus no dedication, unless perhaps such as might be implied in the contracts already entered into with lair-holders.² If there was any ambiguity in the words "exclusively appropriated" they should be interpreted so as to limit rather than to extend the statutory exemption from assessment.³

Argued for the respondents ;—The ground was "exclusively appropriated as burial ground" in the sense of the Act, if the words of the Act were reasonably interpreted. The best evidence of "appropriation" was use, and admission 12 of the minute showed that this area, the whole of which must be regarded as a unum quid, was actually used as a cemetery. Actual use, however, was not necessary to constitute appropriation.⁴ Dedication was sufficient, and dedication took place when, as here, the ground was fenced off and one or more lair-holders acquired a contractual right to insist on the ground being preserved in all time coming as a place of interment.⁵ The pursuer confused the purpose for which the Company had bought the ground, viz., profit, with the purpose to which the ground had been devoted, viz., a burial ground. It was with the latter only that the Act dealt. The Act was obviously passed to give effect to the actual practice of assessors in exempting this class of cemetery and to encourage the formation of cemetery companies.

At advising on 10th July 1912,—

LORD KINNEAR.—I think that this case has been rightly decided by the Lord Ordinary. His Lordship had not the advantage, which we have now, of having all the material facts before him conclusively determined by a joint minute of admissions, for, when the case first came before this Court we found that the parties were at variance upon some material points, and, accordingly, we gave them an opportunity—of which they have taken ¹ 3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 30 ; 18 and 19 Vict. cap. 68, sec. 26 ; 28 and 29 Vict. cap. 62 ; cf. North Manchester Overseers v. Winstanley, [1907] 1 K. B. 27, [1908] 1 K. B. 835, [1910] A. C. 7 ; University of Edinburgh v. Greig, (1865) 3 Macph. 1151, 6 Macph. (H. L.) 97.

² See Paterson v. Beattie, (1845) 7 D. 561 ; Cunningham v. Edmiston, (1871) 9 Macph. 869 ; Craigton Cemetery Co. v. Assessor for Lower Ward of Lanarkshire, (1889) 16 R. 802.

³ Parish Council of Edinburgh v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, 1907 S. C. 1079, Lord M'Laren, at pp. 1087-88.

⁴ Burial Grounds (Scotland) Act, 1855 (18 and 19 Vict. cap. 68), sec. 11.

⁵ Cunningham and Others v. Edmiston and Others, 9 Macph. 869 ; Paterson v. Beattie, 7 D. 561.

advantage—of removing any difficulty in fact by adjusting admissions. July 10, 1912.

The result of the minute of admissions that is now before us appears to me to justify the inference drawn by the Lord Ordinary upon the imperfect materials before him, and I think that his Lordship has also come to a right conclusion in point of law.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

Lord Kinnear.

The question is whether a cemetery belonging to the defenders is exempt from assessment by virtue of the provisions of 37. and 38 Victoria, chapter 20. The provision in terms enacts that no assessment or rate “shall be assessed or levied . . . upon or in respect of any ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground.”

The state of facts upon which the defenders claim the benefit of this exemption are that they are a company incorporated mainly for the purpose of establishing and conducting a cemetery, that they have acquired ground for the purpose of a cemetery, and that it has been partially occupied. They have acquired also other ground which is not in the meantime laid out for burial purposes, but is put to other uses; and for that other ground they admit that they must be assessed, as they are, in the ordinary course. The property which is not appropriated to cemetery purposes is not entitled to any exemption. But then, as regards the ground which is really the subject in dispute, they say that they had originally fenced off and enclosed as cemetery ground a portion of the total area extending to fourteen acres and three-quarters, that from time to time they increased the extent of the ground so fenced off and enclosed for burial purposes, and that now the portion totally annexed and situated within the boundaries shown on the plans extends to 27·71 acres, and that is the ground presently fenced off and enclosed for burial purposes. Then they say—I mean both the parties say, for it is a joint admission—“that the whole area of 27·71 acres or thereby now fenced off or enclosed for cemetery purposes . . . is laid out as lairs for burial, with the necessary carriage drives, walks, grass, and flower plots, and the said superintendent’s house.” They say “that the 27·71 acres are divided into various sections containing lairs, the right of burial in which has been or is in course of being sold by the defenders on the terms and conditions and at the varying scales of prices set forth,” and that the other subjects which they have described, namely, “(1) Those let for agricultural purposes; (2) those fened to the Cremation Society; (3) the Jewish mortuary chapel; and (4) the superintendent’s house and offices, do not form any part of the subjects” about which the present question is raised. We are now concerned only with the 27 acres fenced off and enclosed for cemetery purposes. And then it is added that the whole “profit derived by the defenders from the business carried on by them, which, however, partly represents return of capital, has been sufficient to yield an average dividend of 4·7 per cent per annum to the preference shareholders, and of 5·03 to the ordinary shareholders.”

Now, it appears to me that, according to that description, the ground which has been fenced off and enclosed and dedicated to the purposes of a cemetery is exactly within the terms of the exemption clause. It is appropriated exclusively to the purposes of a burial ground. But then, the reclaimer maintained two arguments to the contrary, both of which must be considered. In the first place, he said that ground is not exclusively

July 10, 1912. appropriated to burial purposes so long as it is only partly occupied. It is not enough, according to his argument, that people designed certain ground for the purposes of a burial ground, but they must in fact make use of it for that purpose, and for that purpose exclusively. If the appropriation does not rest upon mere intention, but the ground has been actually set apart and dedicated to this one purpose, to the exclusion of any other, the Act is satisfied. I agree that, so long as people merely design to use land in a particular way, they do not come within the exemption, and I think the Company is under the necessity of proving that the ground is in fact set apart. But in ordinary language it is set apart for the purpose of a cemetery when it is fenced off and enclosed for this purpose, and when, so far as it is used at all, it is used for the burial of persons who have already acquired rights for themselves or their relatives by purchasing lairs in the ground.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.
—
Lord Kinnear.

If this rested merely upon the fact of the ground having been fenced off and devoted to this purpose and to no other, I should have thought it enough. But then I think the legal effect of the contracts made by the Company must be taken into account, and I take it to be decided by the case of Cunningham v. Edmiston,¹ that, when a company has formed a cemetery of this kind and given rights of interment in particular lairs which have been actually used for that purpose, the effect of the contract is not only to entitle the lair-holders to insist that the particular lairs allocated to them shall be used exclusively for interment, but that there is also an implied obligation that the whole cemetery shall be used and applied for the purpose of interment and no other. It is set apart and expressly dedicated in the clearest manner to the purposes of a burial ground, and everybody who acquires a right of burial in that ground is entitled to insist that the cemetery so set apart shall be used only for the purposes of a cemetery. Therefore, I think it is no answer to say that the ground presently occupied by lairs is not the entire ground fenced off and set apart for the purposes of a cemetery. Upon the plain meaning of the words, "ground appropriated" to a particular purpose, as I understand language, means ground set apart for that purpose so as to admit of its being used for no other, notwithstanding that every part of it may not yet be completely occupied.

The second point the reclamer maintained was this : he said that although the cemetery is so set apart, it is not exclusively appropriated to the purpose of a burial ground because the proprietors earn a profit from the sale of lairs ; and the point, as I understand it, is that this enactment is not intended for the benefit of any cemetery owners who use their land for the purpose of profit. I cannot find any limitation of that kind in the words. They are perfectly clear, and cover all ground exclusively appropriated for the purpose. It is said that the word "exclusively" excludes among other things the idea of profit. That, however, is not a construction but a perversion of the language. No doubt the word "purpose" is liable to ambiguity. It may signify the special use to which a piece of land is applied, or the ulterior intention of the owner in so using it. But it can hardly have both meanings at once ; and in the present case the context shows very clearly which of the two is intended. The subject of the enactment is the ground itself. It is the ground that is to be set apart for one exclusive purpose, and, if that condition is satisfied, it appears to me to be quite irrelevant to inquire whether the people who have so set it apart are to derive any emolument from it or not. It is said that this denies its proper force to the word "exclusively." But the operative exclusion which is postulated in the enactment must be due to the special use of the ground, and not to the motives of the land owner. If a particular piece of land is used for the purpose of a burial ground alone, that will exclude market gardening or building, and every other purpose for which it might have been suitable, just as completely and effectually when the owner hopes for a reasonable return for his expenditure, as if he had acted from pure benevolence or public spirit. According to the ordinary use of language, it may be said that a man's ground is exclusively appropriated to a particular purpose whether he is making money out of that appropriation or not. And I think that an excellent illustration of the ordinary use of this language is to be found in the opinions that were delivered in the case of Cunningham v. Edmiston,¹ to which I have already referred, because, in that case, there could be no question that the cemetery which was brought under the notice of the Court was conducted for profit, and the Court held that its proprietors were entitled to derive the profit from the interment fees which they exacted. But throughout the whole course of the opinions, you find the learned Judges, especially Lord Gifford who was Lord Ordinary, say over and over again that the point of the case to be kept in view is that the ground is exclusively dedicated for purposes of sepulture.

¹ 9 Macph. 869.

But then this argument was joined with another of a totally different kind; and, as I understood—I am not quite sure that I followed it,—the two were supposed to run, in some way, into one another and strengthen one another, because, it was said, the Act must be read with reference to the series of previous Acts by which Parliament had interfered for the regulation of public burial grounds. I cannot see what is the inference to be drawn from that fact. There are many other Acts about public burial grounds which do not confer this particular exemption. But, by the time this Act was passed, there were numerous cemeteries—in all the great towns in the kingdom there were cemeteries—carried on by cemetery companies who got more or less profit, more or less return for the capital they had spent on the ground, from interment fees; and, therefore, the existence of such cemeteries was a public fact, just as much within the view of Parliament as the existence of other burial grounds which were under the control of public authorities. The distinction between public parochial burial grounds, whether they are proper churchyards or not, and cemeteries which are carried on for a profit is perfectly clear and obvious; but there is one characteristic common to both, and that is that both are dedicated exclusively to purposes of sepulture; and that is the criterion which Parliament has selected for the definition of the ground which is to be exempt from rates and taxes.

On the whole matter, therefore, I come to the conclusion with the Lord

¹ 9 Macph. 869.

July 10, 1912.
 Wood v.
 Western Cemetery Co.,
 Limited.

Lord Kinnear.

July 10, 1912. Ordinary that this cemetery, being exclusively appropriated for the purposes of a burial ground, falls within the exemption clause.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I have very great difficulty in acceding to the judgment which your Lordship proposes in this case, because I am not satisfied that it was the intention of the Legislature that exemption should be given in the case where the ground in question, though truly a burial ground—that is, ground appropriated for the purposes of burial—was primarily devoted to profit-making, and was only appropriated to burial to that primary end.

I think, differing from your Lordship, that considerable light is thrown upon the meaning of the statute, which we are called upon to interpret, by a consideration of previous legislation. But, in the first place, whatever may be the right to exemption, all burial grounds, other than the old churchyards, have a value and must enter the Valuation-roll. I need only refer to the case of the Portobello Cemetery¹ where a cemetery provided under the 1855 Act,—that is to say, a parochial burial ground, and one, therefore, from which no profit could be gained,—was entered in the Valuation-roll, leaving the Parochial Board to establish their right to exemption under the statute of 1874. Therefore, a burial ground has a value, and a fortiori has a value where it is a cemetery carried on for the purposes of profit.

I think, however, that one must approach the consideration of the statutes with some knowledge of the prior law with reference to the common law obligation to provide burial grounds for a parish. There are in Scotland some anomalous situations in which there are local burial grounds, which have not been provided by the heritors of the parish. I can instance the Calton Burial ground here which, as is seen from the Martyrs' Monument case,² was acquired by the Trades' Council of the Calton Burgh for purposes of burial many generations ago—I do not know when—and which was treated, as far as I can judge, as part of the common good of the Corporation of Trades. Similarly, there is the well-known cemetery in the centre of Dundee, which was a gift by Queen Mary to the burgh, and I have no doubt there are others.

But the ordinary parish burial ground in Scotland was the parish kirk-yard. After the Reformation, the common law placed upon the heritors of the parish the obligation to provide ground for burial purposes for the parish. The old Roman Catholic burial grounds round about the churches were naturally appropriated where these churches or their sites became the reformed parish churches; otherwise they had to be provided, and in any case to be extended when required, by the heritors. Perhaps one of the most illustrative instances of the situation is to be found in the case of Walker v. The Presbytery of Arbroath,³ which occurred so recently as 1876. But, by 1855, there had arrived a time when, for sanitary reasons, a great many burial grounds required to be closed or transferred to other places in order to provide larger accommodation. And, accordingly, July 10, 1912. in 1855, the Act, which is the current Parochial Burial Grounds Act in Scotland, was passed, which provided for the closing of certain burial grounds, and imposed upon the parochial boards, in place of the heritors, the duty of providing other burial grounds in place of those which were closed, and empowered them to acquire burial grounds where the needs of the community had outgrown the old parish kirkyard system. A great many burial grounds were so acquired, and according to the enactment of the 1855 Act, they could not be made the subject of profit. It is quite true that, under that Act, it was in the power of the parochial board to sell exclusive rights of sepulture. It was also in their power to impose dues in connection with burials, but it was equally provided by the statute that neither of these powers should be exercised for profit, that the utmost which the parochial board could do, in the way of raising funds by the sale of a limited portion for exclusive burial, and by the charge of burial dues, was pro tanto to meet the expenses of laying out and of maintaining the burial ground, and so reduce the rates. But it was in full contemplation that there would always be a liability for a remainder of such expenses laid upon the rates.

¹ Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Magistrates, supra, p. 793.

² Paterson v. Beattie, 7 D. 561.

³ (1876) 3 R. 498, (1876) 4 R. (H. L.) 1.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

Ld. Johnston.

It is, therefore, made perfectly clear that the Act of 1855 did not contemplate any possibility of profit. I notice that the statute incorporates a portion of what is called the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847,—those sections which provide for the protection and preservation of cemeteries. I think it right to say here, and I think it is an observation of some bearing in relation to this matter in Scotland, that the Cemeteries Clauses Act of 1847 is not a Scots Act, it is only an English and Irish Act; it did not apply to Scotland, although certain sections of it were capable of being specially incorporated by reference in this general Act. That shows that, at anyrate in 1847, it was not common in Scotland for private enterprise to create public cemeteries, which could require the use of a Cemeteries Clauses Act, as must have been the case in England and Ireland. At the same time, I quite concede that it is a fact that there were in Scotland in 1855, particularly in such large towns as Edinburgh and Glasgow, some cemeteries of the class of joint stock company cemeteries—such as our own Dean Cemetery here, and, I have no doubt, others in Glasgow, and in possibly one or two of the bigger towns. But they were few in number.

That being the state of matters so far as the provision of burial grounds goes, the statutes which deal with exemption from rates follow in this sequence:—In 1833 there was passed an Act¹ which exempted from poor and church rates churches, chapels, and other places of religious worship. Now, from indications within that statute, it is clear that it did not apply to Scotland, but there is in it a point which I think worthy of notice, namely, it is very carefully laid down that, where there is any profit realised from any portion of such buildings as may be used for churches, chapels, meeting-houses, &c., the exemption shall not extend to such buildings. From the first point therefore where legislation touches this matter, you have it made very clear that there is to be no exemption where profit to

¹ 3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 30.

July 10, 1912. any extent is derived. Now, not only does that statute not apply to Scotland, but it is, from our point of view, somewhat awkwardly worded, because it does not exempt the property, it exempts the person—"that no person or persons shall be liable to any such rates or cesses because of," &c.

Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

Ld. Johnston.

The next statute is one which, I understand, was passed because it was doubted—and is, as I think, clear—that the previous statute of 1833 did not apply to Scotland. This is the statute of 1865,¹ which, referring to the statute which I have noted, provides, in the same words, that "no person shall be rated . . . in respect of any church, &c.," and limits it to exemption from poor-rates. The limitation to poor-rates and the awkward way in which, following the English Act, the exemption was given to the person and not to the place was, I have no doubt, the cause of the Act of 1874; and that statute, after referring to the Act of 1865, provides that no assessment or rate under any general or local Act of Parliament—extending, therefore, the exemption from poor-rates to any assessment or rate—shall be assessed upon any church, chapel, meeting-house, or—extending it to include burial grounds—upon or in respect of any ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground.

Now, I cannot take that sequence of statutory enactment without noting two things, first, that the idea of the Legislature at the outset was to exempt that which was exclusively appropriated but from which no profit was to accrue, and, second, to extend the exemption to burial grounds just at a time when the operation of the Burial Grounds Act, 1855, may be assumed to have begun to have effect. And I think it is not at all unreasonable to conclude that the reason for this, the extension of the exemption in 1874, was that a new class of burial grounds had arisen in the course of the preceding nineteen years which were not in the same position as parish kirkyards. Moreover, there is no conceivable reason for exempting from rates a private venture for profit because its profit is to be attained by supplying for valuable consideration burial ground to those who desire to obtain the exclusive use of it.

In view of the above, if I am asked what is really the meaning of "exclusively appropriated as burial ground," I confess to a hesitation in coming to the conclusion that ground, which is put to the primary purpose of realising a profit, is, in the sense of this statute and in the view of the legislation to which I have referred, to be held as "exclusively" appropriated as burial ground. It seems to me that those words were really intended by the statute to apply—and to apply only—to those classes of burial grounds which were provided and were appropriated with a single eye to providing means of interment for the dead of the district.

But I cannot possibly avoid giving the utmost deference to the opinion which your Lordships, I know, entertain, that the words used in the statute are only capable of interpretation in the way in which your Lordship has interpreted them. Although I have expressed my views and doubts as to the intention of the Legislature, I cannot but admit that the words used by the Legislature would primarily and (if one did not go back to the history of the thing) naturally be read as your Lordship reads them. And, therefore,

¹ 28 and 29 Vict. cap. 62.

I do not venture to carry my doubts beyond the expression which I have given to them. I therefore assent to the judgment which your Lordship proposes, and in which, I understand, Lord Mackenzie concurs.

July 10, 1912.
Wood v.
Western Cemetery Co.,
Limited.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The question in the case is whether the defenders are liable for poor, school, and other assessments for the year from Whitsunday 1909 to Whitsunday 1910. Assessment notices were duly sent to the defenders, who deny their liability to pay, and plead the terms of the Act 37 and 38 Vict. cap. 20, which provides:—Sec. 1. “No assessment or rate under any general or local Act of Parliament for any county, burgh, parochial or other local purpose whatsoever, shall be assessed or levied upon or in respect of any church, chapel, meeting-house, or premises in Scotland exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, or upon or in respect of any ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground.” The pursuer denies that the ground in respect of which the notices were served is exclusively appropriated as burial ground. There is no question that the defenders acquired and carry on the cemetery for the purpose of making profit. A minute of admissions has been put in from which the following facts appear:—[His Lordship gave the summary of the minute quoted supra, pp. 1174-5.]

The case is within a short compass, and depends on the construction of the words “exclusively appropriated” contained in the statute. About the meaning of the word “appropriated” there cannot be doubt. It means what is set apart for a particular purpose and use. The word “exclusively” adds little to its meaning. It signifies that the ground is set apart for the particular purpose and no other.

It was contended by the pursuer’s counsel that in order to get the benefit of the exemption the ground must be de jure appropriated—that is to say, as I understood the argument, that it must be possible to find a perpetual dedication either in the common law or in some other Act of Parliament. There is nothing in this argument. Even under the Act of 1855¹ there is no statutory dedication of ground as burial ground. It was next contended that there could not be exclusive appropriation unless and until a particular lair had been de facto used for the purpose of interment. The answer to this is twofold—that ground may be appropriated to a purpose before it is actually used; and, second, that in a reasonable sense the whole of the 27·71 acres is now being used as burial ground. The ground must be taken in its actual state as was done in the case of a church in the College Street United Free Church, Edinburgh, v. The Parish Council of Edinburgh,² and as was done in the case of the Craigton Cemetery Company, Limited, v. The Assessor for Lower Ward of Lanarkshire.³ The 1855 Act, section 11, shows that appropriation is wider than use. The twelfth article of the minute of admissions appears to me to conclude the matter against the pursuer. It is admitted that the whole of the 27·71 acres is fenced off and laid out as lairs in which the right of burial has been or is in course of being sold, and common lairs in which interments have been and are being made for payment. The right which each purchaser of a lair acquires over

¹ 18 and 19 Vict. cap. 68.

² 3 F. 414.

³ 16 R. 802.

July 11, 1912. The pursuer reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Second Division on 11th July 1912.

Melville v.
Cummings.

Argued for the reclaimer;—The pursuer had obtained the concurrence of the Lord Advocate on cause shown,¹ and this was conclusive of his title and interest to sue the action. On the analogy of the position of the Attorney-General in England, the discretion of the Lord Advocate was absolute,² and would not be interfered with by the Court.³ Where a special official or a special Court was appointed by statute to act in particular circumstances, their decision was final.⁴ But apart from the fact that the Lord Advocate had decided in his favour, the pursuer had on the face of his pleadings a good case. He had relevantly averred a title and interest to sue, because the firm to which he belonged was directly interested in the subject-matter of the patent. The Lord Ordinary had erred in supposing it necessary for the pursuer to aver that he carried on business as an individual, and in holding that the present action should have been brought in the name of the firm.

Argued for the respondent;—The fact that the Lord Advocate had given his concurrence did not preclude the Court from considering whether the pursuer had a sufficient title and interest to sue, or whether he had a relevant case.⁵ The concurrence of the Lord Advocate signified no more than that the pursuer had a probabilis causa litigandi, and it was still open to the defender to take all the objections which were competent in an ordinary action. On the merits, the pursuer had stated no title or interest to sue. He described himself as a civil engineer, and did not aver that, as an individual, he carried on any business which was affected by the patent in question. The only interest he had averred was an interest in his firm, not in himself.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—This is in all respects a very peculiar case. I do not think I have ever seen anything like it. The pursuer, Mr Melville, who is a civil engineer, desires to attack the patent of the defender, the patent being one relating to the kind of work that the pursuer does in his business. So far as we can assume, he is in the firm of Melville & Dundas, reinforced concrete contractors and engineers in Glasgow, and they do a contracting business in reinforced concrete construction. He says nothing about his carrying on any individual business. If he means by 'the pursuer's business' in cond. 4 the business of his firm referred to in cond. 1, then I think it was for his firm to sue the action, and as I read the record I find it difficult to understand why the firm should not have been the pursuers. The matter might be made perfectly clear and definite by a very slight amendment. As the record stands, I cannot hold that the pursuer has set forth a relevant averment of title and interest.

"I do not see how the Lord Advocate's concurrence can supersede the duty of the Court to deal with the record as laid before it.

"I must sustain the second plea in law for the defender and dismiss the action."

¹ Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 29), secs. 25 (3), 94 (3).

² Terrell on Patents (5th ed.), p. 254.

³ London County Council v. Attorney-General, [1902] A. C. 165.

⁴ Lawrence v. Comptroller-General of Patents, 1910 S. C. 683.

⁵ Gillespie v. Young, (1861) 23 D. 1357; Todd & Higginbotham v. O'Regan, (1859) 21 D. 1320.

large contract business in concrete construction. Now, that this gentleman, Mr Melville, is interested in matters relating to reinforced concrete construction there cannot be any doubt, taking his averments to be facts as we must do in considering the question of relevancy. July 11, 1912.
Melville v.
Cummings.

But then it is said that he has no title to sue this action, because he has revealed the fact that he is a member of the firm of Melville & Dundas. I am unable to understand how it can be maintained that that fact defeats his title. To begin with, it is not said, nor is it averred, by the defender—which he could have done if it had been true—that “Melville & Dundas” is anything more than the name of an established firm. It is quite possible that the pursuer is the only partner in it, but why as a civil engineer interested professionally in reinforced concrete construction he should be excluded from suing the defender for the purpose of having a patent set aside because he belongs to a firm which does work of the kind to which the patent relates, I cannot understand. I think he may be held to have a perfectly substantial interest to set aside the patent; and he has gone to the Lord Advocate, and has got the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, which, it is quite certain, can now only be given on cause shown. I presume that means cause shown as regards having some probable cause to attack the patent, and as regards having right to raise an action, if it is an action that can be stated relevantly. Lord Justice-
Clerk.

I am not to go into the question of the absolute right of the Lord Advocate to deal with such a matter to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of this Court; but I am very clearly of opinion that if a party brought an action which, upon the face of his own condescendence, was irrelevant, it would not be an answer to say that the matter had been inquired into by the Lord Advocate, and therefore the Court must hold it relevant. I think we would be perfectly entitled, if a case was not relevant, to throw it out as irrelevant. All that the Lord Advocate has done after investigation, which we must assume he has made, is to grant his concurrence, and thereby put the pursuer in the position of being able to repel any objection raised on the ground that he has not settled with the Crown upon the matter. It is quite plain that the object of the concurrence of the Lord Advocate is to protect the Crown against actions being raised for the suppression of patents which the Crown has granted, if there are not reasonable or ostensible grounds for doing so.

I do not think I need to go into the matter any further. It is not a sufficient ground for holding that the pursuer, an engineer, has not got a title to sue a party who has a patent relating to the engineering business in which he practises his profession—whether alone or along with others—that in point of fact he carries it on at present under the firm name of Melville & Dundas, either alone or with others. I do not think it is even stateable that, if he is a member of the firm, the firm only can sue. He is in the exercise of his rights as a citizen, who, being an engineer, has an interest to prevent a patent standing which does or may interfere with him in his business, whether in partnership with others or as an individual. I cannot understand the idea that he is to be excluded from taking up that position because he happens to be a member of a firm. Without going deeper into the question of the duties of the Lord Advocate and the privilege of liti-

July 11, 1912. gants, I am of opinion that the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary is wrong, and ought to be recalled.

Melville v.
Cummings.

Lord Justice-
Clerk.

Mr Maitland referred to the case of Gillespie v. Young,¹ and to the observations made in it. What the Court decided there was that the Lord Advocate could not be held to have given his consent in terms of the Act. In terms of the Act, the giving of his consent requires that he should have investigated the case. All that was done in that case apparently was that the party went formally with his summons in his hand to the chief clerk of the Lord Advocate, who wrote upon the summons :—" Grants concurrence for Her Majesty's Advocate to the foregoing summons." That was following the form used in many cases in which the concurrence of the Lord Advocate is a mere formal matter in order to put things in shape, as, for instance, in petitions for breaches of interdict. But the observations of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis in that case are very important as regards concurrence in such a case as this. His Lordship said :—" The defender says that is not such a concurrence as is contemplated by the Act of Parliament ; it is a mere formal concurrence ; it does not pretend to be anything else ; it is just the ordinary formal concurrence granted by somebody holding a general authority from the Lord Advocate, but it is not the concurrence which the Lord Advocate is directed to give or withhold upon consideration of the matter. Again, the pursuer rejoins to this, the only question into which the Court can inquire is whether the concurrence of the Lord Advocate has been given. Whether he has given it upon just cause shown or not is a question with which the Court have nothing to do. That is a matter touching the proper discharge by the Lord Advocate of his official duty, for which he is not responsible to this Court, but only to the Queen and to Parliament. It appears to me that there is a fallacy in this reply. It is quite true that if the concurrence of the Lord Advocate has been given, and if the fact of that concurrence being given is authentically proved to your Lordships, you have nothing to do with the conduct of the Lord Advocate in the administration of his department of the Government. That is quite true. You cannot inquire whether just cause was shown to him or what cause was shown to him, or whether he required any cause to be shown—because he might be so well acquainted with the subject as not to require any cause to be shown, or he might think he was so well acquainted with the subject and so completely master of the merits of this patent or its demerits that he did not require any cause to be shown to him. And he might be right or wrong. But with all that your Lordships have nothing to do. I think if the Lord Advocate's concurrence is given, and if there is authentic evidence of that concurrence being given before the Court, your Lordships can inquire no further."

That is exactly the position in which we are as regards the concurrence of the Lord Advocate ; we must assume that he made sufficient and satisfactory inquiry before he granted his concurrence. As I said before, if an irrelevant case were presented to us, the fact that the Lord Advocate concurred in it would not affect our decision, because we are bound to see that the proceedings which are brought before us in the form of a summons and condescendence are relevant, but as regards going behind the Lord Advocate July 11, 1912.

¹ 23 D. 1357.

cate and inquiring what he has done, that is out of the question, for the Melville v. reasons expressed by the Lord Justice-Clerk in the case quoted. Cummings.

Upon the whole matter, I am satisfied that no ground has been shown for sustaining the Lord Ordinary's judgment.

LORD DUNDAS.—I am quite of the same opinion. I confess I have some difficulty in understanding the way in which the Lord Ordinary has dealt with this case. He holds that the pursuer has not set forth an interest and title to sue, because, while he is designed as a civil engineer, "of the firm of Melville & Dundas," he says nothing about his carrying on any individual business. Apparently if the firm had sued, the Lord Ordinary would have been satisfied. Upon that, I can only say that I think that articles 1 and 4 of the condescendence set forth a quite sufficient statement of interest in the matter to satisfy the ordinary rules of pleading, especially as there is no averment made by the defender in any way to raise the point or to challenge a fuller statement as matter of pleading. The Lord Ordinary goes on to say: "I do not see how the Lord Advocate's concurrence can supersede the duty of the Court to deal with the record as laid before it." If his Lordship meant by that to affirm broadly that we have right in such cases to scrutinise the reasons for the Lord Advocate's concurrence, I should disagree with him. Prima facie, this action is in perfectly good order, because the concurrence is granted, and I do not doubt that we are to presume that the concurrence was "given upon just cause shown." Whether there might be a case in which, even although the Lord Advocate had granted concurrence, the defender could satisfy us that we ought to throw the action out for want of title, it is not necessary here to decide. I can only say that I think it would require some very special case which I do not at the moment figure. But I am quite clear that the present is not that case, and for the reasons which your Lordship has more fully stated I am for recalling the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and remitting to his Lordship to allow a proof.

LORD SALVESEN.—I am of the same opinion. Like Lord Dundas, I desire to guard against laying down as an absolute rule that the mere fact of the concurrence of the Lord Advocate is conclusive on a question of title. I should require further argument before I was satisfied upon that point. No doubt one of the things which the Lord Advocate will consider is whether the person who desires to reduce a patent has any interest to do so, and if he thought he had none he would be very slow to grant his concurrence. At the same time, just as in a matter of relevancy the Court must decide whether the case is relevant, notwithstanding that the Lord Advocate has thought that a relevant case for reduction had been presented to him, so it may also be that we have a duty to consider the question of title. On that matter, however, I do not wish to express any considered opinion.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, and remitted to him to allow a proof.

DAVIDSON & SYME, W.S.—MACANDREW, WRIGHT, & MURRAY, W.S.—Agents.

No. 165.

JOHN COLQUHOUN, Appellant.—Murray, K.C.—Carmont.

July 12, 1912.

JOSEPH WALTER WOOLFE, Respondent.—*J. R. Christie—Mercer.*Colquhoun v.
Woolfe.Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sec. 7 (2)— Workman—Fisherman partly remunerated by share in earnings.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, enacts, sec. 7, subsec. 2:—
 "This Act shall not apply to such members of the crew of a fishing vessel as are remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of such vessel."

A fisherman was employed as a member of the crew of a steam trawler upon a contract of service with the master, representing the owner, under which he received wages at the rate of 30s. a week, and a commission of 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed under deduction of the cost of carriage. During the only week of his employment his commission amounted to 7s.

Held (diss. Lord Dundas) that he was not "remunerated" by a share in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of the vessel, and accordingly was not excluded by the subsection from claiming compensation under the Act.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Second Sched. (17) (b)—Appeal—Stage at which appeal competent—Appeal against allowance of proof.

Observations (per Lord Kinneir) on the circumstances in which the Court will consider an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act before proof has been taken.

1ST DIVISION.
 Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles.

IN an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in the Sheriff Court of the Lothians at Edinburgh, Joseph Walter Woolfe claimed compensation from John Colquhoun, the registered owner of the steam trawler "Gloxinia," in respect of personal injury sustained by him in the course of his employment as a trawl fisherman. The Sheriff-substitute (Orr) allowed a proof, and at the request of Colquhoun stated a case for appeal.

The case set forth:—

"The facts admitted, and the averments of parties which raise the question of law hereinafter referred to, are as follows:—The appellant is a fish merchant, carrying on business in Glasgow, and is the registered owner of the steam trawler 'Gloxinia.' The respondent is a trawl fisherman, and on 15th January 1912, while employed as a member of the crew in the capacity of a fisherman on board said trawler, sustained injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The respondent made, inter alia, the following averment:—'The pursuer (respondent) is a trawl fisherman, and resides at No. 9 Henderson Street, Leith. He is a workman in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The defender (appellant) is a fish merchant, carrying on business in Glasgow. He is the registered owner of the steam trawler 'Gloxinia,' and was, in the sense of said Act, the employer of the pursuer at the work at which he was engaged when he sustained the aftermentioned injuries.' To this averment the appellant made the following answer:—'Denied that the pursuer is a workman and that the defender was his employer within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Quoad ultra admitted.' The respondent further averred:—'The pursuer had been for a week prior to 15th January 1912 in the employment of the defender on board the said steam trawler under a contract of service entered into between the master of the said trawler on July 12, 1912. Colquhoun v. Woolfe.

behalf of the defender and the pursuer, under which contract the pursuer was engaged to act as second fisherman on board said trawler, and was to be remunerated for his services as follows, viz., by payment of the sum of thirty shillings a week in cash, and 'by payment of a commission or percentage or poundage known as "fish money" of two-pence per pound sterling on the gross value of the fish landed each week from the said trawler under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish. During the week the pursuer was employed by the defender the gross value of the fish landed under the deduction foresaid amounted to at least £42, and the pursuer's poundage thereon amounted to at least 7s.' The appellant's answer to this averment was as follows:—'Admitted that the pursuer's weekly wage amounted to 30s., and that he received in addition a share of 2d. in the £1 on the amount of the gross earnings of the said steam trawler "Gloxinia" after deduction of the cost of carriage of the catch of fish.' For the purpose of this case, the parties admitted that at the date of the accident the respondent's weekly earnings consisted of 30s. of wages, and 7s., being 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed from the 'Gloxinia' under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish. The appellant stated the following pleas in law among others:—(1) The pursuer's averments being irrelevant, the action should be dismissed, with expenses; (2) The pursuer not being a workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the present action should be dismissed, with expenses; and (3) Separatim, the pursuer, being a member of the crew of a fishing vessel remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of such vessel within section 7 (2) of the Act, is not entitled to compensation, and the present action should be dismissed, with expenses. At the request of parties I heard counsel on the said three pleas, and I thereafter, on 14th May 1912, issued the following interlocutor:—Edinburgh, 14th May 1912.—'The Sheriff-substitute having heard counsel for the parties and considered the cause, repels the first, second, and third pleas in law for the defender: Allows a proof, and appoints the cause to be heard, tried, and determined at a diet to be afterwards fixed.'"

The question of law for the opinion of the Court was:—"Whether on the facts as stated the respondent was remunerated by a share or shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of said fishing vessel, and is thereby excluded by section 7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from claiming compensation under said Act."

The case was heard before the First Division (consisting of Lord Kinnear, Lord Dundas, and Lord Mackenzie) on 5th July 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—The respondent was remunerated by a share in the profits or gross earnings of the trawler. That was an express term of the contract, and was not affected by the fact that he was also entitled to 30s. a week of wages. The case was ruled by Admiral Fishing Company v. Robinson,¹ in which the contract between the parties was substantially the same as the contract here, the only difference being that here the fisherman got a weekly wage of 30s., whereas in that case there was a guarantee that the fisherman's share of profits should never be less than 30s. a week. Section 7, subsection (2), was intended to exclude from the benefits of the Act

¹ [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

No. 165.

JOHN COLQUHOUN, Appellant.—Murray, K.C.—Carmont.

July 12, 1912.

JOSEPH WALTER WOOLFE, Respondent.—*J. R. Christie—Mercer.*Colquhoun v.
Woolfe.Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sec. 7 (2)—Workman—Fisherman partly remunerated by share in earnings.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, enacts, sec. 7, subsec. 2:—

"This Act shall not apply to such members of the crew of a fishing vessel as are remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of such vessel."

A fisherman was employed as a member of the crew of a steam trawler upon a contract of service with the master, representing the owner, under which he received wages at the rate of 30s. a week, and a commission of 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed under deduction of the cost of carriage. During the only week of his employment his commission amounted to 7s.

Held (diss. Lord Dundas) that he was not "remunerated" by a share in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of the vessel, and accordingly was not excluded by the subsection from claiming compensation under the Act.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Second Sched. (17) (b)—Appeal—Stage at which appeal competent—Appeal against allowance of proof.

Observations (per Lord Kinnear) on the circumstances in which the Court will consider an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act before proof has been taken.

1st Division.
Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles.

IN an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in the Sheriff Court of the Lothians at Edinburgh, Joseph Walter Woolfe claimed compensation from John Colquhoun, the registered owner of the steam trawler "Gloxinia," in respect of personal injury sustained by him in the course of his employment as a trawl fisherman. The Sheriff-substitute (Orr) allowed a proof, and at the request of Colquhoun stated a case for appeal.

The case set forth:—

"The facts admitted, and the averments of parties which raise the question of law hereinafter referred to, are as follows:—The appellant is a fish merchant, carrying on business in Glasgow, and is the registered owner of the steam trawler 'Gloxinia.' The respondent is a trawl fisherman, and on 15th January 1912, while employed as a member of the crew in the capacity of a fisherman on board said trawler, sustained injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The respondent made, inter alia, the following averment:—'The pursuer (respondent) is a trawl fisherman, and resides at No. 9 Henderson Street, Leith. He is a workman in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The defender (appellant) is a fish merchant, carrying on business in Glasgow. He is the registered owner of the steam trawler 'Gloxinia,' and was, in the sense of said Act, the employer of the pursuer at the work at which he was engaged when he sustained the aftermentioned injuries.' To this averment the appellant made the following answer:—'Denied that the pursuer is a workman and that the defender was his employer within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Quoad ultra admitted.' The respondent further averred:—'The pursuer had been for a week prior to 15th January 1912 in the employment of the defender on board the said steam trawler under a contract of service entered into between the master of the said trawler on July 12, 1912. Colquhoun v. Woolfe.

 behalf of the defender and the pursuer, under which contract the pursuer was engaged to act as second fisherman on board said trawler, and was to be remunerated for his services as follows, viz., by payment of the sum of thirty shillings a week in cash, and 'by payment of a commission or percentage or poundage known as "fish money" of two-pence per pound sterling on the gross value of the fish landed each week from the said trawler under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish. During the week the pursuer was employed by the defender the gross value of the fish landed under the deduction foresaid amounted to at least £42, and the pursuer's poundage thereon amounted to at least 7s.' The appellant's answer to this averment was as follows:—'Admitted that the pursuer's weekly wage amounted to 30s., and that he received in addition a share of 2d. in the £1 on the amount of the gross earnings of the said steam trawler "Gloxinia" after deduction of the cost of carriage of the catch of fish.' For the purpose of this case, the parties admitted that at the date of the accident the respondent's weekly earnings consisted of 30s. of wages, and 7s., being 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed from the 'Gloxinia' under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish. The appellant stated the following pleas in law among others:—(1) The pursuer's averments being irrelevant, the action should be dismissed, with expenses; (2) The pursuer not being a workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the present action should be dismissed, with expenses; and (3) Separatim, the pursuer, being a member of the crew of a fishing vessel remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of such vessel within section 7 (2) of the Act, is not entitled to compensation, and the present action should be dismissed, with expenses. At the request of parties I heard counsel on the said three pleas, and I thereafter, on 14th May 1912, issued the following interlocutor:—Edinburgh, 14th May 1912.—'The Sheriff-substitute having heard counsel for the parties and considered the cause, repels the first, second, and third pleas in law for the defender: Allows a proof, and appoints the cause to be heard, tried, and determined at a diet to be afterwards fixed.'"

The question of law for the opinion of the Court was:—"Whether on the facts as stated the respondent was remunerated by a share or shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of said fishing vessel, and is thereby excluded by section 7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from claiming compensation under said Act."

The case was heard before the First Division (consisting of Lord Kinnear, Lord Dundas, and Lord Mackenzie) on 5th July 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—The respondent was remunerated by a share in the profits or gross earnings of the trawler. That was an express term of the contract, and was not affected by the fact that he was also entitled to 30s. a week of wages. The case was ruled by Admiral Fishing Company v. Robinson,¹ in which the contract between the parties was substantially the same as the contract here, the only difference being that here the fisherman got a weekly wage of 30s., whereas in that case there was a guarantee that the fisherman's share of profits should never be less than 30s. a week. Section 7, subsection (2), was intended to exclude from the benefits of the Act

¹ [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

July 12, 1912. persons for whose work the amount of remuneration was a matter of speculation.
Colquhoun v. Woolfe.

Argued for the respondent;—The object of the Act of 1906 as regarded seamen was to extend to such of them as were servants the benefits enjoyed by servants employed on land. The respondent here was a servant employed under a contract of service and remunerated, as servants are, by wages. The fact that he received a small share in the profit, a common form of incentive to effort, did not alter the fact that for all practical purposes he was paid by wages, and did not turn him into a person remunerated by shares in profits. It was clear that subsection (2) of section 7 used the word “remunerated” in the sense of “substantially or mainly remunerated,” and was meant to exclude partners and joint adventurers, and to relieve from liability those with whom an injured workman took a common risk as to profit.¹ It could not be said that the respondent was a partner, because he was paid 30s. a week even if the vessel on which he was employed did not go to sea²; nor could it be said that he was a joint adventurer with the appellant, because he was his servant. Section 7 (2), being an excluding subsection, fell to be strictly interpreted. The case of *Admiral Fishing Company*³ was distinguishable, for there the fisherman got no wages whatever.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD KINNEAR.—This is a stated case which is brought before us at a somewhat unusual stage in the proceedings, because there has been no inquiry. The Sheriff as arbitrator has allowed a proof, and the employer appeals against that decision. I should not wish it to be supposed that by entertaining an appeal at this stage we are giving any encouragement to appeals upon points of pleading before inquiry. The statute specially directs that the proceedings by way of arbitration are to be summary; and although the Sheriff's power to state a case for this Court is not restricted to any particular stage of the proceedings, it seems to me clear enough that the general intention of the statute is that the facts should first be ascertained, and that it is only when the determining facts have been fixed by the Sheriff that any question of law which he may have found it necessary to decide can be appealed to this Court. But I think that in the circumstances of this case the learned Sheriff has taken the most appropriate and convenient procedure, because the employer's objection to proof really goes to the foundation of the claim, and it is certainly for the advantage of both parties that the question should be determined before the expense of further procedure has been incurred.

The question is whether the workman applying for compensation is excluded from the benefit of the Act by the provisions of section 7, subsection (2). The seventh section is that which applies the Act to seamen, and the second subsection provides, "This Act shall not apply to such July 12, 1912.

¹ Gill v. Aberdeen Steam Trawling and Fishing Co., 1908 S. C. 328; Ellis v. Joseph Ellis & Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 324; Whelan v. Great Northern Steam Shipping Co., (1909) 78 L. J., K. B. 860, 25 T. L. R. 619.

² Clark v. G. R. & W. Jamieson, 1909 S. C. 132. Reference was also made to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. cap. 60), sec. 742, and to Ex parte Ferguson and Hutchinson, (1871) L. R., 6 Q. B. 280.

³ [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

members of the crew of a fishing vessel as are remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of such vessel." That Colquhoun v. Woolfe.
clause of exclusion applies to a kind of arrangement which, from cases Lord Kinneir.
which have come before the Court, we know to be common among fishermen, by which a fisherman agrees to work not for wages but for a share of the profits or gross earnings. That may occur, perhaps generally it does occur, when the arrangement between the members of the crew and the owner of the boat is not that of master and servant, but of joint adventurers or partners in some form or another; but the case of *Clark v. Jamieson*¹ shows that it may also occur where the fisherman is employed upon a contract of service, and where there is no relation of copartnery between members of the crew inter se or between members of the crew and the owner of the boat if he himself is not one of the crew. But in either case the condition is that the fisherman is not paid by wages but is paid by a share of the profits or gross earnings. Now the question is whether the arrangement adopted by the parties to this case was an arrangement of that kind.

The facts are brought out quite clearly in the case stated by the Sheriff, and I understand that, except in so far as the statement consists of mere citation of the pleadings, it is based upon the admissions of parties. The Sheriff states that the appellant is a fish merchant and that he is the owner of the steam trawler "Gloxinia," and that the respondent is a trawl fisherman who, while employed as a member of the crew of that steam trawler, on 15th January 1912 sustained injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The remaining statement of fact which is material is taken from the respondent's averments, but it is quite competent to take these averments as facts for the purpose of deciding whether he has a good case. He avers that he is a workman in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that the appellant is a fish merchant carrying on business in Glasgow. Then it is averred: "The pursuer had been for a week prior to 15th January 1912 in the employment of the defender on board the said steam trawler under a contract of service entered into between the master of the said trawler on behalf of the defender and the pursuer, under which contract the pursuer was engaged to act as second fisherman on board said trawler, and was to be remunerated for his services as follows, viz., by payment of the sum of thirty shillings a week in cash," and "by payment of a commission or percentage or poundage known as 'fish money' of twopence per pound sterling on the gross value of the fish landed each week from the said trawler under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish." It is averred that during the week in which the pursuer was employed the gross value of the fish amounted to £42 and his poundage to at least 7s. The case, therefore, is that this man was employed upon a contract of service, and was paid a fixed wage of 30s. a week, and received in addition a payment, called fish money, of 2d. per pound on the value of the fish. We are not told, and it is not for the Court to conjecture, for what reason this additional sum was given. It is obvious enough, although I do not

¹ 1909 S. C. 132.

July 12, 1912. think it material to inquire whether the parties were in fact moved by any such consideration, that it might be an advantage to both to give the fisherman an interest in landing the fish in a saleable condition. The material point is that the fish money is, so far as it goes, a benefit to the fisherman over and above his wages ; and the question is whether receiving this further payment excludes him from the benefit of the Act by force of subsection (2) of section 7.

Colquhoun v.
Woolfe.

Lord Kinneear.

I think it does not. The provision is not that the Act shall not apply to persons who receive any benefit from profits or earnings, but that it shall not apply to members of a crew who are remunerated by shares in profits or gross earnings. I think that what was intended by these words is that the man shall be really and substantially remunerated by shares of profits or earnings as distinguished from fixed wages. According to the ordinary use of language there is an implication of some degree of adequacy in the word "remunerate" and its cognates "remuneration" and "remunerative"; and if it were asked whether this man was remunerated by his commission on the gross earnings of the ship only, it would be a perfectly reasonable answer to say "No ; if that were all, he would have no remuneration at all ; that would be altogether unremunerative." His remuneration is by fixed wages, although in addition he gets 2d. per pound on the value of the fish.

The Act deals with two different classes of workmen ; one class of workmen who are remunerated by wages, and another who are remunerated by a share of profits. It was argued that we could not put that construction upon the statute without reading into subsection (2) of section 7 some such word as "mainly" remunerated, or "substantially" remunerated, and that is said to be an illegitimate process. I prefer to regard it as reading in nothing, but as construing words of ordinary language in a reasonable way in their application to the subject-matter ; but if there is any foundation for the criticism, I think it applies equally to the opposite construction which is maintained by the appellant. If the words are doubtful or obscure, it is not possible for either party to express what he considers the preferable reading without using some language that will make the true meaning a little more clear than the Act itself has made it. The respondent says it means, in a reasonable sense of the word, true or substantial remuneration for which the fisherman works. The appellant says it means any remuneration whatever, and if that is not so clear as to be put beyond dispute by the bare words of the clause, he is driven to the objectionable method of reading in some additional word to make it clearer, and after the word remunerated he reads in "to any extent whatever," or "in whole or in part." Of the two readings I prefer the respondent's, "mainly" or "substantially"; but the true answer is that the statute, reasonably construed with reference to the subject-matter, really contemplates two different classes of workmen—wage-earning workmen and profit-sharing workmen—and the subsection before us excludes the latter only from the benefit of the Act.

The appellant's counsel cited the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of the *Admiral Fishing Co. v. Robinson*¹ as conclusive in his favour.

¹ [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

I do not so read the case. The facts were different from those with which July 12, 1912. we are concerned. The workman was employed on a steam fishing boat, Colquhoun v. and was paid, not by a fixed wage, but by a share in the profits, with a Woolfe. guarantee from the owners that his share of the profits should not be less Lord Kinnear. than 30s. a week. It was held by the County Court Judge that he was not excluded from the benefit of the Act by force of the clause we have to consider, because he was not paid by profits only, but by profits with a guarantee. In the Court of Appeal this was held to be wrong, because the workman was paid by a share of profits none the less by reason of his obtaining from others interested in the adventure a guarantee that his share should not be less than a certain sum. But the point for which the case was cited was to show that we are not to read into the enactment any qualifying phrase which is not expressed in terms; and it is true that the fault which was found with the judgment of the County Court Judge was that he had read the word "solely" into the section, so as to render it inapplicable to any member of the crew who in a certain event might receive more than the amount of his share. This was said to be a decision to the effect that if a workman receives any benefit from profits he is thereby brought within the scope of the excluding section, and he cannot be kept out of it except by the insertion of words which are not in the section.

I find nothing in what was said by the learned Judges to support any such inference. On the contrary, the judgment of Lord Justice Buckley, as I read it, brings out very clearly what I think is the true method of reasoning in the application of the section to a particular case. We must consider what is the true and substantial remuneration of the fisherman. Is it wages or a share of profits that he gets for his work? If it is a share of profits, the learned Judge says that to read into the Act the word "solely" would render it "impossible to work it, for a man is seldom if ever remunerated solely by a share. He gets his bunk on board ship, as a rule, he gets his food and other incidentals." If he is remunerated by a share he is a share-hand fisherman none the less because of those incidental advantages. But if, on the other hand, the man's true and substantial remuneration is not a share of profits but a fixed wage, the argument tells just as directly against the attempt to bring him into the class of share-hand fishermen. If a man is working for wages under a contract of service, he is a servant earning wages none the less because he is to get some incidental advantage out of the gross earnings of his employer. I concede that there might in certain circumstances be a question to which of the two classes a man belonged. But that would be a question of fact for the arbitrator.

I come, therefore, to the conclusion that this respondent is beyond all question a "workman" within the meaning of the leading enactment entitling him to compensation. I think that was hardly questioned; although there is a point taken to the contrary in the stated case, it is really beyond argument. A workman in the language of the statute "means any person who has entered into or works under a contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer." Now, that this man did so is perfectly clear from the learned Sheriff's statement of facts. Being within the general enactment I do not think he is within the exclusion

July 12, 1912. of section 7, subsection (2), and I think the learned Sheriff took a perfectly proper course when he proposed to allow him to prove his case.
Colquhoun v. Woolfe.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The question raised in this case is as to the proper construction to be put upon section 7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

The Sheriff-substitute has held that the respondent is entitled to a proof of his averments. The appellant contends that the action should be dismissed, as the respondent's averments show that he falls within section 7 (2) of the Act, and is therefore not entitled to compensation. The important points in the respondent's averments are that for a week prior to the date of the accident he had been in the employment of the appellant under a contract of service to act as second fisherman on board the steam trawler "Gloxinia," of which the appellant is the registered owner; that he was to be remunerated for his services by payment of 30s. a week in cash, and by payment of a commission or percentage or poundage known as "fish money" of 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed each week from the trawler under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish; that during the week prior to the date of the accident the pursuer's poundage amounted to 7s. Upon these facts, which are not in dispute, it appears to me that the case does not fall within the exclusion of section 7 (2) of the Act. The respondent cannot be regarded in a reasonable sense as remunerated by a share in the profits or gross earnings.

Prima facie section 7 (2) is intended to meet the case where the members of the crew are partners or joint adventurers. If, however, its operation were limited to such cases only, the necessity for its insertion in the Act would be difficult to see. Once partnership or joint adventure is established there is no room for the relation of employer and workman. This is brought out in the case of Ellis v. Joseph Ellis & Company.¹ A partner or joint adventurer would not be a workman, for section 13 enacts that to be a "workman" a person must have entered into or worked under a contract of service with an employer. The Act would not apply, and there would therefore be no necessity for a clause excluding from its provisions those who never were within them. There may, however, be cases in which, although working under a contract of service, the members of the crew of a fishing vessel agree to be remunerated by dividing the profits or gross earnings into shares, and yet the relationship is such that it cannot be said there is a partnership or joint adventure. *Clark v. Jamieson*² was a case which dealt not with a fishing but with a small cargo boat. It has, however, a bearing upon the present case, for it shows that a member of a crew who is remunerated by a share of the gross earnings of the vessel may be a workman within the meaning of the leading provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and not a partner in a joint adventure. As Lord M'Laren pointed out there, it would be difficult to hold there was joint adventure where there was no contribution of capital, and no liability for losses. In such a case, if the boat were a fishing vessel, the members of the crew, though they fell under the leading provisions of the Act, would be excluded from its operation by section 7 (2). An illustration of this is contained in the case Colquhoun v. Woolfe, July 12, 1912. of the Admiral Fishing Company v. Robinson.¹ There all the crew were paid by shares in the adventure, and the claimant had a guarantee from the owners that his share should not be less than 30s. a week. It was held that notwithstanding the guarantee the claimant was remunerated by a share of the profits in the vessel, and therefore fell under the exclusion in section 7 (2). Lord Mac-

¹ [1905] 1 K. B. 324.

² 1909 S. C. 132.

In the present case the main provision of the contract of service is that the employer shall pay a fixed money wage of substantial amount. The fact that a commission is to be paid over and above does not, in the circumstances of this case, make the subsection applicable. No doubt there might be a case in which there was a fixed allowance, e.g., board and lodging, or a money payment of an equivalent amount, and a further provision of a share of profits, which latter was really the remuneration. In such a case the fixed allowance would not prevent the subsection from applying. Remuneration is recompense or reward for services rendered, and the share of profits in such a case would rightly be regarded as the quid pro quo. The man's keep or allowance in lieu thereof could not be regarded in that case as his remuneration. Assistance may be got from the negative term "unremunerative." That does not mean that nothing is got, but that what is got is not an adequate return for what is done.

The question in each case is, in my opinion, one of fact for the arbitrator. In the present case the claimant had been employed one week previous to the accident, and his poundage amounted to 7s. His wages were 30s. It cannot, in my opinion, fairly be said that the claimant was remunerated by a share of the profits. His remuneration was his wages, and the commission was of the nature of extra pay. We were referred to the case of Whelan v. Great Northern Steam Fishing Company, Limited,² where a man who was called a "share-hand" on board a steam trawler was held not entitled to compensation for an accident which happened to him while employed as a stower on board a cutter that took the boxes of fish to market. That case, however, does not assist us in arriving at a conclusion here. In the present case I think the commission was an incident in the contract of service, the leading provision of which was the performance of work for a fixed money wage. I am therefore of opinion on the facts of this case that the Sheriff-substitute was entitled to take the view he did, and that the question should be answered accordingly.

LORD DUNDAS.—[In his Lordship's absence his opinion was read by Lord Mackenzie]—The question here raised is a very short one; but it is important, and, I think, difficult to decide. Section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, which for the first time included seamen within the class entitled to compensation, provides:—“(2) This Act shall not apply to such members of the crew of a fishing vessel as are remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of such vessel.” We have to determine whether or not the respondent, Woolfe, is excluded, by the terms of the subsection just quoted, from the benefits of the Act.

¹ [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

² 78 L. J., K. B. 860, 25 T. L. R. 619.

July 12, 1912. The Sheriff-substitute holds that he is not; I have come, somewhat reluctantly, to the opposite conclusion. Woolfe was engaged as second fisherman on board a steam trawler belonging to the appellant, and was to be remunerated for his services by payment of 30s. a week in cash, and "by payment of a commission or percentage or poundage, known as 'fish-money,' of twopence per pound sterling on the gross value of the fish landed each week from the said trawler under deduction of the cost of carriage of the fish." I gather that he had been employed only for a week when he met with the accident in respect of which he now claims compensation. His "poundage" for that week amounted to about 7s.

It is clear that if Woolfe's sole money remuneration had been this weekly wage of 30s., his claim would have been within the Act; and, on the other hand, that if his commission or share of the gross value of the fish had been his sole money remuneration, his claim would have been excluded by the terms of section 7 (2). But in fact he had both; and that raises sharply the question we have to determine. I do not know, and it is probably unnecessary to speculate, what may have been the policy or object of the Legislature in introducing the subsection. It was suggested in the argument that the object was to exclude from the Act persons who were truly in the position of partners or co-adventurers. In that case the subsection would seem to have been unnecessary; for it was expressly decided under the Act of 1897 that a partner who works for wages in the partnership undertaking is not a "workman" within the meaning of the Act; because he would ex hypothesi be one of his own employers, and the Act has regard to a relation between two opposite parties, employer and employed—Ellis v. Joseph Ellis & Company.¹ Whatever the object of the subsection may have been, we must try to arrive at its proper construction and application with reference to the case before us. Now, if one reads the language of the subsection without addition or qualification, and asks whether or not the respondent was remunerated by a share in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of the vessel, the only possible answer seems to me to be an affirmative one. If a different conclusion is to be reached, one must, I think, read into the subsection some such word as either "solely," or "principally," "mainly," or the like. As against the first of these suggestions, we were referred to the case of Admiral Fishing Company.² The man's remuneration there was undoubtedly a specified share of profits, but with an added guarantee that the share should not in any case be less than 30s. a week. The Court of Appeal held that the claim was excluded. I think the judgment was right; and I further agree with the learned Judges who stated that in their opinion it was not legitimate to read into the subsection the word "solely." As Buckley, L.J., observed, "To construe the Act in that way renders it impossible to work it, for a man is seldom if ever remunerated solely by a share. He gets his bunk on board ship, as a rule, he gets his food and other incidentals." Nor, in my judgment, is it any more legitimate to read into the Act such a word as "mainly" or "principally." If that were done, the Court would have in each case to determine whether the certain value of the weekly wage or the uncertain value of the share was in fact the more valuable right. This does not commend itself to my mind as a sound rule or principle for dealing with the matter. I do not think the Act invites us to enter upon such considerations; their ascertainment might in some cases be difficult, and the result frequently unconvincing. The problem does not, in my judgment, lend itself to solution by simply determining in each case which of the two elements is the more valuable, and whether one can be regarded as the dominating, and the other as a merely subsidiary, factor in the remuneration. Nothing that was said or decided in *Whelan*¹ seems to me to give any support or countenance to this method of dealing with the matter. If, then, one is to read the language of subsection (2) without any addition or qualification, one must, in my opinion, hold that the Legislature has excluded from the Act any member of a fishing crew whose remuneration includes a share (however small) in the profits or gross earnings of the vessel. I can see that, if this conclusion is correct, there may be room for hardship, and even abuse of the Act, if a man is induced to take employment for what may be a fair money wage, with the additional attraction of some small share in the value of the fish, which (while in itself of perhaps trifling advantage at the best) would deprive him, in case of accident, of his claim for compensation. But if the law be what I am constrained to think it is, fishermen would doubtless very soon become alive to risks of the nature I have indicated.

¹ [1905] 1 K. B. 324.

² [1910] 1 K. B. 540.

For the reasons stated, I should answer the question put to us in the affirmative; but as your Lordships hold a different opinion the answer will, of course, be otherwise. I am (as already indicated) not sorry that the judgment of the Court is to be in favour of the respondent, although I do not see my way to concur in it.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the negative, and dismissed the appeal.

BEVERIDGE, SUTHERLAND, & SMITH, W.S.—T. M. POLE, Solicitor—Agents.

WILLIAM BLACKIE HANLEY, Pursuer (Respondent).—Constable, K.C.—Ingram. No. 166.

THE LORD PROVOST, MAGISTRATES, AND COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF EDINBURGH, Defenders (Reclaimers).—D.-F. Dickson—W. J. Robertson. July 12, 1912.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Burgh—Drainage—Roads—Discharge of surface water—Flooding of agricultural land in burgh—Responsibility of drainage and road authority—Reparation—Negligence—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cxxxiii.), sec. 28.

The drainage and sewage from a portion of the city of Edinburgh flows into the Craigentinny Burn, which for part of its course forms the southern boundary of a market garden on the Craigentinny estate. When the district, which includes the Craigentinny estate, was annexed to the city of Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, it was provided by section 28 of the Act that the Corporation,

¹ 78 L. J., K. B. 860, 25 L. T. R. 619.

July 12, 1912.

—
Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

who were the drainage authority, should not have power to diminish the supply of sewage water flowing through the burn and used for irrigating the estate, or to deepen or otherwise interfere with the burn so far as passing through the estate.

On two occasions in 1909, after a heavy rainfall, the burn overflowed its banks, and flooded the garden, and water also found its way into the garden through a gate or door opening on to a public road under which the burn flowed. Since 1900 there had been no increase in the quantity of sewage or surface water discharged into the burn but, in consequence of building and paving operations which had gradually rendered a greater portion of the surface of the drainage area impervious, the surface water found its way more quickly into the burn.

In an action of damages at the instance of the tenant of the market garden against the Corporation, the Court (rev. judgment of Lord Ormidale) assolized the defenders, holding (1) that, with regard to the increased flow of surface water from the higher to the lower levels of the area which they administered, the defenders had no more responsibility than an upper proprietor, who, by an improved system of drainage, discharged the surface water more rapidly from his lands on to those of a lower proprietor, and who was not liable for the flooding thereby caused; and (2) that, as in a question with a tenant on the Craigentenny estate averring damage to agricultural ground, the defenders (a), as the drainage authority, were not liable for the damage done by the burn overflowing its banks, since, by section 28 of the Act of 1900, they were prohibited from diminishing the supply of the sewage water or from interfering with the water-course in any way; nor (b), as the road authority, were they liable for the damage done by water entering from the road, since it had not been proved that any deficiency that might exist in the water channels of the road had resulted in sending more water on to the pursuer's lands than would otherwise have reached them.

2D DIVISION. ON 15th November 1909 William Blackie Hanley, market gardener, Ld. Ormidale. Restalrig Gardens, Restalrig, Edinburgh, brought an action against the Lord Provost and Magistrates of the City of Edinburgh, concluding for payment of £200.

The pursuer was tenant of the Restalrig market garden, which formed part of the estate of Craigentenny, at Restalrig, near Edinburgh. The garden was bounded on the south by the Craigentenny Burn, which from time immemorial had received the drainage and sewage from a portion of the city of Edinburgh. When the district, which included the Craigentenny estate, was annexed to the city of Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, it was provided by section 28 of the Act that the Corporation should not have power to diminish the supply of sewage water flowing through the burn and used for irrigating the estate, or to deepen or otherwise interfere with the burn so far as flowing through the estate.*

* The Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cxxxiii.), enacts:—Sec. 28. "For the protection of the proprietors of the estate of Craigentenny and their successors (in this section called 'the proprietors'), the following provisions shall have effect (that is to say)—(1) Subject, as hereinafter in this section mentioned, it shall not be lawful for the Corporation, or any Local Authority, or person within the city . . . to injuriously affect or interfere with the irrigation of lands on the said estate, or to diminish or intercept or otherwise injuriously affect the supply of sewage or sewage water used for such irrigation, or to deepen, divert, cover over, or otherwise interfere with the stream known as Craigentenny Burn passing

The garden was bounded on the west by the Restalrig Road, from July 12, 1912. which access to the garden was obtained by means of a gate or door. The Craigentinny Burn, after passing through Lochend Meadows, flowed under the road from west to east through a culvert which extended beyond the road for about 55 feet along the southern boundary of the garden, after which the course of the stream was open. The portion of the culvert, 30 feet in length, under the road, was crossed by a water main, which had been put in by the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees under their statutory powers, which it was alleged diminished the capacity of the culvert.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

The defenders were the drainage authority charged with the construction and maintenance of drains and sewers within the city of Edinburgh.* They were also the road authority in charge of the Restalrig Road.

On 25th July and again on 13th October 1909, after a heavy rainfall, the pursuer's garden was flooded by water from the Craigentinny Burn, and he suffered damage, for the recovery of which he brought this action.

The pursuer averred:—(Cond. 3) "The defenders have for many years made from time to time a number of drains which discharge their effluents into said watercourse, and similarly they have above said road between Piershill and Restalrig, in virtue of powers vested in them as a corporation, authorised the connecting of a great number of other drains with the said watercourse or sewer. In consequence the volume of water and sewage carried by it has gradually become very considerable, and is always increasing. The defenders have not, however, altered or increased the capacity of the culvert foresaid at through the said estate, or the carriers, feeders, or distributors therefrom, or with the effluents from the irrigation works, and the said Craigentinny Burn so far as passing through the said estate, and the carriers, feeders, and distributors connected with the irrigation of lands on the said estate, shall not vest in or belong to or be under the management and control of the Corporation. Provided always that if the Corporation shall hereafter deem it necessary in the public interest to interfere with or affect any of the rights, powers, or privileges hereinbefore secured, or to injuriously affect or interfere with the irrigation of lands on the said estate, or to diminish or intercept or otherwise injuriously affect the supply of sewage or sewage water used for such irrigation, or to deepen, divert, cover over, or otherwise interfere with the said Craigentinny Burn or the carriers, feeders, or distributors therefrom, or with the effluents from the irrigation works, the Corporation shall be at liberty to do so . . . upon obtaining an order granted by the Sheriff declaring that it is desirable in the public interest that the Corporation should have such powers. . . ."

* The Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act, 1879 (42 and 43 Vict. cap. cxxxii.), enacts:—Sec. 179 "The Magistrates and Council shall from time to time cause to be made and maintained under streets or courts, or elsewhere within the burgh, such sewers and drains as shall be necessary for the effectual draining of any portion of the burgh, and shall also cause to be made and maintained all such reservoirs, sluices, engines, and other works as shall be necessary for cleaning such sewers and drains, and, if needful, they may carry such sewers and drains through and across any enclosed or other lands and through any underground cellars and vaults, making full compensation for any damage done, which compensation shall be ascertained in the same manner as compensation for land to be taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, and the Magistrates and Council shall have right of access for maintenance of all such sewers and drains."

July 12, 1912. Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh. the Piershill and Restalrig Road, and the same has for a considerable time past been in the knowledge of the defenders quite insufficient to admit of the transmission of the contents of said burn whenever anything occurs, such as a fall of rain, to add materially to the contents of it. The Lochend Meadow immediately above the said Piershill and Restalrig Road is frequently flooded in consequence of the insufficiency of the said culvert to carry off the increased effluents of said burn or sewer, and this state of matters is well known to the defenders. The insufficiency of said culvert is entirely due to the artificial additions to the contents of said burn made by the drainage operations of the defenders as aforesaid." (Cond. 4) "On 25th July 1909 the said burn or sewer overflowed its banks in Lochend Meadows as before mentioned, owing to the insufficiency of said culvert. The water being dammed back by the embankment of the Piershill and Restalrig Road rose gradually on the ground to the west of said road until it reached a level considerably higher than that of the road. The water so pent up and accumulated percolated through the retaining wall of the road in great quantities. The road drains in said road are all connected into the said burn through the said culvert. In consequence of the pressure of water from the culvert or from the meadows immediately above the road, the said road drains overflowed and sent up a great quantity of sewage water on to said road through several syvors or gratings therein. The drains which enter the said burn from the Holyrood district immediately below said culvert also became choked through excess of drainage and regurgitated through the syvors or gratings on the Piershill side of the culvert, increasing said flooding. The said road was flooded in consequence for a considerable distance on each side of the entrance to the pursuer's garden above described to a depth of over two feet." (Cond. 5) "In consequence of the accumulation of water on the road, as set forth in the last article, said water forced itself through the door of the pursuer's garden, breaking it open, and during the 25th and 26th of July 1909 flowed in great quantities continuously off said road into his said garden. The said garden was in consequence flooded to the extent of over nine acres by the said water. . . ." (Cond. 6) "On 13th October 1909 the pursuer's garden was again flooded under the same circumstances and to practically the same extent. The said flooding, which was caused by the water being pressed up through said syvors or drains and walls and finding its way from the said road into the pursuer's garden, lasted for three days and also did great damage." (Cond. 7) "The pursuer produces a detailed statement of the damage sustained by him through both floodings. . . . The said damage by flooding is entirely due to the fault of the defenders in not increasing or having increased the size of the culvert above referred to to correspond with the drainage which they are diverting into it, and also in leading or allowing to be led into said burn more drainage water than on occasions it can take away without the carrying capacity thereof being increased to avoid flooding." [An averment that the flooding was also due to the faulty construction of the road drains and syvors was deleted, by leave of the Lord Ordinary, before proof was allowed.]

The pursuer pleaded;—The pursuer having sustained loss, injury, and damage through the fault of the defenders to the amount stated is entitled to damages as concluded for, with expenses.

The defenders pleaded;—(2) The pursuer's averments so far as July 12, 1912. material being unfounded in fact, the defenders should be assoilzied.

(3) The defenders having acted without negligence and within their statutory powers, should be assoilzied. (4) The defenders are entitled to absolvitor with expenses in respect that:—(a) Neither the culvert nor the channel and banks of the watercourse below said culvert belong to or are vested in the defenders; (b) Any obligation of protecting the lands from the effects of flooding arising through rainfall, normal or excessive, is upon the pursuer's landlord; (c) Defenders are debarred by statute from executing any effective protective works upon the culvert or channel or banks of said burn below said culvert. (5) The flooding complained of having happened through no fault of the defenders, they are entitled to be assoilzied.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Proof was led on 22nd November 1910 and following days. The facts ultimately held to be established (which will be found more fully stated in the opinions of the Court), were as follows:—The flooding of the pursuer's garden was due, not to any increase in the quantity of sewage and house drainage passing into the Craigentenny Burn (the amount of which had not appreciably altered between 1900 and 1909), but to the fact that building and paving operations had gradually rendered a larger portion of the surface of the drainage area impervious to water, with the result that in time of heavy rainfall the surface water found its way more rapidly from the higher levels of the drainage area into the Craigentenny Burn. The pursuer's garden was flooded from two points, first, through the gate on the Restalrig Road, by water passing from the culvert through the road drains on to the road, and second, on the southern boundary of the garden, by water overflowing the banks of the burn. It was not proved that, so far as the flooding through the gate was concerned, the damage to the ground would have been diminished or averted, even if the portion of the culvert under the road had been enlarged, since that would have been of no avail unless the portion of the culvert to the east of the road had also been enlarged, and in any event it would only have allowed more water to pass, which would have increased the overflow of the banks lower down.

On 9th June 1911 the Lord Ordinary (Ormidale) pronounced an interlocutor decerning against the defenders for payment to the pursuer of the sum of £150.*

* "OPINION.—In this action the pursuer claims compensation from the defenders for injury done to his market garden by flooding on 25th July 1909, and again on 13th October 1909. It is not disputed that the pursuer's garden was flooded on both occasions. The first question to be decided is, what caused the flooding? I refer to the plan, No. 30 of process, as showing accurately the position and extent of the pursuer's garden, the course of the Craigentenny Burn, the Restalrig Road, and the subjects generally.

"The pursuer's case is that the water which entered his garden and flooded the low-lying part of it, came in through a gate from the Restalrig Road, because of the insufficiency of a culvert under that road to carry off the water which collected at the west end of it. The defenders' case is that while some water from the road may have passed through the gate—I do not think it was disputed that some water did so pass—the quantity was negligible and could not have followed the line alleged by the pursuer down to the lowest part of his garden; and that the flooding of that part was occasioned, both in July and October, by the burn overflowing its banks

July 12, 1912.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

The defenders reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 29th February, 1st, 6th, 7th, and 8th March, and 14th, 16th, 17th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd May 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—(1) On the evidence it was clear that substantially the whole damage was done by the water which overflowed the banks of the stream on the southern boundary of the garden, and that the flooding was due to the increased area of impervious surface, which caused the rain water to drain more rapidly on to the lower levels. The defenders were not liable for this source of damage. The area drained by the burn was the natural area and had not been increased. The process of draining off surface water by rendering the ground impervious had been going on gradually and continuously since 1532, when the High Street was paved.¹ The Craigentenny Burn and its feeders had always been liable to violent floods. The drainage and building operations of the defenders had been between the east end of the culvert under the Restalrig Road and the Craigentenny Avenue.

“This question of fact is rendered the more difficult of solution because, on the occasion of the October flood, it seems doubtful whether the gate was open. It was open on the occasion of the July flood. The extent of flooded ground is said to have been much the same on the later as on the earlier date, and the duration of the flooding was no longer on the later than on the earlier occasion. On both occasions there was an excessive fall of rain. On the evidence of the eye-witnesses, the pursuer, in my judgment, has proved his case. [His Lordship then discussed the evidence on which he arrived at this conclusion.] I hold, therefore, that it is proved that the pursuer's garden was flooded on the occasions in question by water which passed from the road through the pursuer's gate, and not by water overflowing the banks of the burn. The cause of the flooding of the road was the insufficiency of the culvert to carry off the water which collected at the west end of it. The result was that the road for two hours became a stream which, to a large extent, emptied itself into the pursuer's garden.

“It does not appear when the culvert was constructed. It is plainly a very old bit of work, and was in existence long before the defenders, as road authority, came to have an interest in it. I have no doubt that it originally, and until very recently, was sufficient to carry off all water coming down the burn from the west. At anyrate there is no evidence to the contrary. Its insufficiency on the occasions in question was due, I think, to two causes.

“First. The water main running across the top of the arch and projecting downwards from the crest into the arch 16½ to 18 inches, to some extent diminished the carrying capacity of the culvert. No. 29 of process seems to be a very accurate drawing of the culvert. The parties were not seriously in dispute as to the measurements and levels shown on that plan. This water main was inserted in the culvert in 1907 by the Water Trustees, but a minute of the defenders, dated 30th November 1906, bears that it was so inserted with their permission ‘provided the work is carried out at the sight of and to the satisfaction of the burgh engineer.’

“Second. The increase in the volume of water which has to pass through it on occasions of excessive rainfall renders the culvert inadequate. That there has been such an increase is, in my judgment, proved. I think that it has been brought about by the drainage operations of the defenders, the effect of which has been to pour a much larger volume of sewage and water into the burn from the 7-foot sewer of the defenders at the railway embankment than the burn was accustomed to receive at the time the carried out under statutory provisions,¹ which were imperative either July 12, 1912. in express terms, or because, though permissive in phraseology, they were enacted for the public benefit.² It followed that the defenders ^{Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh.} were not responsible for any prejudice to private rights,³ unless they acted negligently,⁴ since what happened was the inevitable result of what Parliament had authorised them to do.⁵ This was not the case of an opus manufactum, or of a non-natural use of property.⁶ Flooding was a "common enemy" against which everyone was bound to protect himself.⁷ Pollution being out of the question, the defenders were in the position of an upper heritor who was entitled to drain his land of superfluous water without regard to the consequences to the lower heritor, and this rule applied to natural streams and rivers as the legitimate channels for the drainage consequent on habitation.⁸ Further the defenders had no duty to protect agricultural ground, such as the pursuer's, against flooding. If every proprietor of a field culvert was constructed, and for long afterwards. The sewer in question took the place of the open burn in 1908. A large district of Edinburgh drains into it, and houses and population have greatly increased in that district during the last twenty or thirty years. No doubt the increase is not a thing of yesterday. It has been gradual, but it has continued down to the dates of the floods in question. In times of heavy rainfall there is a much more rapid collection of sewage and surface water than formerly, and the whole is discharged in concentrated volume far more rapidly, and at a higher velocity, from the sewer in question into the open course of the burn. The position of the defenders is that, having statutory power to construct drains, there is no limit to the amount of sewage and water which they are entitled to pass into the burn, so long as they collect it in the first instance in drains and sewers constructed under their statutory powers. They are entitled, they say, to disregard the consequences, however injurious, to riparian proprietors below the point where the sewer debouches into the drain. I am not prepared to affirm that proposition. I think they are bound to see to it that no damage results from the exercise of their general statutory powers to construct drains. There is no provision in any of their statutes which expressly, or by implication, empowers them to pour an

¹ Old and New Edinburgh (Cassell), vol. 1, p. 192.

¹ Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act, 1879 (42 and 43 Vict. cap. cxxxii.), secs. 130, 152, 179, 181, 185, 187, and 197.

² Gray v. St Andrews and Cupar District Committees of Fifeshire County Council, 1911 S. C. 266.

³ Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 193; Rankine on Landownership, 4th ed., p. 392.

⁴ Edinburgh and District Water Trustees v. Sommerville & Son, Limited, (1906) 8 F. (H. L.) 25; Mair v. Aberdeen Harbour Commissioners, 1909 S. C. 721.

⁵ Dixon v. Metropolitan Board of Works, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 418.

⁶ Fletcher v. Rylands, (1866) L. R., 1 Ex. 265, (1868) L. R., 3 E. & I. App. 330; Kerr v. Earl of Orkney, (1857) 20 D. 298; Anderson v. Oppenheimer, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 602.

⁷ Nield v. London and North-Western Railway Co., (1874) L. R., 10 Ex. 4, per Bramwell, B., at p. 7.

⁸ Bell's Prin., secs. 968, 969, 1106; Ersk. Inst. ii. 1, 2; ii. 9, 2; Rankine on Landownership, 4th ed., pp. 514-515; Downie v. Earl of Moray, (1825) 4 S. 167; Campbell v. Bryson, (1864) 3 Macph. 254; Mason v. Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 6 Q. B. 578; Wilson v. Waddell, (1876) 2 App. Cas. 95; Fletcher v. Smith, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 781; Mayor, &c., of Bradford v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587; John Young & Co. v. Bankier Distillery Co., [1893] A. C. 691.

July 12, 1912. within the city was entitled to have it drained by the Corporation, that would impose an intolerable burden on the ratepayers. In any case, section 28 of the Act of 1900 absolutely prevented the defenders from interfering with the burn by deepening it or covering it over, and it was not suggested that anything else would have prevented the flooding. There was no notice on record of the case against the defenders as drainage authority, and this part of the pursuer's case should be disregarded.¹ (2) The only case which was made on record was against the defenders as road authority, in respect of their responsibility for the road drains in Restalrig Road and the portion of the culvert thereunder. No defect was alleged in the road drains, and the defenders had no responsibility for the culvert, their rights and duties with regard to the solum of the road being strictly limited.² But in any event, the pursuer's case was unsupported by evidence. The water main in the culvert, which was put in by the Water Trustees under their statutory powers, could not be altered by the defenders, and, in any event, it caused no obstruction. Even if the portion of the culvert under the road had been larger, the damage to the pursuer's garden would have been neither averted nor diminished.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Argued for the respondent;—(1) On the evidence the Lord Ordinary had rightly decided that the damage was done by water passing unlimited amount of sewage and water into the Craigentenny Burn. I do not require to decide whether they are liable, on this ground, to compensate the pursuer for the injury suffered by him through the flooding of his garden. I refer to the fact of their having increased the effluent from their sewer as showing how the culvert under the Restalrig Road has become insufficient.

"It appears to me that it is as road authority—it is admitted that they are the road authority—that they are to blame in that they have allowed the road to become the means of conveying the water of the burn into the pursuer's garden. How they are to avoid that result in the future may be a question. The mere enlargement of the culvert might lead to the overflowing of its banks by the burn to the east of the culvert. A different question would then arise. It is not proved that such a result would certainly follow.

"As to the defenders' right to interfere with the culvert, it appears to me that so far as it is under the road they have that right. They appear to have acted as if they had that right, for two drains from the north side have been led into it, and two other pipes which act as scour pipes have also been led into it. It is quite true that only a portion of the culvert is under the road, but that was the portion which led to the flooding. I think that, by their consenting to the Water Trustees laying the water main where they did, they became responsible for the obstruction thereby occasioned.

"I think that the pursuer has failed to prove that the road is the property of the defenders. Nor has he proved, in my opinion, that the defenders are responsible as owners or as road authority for the part of the Hospital Road overlying the portion of the culvert to the east of the Restalrig Road. In my judgment £150 will fairly cover the damage sustained by the pursuer, and I shall give decree for that amount, with expenses."

¹ Watson, Laidlaw, & Co., Limited, v. Pott, Cassels, & Williamson, 1909 S. C. 1445.

² Glasgow Coal Exchange Co., Limited, v. Glasgow City and District Railway Co., (1883) 12 R. 1283; Magistrates of Ayr v. Dobbie, (1898) 25 R. 1184. Wishart v. Wyllie, (1853) 1 Macq. 389, was also referred to.

through the gate on the Restalrig Road. But if it should be held July 12, 1912. that to any substantial extent flooding took place over the banks of the stream lower down, the defenders were responsible for this as the drainage authority for the city of Edinburgh. (a) The pursuer's garden lay within the area which they administered, and they were bound by statute to provide for the effectual draining of "any portion" of the burgh.¹ Section 28 of the Act of 1900 had no application, since it only referred to "sewage," and on the occasions in question only a small percentage of the flood water was sewage. Further, that section only prohibited the defenders from diminishing the flow, and gave them no authority to increase it. Moreover, under that section the defenders had power to make any alterations they thought necessary in the public interest on application to the Sheriff. The pursuer had the same rights as any other ratepayer in the burgh.² (b) Apart from the fact that the defenders were responsible for the effectual drainage of every portion of the burgh, including the market garden in question, they were liable on the separate ground that by their drainage operations they had caused the lands of a lower proprietor to be flooded. It was no answer to say that these operations had been carried out under statutory authority. Drainage powers given by Parliament did not authorise the committal of a nuisance in the exercise of the powers, and they had to be used with due regard to private rights.³ The decisions in *Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill*⁴ and *Dixon v. Metropolitan Board of Works*⁵ were typical of a different class of case, where the statutory authority was bound to execute the work in a particular manner, and was naturally free from responsibility for the consequences. At common law a party was not entitled to collect the drainage water of the upper lands and discharge it on to the lands of the inferior heritor without consideration of his convenience⁶—which was just what had been done in the present case. Flooding might be a "common enemy," but the defenders had no right to protect their property by transferring the mischief from their own land to that of the pursuer.⁷ The doctrine of in æmulationem vicini was not obsolete.⁸ The rainfall on the occasions in question was not a damnum fatale; the defenders should have

¹ Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act, 1879, sec. 179.

² Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, sec. 16.

³ Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board, (1875) L. R., 20 Eq. 626; Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Parke, [1899] A. C. 535; Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 430; Attorney-General v. Gaslight and Coke Co., (1877) 7 Ch. D. 217; The Queen v. Bradford Navigation Co., (1865) 6 B. & S. 631; Attorney-General v. Council of Borough of Birmingham, (1858) 4 K. & J. 528; Price's Patent Candle Co., Limited, v. London County Council, [1908] 2 Ch. 526; Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board, (1879) 12 Ch. D. 102, per Brett, L.J., at p. 121, Cotton, L.J., at p. 123; Evans v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co., (1887) 36 Ch. D. 626; Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 38), sec. 103.

⁴ 6 App. Cas. 193.

⁵ 7 Q. B. D. 418.

⁶ Campbell v. Bryson, (1864) 3 Macph. 254, per Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, at p. 260; Dunn v. Hamilton, (1837) 15 S. 853; Ersk. Inst. ii. 9, 2.

⁷ Whalley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 131.

⁸ Campbell v. Muir, 1908 S. C. 387.

July 12, 1912. foreseen it and taken measures accordingly.¹ The stream was to be regarded either as a sewer or a watercourse. If as a sewer, then it was the duty of the defenders to see that it was adequate for its purpose; if as a watercourse, then the defenders were to blame for putting more water into it than it was capable of transmitting. (2) The defenders were liable as road authority for the flooding through the gate on the Restalrig Road. The flooding was due to the inadequate size of the culvert under the road. The culvert was under the charge of the defenders, and they were bound to keep it efficient and to alter it if necessary.² Whatever effect section 28 of the Act of 1900 might have on the position of the defenders as the drainage authority, it did not affect their powers as the road authority. It was not denied that to some extent the capacity of the culvert was diminished by the main constructed by the Water Trustees. The defenders had power either to alter the water main themselves or make the Water Trustees do so, or to put in a relief drain,³ and they were to blame for neglecting to take any of these measures.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD GUTHRIE.—This case does not involve a large sum. The pursuer concludes for £200; the Lord Ordinary has awarded £150, and the defenders reclaim only on the question of liability. But the case raises difficult and important questions of fact and law. The questions of fact are difficult, because the evidence is conflicting, and because much of the evidence of the pursuer's witnesses is alleged by the defenders' experts to be scientifically impossible. The questions of law are of general importance for the defenders, and for all similar bodies.

It is common ground that, on the dates mentioned in the condescendence, namely, on 25th July and 13th October 1909, a substantial portion of the market garden on the Craigentenny estate, leased from year to year by the pursuer, was flooded by, and suffered material damage from, water coming, either more or less directly, from sewers and drains vested in the defenders as a drainage authority, or from the surface of an old turnpike road, Restalrig Road, vested in them as a road authority, or from both. The defenders are not alleged to have any responsibility in connection with the other road referred to in the evidence, the Old Hospital Road.

The record is vague as to the capacity or capacities in which the defenders are sought to be rendered liable in damages, but we were told at the debate that they are sued primarily as the road authority vested in the Restalrig Road, and secondarily as the drainage authority for the city of Edinburgh. In certain parts of his case, the pursuer seemed to be attacking the defenders in both capacities. The case does not raise any question of pollution, for it is admitted that the Craigentinny Burn has contained city July 12, 1912. sewage for much more than the prescriptive period. Nor although the rainfall in the July and October floods was very heavy, is there any ques- ^{Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh.} tion of damnum fatale. Mr Walker Smith's description of the 25th July flood may be fairly applied to both floods: "While that rainfall was not Lord Guthrie. absolutely abnormal, it was still a very exceptional rainfall."

¹ Potter v. Hamilton and Strathaven Railway Co., (1864) 3 Macph. 83; Harrison v. Great Northern Railway Co., (1864) 33 L. J., Ex. 266.

² Houstoun v. Barr, 1911 S. C. 134; Pirie & Sons v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, (1871) 9 Macph. 412; Duncan v. Suburban Committee of Midlothian County Council, July 10, 1900 (Lord Kincairney, Ordinary), Scottish County Council Cases, vol. vii., p. 39; Roads and Bridges Act, 1878 (41 and 42 Vict. cap. 51), secs. 2, 94, and 123, incorporating the General Turnpike Act, 1831 (1 and 2 Will. IV. cap. 43), sec. 85.

³ Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act, 1879, secs. 28, 141.

The pursuer maintains that all the damage was done by water, mostly rainfall water, coming from the Restalrig Road through the gate leading into his land, any water coming over the banks of the burn on to the pursuer's land being nothing more than a little leakage near the mouth of the culvert. The defenders' case is that, while a negligible quantity of water may have come through the gate, substantially the whole damage was done by the water, mostly rainfall water, which overflowed the banks of the Craigentinny Burn where, for a distance of about 350 yards, and with a width of about 11 feet and a depth of from 3 to 4 feet, it bounds the pursuer's land to the east of the Restalrig Road.

Taking the evidence as a whole, it seems to me that substantial damage was done both by water coming through the pursuer's gate, and by water overflowing the pursuer's banks. In view of the fact that no question was raised by the reclaimers as to the sum of damages awarded by the Lord Ordinary, it is unnecessary to determine to what extent the water, which injured the pursuer's land, came from the one source or the other. While accepting the evidence of the pursuer, his son Adam Hanley, his workmen Rutherford and Thomson, and the stationmaster Macdonald, corroborated by the Craigentinny architect, M'Laren, and the factor, Bryce, to the extent that a quantity of water came in at the gate sufficient to do substantial damage to the pursuer's land and produce, I think much of this evidence is greatly, and some of it is grossly, exaggerated. My impression is that much the largest quantity of water must have reached the pursuer's land over the banks of the burn to the east of the Restalrig Road.—[His Lordship then discussed the evidence leading to that conclusion.]

On record, the pursuer does not present any case against the defenders as drainage authority, in respect of their having allowed water on the occasions in question to overflow the banks of the burn west of the road into the Lochend Meadows (as it has periodically done from time immemorial), and thence on to his land, or in respect of their having allowed water to overflow the banks of the Craigentinny Burn bounding, or passing through, the ground let to him. On the contrary, he denies any overflow below the road, and the same attitude was maintained throughout the proof and in the debate. But in his junior counsel's speech in the Inner House, it was argued that, if any overflow took place at the east of the road, i.e., below it, to the extent of doing substantial damage, the defenders were liable therefor, as drainage authority. I do not think this view of the case is maintainable on record. But if it were, I should hold that the defenders were right. The open Craigentinny Burn to the west of the Restalrig Road, and to the east of the road as it bounds and runs through the pursuer's garden ground, is not one of the sewers and drains vested in the defenders under section 178 of the Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act of 1879, but it is a watercourse within the area of their administration used for the July 12, 1912. conveyance of sewage, and, so far as situated to the west of the road, could be culverted by them.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Lord Guthrie.

Up till 1900 the ground in question, and this part of the Craigentenny Burn, were in the county of Midlothian. Had that state of matters existed at the time of the July and October 1909 floods, it is clear that none of the defenders' operations, as drainage authority higher up the burn, could have founded a claim against them for flooding agricultural land by water overflowing the burn banks beyond the Restalrig Road. The whole water flowing in the Craigentenny Burn comes from the natural drainage area of that burn, about two square miles in extent, mostly in the Old Town, and a small part in the New Town, and there is no evidence that the defenders have led water, either pure or polluted, from other drainage areas into the districts contributing water to the burn. It is no doubt true that, through addition of buildings and streets and of population, and through consequent increase of impervious surfaces, the amount of water normally flowing in the burn has gradually increased during the last one hundred years, and, in floods, the proportion of increase in the water of the burn from acceleration is greater still. But no action could have lain for such gradual and natural increase, either normal or in times of flood, against ordinary upper proprietors, and no grounds were stated why, apart from express enactment, a claim for flooding of agricultural land should lie against a statutory drainage authority, which would not have lain against the individual proprietors within the area before the authority was constituted.

But in 1900 the district in question was annexed to Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Corporation Act of that year. Restalrig Road, previously one of the county roads, came under the administration of the defenders, as road authority, and express provision was made, by section 28, for the interests of the estate of Craigentenny. The result is that, so far as sewage water is concerned, the proprietor of Craigentenny must be held to have accepted the amount of water then in the burn as not excessive, because he, by that statute, disabled the defenders from diminishing it. If that date be taken, there is no evidence of any increase either of population or of building, and consequently of sewage water, either normal or in floods, in the burn since 1900. Indeed it appears from the census return 1900 to 1910 that there has been a substantial decrease in the population of the districts drained between these dates. This point of the effect of the Act of 1900 is not mentioned by the Lord Ordinary. It seems to me crucial, and is expressly given notice of by the defenders on record. Even, however, if a period of twenty-three years be taken, the increase has been slight. Of the whole drainage area not more than six per cent has been converted during that period by building operations from pervious to impervious; and the additional dry weather sewage from the buildings thus erected does not amount to more than about one-third of one per cent of the discharging capacity of the Restalrig Road culvert. The problem is one of rainfall not of sewage. The pursuer's case has been throughout conducted on two mistakes in fact, first, that the difficulties caused by flooding have been due to the increase or accelerated flow of dry weather sewage coming through drains vested in the defenders, whereas they have been due to rain water; and, second, that, as expressed in condescendence 7, the defenders "are diverting" drainage into the burn, whereas they are merely giving effect to the rights which Parliament has conferred on the inhabitants of Edinburgh. July 12, 1912.

Further, the pursuer led no evidence as to the kind of works which the defenders had failed to execute so as to prevent flooding over his banks. Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

In the cross-examination of Mr Walker Smith and Sir Thomas Hunter it was suggested that part of the flood sewage water might be kept out of the Craigentenny Burn and put into a relief drain, beginning at the east end of the culvert. But any such operation would be in contravention of the provisions of section 28 of the 1900 Act. For the same reason the defenders could neither deepen nor widen the burn, nor interfere with its banks. Lord Guthrie.

I therefore think that if the pursuer has any record for a case against the defenders as drainage authority (which I doubt) no such case has been established. I ought to add that the pursuer's junior counsel stated a separate case against the defenders arising from the pursuer's position as a ratepayer within the drainage area. But this case, of which no notice is given on record, was not pressed by the pursuer's senior counsel. The case was ultimately argued on the footing that the pursuer has no other or higher rights than those of his landlord, the proprietor of Craigentenny.

The question remains whether the defenders are liable, as road authority, in damages to the pursuer for the damage done by the flood water flowing on to his lands from Restalrig Road through his gate, as I have held it did to a substantial extent. On record the pursuer does not allege against them any acts of commission involving fault. He does not suggest they should, or could, have refused to connect any of the sewers in question with the Craigentenny Burn, or that they should have prevented water overflowing the burn west of the Restalrig Road into the Lochend Meadows, or that they failed to construct proper drains, manholes, and syvors in the Restalrig Road, or that they improperly allowed the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees in 1907 to cross the top part of the culvert, about 20 feet from the west end and 65 feet from the east end, with a water-pipe, which narrowed the top space of that part of the culvert by 18 inches according to the pursuer, or 16½ inches according to the defenders, or that they improperly led into the culvert a 12-inch pipe and a 9-inch pipe draining the west and east sides of the Restalrig Road, the 12-inch pipe entering the culvert 24 feet 8 inches and the 9-inch pipe entering 26 feet 6 inches from the west end of the culvert. All these points except the first are now made by the pursuer, but most of them are not mentioned at all upon record, and none of them are founded on as inferring fault. The sole ground of fault alleged on record is "the fault of the defenders in not increasing or having increased the size of the culvert above referred to to correspond with the drainage which they are directing into it" (cond. 7), and the only reason for the alleged inadequacy of the culvert is thus stated in cond. 3:—"The insufficiency of said culvert is entirely due to the artificial additions to the contents of said burn made by the drainage operations of the defenders as aforesaid," thereby negating any of the other causes now put forward on the strength of certain passages in the proof. So far as blame is now attached to what happened in connection with the drains, manholes, and syvors in Restalrig Road, the

July 12, 1912. defenders had express notice that no point of this kind was to be made, because an averment as to their faulty construction contained in cond. 7
Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh. was, on the pursuer's motion, deleted by interlocutor of 14th June 1910.
Lord Guthrie. It may be that the defenders were in fault for not having their drains fitted with valves to prevent regurgitation, such as are referred to in Mr Walker Smith's cross-examination, but no such case can be made by the pursuer on the record and proof.

If attention be confined to the sole ground of fault alleged on record, namely, the defenders' failure to enlarge the culvert (which, so far as it runs under the Restalrig Road, is treated, I am disposed to think rightly, as a part of the road under the defenders' management), I think the pursuer has failed to prove his case, as in a question with him, a Craigentenny tenant, alleging damage only to agricultural ground. In my view, the difficult questions which might have arisen with a resident in Restalrig village or elsewhere, alleging recurrent flooding of house property caused by insufficient road drainage, and not affected by the provisions of section 28 of the Annexation Act of 1900, do not arise here, whether the defenders be considered as a road authority or as a drainage authority. This distinction, which seems to me vital, does not seem to have been present to the Lord Ordinary's mind.

My reasons for thinking that the pursuer has failed on this part of his case have been indicated already. I am not moved by the defenders' alleged inability (apart from the Act of 1900) to operate on the culvert, as being below the roadway, or as being, to the extent of fully 50 feet, to the east of the road which alone is vested in them. They seem to possess power under section 179 of the Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act of 1879; but if they have not power, they can obtain it from Parliament. The defenders' true and, I think, sufficient answers are (1) that the pursuer founds his claim for enlargement of the culvert on the increase of sewage water due to the operations of the defenders or of the inhabitants, for whom they act as drainage authority; and the pursuer is not entitled to make any complaint of increase, for there has been none since 1900, when his landlord accepted the sewage water as not excessive, and by the Act of that year bound the defenders not to diminish it as it passes through the lands let to the pursuer; (2) that it is not proved that the flooding of the pursuer's ground on the occasions in question was due to the inadequate size of the culvert; and (3) that it is not proved that, even if the culvert had been enlarged as demanded by the pursuer, the damage to his ground would have been averted or materially diminished.

This view of the case may be sufficient for its decision in the defenders' favour. But if it be thought, in view of the full investigation on both sides into the alleged wrongous acts of the defenders above mentioned, and in view of the defenders' failure to object to the evidence so led, that these matters, although not referred to on record, or not referred to as inferring fault, ought to be considered and disposed of, I am of opinion that the pursuer has failed to establish fault on the defenders' part, for which they are liable in damages to him.

The pursuer says that he has proved that a substantial part of the damage done to his ground was caused by water coming through his gate, which would not have come on to his land so as to cause him damage but for the July 12, 1912. following faults on the part of the defenders :—

First, their failure to prevent water coming through the manhole on the Restalrig Road to the south of the culvert, and thence along the road northwards and through the pursuer's gate. To this the defenders reply—in my opinion, effectively—first, that it is neither alleged nor proved that there is anything defective in the construction of the manhole, or in the drains connected with it; second, that it is not proved that any considerable amount of water overcame the northward levels and entered the pursuer's ground, instead of escaping, as most of it would naturally do, on the west into Lochend Meadows, and on the east into the Old Hospital Road; and third, that in any case, the alleged inadequacy and congested condition of the culvert can have had no connection with the spouting from the manhole, because it discharges below the culvert.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.
Lord Guthrie.

Second, it is said that the defenders were to blame for the road water which spouted from the three syvors nearest the gate, and which entered the pursuer's land through his gate. Here again I think the defenders' answer is sufficient, first, that it is neither alleged nor proved that there is anything defective in the construction of the syvors, and second, that it is not proved that there was any fault in leading the connecting 12-inch and 9-inch drains, with which these syvors communicate, into the culvert, in substitution for the drain which entered the culvert before the water-pipe was placed in it in 1907, or that the position of these drains in the culvert, or the existence in the culvert of the adjoining water-pipe, in any way increased the tendency of the water to regurgitate during such heavy rain-falls as occurred on 25th July and 13th October 1909. The fact that water regurgitated in the same way from the manhole, which discharged below the culvert, indicates that the alleged inadequate size and congested condition of the culvert was not the cause of the water regurgitating on to Restalrig Road at the one place, any more than at the other.

Third, it is said to be proved that, but for the existence of the water-pipe, the floods complained of would not have occurred. This, although no notice of it is given on record, is the most plausible part of the pursuer's case. I do not think that the defenders can escape responsibility for the effect of this water main, in flooding the road and adjoining property, merely because it was actually inserted, not by them, but by the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees with their consent. They could have refused their consent; and it may be that, in view of the well-known difficulty in anticipating the effect of an obstacle on running water, they would have been wiser to have done so, and to have compelled the Water Trustees to run their water main across the stream clear of the culvert. But this is a very different thing from proving that the diminution of the culvert by the water main has caused substantial damage to the pursuer.—[His Lordship then considered the evidence on this point, coming to the conclusion that no damage due to diminution of the culvert was proved.]

In the view above stated, it is not necessary to consider the serious difficulties in the pursuer's way from the fact that the culvert, so far as vested in the defenders as road authority, only covers 30 feet out of the whole length of 85 feet, and from the fact that enlargement of the culvert

July 12, 1912. would apparently result in flooding over the banks of the burn to the east of the Restalrig Road.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Lord Guthrie.

My view therefore is that, on the assumption that the pursuer has proved substantial damage to his garden ground resulting from water coming from Restalrig Road through his gate, open, half open, or shut, he has failed to show that the defenders, either as road authority or as drainage authority, are liable in damages therefor. I come to this conclusion, whether the water entering his gate had run down Restalrig Road from north and south, or had come through the wall and the churchyard gate from the Lochend Meadows, or had come from the manhole to the south, or from the syvons alongside and near the gate.

LORD SALVESEN.—I have had an opportunity of reading the opinion of Lord Guthrie, and I concur in the conclusions of fact at which he has arrived on a review of the whole evidence. As, however, certain important questions of law were fully argued before us, I think it right to express the opinion which I have formed on some of these.

The Craigentenny Burn is a natural watercourse which from time immemorial has received the sewage of part of the city of Edinburgh. No question, therefore, arises of pollution, for a prescriptive right has been acquired by the inhabitants of that district to continue to put their sewage into the burn. There has been no increase in the area of the land which drains into the burn as there would have been if the drainage from the adjoining districts had been diverted into the burn. On the other hand, as the ground has become more and more covered with buildings and streets which are more or less impervious to surface water, there can be no doubt that in periods of heavy rainfall the surface water finds its way more quickly into the burn than it did when the land now built upon was in its natural state or used for purposes of agriculture. The same thing may be said of very many of the rivers and watercourses in Scotland. In the case of the larger rivers the laying of field drains in land of a wet or boggy character with the view of making it more productive has had a marked effect upon the rapidity with which spates or floods in such rivers rise and fall. It is, however, in my judgment quite settled law that a riparian owner is not entitled to interdict a heritor whose lands drain into the same river from laying drains in his fields which will have the effect of causing rain water to pass into the river more rapidly than if the land had remained unimproved. That drainage operations over a considerable area of land may have an injurious effect upon the salmon-fishing in a river, by causing the floods to rise and subside more quickly than they would otherwise have done, is matter of common knowledge; but the proprietor who drains his land is making a natural use of his property, and cannot be restrained from doing so because of the circumstance that his operations may have an injurious effect on the property of a lower heritor. In the same way the proprietor who lays out his land for building, and thereby renders the surface less pervious to water than it previously was is making a natural and legitimate use of his property, and cannot be restrained because of an apprehension more or less well founded that the watercourse into which his land naturally drains may thereby become more liable to overflow its banks during periods of exceptional rainfall. While, therefore, it may be true July 12, 1912. that the Craigentinny Burn in consequence of the more rapid drainage from the surface of the land which naturally drains into it may now be more liable to overflow its banks than it was fifty or one hundred years ago, this is not, per se, a reason for imposing liability on the superior heritor for damage done by such flooding to the lands of the lower heritor.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

Lord Salvesen.

The pursuer's record does not, indeed, present a case of this kind ; but he founds his claim on an averment that the defenders have by their operations increased the quantity of water which finds its way into the Craigentinny Burn. This increase, he alleges, has made the culvert at the Restalrig Road which was formerly sufficient to pass off the water that came into it insufficient for that purpose. He says,—“The insufficiency of said culvert is entirely due to the artificial additions to the contents of said burn made by the drainage operations of the defenders as aforesaid.” I entirely agree with Lord Guthrie's conclusion in fact that this averment is completely disproved. The defenders have not appreciably added to the amount of water which finds its way into the burn ; but the improved drainage of the district which they administer has the effect of transmitting the surface water more rapidly into the burn than was the case when less of the land which naturally drains into it was occupied by houses and the drainage was less effective.

It may nevertheless be that the drainage authorities who are responsible for the proper drainage of the district may incur liability to the owner of property within the burgh area in consequence of a change of circumstances of this kind, if it is found that injury is periodically being done to his property. If, for instance, owing to the more perfect drainage of the upper parts of the town, the drains constructed in the lower parts have become insufficient to carry off the water as rapidly as it is transmitted to them, and flooding results, it may well be that a duty is laid on the drainage authority to take steps to have the size of the drains increased so as to cope with the more rapid flow ; although no actual increase of the annual quantity of water passed by the drains has taken place. Each ratepayer in the town is entitled to have his property efficiently drained ; and it can never be the right of the town authorities to sacrifice the interest of the owners of houses situated on a lower level for the benefit of the upper districts. If, therefore, the owner of a house abutting on a street or road within the city boundaries finds himself frequently flooded with sewage because of the drains constructed by the Local Authority becoming gorged in times of heavy rainfall, I cannot doubt that, apart from damnum fatale, he would have a claim against such authority for failing to discharge one of their primary functions. The peculiarity of the present case is that, so far as the estate of Craigentinny is concerned, the defenders are under a statutory disability to do anything to diminish the amount of sewage which they pass into the Craigentinny Burn. They are, besides, disabled by the same clause in the statute of 1900, from deepening, diverting, covering over, or otherwise interfering with the Craigentinny Burn so far as passing through the estate of that name. They cannot therefore take the steps which would be appropriate to prevent the adjoining lands from being overflowed with water at such times as the existing watercourse may be insufficient to July 12, 1912. contain all the drainage that flows into it. I think, therefore, it is plain that if this flooding of the lands occupied by the pursuer (who can have no higher title than the owner of the Craigentenny estate, of whom he is the tenant) arose from the Craigentenny Burn overflowing its banks, the defenders would not be liable for the consequences of such flooding.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.
Lord Salvesen.

The question, however, remains whether, assuming a substantial amount of the water which flooded the pursuer's lands came from Restalrig Road and flowed in through his gate, the defenders might not be liable as the road authority for the damage thereby caused. In order to succeed in this claim I think the pursuer must establish (1) that the culvert beneath the road, so far as within the jurisdiction of the defenders, was of less capacity than the watercourse above and below; or (2) that its capacity had been reduced by operations for which the defenders are responsible; and (3) that the water would not have reached his lands so as to flood them but for the insufficient capacity of the culvert.

As regards the first point, the culvert, as constructed, and until recently, was of the same capacity beneath the road as for the 55 feet to which it extends in the Craigentenny estate. It is plain, therefore, that the water which filled the culvert was not more likely in its original state to flow out on the road, which at the point nearly opposite the pursuer's gate appears to be at a little lower level than the top of the culvert, than it would be to overflow the banks lower down; and in any case, even if the culvert had been wider below the road, there would be exactly the same liability for the water to regurgitate through the drains on the road so long as the culvert on the Craigentenny estate remained of the same capacity. The most serious point against the defenders is that they permitted the Water Trustees to obstruct the culvert by putting in a large water-main underneath the road. I prefer the evidence of the defenders' experts as to the extent to which this water-main formed an obstruction to the flow of water; but even on their estimate it did obstruct the passage to the extent of 500 cubic feet per minute, assuming there was no head on the upper side of the culvert. This is not made a ground of complaint by the pursuer on his record; but as a great deal of evidence was led on the point, apparently without objection, I think we cannot disregard it. The fact remains that, whenever the culvert was running full, water would issue at the syvors at the lowest point of the road, which happens to be close to the pursuer's gate; and the more the culvert was obstructed the longer the level of the water would be maintained at the top of the culvert during the periods of greatest flow. The pursuer, however, cannot succeed unless he makes it reasonably clear that this obstruction of the culvert resulted in sending more water upon his lands than would otherwise have reached them; for it is of course immaterial from what precise place the water flowed if it would have overflowed the pursuer's lands to the same extent. On this point I think the pursuer's case fails. It is reasonably clear, having in view the relative capacity of the culvert itself and of the bed of the stream below, that when the culvert was running full there was bound to be an overflow over the banks; and the effect of the partial obstruction would merely be to intercept a portion of the water which would otherwise have flowed over the banks below. Indeed, I think the obstruction, so far from injuring the pursuer, actually tended to diminish the quantity of water which overflowed his lands by damming it back on the Lochend meadows, and causing it to flow over other properties; whereas if the culvert had been wider the whole amount would have overflowed the banks of the burn on the Craigentenny side. These considerations, of course, do not apply to the owners of houses on the Restalrig Road whose properties would not have been flooded at all if there had been a free discharge for the water beneath the road and over the banks of the more or less artificial course of the burn on the Craigentenny estate.

I should like to add that while I cannot disregard the evidence of the pursuer's witnesses to the effect that a considerable body of water flowed from the road on to his lands, that evidence is plainly exaggerated, for the depth of water can at no time have exceeded a foot above the bottom of the gate; and if there had been any great rush of water I think it is certain that it would have left its traces on the farm road leading to the gate. If it were necessary to determine this point, I should hold without hesitation that by far the greatest volume of water found its way over the banks of the burn into the low-lying parts of the pursuer's market garden.

While I agree, therefore, with Lord Guthrie in holding that the defenders must be assoilzied from the conclusions of the present action, it is for them to consider whether they should not counteract the obstruction caused by the water-main by correspondingly widening the culvert beneath the road and so obviating what is prima facie a defect in their drainage system, namely, that whenever the culvert runs full it must necessarily discharge some of its contents on to the road by means of the syvors at the lowest part of that road. This could be easily avoided, so far as the road was concerned, by making the culvert underneath the road of such a width that the water would not so readily rise to the top of the culvert. No doubt it would still overflow the banks of the stream as it passes through the estate of Craigentenny, but the proprietors of that estate are quite able to look after their own interests, and can, if so minded, readily protect themselves by raising the banks of the burn on the side adjoining the pursuer's market garden.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I entirely concur in the opinions which your Lordships have delivered. This is a case in which there was very conflicting evidence indeed, but what study I have been able to give to it convinces me that the pursuer cannot succeed, and I am particularly unable to get over the fact that, even if the west tunnel which discharges above the culvert was full, it could not be passing more water than the culvert under the road could take; whereas the fact is, as I read the evidence, that the tunnel never was running full, which makes it certain that it was not any failure of the culvert to carry the volume of water coming from the west tunnel up the stream which caused any overflow on to the pursuer's ground—even if the water-pipe crossing the culvert constituted an obstruction to the water getting freely through the culvert, which I am satisfied was not so. Substantially the fact is that the culvert with the pipe across it quite freely passes through it all water coming from the tunnel to the west of the meadows which discharges into the burn above the road where the culvert

July 12, 1912. crosses it. It seems to me, therefore, that there can be no question of the defenders being in fault in these circumstances.

Hanley v.
Magistrates
of Edinburgh.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, and assoilzied the defenders with expenses.

DANIEL TUDHOPE, Solicitor—Sir THOMAS HUNTER, W.S.—Agents.

No. 167. ARCHIBALD EDWARD BUTTER, First Party.—Macphail, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

July 12, 1912. FREDERICK CHARLES FOSTER, Second Party.—Cooper, K.C.—Dallas.

Butter v.
Foster.

Sale—Sale of heritage—Assignment of rents—Legal and conventional terms—Pastoral farm—Mansion-house and shootings—Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868 (31 and 32 Vict. cap. 101), sec. 8, Sched. B, No. 1.

By the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 8, it is enacted that a clause of assignment of rents in the statutory form "shall, unless specially qualified, be held to import an assignment to the rents to become due for the possession following the term of entry, according to the legal and not the conventional terms, unless in the case of forehand rents, in which case it shall be held to import an assignment to the rents payable at the conventional terms subsequent to the date of entry."

A landed estate, consisting of a mansion-house and shootings and farms, was sold with entry at Martinmas 1910, and the disposition contained an assignment of rents in the statutory form. A hill or sheep farm on the estate had been let in 1895 on a lease which was still current. The lease provided for entry at Whitsunday 1895 as to the houses, yards, hill pasture, and natural grass, and also provided for payment of the rent at two terms in the year, beginning the first term's payment at Whitsunday 1896. The mansion-house and shootings had been let for the year 1910, the rent being payable one-half on 1st January 1910 and the other half on 1st July 1910.

Questions having arisen between the purchaser and the seller as to the apportionment between them of the rents—

Held (1) with regard to the farm—that the rent conventionally payable at Martinmas 1911 was legally due at Martinmas 1910 for the crop up to that date, and so fell to the seller.

Mackenzie's Trustees v. Somerville, (1900) 2 F. 1278, followed.

Wigan v. Cripps, 1908 S. C. 394, doubted.

Held (2) with regard to the mansion-house and shootings—that the rent must be regarded as running de die in diem, and, accordingly, that the seller must pay to the purchaser the portion of the half-year's rent, received on 1st July 1910, that effeired to the period from 11th November to 31st December 1910.

Contract—Construction—Prior communings—Sale of heritage—Disposition—Prior articles of sale.

Articles of sale for the sale of a heritable estate contained certain conditions as to the rights of the purchaser and the seller respectively in the rents. A sale was effected in terms of the articles, and was followed by a disposition which contained an assignment of rents in the statutory form.

Held that the rights of parties in the rents were regulated by the terms of the disposition to the exclusion of the conditions contained in the articles of sale.

Lee v. Alexander, (1883) 10 R. (H. L.) 91, and Orr v. Mitchell, (1893) 20 R. (H. L.) 27, followed.

Jamieson v. Welsh, (1900) 3 F. 176, distinguished.

ON 17th October 1911 a special case was brought for the opinion and judgment of the Court upon certain questions as to the parties entitled to the rents of the estate of Faskally to which Archibald Edward Butter, late of Faskally, was the first party, and Frederick Charles Foster, now of Faskally, was the second party.

July 12, 1912.
Butter v.
Foster..

1st DIVISION.

The case stated as follows:—"1. On 15th July 1910 the first party sold by private bargain to the second party the estate of Faskally, in the parish of Moulin, Perthshire, under articles and conditions of sale, to which an agreement for the purchase was appended and signed by the second party. . . .

"2. The third article of the said articles and conditions of sale provides, inter alia,—"The purchaser or respective purchasers shall have right to the rents for the possession following the term of Martinmas 1910, which it is hereby declared shall be the term of entry to the estates."

"3. The sixth article of the said articles and conditions of sale provides, inter alia, as follows:—"Upon payment or settlement of the price, with interest if incurred, the exposor shall execute and deliver a formal and valid disposition or conveyance of the lands in favour of the purchaser . . . which disposition . . . shall contain a clause of entry as at the term of Martinmas 1910, and all other usual and necessary clauses in deeds of conveyance of land in Scotland, and, particularly, a clause binding the exposor in absolute warrandice, but excepting from such warrandice the current leases or missives of lease or other rights of possession of the present tenants or occupiers of the lands and others."

"6. By disposition, dated 9th and recorded 11th November 1910, the first party conveyed to the second party the said estate of Faskally, with entry at Martinmas 1910. . . .

"7. The said disposition contains an assignation by the first party of the rents of the said estate in the following terms:—"And I assign the rents."

"8. The said assignation of rents is in the form prescribed in Schedule B of the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, and by section 8 of that Act it is enacted that 'The clause of assignation of rents in these forms shall, unless specially qualified, be held to import an assignation to the rents to become due for the possession following the term of entry, according to the legal and not the conventional terms, unless in the case of forehand rents, in which case it shall be held to import an assignation to the rents payable at the conventional terms subsequent to the date of entry.'

"9. On delivery of the said disposition the second party entered into possession of the estate of Faskally, and questions have arisen as to the rents to which the first and second parties are respectively entitled under the circumstances set forth in this case.

"10. The rents in question are certain rents payable in terms of leases granted by the first party of (1) the farm of Old Faskally, and (2) Faskally House and shootings.

"11. By lease, dated 13th May and 16th June 1896, the first party let to certain tenants the farm of Old Faskally for a period of fifteen years from and after Whitsunday 1895 as to the houses, yards, hill pasture, and natural grass, and at the separation of crop of 1895 from the ground as to the arable land; and the said lease, by minute endorsed thereon, dated 31st October and 2nd November 1903, was extended for a further period of five years from and after the expiry

July 12, 1912.

Butter v.
Foster.

stated in the lease, and that as if the expiry therein had been Whitsunday 1915. . . . In terms of the said lease the tenants bound themselves to pay to the first party the sum of £250 sterling (which rent was reduced to £225 in terms of the said minute) 'of yearly rent payable at two terms in the year, Whitsunday and Martinmas, by equal portions, beginning the first term's payment thereof at Whitsunday 1896 and the next term's payment thereof at Martinmas thereafter, and that for the grass crop 1895, and corn crop 1896, and so forth, half-yearly and termly during all the years of this lease.' The parties are agreed that the farm of Old Faskally, which extends to over 3700 acres, of which 67 acres are arable and the remainder grazing, is a grazing farm.

"12. By lease, dated 31st October and 4th November 1903, . . . the first party let to the tenant therein designed (first) 'All and Whole the furnished mansion-house of Faskally, with the offices, stabling, coach-house, and coachman's house thereto pertaining, and the garden, lawn, and policies; and also All and Whole the exclusive privilege of shooting and sporting over' certain parts of the estate of Faskally; and also the fishings of Faskally as therein described from the opening of the season till the close in each year. In terms of the said lease the tenant bound herself to pay to the first party 'the sum of £1325 sterling yearly in name of rent, and that in equal portions on the first day of January and the first day of July in each year, beginning the first payment of the said rent, being £662, 10s., on the first day of January 1905, and the next payment of a similar sum on the first day of July 1905, and so forth half-yearly thereafter on the first day of January and first day of July during the currency of this lease.' The said lease was granted for the term of ten years from 1st January 1905, with power to either party to terminate it at 1st January 1910. By agreement this option to terminate the lease was extended, and subsequently the tenant gave notice to the first party of her intention to terminate the lease on 1st January 1911. On 1st July 1910 the last half-yearly instalment of the rent payable in terms of the said lease was paid to the first party by the tenant.

"13. The salmon-fishing contained in the lease closed on 31st October 1910. The wages of the keepers, gardeners, and house-keeper, and the expenses of firing the mansion-house up to 31st December 1910, payable by the proprietor in terms of the said lease, were paid by the first party. The second party has agreed to relieve the first party of the proportion of these expenses effeiring to the period from Martinmas 1910 to 1st January 1911 in the event of the contentions of the second party with regard to the rent of Faskally House and shootings being sustained in this case.

"14. (1) As regards the rents of the farm of Old Faskally, the first party contends that the rents received or to be received from the tenant of the farm at Whitsunday and Martinmas 1911, in terms of the lease, are the rents legally payable at Whitsunday and Martinmas 1910, payment of these rents having been conventionally postponed for a year in terms of the said lease; and that he is entitled to receive payment of these two half-yearly instalments of rent because they are not rents due, according to the legal terms, for the possession following the second party's term of entry under the foresaid disposition in his favour, namely Martinmas 1910. (2) As regards the rent of Faskally House and shootings, the first party contends that he is entitled to retain the whole rent paid by the tenant on 1st July 1910, for the period of six months up to July 12, 1912. 31st December 1910, when the tenant gave up possession, and that the said rent is not apportionable between the first and second parties. The first party contends that, as the said rent was paid forehand in terms of the said lease, and in accordance with the usual practice in such cases, and was actually received by the first party before the date of the sale to the second party, it is not covered by the assignation of rents contained in the said disposition in favour of the second party, which assignation in the case of forehand rents conveys to the second party only rents payable at conventional terms subsequent to Martinmas 1910. The first party further contends as regards the rents both of the farm of Old Faskally and of Faskally House and shootings that the rights of the parties to the said rents must be determined in accordance with the terms of the said disposition in favour of the second party, and that if there is any difference in effect between the clause of assignation of rents in that disposition and the provision as to rent in the third article of the foresaid articles and conditions of sale (which the first party does not admit), the said articles and conditions must be held to have been superseded by the disposition.

Butter v.
Foster.

“15. (1) As regards the rents of the farm of Old Faskally, the second party admits that the first party is entitled to receive the half-year's rent payable at Whitsunday 1911, but he disputes the first party's right to receive payment of the half-year's rent payable at Martinmas 1911, and contends that the half-year's rent to be received from the tenant of the farm at Martinmas 1911 in terms of the lease, is the rent legally payable at Martinmas 1910, payment of that rent having been conventionally postponed in terms of said lease; that said half-year's rent is for the possession for the period from Martinmas 1910 to Whitsunday 1911; that said half-year's rent vested in the first party on 11th November 1910, and being moveable property, was not carried by the assignation of rents clause in the disposition; and that the second party is, under the contract of sale, entitled to the said half-year's rent legally payable at Martinmas 1910. (2) As regards the rent of Faskally House and shootings, the second party contends that in terms of the contract between the first party and the second party, and the provisions of the Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 and 34 Vict. cap. 35), said rent falls to be apportioned between the first party and the second party, and the latter is entitled to the proportion thereof effeiring to the period from 11th November 1910 to 31st December 1910.

“16. The parties are agreed on the foregoing statement of facts, and they have adjusted the amount which will be payable by the first party to the second party in the event of the second question of law in this case being answered in the affirmative.”

The questions of law were:—“(1) Is the first or is the second party entitled to the half-year's rent of Old Faskally Farm payable in terms of the lease thereof at Martinmas 1911? (2) Is the second party entitled to receive payment from the first party of a proportion applicable to the period from 11th November 1910 to 31st December 1910 of the half-year's rent of Faskally House and shootings received by the first party on 1st July 1910?”

The case was heard before the First Division on 30th and 31st May 1912.

Argued for the first party;—(1) The rents of a pastoral farm were July 12, 1912. paid for crop and not for possession, and the rent in question, though by convention not exigible till Martinmas 1911, was legally payable for the crop up to Martinmas 1910, i.e., for the crop prior to the second party's entry. Accordingly, it was not carried to him by the assignation of rents in the disposition.¹ The case of Wigan v. Cripps,² which differed from the previous case of Mackenzie's Trustees,³ was wrongly decided, and the decision in *Mackenzie's Trustees*³ should be followed. (2) The disposition superseded the articles and conditions of sale, and was the sole measure of the parties' rights; because in questions between a seller and purchaser of heritage the execution of a formal conveyance superseded all previous contracts,⁴ though it might be otherwise as regarded moveables.⁵ (3) The rent of the house and shootings was a forehand rent payable on 1st January and 1st July. Therefore, there being no rent payable subsequently to the second party's entry, none was carried to him by the assignation of rents.⁶ The shootings and fishings did not need to be considered separately; they were mere adjuncts to the tenancy of the dwelling-house.

Butter v.
Foster.

Argued for the second party;—(1) The rent of the farm, legally payable at Martinmas 1910, was payable for possession following that term, and had therefore been carried to the second party by the assignation of rents.⁷ It could not be suggested that payment of that rent did not confer upon the tenant a right to exclude intruders from his farm during the period from Martinmas 1910 to Whitsunday 1911, but the argument for the first party would deny the existence of any such right. The first party's argument involved the unjustifiable addition of the words "after the date of entry" to the words "to become due" in section 8 of the 1868 Act. The case of *Wigan v. Cripps*² was rightly decided, and governed the present case. There was no authority for the view that in a pastoral farm rent was paid for the existing crop and not for possession. The crop was continually growing and continually being consumed during possession. (2) The rents in question, being for possession following the term of Martinmas 1910 and legally payable at that term, ought to be regarded as moveables which had vested in the first party as at that date. Accordingly, the provisions of the articles of sale applied and carried these rents to the second party, for a disposition did not supersede a prior agreement quoad moveables.⁸ (3) The rent paid for the house and shootings for the period 1st July to 31st December 1910 accrued de die in diem, and accordingly for the period after the second party's entry it accrued to him. Therefore the first party having received the rent for that period in advance was bound to account for it to the second party.

¹ Lord Glasgow's Trustees v. Clark, (1889) 16 R. 545; Maxwell's Trustees v. Scott, (1873) 1 R. 122; Mackenzie's Trustees v. Somerville, (1900) 2 F. 1278; Bell's Lectures on Conveyancing, i. 639.

² 1908 S. C. 394

³ 2 F. 1278.

⁴ Lee v. Alexander, (1883) 10 R. (H. L.) 91; Orr v. Mitchell, (1893) 20 R. (H. L.) 27.

⁵ Jamieson v. Welsh, (1900) 3 F. 176.

⁶ Titles to Land Consolidation Act, 1868, sec. 8; Bell's Prin. 1204; Lord Glasgow's Trustees v. Clark, 16 R. 545.

⁷ Titles to Land Consolidation Act, 1868, sec. 8.

⁸ Jamieson v. Welsh, 3 F. 176, Lord Kinnear, at pp. 181-2.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

July 12, 1912.

LORD JOHNSTON.—By disposition of 11th November 1910 Mr Butter of Faskally sold to Mr F. C. Foster the estate of Faskally with entry at Martinmas 1910, and the disposition, which was in short statutory form, proceeded: "And I assign the rents, feu-duties and casualties, and I bind myself to free and relieve the said Frederick Charles Foster and his fore-saids of all feu-duties, casualties and public burdens." This short statutory form of assignation of rents is declared by the Titles to Land Act, 1868, section 8, to "be held to import an assignation to the rents to become due for the possession following the term of entry, according to the legal . . . terms," &c.

Butter v.
Foster.

The farm of Old Faskally was let at the date of the sale for a term of years. The tenant's entry to the farm had been at "Whitsunday 1895 as to the houses, yards, hill pasture, and natural grass, and at the separation of crop 1895 from the ground as to the arable land." The rent was "payable at two terms in the year, Whitsunday and Martinmas, by equal portions, beginning the first term's payment thereof at Whitsunday 1896, and the next term's payment thereof at Martinmas thereafter, and that for grass crop 1895 and corn crop 1896, and so forth, half-yearly and termly thereafter during all the years of this lease." The farm of Old Faskally is admittedly a hill or sheep farm, the arable land being purely an adjunct. Hence there is no doubt that the legal terms for payment of the rent of the first crop and year were Whitsunday and Martinmas 1895; and that, the conventional terms being Whitsunday and Martinmas 1896, the rent was payable twelve months backhand.

The purchaser having collected the rents due at Whitsunday and Martinmas 1911, admitted his obligation to account to the seller for that payable at Whitsunday, but claimed right to retain that payable at Martinmas 1911; and this case has been brought to determine, inter alia, his right so to do. The point at issue—for the conventional terms of payment may be disregarded—really is whether the half-year's rent legally payable at Martinmas 1910 is for the last half of crop and year 1910, or for the possession from Martinmas 1910 to Whitsunday 1911.

To solve this question it is, I think, necessary to determine the reason or principle upon which in grass farms, where possession is by custom given at Whitsunday, the rent is "legally," that is, by custom, payable at the term of entry and at Martinmas thereafter, and is, therefore, if possession only is regarded, apparently payable forehand. The first difficulty in concluding that it is payable for the possession is that forehand rent is alien to the general conception of agricultural leasing and is only resorted to as an indirect means of obtaining partial security for rent. I conceive that none of the customary or legal provisions regarding entry and payment of rent can be reduced to a principle or system absolutely logical in all its incidents and results, and yet, at the same time, that there is an intelligible and fairly logical idea running through the whole, when a broad view of the situation is taken, and incidental inconsistencies are disregarded. That idea is, I think, that rent is payable not for occupation in point of time, but for beneficial occupation, and that the July 12, 1912. beneficial occupation is regarded from the point of view of the predominant character of the farm, discarding its minor accessories.

 Butter v. Foster.

Ld. Johnston.

Hence when the farm is predominantly arable, the rent is by custom or legally payable for the crop, or for the crop and year, as it is usually stated; the crop and year is naturally counted from Martinmas, when the land is ready to be prepared for sowing, to the Martinmas after the crop is cleared, and the rent is accordingly legally payable at Whitsunday after sowing, and at Martinmas after reaping in equal portions. The rent is thus payable for the beneficial use or cropping, and the terms of payment are adapted to that beneficial use or cropping. Further, the corn crop is the criterion, and it is not allowed to affect the arrangement that possession of houses and grass is customarily given at the Whitsunday before the first crop and year begins, or that the comparatively modern introduction of green crop requires, unless by arrangement, retention of some portion of the land after the last crop and year is technically closed.

In the case of a farm predominantly grazing the crop is mainly a summer one, but being of natural grass it has begun to grow with the commencement of spring, and it is, so to speak, ready to be reaped or enjoyed, roughly speaking, from the Whitsunday of entry to the Martinmas following. Hence it is no great stretch to conceive of the crop and year of a pasture farm being from the Martinmas prior to entry to the Martinmas after entry, thus accounting for the rent being payable for the first half of the crop and year at the Whitsunday of entry, and the last half at the Martinmas six months after entry, and so on during the currency of the lease, notwithstanding the apparent inconsistency of the former tenant remaining in physical possession for the first half of the first crop and year of the lease, and the new tenant remaining in physical possession for six months after the last crop and year is closed. The reason of this apparent inconsistency in possession is doubtless the practical inconvenience of either transferring to the new tenant or removing to other ground, a thing rarely if ever done, a sheep stock at Martinmas term.

I think that the conclusion at which I have arrived is in accordance with the judgment of this Division in the Portmore case¹; which I think presents the sound view of the law on the subject, though I am aware that it is counter to that of the Second Division in the Glendaruel case,² to which I am unable to subscribe.

There is an additional question with reference to the rent of the house and shootings. From the information that we have I think it is clear that the residential element in Faskally is the predominant one, and, therefore (as there is a slump rent payable for the house and shootings), that, in any division of the rent, the shootings as a separate subject, and the period of time during which they are enjoyed, must be entirely disregarded. The rent in this case is something like £1300, payable the first half on the first day of the year, and the second half in the middle of the year; but as there are no legal terms in connection with the letting of such premises, I think that the rules of apportionment referring to farms do not apply, and that the rent must be regarded as running de die in diem. Consequently, the July 12, 1912. small portion of it from Martinmas to 31st December will have to be paid ^{Butter v.} by the seller, who has received it, to the purchaser, who entered at Mar-Foster. tinmas.

¹ Mackenzie's Trustees v. Somerville, 2 F. 1278.

² Wigan v. Cripps, 1908 S. C. 394.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I agree. I think the main question is really settled by the Portmore case.¹ Upon the question of the shootings as a separate subject I agree with what Lord Johnston has said.

LORD KINNEAR.—I also agree. I only add that having reconsidered the question with the attention which is certainly called for by the criticism of Lord Low, I still adhere to the opinion of Lord Adam, with which I concurred in the Portmore case.¹

LORD MACKENZIE.—There is a preliminary question here as to whether the articles of sale may be referred to, but I think, on the cases of *Lee v. Alexander*² and of Orr v. Mitchell,³ there can only be one answer on that point. The case of Jamieson v. Welsh,⁴ which was founded upon, was plainly a different case, because there the terms of the disposition did not exhaust the contract between the parties. Accordingly, I think there is no question that it is upon the disposition that the rights of the parties must depend. That being so, I agree that the first question should be answered in the manner proposed, and I do so because of the decision in Portmore.¹ I agree that the second question should be answered in the manner proposed, for the reasons explained by your Lordships.

The LORD PRESIDENT and LORD KINNEAR concurred with LORD MACKENZIE on the preliminary point referred to by his Lordship.

THE COURT found, in answer to the first question, that the rent referred to was payable to the first party, and answered the second question in the affirmative.

TODS, MURRAY, & JAMIESON, W.S.—FORBES DALLAS & Co., W.S.—Agents.

ROBERT HOWIE, Pursuer (Respondent).—G. Watt, K.C.—Duffes.

No. 168.

THE AILSA SHIPBUILDING COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Reclaimers).—Horne, K.C.—J. H. Henderson.

July 12, 1912.

Reparation—Negligence—Safety of the public—Explosion of naphtha vapour in private yard—Failure to specify cause of the explosion.

Howie v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., Limited.

A boy, seven years of age, was killed by the explosion of a barrel containing naphtha vapour, which was standing on a lorry in a shipbuilding yard. In an action of damages at the instance of the boy's father against the owners of the yard, the pursuer averred that the boy had been allowed by the defenders to enter and remain in the yard, and that the barrel, owing to its containing naphtha vapour, was in a "highly explosive and dangerous condition." He did not, however, make any averments as to what had caused the vapour to ignite.

The Court (rev. judgment of Lord Cullen) dismissed the action as being in the circumstances irrelevant, in respect that the pursuer had failed to specify in what way the defenders were responsible for the proximate cause of the accident, namely, the ignition of the vapour.

¹ Mackenzie's Trustees v. Somerville, 2 F. 1278.

² 10 R. (H. L.) 91.

³ 20 R. (H. L.) 27.

⁴ 3 F. 176.

July 12, 1912. ON 26th February 1912 Robert Howie, mason, Troon, brought an action against the Ailsa Shipbuilding Company, Limited, Troon, concluding for payment of £300, as solatium for the death of his son, William Howie.

Howie v. Ailsa
Shipbuilding
Co., Limited.

2D DIVISION.
Lord Cullen.

The pursuer averred:—(Cond. 2) “On or about 22nd November 1911 the pursuer’s son, William Howie, aged seven years, went to the defenders’ premises in the company of an employee of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company, named Andrew Cousar. Cousar had occasion to go to defenders’ yard to remove goods on the defenders’ instructions, and he took pursuer’s son into the said yard and left him upon the lorry in order that he might go to defenders’ office adjoining the yard to transact business. The defenders’ statements in answer are denied. Explained and averred that defenders’ servants allowed pursuer’s son to enter the yard and remain there with the said lorry.” (Cond. 3) “On the instructions of the defenders, or one of their employees for whom they are responsible, three barrels, alleged to be empty, were placed upon the said lorry for removal. The said barrels, however, contained a considerable quantity of naphtha, and were in a highly explosive and dangerous condition, with the result that an explosion occurred, and one of the barrels burst and struck the pursuer’s son and killed him.” (Cond. 4) “The said accident was caused by the fault of the defenders or of their servants for whom they are responsible, in respect that they caused the said barrels to be placed upon the lorry in the dangerous condition described. Naphtha is well known to be an extremely dangerous explosive, and barrels which have contained it, after being emptied, should be kept in a safe place for a period of at least eight days to allow the naphtha fumes to disappear. This is the ordinary precaution adopted for the safety of the public, but no such precaution was taken by the defenders as regards the three barrels in question. Had the defenders or their servants even inspected the said barrels, they would have seen that they contained naphtha fumes in considerable density. The defenders or their servants were further in fault in respect that the said barrels were dispatched with a hole in each of about 2½ inches diameter. The said holes should have been filled with plugs to prevent air from mixing with any fumes that might remain in the barrels. The absence of this necessary precaution greatly increased the risk of explosion.”

In answer the defenders averred that the explosion was caused by the fault of the pursuer’s son, who was playing with lighted matches.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuer’s averments being irrelevant and wanting in specification, the action should be dismissed.

On 7th June 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) allowed an issue.

The defenders reclaimed, and the case was heard before the Second Division on 12th July 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—(1) The pursuer had not averred any negligence on the part of the defenders. In particular, he gave no account of how the explosion occurred. The cases on which he relied, where liability was held to exist though it could not be shown exactly how the accident happened, were distinguishable, for in those cases there was proof of negligence prior to and apart from the actual occurrence of the accident. In the present case there was no averment of any act, either of omission or of commission which could infer fault on the part of the defenders. (2) In the circumstances July 12, 1912. averred by the pursuer, the defenders had no responsibility for what happened to the boy. He was on the defenders' premises without their invitation and for his own pleasure. In such circumstances he took all the risks of the place.¹ It was specially important that this was not a place of public resort. If boys had been in the habit of coming about their premises it might have been that a higher degree of responsibility would have attached to the defenders,² though even this was not certain.³ But in any case the pursuer's son was just a chance comer, and the defenders were not under any duty to protect him.

Howie v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., Limited.

Argued for the respondent ;—(1) The initial act of negligence on the part of the defenders consisted in their bringing the barrels full of explosive vapour and placing them on the lorry near the pursuer's son.⁴ It was for the defenders to show that this negligence was not the cause of the accident, and it was unnecessary for the pursuer to establish precisely how the explosion took place.⁵ A person dealing with a dangerous article, such as a substance liable to explode, was not entitled so to deal with it that a natural result was injury to others. (2) The defenders were not relieved from liability, because the accident took place on their premises. The pursuer's son was in the yard with their knowledge and permission, and was not a trespasser, and he was entitled to be protected against their negligence.⁶

LORD DUNDAS.—This is an action of damages brought by a man whose pupil son has been unfortunately killed by an accident. The defenders are a limited company carrying on business as shipbuilders and engineers in Troon. It seems that on a certain day in November 1911 this little boy was taken to the defenders' yard by a man named Andrew Cousar, who was an employee of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company. Cousar went to the yard to remove goods on the defenders' instructions, and he took the boy with him—I suppose as a pleasuring for the little lad. He left him upon the lorry in order that he might go to the defenders' office adjoining the yard to transact business. Then we have article 3 of the condescence. It is here, I think, that the pursuer's record is radically irrelevant.

¹ Indermaur v. Dames, (1866) L. R., 1 C. P. 274, aff. (1867) L. R., 2 C. P. 311, per Kelly, C.B., at p. 312; Smith v. London and Saint Katherine Docks Co., (1868), L. R., 3 C. P. 326, per Bovill, C.J., at p. 332; Devlin v. Jeffray's Trustees, (1902) 5 F. 130, per Lord Kinnear, at p. 135; Holland v. Lanarkshire Middle Ward District Committee, 1909 S. C. 1142.

² Findlay v. Angus, (1887) 14 R. 312.

³ Ivay v. Hedges, (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 80.

⁴ Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 5th ed., pp. 109, 452.

⁵ Britannic Merthyr Coal Co., Limited, v. David, [1910] A. C. 74; M'Arthur v. Dominion Cartridge Co., [1905] A. C. 72; M'Grath v. Glasgow Coal Co., Limited, 1909 S. C. 1250; Dominion Natural Gas Co., Limited, v. Collins, [1909] A. C. 640; Williams v. Great Western Railway Co., (1874) L. R., 9 Ex. 157.

⁶ Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland, [1909] A. C. 229, per Lord Atkinson, at p. 238; Lowery v. Walker, [1911] A. C. 10; Galloway v. King, (1872), 10 Macph. 788; Messer v. Cranston & Co., (1897) 25 R. 7.

July 12, 1912. He says that on the instructions of the defenders, or one of their employees for whom they are responsible, three barrels, alleged to be empty, were placed upon the said lorry for removal. So far so good. "The said barrels, however, contained a considerable quantity of naphtha, and were in a highly explosive and dangerous condition, with the result that an explosion occurred, and one of the barrels burst and struck the pursuer's son and killed him." The part of this sentence beginning "with the result" seems to me to be an entire non sequitur to what goes before it.

Howie v. Ailsa
Shipbuilding
Co., Limited.

Lord Dundas

It stands to reason, and is matter of common knowledge, that barrels of naphtha standing upon a lorry could not in themselves be a source of danger, unless somehow or other a light were applied to them. But how that light came to be applied, or by whom, there is no averment whatever to show. I think in a case of this sort it is incumbent upon the pursuer to set forth, at all events, some feasible statement of how the accident occurred, and this the pursuer has, in my judgment, entirely failed to do. He makes no attempt to explain or account for the ignition, which was the proximate cause of the accident, or to connect it in any way with the defenders. His averments do not even exclude (except by a bare denial) the account offered by the defenders' answer, which seems a probable enough one. On these short but, to my mind, conclusive grounds, I am for throwing this action out as irrelevant.

I do not desire, for my own part, to enter into, or to express any definite opinion upon, the other matter which was argued, viz., that this unfortunate little boy had no right to be where he was—on a lorry in this private yard—and that the case may be irrelevant on that ground also. I can see that the pursuer might have great difficulty in convincing the Court of the relevancy of his action upon this aspect of it. But the ground upon which I prefer to rest my opinion is quite sufficient, if it is well founded.

I am sorry that the Lord Ordinary did not give us the benefit of his views in the shape of an opinion; because I am not able to conjecture for myself why he should have allowed an issue upon this record.

LORD SALVESSEN.—I am of the same opinion and on the same grounds. I think it is not enough for the pursuer to aver that the explosion occurred with the result that the pursuer's son was killed. He must show in some way that the proximate cause of the explosion, to wit, the ignition of the explosive mixture contained in the naphtha barrel, was due to some cause for which, or to some person for whom, the defenders are responsible.

It may be that he has excluded the defenders' theory of the accident by denying that the boy used any matches or himself ignited the explosive mixture; but he has not excluded other possibilities, such as, for instance, that a mischievous lad, knowing that such barrels contained an explosive mixture, deliberately ignited the barrel. I cannot conceive that if such a thing were done on private premises belonging to the defenders they would be responsible for what would really be an act of malicious mischief. But a cause of this kind is not excluded by the pursuer's record; indeed, there is no theory presented as to how the explosion occurred. For all that appears one might have imagined that the framer of the record thought that a mixture of naphtha fumes and air would explode spontaneously. Now, of course, we all know that that is not so, and that a light must be applied July 12, 1912. to such a mixture before it can produce damage.

On that short and simple ground I am for recalling the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, although I am not at all sure that I would not have done so on the mere ground that this boy was not legitimately in the premises where, on the assumption of the pursuer, dangerous articles were stored. They had no reason to anticipate that the boy would be in their premises at all, nor had they any duty in regard to the boy who chanced to come there without their consent, and certainly without their invitation, express or implied.

Howie v. Ailsa
Shipbuilding
Co., Limited.

Lord Salvesen.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I agree that the case fails, as your Lordships have put it, through the absence of connection, in the way of averment, between the defenders' alleged fault and the accident. The nature of the material is important. The words used in condescendence 4 are "an extremely dangerous explosive"; but these words cannot be used in a technical sense. This was not in a technical sense an explosive, because it was not an explosive within the meaning of the Explosives Act, 1875.¹ If it had been, then the mere possession of explosive material of more than a certain amount would of itself have been sufficient to make the defenders responsible if an explosion occurred, even without any averment of direct negligence to infer fault. But the material is not of that nature, and it is not denied, although the record does not admit it, that without the application of light it is perfectly safe.

I do not know that there was any necessity for the pursuer averring either exactly how the accident occurred or who applied the light. It might have been sufficient if he had averred that the place where barrels with a certain residuum of naphtha in them were placed was a place where the defenders were bound to anticipate that lights would be, or might probably be, encountered. But in fact the accident took place in broad daylight, and there is no suggestion that there was any reason whatever to anticipate that any light would be met with in this particular place.

On the other question of the legal category under which the boy fell at the time, it does seem to me that the pursuer, on his own averment, discloses what would be a sufficient ground for holding the action irrelevant; because he states that the place where the accident happened was in the defenders' yard, that is an enclosed place. He might in the way of averment have made his case relevant if he had said that this place was a place where the public, and in particular children, were allowed habitually to resort; but all he says is that the defenders' servants allowed the pursuer's son to enter the yard and remain there on the lorry. He does not even say that they saw him come in on the lorry; he merely says that he was not stopped from coming into the yard. That raises the question whether it can be said that he was legitimately there. Mr Watt said he might be illegitimately there, but still, if he were reasonably there without any moral fault on his part, he was not a trespasser. I am not aware that a person can be in any place except either legitimately or

¹ 38 and 39 Vict. cap. 17.

July 12, 1912. illegitimately ; and if he is illegitimately there, it is difficult to see that he is not in the position of a person who goes there at his own risk. But it is enough, as your Lordships have said, to decide the case on the first question.

Howie v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., Limited.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I am of the same opinion. As regards the latter question I agree with what has been said by Lord Guthrie. The case will be dismissed, and with expenses.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.

MACKAY & YOUNG, W.S.—MORTON, SMART, MACDONALD, & PROSSER, W.S.—Agents.

No. 169. MATTHEW CARSTAIRS NOBLE AND OTHERS (Robert Noble's Testamentary Trustees), Petitioners.—Blackburn, K.C.—J. H. Henderson.

July 10, 1912.

Noble's Trustees.

Trust—Administration—Powers of trustees—Power to expend trust funds on, and grant long lease of, urban tenement—Application to nobile officium of Court.

The trustees under a testamentary settlement (the purposes of which involved separate interests of liferenters and fiars) presented a petition to the nobile officium of the Court for authority to expend a portion of the capital of the trust-estate in altering and repairing an urban tenement included in the estate, and for power thereafter to lease the tenement for twenty-one years, which, in their opinion, would be to the advantage of all the beneficiaries in the estate.

The Court dismissed the petition, holding (1) that if the trustees did not already possess the desired powers under the terms of the deed, it was incompetent for the Court to grant them in the exercise of its nobile officium ; and (2) that if the trustees did possess the powers, the exercise thereof was a matter of administration for their own determination, with regard to which the Court could give no advice.

Berwick, (1874) 2 R. 90, followed.

1ST DIVISION. ON 7th December 1911 Matthew Carstairs Noble and others, the testamentary trustees of Robert Noble, who died in 1902, presented a petition to the nobile officium of the Court for powers in connection with the administration of the trust-estate.

The testator by his settlement had conveyed his estate to the petitioners to be held in trust by them for certain members of his family in liferent, and for others in fee. At the date of the petition the liferenters were still alive.

The trust-estate, which amounted to about £8750, included a tenement in Jedburgh, valued at about £1400, which had been purchased in 1895 by the testator, and formed part of his estate at his death. When he acquired the property it was let on a lease for twenty years from 1892, nominally to the postmistress at Jedburgh, but in reality to the Postmaster-General. Before the expiry of this lease the Postmaster-General intimated to the petitioners that he was prepared to renew the lease, at an increased rent, for twenty-one years, provided the petitioners executed certain alterations on the buildings, which were estimated to cost £1000.

Mr Noble's settlement provided :—" My trustees and executors shall be entitled to the fullest powers and exemptions usually conferred in similar cases according to the most liberal interpretation; July 10, 1912. and particularly I authorise and empower them . . . to lend out the whole or any part of the trust funds and estate on heritable security . . . or to invest the same . . . in the purchase of heritable property, feu-duties, ground annuals, or other heritages, and from time to time to alter and renew the securities as may be necessary or as may seem to them expedient: To hold the investments, whether heritable or moveable, in which the trust funds and estate may be invested at the time of my decease so long as it may seem to them expedient.”

The trustees were given no express power to grant long leases or to expend any part of the capital of the trust-estate in altering or making additions to any heritable property held by them.

In these circumstances the trustees presented this petition to the nobile officium of the Court, craving the Court “to grant warrant to and authorise the petitioners (1) to uplift from . . . the capital of the said trust-estate . . . a sum of £1000, or such other sum as to your Lordships shall seem proper, and to apply and expend said sum of £1000, or such other sum as your Lordships may authorise the petitioners to uplift, in defraying the cost of the alterations and additions above referred to; and (2) to grant a lease of the altered and extended premises to the Postmaster-General for the period and for the rent and on the conditions above stated.”

On 16th January 1912 the Court remitted to Mr G. F. Dalziel, W.S., to inquire into the facts and circumstances set forth in the petition and to report.

The reporter suggested the following questions for the consideration of the Court:—(1) Whether the trustees’ power of administration, and in particular their power to retain the investments made by the testator, did not enable them to grant the lease and to make the necessary expenditure, if, in the exercise of their discretion, they considered such a course advisable, and whether, in this view, the petition was not unnecessary?¹ (2) Whether, in any view, it was competent to appeal to the nobile officium of the Court for the purpose of obtaining powers which were not conferred by the trust-deed?²

On the merits of the application the report stated:—“In the whole circumstances it appears to the reporter that the petitioners’ proposals are not inconsistent with the purposes of the trust, and it seems to him that the proposals cannot be said, without qualification, to be either expedient or inexpedient for the execution of the trust. The proposals may probably be considered expedient in the sense that they will tend to secure, in the meantime, the continuance of the income of the trust at its present level, but, in the view of the reporter, it is not so clear that the proposals are expedient from the point of view of the capital of the trust-estate, as it is impossible to forecast what price the property, as altered, might fetch if and when a sale becomes necessary. Whatever results the petitioners’ proposals might lead to, they would not appear to affect the execution of the trust purposes, but would merely affect the amount which the beneficiaries concerned may receive.”

¹ The reporter referred to Armstrong v. Wilson’s Trustees, (1904) 7 F. 353.

² The reporter referred to Berwick, (1874) 2 R. 90; Kinloch, (1859) 22 D. 174; Wardlaw’s Trustees, (1902) 10 S. L. T. 349; Lindsay’s Trustees, 1911 S. C. 584.

July 10, 1912. The case was heard before the First Division (without the Lord President) on 6th July 1912, when the cases cited by the reporter were referred to.

Noble's
Trustees.

At advising on 10th July 1912,—

LORD KINNEAR.—This is a petition presented by trustees for power to uplift a certain sum of money of the capital of the trust-estate and apply it in a particular way, and also for power to grant a lease. It is important to observe that it is not a petition under the Trusts Acts, or under or in virtue of any statutory power, but an appeal to the nobile officium of the Court.

Now, it appears to me upon consideration of the petitioners' statement and Mr Dalziel's report that the questions which the trustees have to decide, and which they very naturally consider somewhat difficult, are questions of administration and nothing else. The trustees say that part of the trust-estate consists of heritable property in Jedburgh—a certain tenement of houses and yards which appertain to the various tenants, one of whom is the postmistress, which really means the Postmaster-General. Then they say that the current lease has expired at Whitsunday 1912, and the question which they have to consider is whether they will agree to certain terms for granting a new lease to the Postmaster-General. The difficulties are two: in the first place, in order to obtain a satisfactory tenant they must spend a sum of, I think, £1000 upon alterations and additions to the premises, and, in the second place, the lease which the Postmaster-General will accept must be a lease for twenty-one years. The trustees ask the Court for power to enable them to carry out this transaction by authorising the expenditure of capital and authorising the lease.

I am unable to see that the Court can authorise these things to be done by virtue of the nobile officium. The questions are merely questions of administration. The difficulty in which the trustees are placed is obvious enough, because if they spend a considerable sum of capital in order to obtain a tenant, it may or may not be probable that at the end of the lease the capital value of the subjects will remain as it is now, at the date of the expenditure being incurred. But that is just one of the questions which occur in ordinary administration of a trust-estate, because the real difficulty arises from the conflicting interests of beneficiaries. The trustees must make as much of the property as they can in the meantime for the benefit of the liferenters; and they must keep the capital intact as far as they can for the ultimate benefit of the fiars. It is a question of management. But then they say they have no power because they cannot advance this money without the authority of the Court. I am disposed to say for myself, although I am afraid that it is going a little beyond what I think is the strict business of the Court in matters of this kind, that I do not see any serious difficulty about their power to grant the lease, if it is reasonably prudent and expedient to do so. They find the premises in question as part of the trust-estate, they are empowered to hold the heritable property in that condition during the trust, and the only profitable use that they can make of it for the benefit of the estate is obviously to let it. Further, I am not aware of any limitation upon the power to let, if there be any power to maintain and let a heritable property at all, which should prevent the trustees from letting the subjects in question for twenty-one years if July 10, 1912. they could not get a tenant for a shorter lease. Nor am I impressed very ^{Noble's} much with the difficulty of spending money in order to put the subjects ^{Trustees} into lettable condition, because the power to lease, if it is to be effective, ^{Lord Kinnear} carries with it, so far as necessary, the power to spend money on the subjects so as to put them into a condition in which they will be accepted by a tenant. The mere question of amount may raise a question of discretion and perhaps a question of difficulty, but it is a question of administration to be determined by the conditions of the deed with reference to the circumstances of the estate, and it is a question for the trustees and not for the Court.

In these circumstances it appears to me that the proper course for the Court to take is that which is, I think, authoritatively fixed by the judgment of this Division in the case of Berwick,¹ where the Lord President, in a petition for authority by testamentary trustees to accept a renunciation of a lease, says this:—"Neither is this a case under the Trusts Acts. The powers of trustees are defined by the trust-deed, and the Court will give no higher power. The trustees are not entitled to come to the Court for advice. If they have not the power given them by the deed, it is not competent for us to give it them. I think, therefore, that the petition should be dismissed as incompetent." He says that if they had the powers, they did not require to come to the Court to obtain any further authority; and I rather think that when the Lord President said they were not to come to the Court for advice, he meant that the Court was not to give advice even as to the extent and effect of the power. Lord Deas says, in concurring with the Lord President:—"I see no reason whatever to doubt that the petitioners take a judicious view of what is for the interests of the trust-estate. But it is for them to exercise their own discretion in the matter. If they do so rightly they will be safe. But it is a pure question of management in which we cannot aid them, and I think we must refuse the petition as incompetent."

The reporter, in a very full and satisfactory report, called our attention to a subsequent case in which a somewhat different course was followed—the case of Stenhouse and Another (Wardlaw's Trustees),² which I have carefully considered: and I agree with the reporter that it is not quite in accordance with the view stated in the case which I have cited. But one must observe upon it that it was a proceeding in the Outer House, and with the greatest respect for the learned Judge who was presiding there, and who was always extremely cautious in the exercise of powers, I cannot set his action in that case against the authority of the First Division in the case of Berwick,¹ which does not seem to have been brought under his notice.

I am therefore of opinion that this petition must be dismissed.

LORD JOHNSTON.—The petitioners here ask for power to do two things, first, to apply £1000 of the trust-estate in meliorating a certain heritable subject which is part of that estate, and secondly, to grant a lease for twenty-

¹ 2 R. 90.

² (1902) 10 S. L. T. 349.

July 10, 1912. one years of the said piece of heritable property. I concur with your Lordship in the view which you have expressed with regard to this petition being one under which the Court cannot grant powers. So far as the leasing goes, the application is perfectly unnecessary. Where trustees are appointed by a testator, they are called on to administer and manage his estate on business lines as he would have done himself, with this one limitation that, whereas he might have put his estate to hazard, if he had chosen, in the way of investment, they must not do so. But where it is not a question of investment, but a question of managing estate in forma specifica, they have not only a right but a duty to manage that estate on reasonable business principles. Now, heritable property may be of different classes, and the administration of two different pieces of heritable property may happen to be quite different. For instance, a testator may leave a dwelling-house which he has occupied himself, and it may be right that some of his descendants should have the opportunity of occupying it. One would think that trustees would hesitate to place such an item of heritage beyond their control by giving as long a lease of it as would be appropriate had their duty been to put it to another purpose. But where the property is a mere investment for the purpose of profit, it is the duty of the trustees to administer that item of the trust-estate to the best advantage; and if they think that a twenty-one years' lease of it is to the advantage of the estate, they certainly have power to grant it. It is a matter entirely for their discretion, and therefore they cannot come here to ask us for powers, because that would be simply to ask the Court to put its imprimatur upon an exercise of the trustees' discretion, where they have the power already.

It is the same with the amelioration of the subject for the purpose of letting it. Suppose we were dealing with an agricultural farm, the trustees could not possibly come to us to ask for authority to make the buildings fit for a new lease, or to meet the requirements of an eligible tenant. They would have to exercise their own discretion, as I think they must do here. If, in their discretion, they think it is in the interests of the estate to let to the Postmaster-General, and in order to obtain him as a tenant to expend money upon the melioration and extension of the property, there again it is entirely a question for their discretion, and they cannot come here to ask us to back them up by saying that their discretion has been exercised wisely. That is a thing that we cannot possibly do. I therefore concur with your Lordship.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I am of the same opinion. The matters that are dealt with in this petition and in the report by Mr Dalziel are matters of trust administration, and as such cannot be dealt with by the Court in an appeal to the nobile officium of the Court. It is for the trustees to administer in the manner which they think best in the circumstances.

I should only like to add, with reference to what has been said, that when the expression "the advantage of the estate" is used, the trustees have to consider that there are interests in the estate which may at certain points conflict because, whenever there are liferenters and fiars, what is for the benefit of the liferenter may not be for the benefit of the fiar, and vice veraz. But that is a matter for the trustees, and they must, in the whole July 10, 1912. circumstances of the case, act in the best interests of all, holding an even ^{Noble's} balance between the liferenters and the fiars. I feel justified in this case ^{Trustees.} in saying that I do not see that there is any reason to doubt that the trus- ^{Lord Mac-} tees have power to grant a lease for twenty-one years if, in the whole cir- ^{kenzie.} cumstances of the case, that is the best trust administration; and if it is necessary in order to secure the best offer (and here it is an offer made by the Post Office) that capital expenditure should be made, then they are just in the same position as trustees who are managing agricultural property when a farm lease runs out, who may be face to face with questions whether buildings are to be renewed, land to be drained, and so on, and how much money will have to be expended in order to get the present tenant to remain, or to get a better offer. All that is pure matter of administration. Accordingly, as I have said, these are matters for the trustees to determine, with regard to which the Court cannot give advice.

THE COURT dismissed the petition.

KELLY, PATERSON, & Co., S.S.O., Agents.

JOHN S. BOYLE (Owner of the Steam-Trawler "Glenogil"), Pursuer No. 170.
 (Reclaimant).—Constable, K.C.—Burn Murdoch.
 FRED. OLSEN (Owner of the S.S. "Balduin"), Defender (Respondent). July 10, 1912.
 —Horne, K.C.—Lippe. Boyle v.
Olsen.

THE LINDSEY STEAM FISHING COMPANY, LIMITED (Owners of the Lindsey Steam Fishing
Co., Limited,
v. Actiesel-
skabet
Bonheur.
 Steam-Trawler "Lacerta"), Pursuers.—A. R. Brown.
 ACTIESELSKABET BONHEUR (Owners of the S.S. "Balduin"), Defenders.—Horne, K.C.—Lippe.

Process—Conjunction of actions—Proof—Competing actions against same defender—Competency of conjoining actions—Right of competing pursuers to cross-examine each other's witnesses—Ship—Salvage.

Two shipowners brought separate actions against the same defender in respect of salvage services rendered to the defender's vessel. The claims of the two pursuers were mutually hostile. The Lord Ordinary having conjoined the actions—

Held that the Lord Ordinary was right in conjoining the actions, but his interlocutor varied by the addition of a declaration that (following the English practice) counsel for the one pursuer should have the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the other.

Process—Tender—Conjoined actions at the instance of different pursuers—Duty of defender to apportion sum tendered amongst pursuers—Ship—Salvage.

Where separate actions for salvage services at the instance of two pursuers having conflicting interests had been brought against the same defender and had been conjoined, opinion per curiam that, if the defender desired to put in a tender in the conjoined actions, he should (following the English practice) be obliged to apportion the sum tendered between the pursuers.

July 10, 1912. ON 27th January 1912 John S. Boyle, owner of the steam-trawler "Glenogil" of Glasgow, brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Aberdeen against Fred. Olsen, owner of the s.s. "Balduin" of Christiania, in which he claimed the sum of £5000 in respect of salvage services rendered by the "Glenogil" to the "Balduin."

Boyle v. Olsen.

—

Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur.

—

1st Division. Lord Dewar.

ON 5th March 1912 the Lindsey Steam Fishing Company, Limited, owners of the steam-trawler "Lacerta" of Grimsby, brought an action in the Court of Session against Actieselskabet Bonheur, Christiania, described also as owners of the "Balduin," in which the sum of £500 was claimed in respect of salvage services rendered on the same occasion by the "Lacerta" to the "Balduin."

The circumstances in which these claims arose were as follows:— On 28th November 1911 the "Balduin," which was disabled by the loss of her propeller, accepted offers of assistance from the "Glenogil" at a point in the North Sea about 160 miles east-by-north from Aberdeen. The "Glenogil" took the "Balduin" in tow that afternoon and proceeded to tow her towards Aberdeen. On the afternoon of 30th November, at a time when the "Glenogil" was making but little headway with her tow, the "Glenogil" asked the "Lacerta," which was by this time standing by, to assist her. The "Lacerta" then passed a hawser to the "Balduin," and the two vessels together towed the "Balduin" to Aberdeen Harbour, which was reached at about eight o'clock that evening.

The owner of the "Glenogil" averred in his action that the "Lacerta" had no claim for salvage, but only a claim for towage undertaken at the request of the master of the "Glenogil." He averred that he himself was liable to the "Lacerta" for this claim for towage, and that the sum due in respect thereof had been included in the £5000 for which he concluded. The owners of the "Lacerta," on the other hand, averred in their action that they had an independent claim for salvage.

On 9th March 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Dewar) ordered the "Glenogil's" action to be remitted to the Court of Session ob contingentiam, and on 21st May he pronounced an interlocutor conjoining the two actions, and granted leave to reclaim.

The owner of the "Glenogil" reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First Division on 19th June 1912.

It was intimated to the Court that, since the date of the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, the defenders had made a tender to the pursuers jointly of £1000 in settlement of their claims against the "Balduin."

Argued for the reclaimer;—Conjunction was a matter within the discretion of the Court, and its object was to promote the purposes of convenience and economy.¹ But conjunction should only be ordered where there was identity of parties or of subject-matter, and should not be ordered where any perplexity or embarrassment to the parties would result.² In the present case the interests of the two pursuers were not only not identical, but were conflicting, the owner of the "Glenogil" denying the claim of the owners of the "Lacerta" for remuneration for services other than those of towage. The result of conjunction in these circumstances would be to the prejudice of the pursuers,

¹ "Strathgarry," [1895] P. 264, per Bruce, J., at p. 266.

² Duke of Buccleuch v. Cowan, (1866) 4 Macph. 475, per Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, at p. 480, aff. (1876) 4 R. (H. L.) 14.

as neither would have the right to cross-examine the witnesses of the July 10, 1912. other. The recent case of *Wilson v. Rapp*¹ in the Outer House, where salvage actions at the instance of different pursuers had been conjoined, was not an authority binding on the Court, and was distinguishable from the present case in respect that the pursuers in that case were at one as to the nature and value of the services rendered. The Lord Ordinary admitted in that case that conjunction in such circumstances was without precedent. The embarrassment to which the pursuers would be put by conjunction of the present actions appeared more clearly in connection with the question of the tender which had been made. The real reason why conjunction had been asked for was, as in Wilson's case,¹ in order that a single tender might be made in respect of the claims in both actions, as was done in "Jacob Landstrom."² The Lord Ordinary reserved his opinion in Wilson's case¹ as to whether such a tender would, in Scotland, be sufficient in law. If the answer to this question were in the affirmative the inequity of conjunction became apparent. Each pursuer would be put to the task of answering two speculative questions before he could accept or refuse the tender, viz., what were the nature and value of the services rendered by the two claimants respectively? This situation would be especially embarrassing to the owners of the "Lacerta," who had, at this stage, no material from which to arrive at the value of the "Glenogil's" services except her owner's statement on record. But in point of fact a joint tender was not competent according to the law of Scotland; it was necessary that a specific sum should be tendered to the pursuer in each action. At all events a joint tender was incompetent in Scotland where conjunction had not taken place,³ but it was competent in England even in the absence of consolidation.⁴ The English practice could be no guide in this matter, as the legal results of tender and of conjunction or consolidation differed in the two countries.⁵ According to the English practice the refusal of a tender had not the acknowledged ipso jure effect on expenses that such refusal had in Scotland.⁶ Further, the English Courts in the case of a joint tender ordered apportionment between the various plaintiffs. If a joint tender were to be allowed in this case it should, in equity, only be allowed subject to the conditions of the English practice. The respondents' argument upon the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894,⁷ could not be applied to the circumstances of the present case. The amount due in satisfaction of salvage claims did not depend exclusively on the value of the vessel salvaged; the time occupied in salving, and the labour and risk of the salving crew or crews had also to be considered,⁸ and the parties were at issue as regards the latter considerations. There might be cases in which the aggregate amount due Boyle v.

Olsen.

Lindsey
Steam Fishing
Co., Limited,
v. Actiesel-
skabet
Bonheur.

¹ 1911 S. C. 1360.

² "Jacob Landstrom," (1878) 4 P. D. 191.

³ Cf. opinion of Lord Salvesen in Wilson v. Rapp, 1911 S. C. 1360.

⁴ Roscoe, Admiralty Practice, 328-9, 370; "Jacob Landstrom," 4 P. D. 191; "Strathgarry," [1895] P. 264.

⁵ Cowan & Sons v. Duke of Buccleuch, 4 R. (H. L.) 14, per Lord Blackburn, at p. 26.

⁶ The "Lee," 1889, 6 Aspin. Maritime Cases, 395.

⁷ 57 and 58 Vict. cap. 60.

⁸ Owners of the "Vulcan" v. Owners of the "Berlin," (1882) 9 R. 1057; "Clifton," (1834) 3 Haggard, Admiralty, 117.

July 10, 1912. could be determined ab ante and tendered to the salvors, leaving only the question of apportionment to be settled in the process. But it was necessary that the aggregate amount due should be ascertained before the situation contemplated in the sections founded on by the respondents could arise. In the present case this situation could only arise when the claims of the respective pursuers had been adjudicated upon.

Boyle v. Olsen.
Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur.

Counsel for the owners of the "Lacerta" intimated that they concurred in the argument for the reclaimer.

Argued for the respondents;—The Lord Ordinary had rightly conjoined the actions, as the interests of convenience and economy were best served by this course.¹ It was necessary in the circumstances of this case that the whole matters in dispute should be disposed of in one action, as all the considerations must be before the Court before it could adjudicate upon either claim. The provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act with regard to salvage actions all pointed to the ascertainment of a sum due and its subsequent apportionment between the various claimants.² The situation contemplated by section 547 (3) of the Act was precisely that in which these actions would be placed by conjunction. Under that section the defenders might have raised an action and called both pursuers as parties thereto, in which case they would have been forced to suffer the alleged prejudice which they anticipated here.³ On this point the respondents respectfully adopted as their argument the opinion of Lord Salvesen in Wilson v. Rapp.⁴ It was the common practice in England to consolidate actions on the ground of expediency, even where the plaintiffs had conflicting interests. The question of tender was a separate question and did not arise at this stage. It was not brought before the Court in this reclaiming note and could therefore not properly be considered. If the tender which had been made was not a competent tender in the circumstances of the case the pursuers need not regard it. The question whether it availed the defenders would fall to be determined at the end of the day.

At advising on 10th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this reclaiming note we were referred to various authorities on English practice. It is quite evident that counsel are not fully aware of what this practice is. It is one of those matters which is not easily found in the books. I have taken the opportunity of conferring on this subject with one of the learned Judges in the Admiralty Division, and I have learned that when actions are so conjoined,—or rather consolidated, as it is expressed in England,—there is always an opportunity for the counsel of the one set of plaintiffs to cross-examine the witnesses of the other.

Now I think it is my experience here that if an interlocutor simply conjoins two actions and says nothing more, there is no right given to

¹ "Strathgarry," [1895] P. 264.

² Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. cap. 60), secs. 547-556; Kennedy on Civil Salvage, 2nd ed., pp. 168 et seq.

³ Counsel referred to "The Gantock Rock," (1900) 2 F. 1060, as a case in which conjunction took place of consent and where two pursuers cross-examined each other's witnesses.

⁴ 1911 S. C. 1360.

counsel for one pursuer to cross-examine the witnesses of the other. I July 10, 1912, think that this cross-examination should be allowed. I do not see anything in our practice against it, but I think the matter should be dealt with in the interlocutor. Accordingly, I think the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor ought to be affirmed, but with the addition that counsel for the one pursuer should have the right to cross-examine the witnesses of the other.

Boyle v.

Olsen.

Lindsey

Steam Fishing

Co., Limited,

v. Actiesel-

skabet

Bonheur.

That is all that it is absolutely necessary to decide with regard to this reclaiming note, but as the matter of tender is obviously very much at the root of the question now at issue, and as we have heard argument upon this point, it is as well that I should give the result of my inquiries on this subject also. I was informed by the learned Judge that whenever he thought the justice of the case required it—and I gathered from him that it was what may be called the ordinary rule rather than the extraordinary—if a defender in such circumstances put in a tender he was then obliged by the Judge to apportion the tender amongst the other parties. That really is equivalent to putting in two separate tenders. I mention this because I think it is the course that ought to be followed in this case.

LORD KINNEAR, LORD JOHNSTON, and LORD MACKENZIE concurred.

THE COURT varied the interlocutor reclaimed against by adding thereto the words "under the direction that counsel of the one pursuer shall have right to cross-examine the witnesses of the other," and with this addition adhered to the said interlocutor.

ALEX. MORISON & Co., W.S.—MACKENZIE & KERMAK, W.S.—BOYD, JAMESON, & YOUNG, W.S.—Agents.

JOHN KIRK SYMON, Pursuer (Respondent).—D.-F. Dickson—Wilton. No. 171.

WEMYSS COAL COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Appellants).—

Horne, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

July 12, 1912.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sec. 1 (1)— Symon v.
Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Message clerk Wemyss Coal injured while boarding a tramway car in motion. Co., Limited.

A boy, employed as a message clerk, was sent on an errand and given money to pay for his tramway fare. While attempting unnecessarily to board a tramway car in motion—which, as he knew, was forbidden—he fell, and was injured.

Held that the accident did not arise out of the boy's employment.

IN an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, between John Kirk Symon, Buckhaven, and the Wemyss Coal Company, Limited, the Sheriff-substitute of Fife and Kinross at Cupar (Armour Hannay) awarded compensation, and, at the request of the employers, stated a case for appeal.

2D DIVISION.
Sheriff of Fife
and Kinross.

The case set forth:—“(1) The claimant on 29th October 1910, being the date of the accident after mentioned, was fourteen years of age, and had been employed as message clerk in the appellants' service at their Muiredge office for about five months prior thereto.

“(2) On said date he was sent a message from the appellants' Muiredge office to the appellants' head office at East Wemyss, which July 12, 1912. is situated westwards from Muiredge, and was given money to pay his tramcar fare both ways.

Symon v.
Wemyss Coal
Co., Limited.

"(3) The tramway line runs alongside the public road and is properly fenced off from it, but access is obtained to the tramway line by gates or openings in the fence to the west of the railway crossing. A line of railway belonging to the North British Railway Company but worked by the appellants intersects the public road and tramway line at right angles. There is a tramcar stopping-place about eighty feet or thereby from the appellants' Muiredge office immediately to the west of the point where the railway crosses the tramway line, as shown on the plan No. 20 of process. At the stopping-place there is a gate in the fence giving access from the public road to the tramway premises for tramway passengers, and at that point there is a notice on a tramway standard, 'Cars stop here.' Cars do not always stop for passengers, sometimes they only slow down. The claimant came to the car stopping-place, but, the car being late, he walked eastwards a few yards to look for the car coming, though there was no necessity for his doing so. Cars do not stop at the place where the claimant attempted to get on, but on the car coming to the railway level-crossing where it had slowed down, as required by the Board of Trade regulations, he attempted to board the car, as he had frequently done before, about two yards to the east of the railway line and just opposite appellants' office.

"(4) In boarding the car he slipped and fell, breaking his left thigh and injuring his right leg so severely that it had to be amputated below the knee. His injuries were serious and permanent.

"(5) The car had a trailer or baggage car behind it which introduced an element of danger, and it caught the claimant and dragged him several yards westwards over the railway crossing, but as its pace was only about five miles an hour neither the tramway conductor nor the claimant considered there was any danger in what the claimant did. At the pace the car was going the conductor would not have stopped the claimant jumping on even if he had seen him, which he did not.

"(6) The claimant admits he knew there was a notice in the car against jumping off or on while the car was in motion, but no attempt has ever been made to enforce this notice by a prosecution or otherwise, and the conductors only interfere if they think there is danger from the car going fast. In attempting to get on the car the claimant was acting not for his own purposes but on the business of his employer. Although the appellants were aware that their employees generally were accustomed to get on and off cars while in motion, they never prohibited or questioned the practice, and they never warned the claimant against it. At the rate the car was travelling at the time of the accident the operation was reasonably free from danger and was not reckless.

"(7) If the claimant had been waiting alone at the stopping-place, as would have been the case on this particular occasion, the car would probably only have slowed down to let him jump on.

"(8) At the spot where the claimant attempted to board the car the ground was quite level, and it has for long been a common practice for miners on leaving their work, and others in the appellants' employment (including the claimant), to board the cars while in motion, and this practice has never been objected to by the appellants or the tramway company or their servants. One of the appellants' servants was stationed at said level-crossing at the time of the accident, and had been stationed there for many months prior to the accident. Neither he nor any other person ever suggested that the claimant and appellants' other workmen were not entitled to board the cars at said point. Symon v.

Wemyss Coal
Co., Limited.

"(9) The solum of the ground where the accident happened belongs to the North British Railway Company, but the tramway company have a wayleave right over it.

"(10) There is a railway trespass notice close to the spot where the claimant was injured, and similar notices erected by the appellants and the tramway company. The claimant, however, had not read these notices, and was unaware that he was trespassing. No prosecution or other means had been taken to warn trespassers.

"(11) It was part of the claimant's duty to travel over said level-crossing and up to the railway line every day to collect waybills belonging to the appellants. The line is a private railway line belonging to the North British Railway Company and worked by the appellants."

On the above facts the Sheriff-substitute found that the claimant sustained personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment with the defenders and appellants, and that he was entitled to compensation.

The question of law for the opinion of the Court was:—"Was I right in holding that claimant's accident arose out of and in the course of his employment with the defenders and appellants?"

The case was heard before the Second Division (without Lord Dundas) on 19th June 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—The accident did not arise out of the boy's employment. The test was whether the danger was incidental to the employment, as in the case of Millar,¹ or was an added risk which the workman had taken on his own account.² In the present case the accident occurred through the boy jumping on to the car while it was in motion. This was a dangerous act, which he knew was forbidden, and which he did not require to perform in carrying out his employers' orders. It was immaterial that the employers knew of this practice and took no steps to prevent it. The accident did not take place on their premises, and they were not responsible for seeing that the rules of the tramway company were observed.

Argued for the respondent;—So far as any general rule could be laid down, the true test of whether an accident arose out of the employment was whether at the time of the accident the workman was about his master's business.³ This was clearly brought out by contrasting the cases of *Conway*⁴ and Traynor.⁵ In the former case compensation was awarded because, although the applicant

¹ Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, supra, p. 37.

² Rodger v. Paisley School Board, supra, p. 584, per Lord President Dunedin, at p. 587; Murray v. Denholm & Co., 1911 S. C. 1087, per Lord Salvesen, at p. 1102; Revie v. Cumming, 1911 S. C. 1032; Richard Evans & Co., Limited, v. Astley, [1911] A. C. 674, per Lord Chancellor Loreburn, at p. 678; Traynor v. Robert Addie & Sons, (1910) 48 S. L. R. 820.

³ Smith v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, [1899] 1 Q. B. 141; Moore v. Manchester Liners, Limited, [1910] A. C. 498.

⁴ Conway v. Pumpherston Oil Co., Limited, 1911 S. C. 660.

⁵ Traynor v. Robert Addie & Sons, 48 S. L. R. 820.

July 12, 1912. had gone to a forbidden place, it was for a purpose connected with his employment; in the latter case compensation was refused in almost identical circumstances because there was no evidence to show why the applicant had broken the rule. If the workman were acting in the interest of his employer, then he was not necessarily deprived of his right to compensation because he was in breach of a rule.¹ Disobedience to an order might amount to misconduct,² but, as the boy was seriously and permanently disabled, that was no defence for the employers in this case. Applying the test, it was clear that the arbitrator had come to a right decision, for there was no doubt that the boy was on his master's business when the accident occurred. It was immaterial that the accident did not occur on the employers' premises, because under the Act of 1906 there was no limitation of locus as there was under the earlier Act.³ Apart from any general rule, the award was right on the merits. Boarding the car while it was in motion was not an added risk; it was not really a risk at all. This was a point of fact on which the arbitrator had found in favour of the workman. In any event, there was evidence to support the arbitrator's award, and it could not be said that he had misdirected himself on a point of law. In such a case the Court would not interfere with his decision.⁴

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The pursuer in this case was at the time of the accident which has led to the present proceedings, a boy of fourteen years of age, and was sent from the works of the appellants with a message to a place at some distance, his employers providing him with money to pay tramway fares for his going and returning. He met with his injury by falling in attempting to mount a tramcar in the circumstances which I shall now state in detail. There was a fixed stopping-place, where in ordinary course he would have boarded the car. On arriving at the stopping-place he found that the car had not reached it, and he left the stopping-place, and went forward towards the coming car for some little distance. When the car came opposite to him, and when it was moving at about five miles an hour, he endeavoured to mount on to the car, and fell and received his injury. No one invited him to go forward to meet the running car, and no one invited him to get on to it while it was still in motion. There was a notice in the car forbidding this, and the boy, who had used the tramway before, was aware of this notice.

The question in these circumstances is whether the master is bound to pay compensation in respect that the accident occurred during the course of employment and arose out of the employment. The Sheriff-substitute has answered in the affirmative. I am unable to agree with him. He ¹ Whitehead v. Reader, [1901] 2 K. B. 48; Praties v. Broxburn Oil Co., Limited, 1907 S. C. 581; Wallace v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., Limited, 1907 S. C. 967; Johnson v. Marshall, Sons, & Co., Limited, [1906] A. C. 409; Bist v. London and South-Western Railway Co., (1907) 23 T. L. R. 471. Lord Salvesen referred to Martin v. Fullerton & Co., 1908 S. C. 1030.

² George v. Glasgow Coal Co., Limited, 1908 S. C. 846, aff. 1909 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

³ Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37), sec. 7.

⁴ Mackinnon v. Miller, 1909 S. C. 373.

seems to hold that a boy such as the respondent does not run much risk in July 12, 1912. mounting a car going at five miles an hour, and to deduce from that idea the conclusion that, if an accident happens when the risk is taken, it happens as an incident of the employment. I cannot assent to that.

Symon v.
Wemyss Coal
Co., Limited.

When vehicles running on rails are to take up or put down passengers, it is the rule that they must stop to do so, and in this case the rule was specially brought to notice. The rule is established because there is danger when mounting or alighting is attempted when the vehicle is in motion. So much is the danger realised that on railways it is a punishable offence to enter or leave a train while in motion. It is, of course, often done, with the result that from time to time accidents do occur. But nothing can be more clear than that if such an act is dangerous, and for that reason forbidden, the person who breaks the rule which is known to him, does so at his own risk. It may be different if a servant of the railway or tramway company invites a person to step on to a car or carriage when in motion. Then the company by its servant is setting aside its own rule, and must answer for the consequences.

Lord Justice-
Clerk.

I cannot therefore see how it can be held that the doing of an act forbidden, and known to be forbidden, can be held to make a master liable for an accident to his message boy, on the footing that the accident arose out of his employment. He is doing knowingly what he has no need to do, and no right to do, in order to fulfil his duty. It is not in any way like an accident such as making a false step upon a stair, or falling where steps are not in good order. Such a case as the insurance canvasser does not seem to resemble the present case in the least. Having to go on to a stair with worn steps may, in the words of Lord Salvesen in Murray's case,¹ be "incidental to the character of the business." In that case nothing is done which is prohibited, and what is done, namely going on the stair, is a necessary action in the fulfilment of the duties of the employment. What happens is a pure accident in the course of doing what it was right to do. Here what happens is no doubt an accident, but it is an accident the action leading to which was not reasonably incidental to the employment. The boy had no cause to do what he did—he was doing what his employment in no way required him to do. The Sheriff-substitute seems to think it is a ground for reaching the conclusion at which he arrived that it was proved that other people mounted cars at this place when they were in motion, and that this has not been objected to by the tramway company's servants nor by the appellants. As regards the tramway company, the appellants cannot be affected by the company's failure to see that their own rules were observed, and I cannot hold that the appellants were called upon to watch their servants outside their own premises, and to attend to the working of tramways. The Sheriff-substitute holds that in "attempting to get on the car, the pursuer was not acting for his own purposes, but on the business of his employer." I cannot agree with that finding, which the Sheriff-substitute puts in his finding of facts but which is really a finding in law. When the respondent left the stopping-place, and walked up the line to board the moving car, and when trying to do so,

¹ 1911 S. C. 1087, at p. 1103.

July 12, 1912. he was not acting on the business of his employer. The business of his employer in no way called upon him so to act. His doing so in no way facilitated or promoted his employer's business. It could not do so.

Symon v.

Wemyss Coal
Co., Limited.

Lord Justice-
Clerk.

Further, when the Sheriff-substitute puts in his findings in fact a statement that if the boy had waited at the proper stopping-place the car might not have stopped, he is plainly not stating a fact proved, but stating what he imagines was likely. It was the duty of the conductor to stop if a passenger was waiting, and it is quite irrelevant to state guesses as to whether he would have done his duty.

I do not think it necessary to go over the cases quoted to us for the respondent. They were nearly all cases where the work was being done on the master's premises, and where the acts in course of being done were of the nature of fulfilment of work for the master. The sufferers were not going outside their duty, though they might be careless in doing what they did. But there is one case which, I think, has a strong bearing upon the present, viz., the case of Revie.¹ In that case a man, whose duty it was to stay by and attend to a brake on the back of a lorry, left the place where he should have been and went forward to sit with the driver in front. When a time came when the driver told him to put on his brake, he proceeded to get down in order to go back and apply the brake. In getting off the front of the lorry he fell and was run over. It was held that he had put himself in circumstances not incidental to the duty he was to perform, and so that what had happened did not arise out of his employment. The Lord President in that case, using the phrase which he found in the case of Brice v. Lloyd,² expressed himself to the effect that the test is whether the risk of the accident is one which may be reasonably looked upon as incidental to the employment. I can see no distinction between going to a wrong place and there trying to jump on to a car not intended to stop at that place, and going to a wrong place on a lorry and jumping off. In the one case as in the other the person injured was not doing what was incidental to his duty to his master—he was not doing anything for his master. His position was for the time being away from what duty prescribed. The brakesman chose to go to the front of the lorry, the boy here chose to go forward away from the stopping-place. The one jumping off and the other jumping on were each wilfully taking an outside risk not incidental to the reasonable requirements of duty.

I therefore am of opinion that the question put in this stated case should be answered in the negative.

LORD SALVESSEN.—The facts in this case are extremely simple. The respondent, who is fourteen years of age, was employed as a message clerk by the appellants, and had been in their service for about five months prior to the accident. On 29th October 1910 he was sent with a message from the appellants' Muiredge office to East Wemyss, and was given money to pay his car fare both ways. He went to a stopping-place of the tramcar but, as it did not arrive for some little time, he walked a short distance in the direction from which it was coming, there being no occasion for his doing so. When the car passed him he attempted to board it while it was proceeding at five miles an hour, and in so doing he fell and sustained a serious permanent injury. He was not invited by the conductor to join the car while in motion, and he knew that there was a notice in the car against his doing so. No question of serious or wilful misconduct arises in the case, because that cannot be pleaded where an accident to which the Workmen's Compensation Act applies results in the permanent disablement of the workman. The sole question in the case is whether the accident arose out of and in the course of the respondent's employment.

¹ 1911 S. C. 1032.

² [1909] 2 K. B. 804.

Symon v.
Wemyss Coal
Co., Limited.

Lord Salvesen.

The Sheriff-substitute has evidently given great weight to two considerations which I think are entirely irrelevant in considering the only question which we have to decide. The first is that there is not much danger in an active lad of fourteen jumping on to a car which is proceeding at five miles an hour. That there is some danger is obvious from the fact that the accident happened; and as wilful and serious misconduct is not in the case, it seems to me to be a matter of no moment whether the car was going at five miles an hour or at twice or three times that speed. I daresay that an active lad can, without serious risk, board a car which is going no faster than he can run, although of course the risk increases with the increase of speed. If it be held to be incidental to the employment of a messenger who is directed to use a public conveyance that he should run the risk of joining it in motion, it appears to be quite immaterial in a case of this kind what is the speed at which the conveyance is moving. The second circumstance is that the employers knew that their employees were accustomed to get on and off the cars while in motion, and never questioned the practice or warned the men against it. I cannot see that the employer's duty in a matter of this kind goes beyond his own premises. If he permits a dangerous practice there, even although it is prohibited by his own rules, he may bar himself from pleading that the knowledge of the rule put his workmen in the wrong whenever they violated it. But I apprehend that it is no part of his duty to warn his workmen not to infringe the rules of a tramway company or railway company over which he has no control, more especially when the workman is quite aware of the existence of the rule. I think it is common knowledge, with which a boy of fourteen may quite well be credited, that if he joins a moving car he does so at his own risk.

There is a third circumstance on which the Sheriff-substitute also lays some stress, namely, that even if the boy had been at the stopping-place the car might not have stopped for a single active passenger. That is, of course, a mere speculation; and at anyrate it is certain that it was the duty of the conductor, if the boy had signalled to him, to stop the car. If he had failed to do so, and had invited the boy to join the car when in motion, the tramway company would have incurred liability for the accident which resulted, just as a passenger has been found entitled to get damages from a railway company for being run over while crossing the line instead of using a foot bridge, when he had been invited by a railway servant to cross the line.

We were favoured with an elaborate citation of authorities more or less in point, of which the cases of Whitehead,¹ Martin,² Conway,³

¹ [1901] 2 K. B. 48.

² 1908 S. C. 1030.

³ 1911 S. C. 660.

July 12, 1912. Revie,¹ Evans,² and Johnson,³ were the most important. The circumstances in most of these cases were entirely different from those that we have here. Symon v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited. Lord Salvesen. In all of them, except Revie's,¹ the accident occurred on the master's premises while the injured workman was doing his proper work, although, it may be, in a negligent manner, but that is just the kind of case to provide for which the Workmen's Compensation Act was passed. The only exception is the case of Revie,¹ where the accident occurred on a road, and the circumstances there more nearly resembled those which are found in the present case, and indeed appear to me to be a fortiori, for the workman when he met with his accident was actually obeying an order with which he was bound to comply. In other respects it is very similar, because the risk of jumping off a moving conveyance is similar to that of jumping on to it. I humbly think that that case was well decided, and at all events it is binding upon us. If so, the question of law falls to be answered in the negative, and I propose that we should so answer it.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur. It is sufficient in this case to found, as your Lordships have done, on the specialty that the boy got on, not only while the car was moving, but at a place which was not a stopping-place. It is not necessary to decide what would have been the result had the accident happened at a stopping-place, or if not happening at a stopping-place, the accident had resulted from the boy slipping while getting on a car which was at rest. But I am not satisfied that there are any facts before us which would assimilate the case to that of Millar v. Refuge Assurance Company.⁴ The boy was a clerk with many duties, one of which was to go messages. The case is not comparable with that of boy messengers, such as there are in London, whose sole duty is to go messages and who are compelled to be regularly and constantly in public vehicles.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the negative.

D. R. TULLO, S.S.C.—W. & J. BURNES, W.S.—Agents

No. 172.

July 12, 1912.

Hill v. Inland Revenue.

R. WYLIE HILL, Appellant.—Horne K.C.—Lippe.
THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, Respondents.—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

Revenue—Super-tax—Deductions—Farming losses—Losses not claimed as deductions from Income-Tax—Deductions not claimed within six months—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. VII. cap. 8), sec. 66 (2)—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 8), sec. 23 (1).

The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, enacts, sec. 66 (2):—"For the purposes of the super-tax, the total income of any individual from all sources shall be taken to be the total income of that individual from all sources for the previous year, estimated in the same manner as the total income from all sources is estimated for the purposes of exemptions or abatements under the Income-Tax Acts."

The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, sec. 23, provides that for loss sustained in the occupation of land for purposes of husbandry

¹ 1911 S. C. 1032.

² [1911] A. C. 674.

³ [1906] A. C. 409.

⁴ Supra, p. 37.

an adjustment of liability for income-tax may be obtained upon giving notice within six months after the year of assessment.

Held that a taxpayer, in making a return of his income of the previous year for the purposes of the super-tax, was entitled to claim as deductions losses sustained in husbandry, although these losses had not been claimed as deductions from his income-tax, and although his claim was not made within six months after the year of assessment.

Hill v. Inland Revenue.

THIS was an appeal by stated case under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, at the instance of R. Wylie Hill, Balthayock, Perth, against a decision of the Income-Tax Commissioners disallowing certain deductions, in respect of farming losses, from the appellant's total income returned for the purpose of super-tax for the year ending 5th April 1910. The total income which fell to be returned for that purpose in terms of the Act was the income for the year 6th April 1908 to 5th April 1909.

1st Division.
Exchequer Cause.

The case set forth the following facts:—

“1. At a meeting of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income-Tax Acts, held in Edinburgh on the 18th July 1911, Mr R. Wylie Hill (hereinafter called ‘the appellant’), residing at Balthayock, near Perth, N.B., appealed against an assessment to the super-tax in the sum of £5140 for the year ended 5th April 1910, under the provisions of section 66 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910.*

“2. On the 2nd November 1910 the appellant made a return for the year ending 5th April 1910, for the purposes of super-tax, in the sum of £7289, 10s., arrived at as follows:—

“The annual value of properties owned and also in some cases occupied by him, assessed under Schedule A (as reduced for the purpose of collection under section 35 of the Finance Act, 1894), for the year ending 5th April 1909 (including 140 Sauchiehall Street †),

£4763 8 0

“The annual value of properties occupied by him, assessed under Schedule B for the year ending 5th April 1909 (including the properties in respect of which the alleged farming losses were incurred),

146 7 0

“Income from investments,

5769 18 8

“Wife's income,

84 15 10

£10,764 9 6

“Deductions,

3474 19 6

£7289 10 0

“3. Included in the sum of £3474, 19s. 6d. for ‘deductions’ were mortgage interests, ground rents, and other charges which are admissible deductions, and in respect of which no question arises in this case. The said sum also included the following amounts, viz:—£727, 6s. 10d., being the amount of the alleged losses on Mains and Oliverburn farms, and £124, being the alleged loss of rent on 140 Sauchiehall Street. The Special Commissioners by whom the said

* Sec. 66 (2) is quoted in the rubric.
† This report is not concerned with questions affecting the Sauchiehall Street property.

July 12, 1912. assessment of £5140 was made disallowed the said sums of £727, 6s. 10d. and £124 as deductions, the assessment being arrived at as follows:—

Hill v. Inland
Revenue.

" Total income returned,	£7289	10	0
" Add said deductions disallowed,	851	6	10
	<hr/>
" Total,	£8140	0	0
" Statutory allowance,	3000	0	0
	<hr/>
" Amount of assessment,	£5140	0	0
	<hr/>

" 4. The appellant claimed to deduct from the said sum of £5140—
 . . . (b) A sum of £146, 7s., being the amount of the assessment to the income-tax, Schedule B, for the year ended 5th April 1909, in respect of certain farms on said Balthayock estate on which the appellant alleges he sustained a loss. The said sum of £146, 7s. is included as one of the appellant's sources of income in arriving at the total aggregate income of £8140 shown in paragraph No. 3 of this case. (c) A sum of £727, 6s. 10d., representing the extent of the losses alleged to have been incurred by him in farming operations in the year ending 5th April 1909, in respect of certain farms, viz., Mains and Oliverburn farms, on the said Balthayock estate.

" 5. At the hearing of the appeal . . . as regards items (b) and (c), the appellant admitted that he had not claimed relief from income-tax for the year ended 5th April 1909 in respect of these items under section 23 (1) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890,* within the time therein prescribed, or at all, or any other relief in respect thereof. This being so, we were of opinion that these deductions could not be allowed. . . .

" 10. The appellant immediately upon the determination of the appeal expressed dissatisfaction with our decision as being erroneous in point of law, and in due course required us to state and sign a case for the opinion of the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland."

The case was heard before the First Division (without Lord Mackenzie) on 25th June 1912.

Argued for the appellant;—The Act of 1910, which put on a new tax on a new principle, made it necessary for the appellant to make a return of income "from all sources." He had had no occasion to make such a return for income-tax purposes, and when he was called upon to make such a return for a new tax he was well entitled to consider and claim every deduction to which he was entitled, whether it had been claimed for income-tax purposes or not. This was all the more obvious when it was borne in mind that at the time he made his return for income-tax the Finance Act had not been passed

* The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 8), enacts:—Sec. 23 (1). "Where any person shall sustain a loss . . . in the occupation of lands for the purpose of husbandry only, it shall be lawful for him, upon giving notice in writing to the Surveyor of Taxes for the district within six months after the year of assessment, to apply to the Commissioners for the general purposes of the Acts relating to income-tax for an adjustment of his liability by reference to the loss and to the aggregate amount of his income for that year estimated according to the several rules and directions of the said Acts." and there was no such tax as super-tax. All that the Finance Act July 12, 1912. did was to provide that the total income should be estimated "in the same manner" as for exemptions or abatements from income-tax. That implied that all deductions which would have been good deductions for income-tax would also be good deductions for super-tax, and the deductions now sought would have been good deductions for income-tax. If it had been meant to provide that no deductions should be allowed for super-tax unless they had already been claimed and allowed for income-tax the Act would have said so expressly. In point of fact the Act contained no provision which, either expressly or by implication, barred the appellant from making his present claim for deductions.

Hill v. Inland Revenue.

Argued for the respondents;—The statutory provisions regulating the manner in which total income from all sources fell to be estimated excluded the appellant's present claim to make deductions from his own previous returns of annual revenue.¹ The present claim for deduction was available only by virtue of the importation into the Finance Act of section 23 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890. The provisions of that section accordingly ruled this claim and must be strictly observed. By subsection (1) notice must be given within six months, and by subsection (2) a certificate must be obtained. The appellant here had failed to carry out both of these requirements, and accordingly his claim was entirely inept.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD JOHNSTON.—The appellant was in 1910—the first year when super-tax became exigible—called on for a return. Now the Finance Act, 1910, was passed on 29th April 1910. It imposed a super-tax of 6d. in the pound on all incomes over £5000, to the extent to which they are in excess of £3000, for the year 6th April 1909 to 5th April 1910, that is, for a year already expired; but in estimating the income on which the tax was to be assessed the income of the year 1908-9 was directed to be taken.

The appellant was not asked to make a return until long after 5th April 1910, that is, long after the expiry of the year for which the tax was to be paid, and a good deal more than twelve months after the expiry of the year the income of which was to be the basis of assessment. He was thus called on in the later half of 1910 to make a return of his income from all sources for 1908-9. One source of his income for that year was profit from the occupation of land for agricultural purposes, that is, of income under Schedule B. He alleges that he sustained a loss on the occupation of certain farms. In making his ordinary return for income-tax for 1908-9 he had not claimed any deduction in respect of these losses, but had paid tax on the full assessment. But now that he is charged super-tax he has claimed such deduction in estimating his income for 1908-9, and the Special Commissioners refuse to entertain his claim because he did not make it, as they think, in due course—when being assessed for income-tax in the year 1908-9,—and paid income-tax for that year without claiming any return.

The question thus raised depends on the meaning of section 66 (2) of the Finance Act, 1910, and particularly of the words "estimated in the same ¹ Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), secs. 163, 167, 190.

July 12, 1912. manner as," contained in that subsection. That section says that, "For Hill v. Inland the purposes of the super-tax, the total income of any individual from all Revenue. sources shall be taken to be the total income of that individual from all Ld. Johnston. sources for the previous year." Pausing there, the first thing that is apparent is that a new return and a comprehensive return is required, embracing every item of income, whether falling under Schedule A, B, C, D, or E, and whether the tax has been assessed or has been deducted at the source. Is that return to be merely a combination of previous returns made under the different schedules? Clearly not; for no previous return includes income which is taxed at the source. Nor is there anything to indicate that the Special Commissioners are bound by the previous assessments or barred from going behind them.

The subsection then proceeds to say that the total income from all sources is to be "estimated in the same manner as the total income from all sources is estimated for the purposes of exemptions or abatements under the Income-Tax Acts." It says it is to be estimated, not is to be taken as it has been estimated, and accordingly an estimate in "manner" prescribed is required.

"In manner" prescribed throws the individual making the return back immediately on the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, section 23 (1), which provides that where any person shall sustain a loss in the occupation of land for the purpose of husbandry only, it shall be lawful for him, upon giving notice in writing to the Surveyor of Taxes for the district within six months after the year of assessment, to apply to the General Commissioners under the Income-Tax Acts "for an adjustment of his liability by reference to the loss and to the aggregate amount of his income for that year estimated according to the several rules and directions of the said Acts." It does not appear to me that the six months' limitation applicable to adjustment of liability by reference to the loss and to the aggregate amount of income, in regard to the assessment for ordinary income-tax, has anything to do with the "manner" of estimating income, or is a condition of the operation which the individual is called on to perform for the benefit of the Special Commissioners dealing with super-tax. The manner of estimating total income is clearly that of the "several rules and directions" of the Income-Tax Acts. That super-tax and everything connected with it is something quite apart from income-tax is, if it were necessary, clearly shown by the four special rules which are appended to the subsection (2) which I have just examined.

I therefore think that the Special Commissioners are bound to consider the appellant's demand for deduction in respect of his farming losses.

The LORD PRESIDENT and LORD KINNEAR concurred.

THE COURT pronounced an interlocutor in the following terms:—

"Reverse the determination of the Special Commissioners in article 5 of the case; allow deduction under heads (b) and (c) of article 4 of the case of such losses as the appellant may instruct."

MAXWELL, GILL, & PRINGLE, W.S.—SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL OF THE COUNTY OF LANARK, Claimants.—

No. 173.

Clyde, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

THE PROVOST, MAGISTRATES, AND COUNCILLORS OF THE BURGH OF MOTHERWELL, Respondents.—Sandeman, K.C.—D. P. Fleming.

July 12, 1912.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

Process—Sheriff—Extension of burgh boundaries—Adjustment of liabilities—Arbitration by Sheriff—Statement of special case for opinion of Court—Competency of stating case after findings and allowance of proof—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), sec. 50 (3)—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. 33), sec. 96.

Sec. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, as applied by sec. 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, enacts that the Sheriff, when adjusting, as a single arbiter, the financial relations between a county and a burgh on the extension of the burgh, may state a special case on any question of law for the opinion of the Court.

Objection having been taken to the competency of such a special case on the ground that, not having been stated until after the Sheriff had made certain findings and allowed a proof, it was not timeous,—

Held that the case was timeously presented in respect that, no final judgment having been pronounced, it had been duly presented during the progress of the proceedings.

Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation, supra, p. 300, distinguished.

Local Government—Burgh—County—Extension of burgh boundaries—Inclusion of portion of county—Adjustment of liabilities by arbiter—Method of adjustment—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), sec. 50—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. 33), sec. 96.

By sec. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, as applied by sec. 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, it is provided that on the extension of the boundaries of a burgh so as to embrace part of a county, if the burgh and the county fail to agree as to the “adjustment of property and liabilities” consequential on the alteration of the boundaries, the adjustment may be determined by the Sheriff as arbiter.

In an arbitration between an extended burgh and the adjoining county the county maintained that the Sheriff was bound to make his adjustment of liabilities on the principle of apportionment according to the rateable values of the area taken into the burgh and the area retained by the county.

Held that there was no one particular method of adjustment incumbent on the arbiter; and, accordingly, that he was not bound to adopt the method suggested by the county, but was entitled to choose his own method, with which the Court would not interfere unless it was clearly wrong.

Opinion that a method of adjustment proposed by the arbiter was, in the circumstances, a fair and equitable method.

Local Government—Burgh—County—Extension of burgh boundaries—Inclusion of portion of county—Adjustment of liabilities—“Property”—Claim by county for loss of prospective and contingent income—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), sec. 50—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. 33), sec. 96.

A tramway company, authorised by Act of Parliament to lay tramways in a county, were bound, in every year in which their profits sufficed

July 12, 1912.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

to provide a certain dividend, to pay the county £50 for every mile of tramway laid in the county.

A portion of the county in which lines were authorised but not laid having been transferred to a burgh, held that the contingent right to payments from the tramway company was not "property" within the meaning of section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, to be taken into account in adjusting the financial liabilities of the burgh and county.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

THIS was a special case presented for the opinion of the First Division by the Sheriff of Lanarkshire (Millar), acting as an arbiter under the provisions of section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, as applied by section 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903,* and incorporated in the Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act, 1908.†

The case stated:—

"1. By the Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act, 1908, certain extensions of the burgh of Motherwell were authorised. The areas thus added to the burgh formed part of the Middle Ward of the county of Lanark, and as such were administered by the County Council of the county of Lanark, and the District Committee of the Middle Ward of said county. These areas were also partly comprehended within certain special districts for drainage, lighting, and scavenging. The area annexed to the burgh extends to 436 acres, while the extent of the remanent area of the county is 551,727 acres. The valuation of the annexed area at the date of the annexation was £21,765, and the valuation of the remanent area of the county was £1,917,089.

"2. The County Council of the county of Lanark (hereinafter

* The Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), enacts:—

Sec. 50. "(1) Any councils and other authorities affected by this Act, or by any order, or other thing made or done in pursuance of this Act, may from time to time make agreements for the purpose of adjusting any property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses of the parties to the agreement, so far as affected by this Act. . . .

"(2) In default of an agreement as to any matter requiring adjustment for the purposes of this Act, then, if no other mode of making such adjustment is provided by this Act, such adjustment may be made or determined by the Commissioners.

"(3) The Commissioners when making an adjustment under this Act shall be deemed to be a single arbiter within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and the Acts amending the same, and the provisions of those Acts with respect to an arbitration shall apply accordingly; and, further, the Commissioners may state a special case on any question of law for the opinion of either Division of the Inner House of the Court of Session, who are hereby authorised finally to determine the same along with any question of expenses."

The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. 33), enacts:—
Sec. 96. "On the formation of any new burgh or extension of the boundaries of any existing burgh, sec. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, relating to the adjustment of property and liabilities consequential on an alteration of boundaries, shall apply as if in lieu of that Act and the boundary commissioners, the Burgh Police Acts and the Sheriff (not being a Sheriff-substitute) were respectively mentioned therein. . . ."

† 8 Edw. VII. cap. lix.

called the 'claimants') having made certain claims against the Provost, July 12, 1912. Magistrates, and Councillors of the burgh of Motherwell (hereinafter called 'the respondents'), under and in virtue of the above statutory provisions, and the parties having failed to agree as to the same, the claimants made an application to me as single arbiter under said statutory provisions in order that adjustment of the indebtedness between them and the respondents might be made or determined by me, and answers thereto were lodged by the respondents. By their said application the claimants asked me to adjust the indebtedness by ordaining the respondents to pay to the claimants:—(1) The capital sum of £6399, 13s. 8d., with interest at 3½ per cent per annum from 1st August 1908 (the date at which the extension took effect) till paid; (2) The annual sum of £525, 11s. for sixteen years as from 1st August 1908, or alternatively, the capital sum of £6570; and (3) The capital sum of £1347, 6s. 8d., all in accordance with the proposals for the adjustment of the said indebtedness produced with the application, and which are printed in the appendix, and are part of this case.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

" I.—First Head of Claim.

" This head of claim relates to capital debts incurred by the claimants prior to—and outstanding at—the date of annexation, and the claimants propose that they should remain liable therefor, and that the respondents should pay to them in respect thereof the capital sum of £6399, 13s. 8d., with interest at 3½ per cent from 1st August 1908 until payment.

" This claim is framed upon the footing of taking the rateable value of the total area which was liable to be rated in respect of the particular debt immediately prior to the date of annexation, and apportioning the debt upon the portion of such area annexed to the burgh according to the rateable value of such annexed area. The sums thus brought out in each case amount to the sum claimed under this head.

" The claimants, in the second place, proposed that the property, such as administrative offices, hospitals, drainage works, &c., which, prior to the annexation, were common to the undivided areas, fell to be allocated by me, as arbiter foresaid, either to the claimants or respondents, subject to payment in respect of the property so transferred or retained of such sum, if any, as I should adjust in terms of section 50 of the said Act of 1889, and that the basis of the adjustment should be the relative rateable valuations of the transferred area and the remaining county area as at the date of transfer, which should be taken as the measure of the respective use of the property by the transferred and remaining areas prior to the date of transfer.

" The respondents, on the other hand, object to the method of apportionment proposed by the claimants, and maintain that this claim falls to be adjusted on the basis of payment by them to the claimants (a) of any debt existing at the date of the annexation due by the claimants in respect of property under the various heads detailed only so far as such property has been taken over by the respondents; (b) of a sum in respect of the debt on buildings and property outside of the area annexed, which are in excess of the requirements of the diminished county, Middle Ward, or special district respectively, and were built and acquired for the use of the whole area previous to the annexation; and (c) of the value of the hydrants or other property which have been directly taken over by the respondents.

July 12, 1912.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

" II.—Second Head of Claim.

" This claim relates to standing charges and other continuing expenditure of the claimants, including the salaries of permanent officials.

" This claim is framed on the footing of an apportionment of the amount of such salaries, charges, and expenditure according to rateable value, on the same lines as proposed in the first head of claim, and of payment by the respondents in respect of the claimants' retention of such liabilities of a sum equivalent to the capitalised value (at $12\frac{1}{2}$ years) of the net proportion of such liabilities (after deducting the proportion of expenditure unnecessary consequent on annexation) as effects to the annexed area.

" The respondents object to this proposed method of adjustment, and maintain that such adjustment should proceed on the basis of a payment by them to the claimants in respect of said salaries, charges, and expenditure, in so far only as they are unnecessary for the present management of the affairs of the county, Middle Ward, or special district respectively, and that only in respect of such period as may be necessary for re-adjustment of such salaries, charges, and expenditure.

" III.—Third Head of Claim.

" This claim arises in the following circumstances, viz. :—

" By the Lanarkshire Tramways Order Confirmation Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. cap. cliii.), the Lanarkshire Tramways Company were authorised to construct certain tramways, inter alia, within the county of Lanark. Section 16 of the said Act provides as follows, viz. :—' If in any year ending on the 31st day of December the net profits of the undertaking of the company authorised by the Act of 1900 and this Order available for payment of dividends on the share capital of the company shall be sufficient to pay a dividend at the rate of 5 per centum on such share capital the company shall pay to the county authorities a sum calculated at the rate of £50 for every mile of highway, road, or street on which any part of the tramways by this order authorised is laid within the jurisdiction of the county authorities, and after every additional £1 per centum of dividend beyond 5 per centum on the said share capital, an additional sum of £50 per mile calculated as aforesaid . . . '

" Of the tramway lines authorised by the said Order, 53·9 chains were authorised to be laid down within the area now annexed to the respondents' burgh. In the event of that portion of line being laid, and upon the footing that the net profits of the Tramways Company will be sufficient to pay dividends at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, an annual payment of £67, 7s. 4d. would have been payable to the claimants by the Lanarkshire Tramways Company, but the claimants have lost said contingent right in consequence of the annexation of said area to the burgh.

" The claimants maintain that said contingent right was ' property ' affected by the Motherwell Burgh Extension Order within the meaning of section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, and that they are entitled to a payment in respect of the transfer thereof.

" The respondents deny that this claim forms any part of the ' property ' of the claimants in the sense of the said section.

" The parties concurred in asking me to consider and decide the principles on which the adjustment of the various heads of indebtedness should proceed, before inquiring into the details of each item, as, once the principles were decided, the parties might be able thereupon July 12, 1912.

to settle matters between themselves, and thus avoid the necessity for such a detailed inquiry.

“ After hearing parties I issued proposed findings, against which representations were lodged by the claimants, and answers to the latter were lodged by the respondents. After hearing parties thereon,
I issued the following findings, viz. :—‘ Glasgow, 14th February 1910.—The Sheriff having heard counsel for the parties and considered the representations and whole cause, finds under the first head of the claim that the respondents are not liable to make payment to the petitioners of a share of the debts of the county at the time of annexation in the proportion of the rateable value of the area annexed to the rateable value of the whole county, but are liable (First) to make payment to the county of any debt at present existing due by the county in respect of property, under the various heads detailed, which has been taken over by the burgh along with the area annexed ; (Second) a sum in respect of the debt on buildings and property outside of the area annexed which are in excess of the requirements of the county and were built and acquired for the use of its whole area previous to the annexation ; and (Third) a sum in respect of value of the hydrants or other property which has been directly taken over by the burgh : Finds under head two of the claim that the respondents are not liable for any sum in connection with the maintenance of the establishment under the various heads which are detailed except to the extent that these are unnecessary for the present management of the affairs of the county, and that the respondents are only liable for their share of the cost of that proportion of the establishment which is unnecessary until that part of it can be readjusted : Finds that the third head of the claim is irrelevant, and falls to be dismissed : Under reference to these findings allows to both parties a proof of their averments, to proceed on a date to be afterwards fixed.’

“ My opinion on the questions at issue between the parties is given in the notes to the interlocutors pronounced by me on 8th December 1909 and 14th February 1910.*

* Note appended to interlocutor of 8th December 1909 continuing cause for further hearing :—“ At the last hearing of this case it became apparent that the parties were not in agreement with regard to the facts of the particular claims which are enumerated in the proposals by the County Council for adjustment of indebtedness. Both parties agreed in asking me to decide the general questions of law which were raised in the debate, and once they had the opinion of the Court upon these matters, the questions of detail necessary for the final decision of the case might be arranged between them so that a final interlocutor should be issued. As this is an arbitration under the Act I have avoided pronouncing any finding which would be binding on the Court, in order that the parties might have an opportunity of representing against the views which are expressed in this note.

“ The questions that are raised depend upon the meaning of section 50 of the Local Government Act, 1889, as applied by section 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, to the extension of the boundaries of the burgh of Motherwell. Section 96 of the Police Act says that on the extension of the boundaries of any existing burgh section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, relating to the adjustment of property and liabilities consequential on the alteration of boundaries shall apply, and

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

July 12, 1912.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

"The arbiter submits for the opinion of the First Division of the Court of Session the following questions of law:—'1. As regards the first head of the claim:—(1) Is the arbiter bound to adjust said claim on the basis of (a) an apportionment of the debt existing at the date of the annexation between the annexed area or so much thereof as at the date of annexation formed part of the county, Middle Ward, or special district respectively, and the remanent portion of the said county, Middle Ward, or special district respectively, according to the rateable value of said annexed area or part thereof, and county, Middle Ward, or special district as at the date of annexation; (b) a payment by the respondents to the claimants of the proportion of said debt effeiring to said annexed area or part thereof, and retained by the claimants; and (c) an adjustment of the properties and of the payments, if any, to be made in respect of the transfer or retention thereof? or (2) is the arbiter section 50 of the Local Government Act says that any councils and other authorities affected by this Act, &c., may from time to time make agreements for the purpose of adjusting any property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses of the parties to the agreement so far as affected by this Act, and subsection 2 provides that, in default of an agreement as to any matter requiring adjustment, then the adjustment may be made by the commissioners. The question, therefore, is whether the claims and the proposals made by the pursuers fall under the terms property, income, debts, liabilities and expenses. I think it is clear that these words refer to the period when the extension of the boundaries of the existing burgh takes place, and that they do not refer to any property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses which may emerge to either of the parties to the case subsequent to that date. It is to be observed that the word used is not compensation but adjustment, and I think it is clear from the decisions in the House of Lords in the cases of Urban District Council of Caterham v. Rural District Council of Godstone, [1904] A. C. 171, and Mayor, &c., of West Hartlepool v. The Council of Durham, [1907] A. C. 246, that no compensation can be granted for the loss of assessable area for contribution to future rates. I think it is also clear that so far as possible all the property within the area annexed to the burgh which is necessary for the use of the inhabitants there and which formerly belonged to the county authority should be transferred to the burgh under the obligation of making such payment to the county as would relieve the county of the existing debt in connection therewith; and in the same way that the property in the county area should be free from any claim on the part of the inhabitants in the annexed area or of the burgh of which they now form part. The statute does not seem to contemplate that either the county or the burgh should have control or the right to interfere with the property which is outside their boundaries. Of course that necessarily implies that the authority to which property is transferred should relieve the other of any debt in connection with the property transferred.

"Turning now to the proposals by the County Council for adjustment of indebtedness in which the particular claims are set forth, I propose very generally to state the views with regard to them which in applying the principles above explained I have come to entertain.

"The first head is for debts effeiring to the added area prior to annexation. Under this head, the first claim is for highways and new district offices. With regard to new roads and bridges in so far as the County Council can prove that that debt is for roads and bridges within the annexed area, I think that the County Council would have a good claim. But if the debt is for roads and bridges outside of the annexed area, which are now the sole property of the county, I think this claim falls to be entitled to adjust said claim on the basis of payment to the claimants by the respondents, (a) of any debt at present existing due by the claimants in respect of property under the various heads detailed which has been taken over by the respondents along with the area annexed; (b) of a sum in respect of the debt on buildings and property outside of the area annexed, which are in excess of the requirements of the county, Middle Ward, or special district, and were built and acquired for the use of the whole area previous to the annexation; and (c) of the value of the hydrants or other property which have been directly taken over by the respondents? 2. As regards the second head of claim, so far as relating to salaries of permanent officials, liability for which existed at the date of annexation:—(1) Is the arbiter bound to make an adjustment of such liabilities on the basis of (a) an apportionment of such salaries according to rateable value on the same lines as the apportionment referred to in question 1;

July 12, 1912.
Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

dismissed. With regard to district offices, these will in future belong to the County Council. The facts with regard to these offices were disputed, and I find it very difficult in the present state of the case to come to a decision, but it seems to me that if these offices or any considerable part of them were erected with a view to the administration of the district now annexed, and would not have been erected if the annexed area had not at the time been part of the county, then it would be unfair to saddle the county with the whole burden of the debt, and that the burgh must relieve the county of such portion as can be proved to be unnecessary for the present administration of the present county area. The same principle applies to the public health offices at Hamilton, the Inebriate Reformatory at East Kilbride, and hospitals and public slaughter-houses. With regard to the drainage works, I think the rule which has been already laid down with regard to the new roads and bridges also applies to them. With regard to the lamps and lamp pillars, the defenders admit their liability for the lamps and lamp pillars within their district. With regard to the stables for Dalziel and Netherton scavenging district, I think they fall under the same rule as the new district offices, hospitals, &c. There is also a claim for fire hydrants within the area which has been annexed. The possession of these hydrants was a matter of dispute. The pursuers maintained that these in future would be under the control and management of the defenders, while the defenders stated that they will remain under the authority of the pursuers, as being the authority for water supply. I think this is a matter for inquiry, and, if it turns out that they are under the control of the burgh, then the property in them should be transferred to it, and their cost should be paid by it to the county.

“With regard to the second head of pursuers’ claim, namely, standing charges and other continuing expenditure, if these charges mean the future cost for salaries, wages, &c., in connection with the maintenance of the establishment under the various heads which are detailed, I think they must be disallowed under the ruling in the cases of Caterham and West Hartlepool, supra. Lord Atkinson in the latter case says:—‘The whole scheme of the statute, however, is that when administrative urban areas, whether county boroughs or not, are created they shall have power to tax themselves to the extent necessary to carry out the duties imposed upon them, and shall not be called upon to contribute to the cost of the services rendered outside their respective areas by which they are not directly benefited.’ According to that view the burgh is to tax itself for the payment of all services which are rendered within its boundary, and they are not to be liable for the payment of any services which are rendered outwith the area. Moreover, it seems to me that this is not a liability which existed at the time of the annexation, except to this restricted extent, viz.,

July 12, 1912.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

(b) payment by the respondents to the claimants in respect of such liabilities of a sum equivalent to the capitalised value of the proportion of such liabilities effeiring to the annexed area, and of a sum to cover the period of necessary readjustment of the salaries in the remaining area? or, (2) Is the arbiter entitled to make such adjustment, on the basis of a payment by the respondents to the claimants in respect of said salaries, in so far only as they are unnecessary for the present management of the affairs of the county, Middle Ward, or special district respectively, and on the footing that the respondents are only liable for the cost of that proportion of the establishment which is unnecessary until that part of it can be readjusted? 3. Is the subject matter of the third head of claim "property" within the meaning of section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, and falling to be the subject of adjustment under and in terms of said section'?"

the county cannot be expected to discharge its officers at once on the occurrence of the annexation. If they can show that their establishment, therefore, was greater than was necessary for their own area, it may be that they would be entitled to a payment of such extra charges as might be necessary until an adjustment could be made. That seems to me to be a liability on the county at the time when the annexation took place which they may call upon the burgh to share.

"The third claim is in respect of the annual payment by the Lanarkshire Tramway Company. The position of this matter is that under the Lanarkshire Tramways Act, sections 16 and 17, the Tramway Company are bound, in the event of their constructing a tramway within the county, and the profits of their undertaking being sufficient to pay 5 per cent on the share capital, to pay to the county authorities a sum calculated at the rate of £50 for every mile of highway, road, or street within the county on which any part of the tramways is laid, and the same provision is made in favour of burghs. It seems, under the Act, that the Tramway Company have power to lay a line extending to 53·9 chains within the area annexed. No part of this line has been laid. The county claim, however, twenty years' purchase of the annual payment which, in the event narrated, will be due by the Tramway Company to the burgh. I think this claim must be disallowed entirely. The Act seems to contemplate that, when the tramway line passes through the territory of the county, the county authorities should receive the sum specified from the Company, and that, if it passes through a burgh, the burgh authority should receive the specified sum in the same way. It is difficult to say what is the exact reason for this payment, and counsel for the pursuers said that it was in respect of the county withdrawing its opposition to the Tramway Company's Act. It seems to me that the more probable explanation is that if the Tramway Company enters upon property of the Local Authority, as it does when it makes use of the highways and streets, then Parliament thought that the Local Authority should receive some return for that use after a fair profit had been made by the Tramway Company. That is rendered more probable, because by interference with the highway a burden might be placed on the Local Authority in providing for the passage of the public consequent on the Tramway Company's operations. As no part of this line has been made, it was not income transferred to the burgh at the time of the annexation. For this reason, I think the claim should be disallowed.

"Having expressed these opinions, I think it is proper to put out the case for further hearing, so that the future procedure may be determined on."

Note appended to interlocutor of 14th February 1910 :—"At the debate upon the re-hearing, it became apparent that the petitioners' position was that the whole debt of the county at the time of the annexation was proportion-

The case was called in the First Division on 31st May 1912, when July 12, 1912.
 counsel for the respondents objected to the competency of the special case, and argued ;—A special case was only competent while the arbitration was pending. Here it was not pending for the arbiter had already issued his findings. The sole object of a special case was that the arbiter might have the benefit of the opinion of the Court in making his findings. It did not permit of an appeal against findings already made, which was what the claimants were trying to secure in the present case.¹

Lanark
 County
 Council v.
 Magistrates
 of Motherwell.

Counsel for the claimants were not called upon.

At advising on 5th June 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is a special case stated by the Sheriff of Lanarkshire acting as an arbiter under section 17 of the Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act, 1908, and section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, as applied by section 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903.

The Motherwell Act was, as its title indicates, an Act for the extension of the burgh. The area of extension had to be taken from the county of Lanark, and the sections of the statutes I have referred to provide for questions arising between the county and the burgh in consequence of the extension, and requiring adjustment in default of agreement, being determined by the Sheriff as a single arbiter. Applying subsection (3) of sec-ally the debt of the part which had been taken from the county and added to the burgh. Therefore, the burgh in taking the annexed part took it with its debt, and in the adjustment of the debt with the county they were bound to make payment to the county of the due proportion. It seems to me that there is a fallacy here in thinking that the debt is a debt of each particular part of the county, and is not a debt of the county as a whole, for which it can assess the whole district within its area. If that be so, then the burgh in taking over the annexed part does not take over any part of the debt which remains with the county. To hold otherwise, I think, would be inequitable, for it would compel the burgh to pay for improvements and property of which neither it nor the part annexed to it could ever make any use. At the same time, I think that under the powers given by the section, the arbiter has a power to adjust the debt so as to work out an equitable result. Accordingly, I think he is entitled to call upon the burgh to make provision for the debt in respect of the property which is transferred to it. It would seem inequitable that the county should go on discharging debt for an improvement which was within the annexed part, and accordingly had become part of the burgh's property. Further, I think that the burgh are bound to make payment for any property such as hydrants which has been transferred to it. The same principle applies to the second head of the claim, which is in connection with the management and administration of roads, &c. If these are outside the limits of the district annexed, I think the expense of management and administration falls upon the county except in so far as the county authorities can prove that they undertook expenditure—in view of the annexed part remaining part of the county—which was now unnecessary. With regard to the third claim, which was still maintained, I am still of opinion that it is irrelevant."

¹ Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation, supra, p. 300, Lord President, at p. 303; Steele v. M'Intosh Brothers, (1879) 7 R. 192; In re Knight v. Tabernacle Permanent Building Society, [1892] 2 Q. B. 613.

July 12, 1912. tion 50 of the Act of 1889, the Sheriff "may state a special case on any question of law for the opinion" of this Court.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.
Ld. President.

In an arbitration set up between the county and the burgh various claims were made, and the learned Sheriff issued proposed findings. After hearing parties upon representations by the county and answers for the burgh, he made certain findings and laid down certain legal propositions; and with reference to these allowed a proof. The Sheriff was then asked to state this special case.

The case being here, it is argued for the burgh of Motherwell that it comes too late, and they seek to assimilate the case to that of Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation.¹ All that it is necessary to say upon the law was said in that case, and need not be repeated. I am clearly of opinion that the class of special case which is here presented is of the same character as that in Johnston's case,¹ which was presented under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act 1909, and that it must be presented during the progress of proceedings. I think that here the proceedings are in progress. In the case of *Johnston's Trustees*¹ there was nothing more to be done when the special case was presented, because the Sheriff had given judgment. Here he has not done so, and though no doubt he has made certain findings there is no decree and no final award. As matter of purity of expression he might have called them "proposed" findings, but I think it would be a denial of justice to throw the case out if, by a slip of the pen, he has omitted the word "proposed." He has pronounced no operative decree, and I think it is the intention of the Act that the opinion of this Court may be taken while matters are still inchoate.

LORD KINNEAR, LORD JOHNSTON, and LORD MAACKENZIE concurred.

The Court repelled the objection, and the case was further heard on 5th and 6th June 1912.

The contentions and arguments of parties are sufficiently indicated in the case stated by the Sheriff.²

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—This case has been stated by the Sheriff of Lanarkshire, upon a requisition of the parties, for the opinion of the First Division of the Court of Session upon certain questions of law arising in an arbitration in which he is arbiter. The arbitration is in pursuance of a provision in the Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act, which incorporates the 50th section of the Local Government Act of 1889, as applied by section 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, and by so doing provides that the arbiter may make an order "for the purpose of the adjustment of any property, debts, liabilities, or financial relations," which order may provide for "the transfer or retention of any property, debts, and liabilities, with or without any conditions, and for the joint use of any July 12, 1912. property, and for the transfer of any duties, and for payment by either party to the agreement in respect of property, debts, duties, and liabilities so transferred or retained, or of such joint use, and in respect of the salary, remuneration, or compensation payable to any officer or person, and that either by way of a capital sum or of an annual payment."

¹ Supra, p. 300.

² The following authorities were cited:—Midlothian County Council v. Magistrates of Musselburgh, 1911 S. C. 463; Durham County Council v. West Hartlepool County Borough, [1905] 2 K. B. 340, [1906] 2 K. B. 186, [1907] A. C. 246; Caterham Urban Council v. Godstone Rural Council, [1904] A. C. 171.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates Motherwell.

Ld. President.

This adjustment follows upon the fact that by the Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act a certain area which previously formed part of the Middle Ward of the county of Lanark was taken out of the county and put into the burgh. The clause which deals with the power to state a special case is this: The Commissioners, i.e., the arbiter, "may state a special case on any question of law for the opinion of either Division of the Inner House of the Court of Session, who are hereby authorised finally to determine the same along with any question of expenses."

Now the learned arbiter here pronounced what may be called a set of preliminary findings, in which he dealt with the claims of the parties as raised. In particular, the county claimed that there must first be an adjustment of the outstanding debt in such proportions as the valuation of the part taken away bore to the part retained by the county. The learned arbiter refused to do that, and laid down certain rules according to which he proposed to decide the case; and upon the controversy so raised we are asked, as a question of law:—[His Lordship quoted the first question].

I am of opinion that questions so stated really involve a matter which is not a question of law at all. It would be a question of law if it was an immutable proposition that the arbiter must adjust the debt upon the basis of the apportionment of the debt. No doubt, then, that would be a question of law, and we could tell the arbiter that he must do so. But that position in law is clearly wrong. It is for the arbiter to find out upon what terms the adjustment is to be made. It would be possible to tell the arbiter in certain circumstances that what he proposed to do was quite wrong; and as a good illustration of what I mean I would quote the well-known Caterham case,¹ where the arbiter proposed to give an allowance in respect of the subtraction of a valuable rateable area as such. Well, that was ultra vires, and accordingly you could say of that method that it was wrong and that the arbiter must not do it. But I do not think we can lay down any one particular way in which the arbiter is to arrive at an adjustment, because if we did that we should be doing, I think, what the statute has said the arbiter is to do and not this Court.

I think, therefore, the first half of the first question is a question of law and should be answered in the negative. The second half is not a question of law at all; there are various methods of adjustment, and all I can say is that I do not find it here made out that the way in which the arbiter proposes to go is necessarily a wrong way, in which case I could treat it as a question of law and say that he may not do it. I do not think it is necessary for me to say whether I should have proceeded in exactly the same way or not. But, at any rate, I think the way in which the arbiter has proceeded, and which, I think, he has clearly explained in the note upon

¹ [1904] A. C. 171.

July 12, 1912. the re-hearing [the note of 14th February 1910], is quite a fair way. I do not think it is the only way he could have chosen; I think he might have proceeded in another way, and he might have proceeded in the way which began with adjustment of the debt according to the valuation and proceeded upon the other side of the account to make other calculations.

Lanark
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Motherwell.

Ld. President. Upon the whole matter, therefore, I am of opinion that we should answer the first branch of the first question of law in the negative, and the second branch in the affirmative.

These remarks really cover also the questions which arise on the second head of claim. I think the arbiter is entitled to proceed as he proposes, though I do not say that he must necessarily do so.

The third question will be answered in the negative.

LORD KINNEAR, LORD JOHNSTON, and LORD MACKENZIE concurred.

THE COURT pronounced an interlocutor in the following terms:—

“ Having heard counsel for the respondents on their objections to the competency of the special case, repel the same Answer the first and second questions of law in the case in the negative of the first branch and in the affirmative of the second branch of each of said questions: Answer the third question in the negative.”

ROSS SMITH & DYKES, S.S.C.—BRUCE, KERR, & BURNS, W.S.—Agents.

No. 174.

WILLIAM ARNOTT, Respondent.—Constable, K.C.—Wilton.

July 12, 1912.

THE FIFE COAL COMPANY, LIMITED, Appellants.—

Horne, K.C.—Russell.

Arnott v.
Fife Coal Co.,
Limited.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), First Sched. (1) (b) and (3)—Incapacity for work—Physical capacity—Wage-earning capacity.

A miner, who had lost one eye by an accident and who had been given work above ground and was receiving partial compensation, was examined by a medical referee, who reported that he was “as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work underground.” The employers having applied to have the compensation ended, the arbitrator, after a proof, found that the miner had made various applications for work underground without success, and that he “is presently working on the surface and is only able on account of his injuries to earn 18s. a week,” and dismissed the application.

In an appeal the Court refused to disturb the arbitrator's finding.

1ST DIVISION. REPORTED ante, 1911 S. C. 1029.

Sheriff of Fife
and Kinross.

In an application under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for review of weekly payments made to William Arnott, miner, Cluny, by his employers, the Fife Coal Company, Limited, the Sheriff-substitute at Kirkcaldy (Umpherston) dismissed the application, and, at the request of the employers, stated a case for appeal.

The case set forth:—

“The facts admitted or proved were as follows:—

“(1) On 8th September 1908 William Arnott, the claimant, was a miner in the appellants' employment at their Bowhill Colliery, Cardenden. On said date his left eye was injured, and it was removed on 23rd September 1908.

"(2) From the date of the accident until he started work above ground in the month of September 1909, the claimant was paid the maximum compensation at the rate of £1 per week.

Arnott v.
Fife Coal Co.,
Limited.

"(3) In the month of September 1909 the claimant started work above ground in the employment of the appellants. His partial compensation was fixed at 13s. 4d. per week, and he was paid at that rate until 13th January 1911. He has received no compensation since that date.

"(4) On said 13th January 1911 the claimant was examined by Dr George Mackay, 20 Drumshough Gardens, Edinburgh, medical referee in ophthalmic cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, on a remit under section 15 of Schedule 1 of said Act.

"(5) The report of said medical referee lodged on 18th January 1911 is in the following terms:—'The said William Arnott had his left eye removed on 23rd September 1908, following upon the accident for which compensation is claimed. The socket is at present slightly inflamed as the result of wearing an artificial eye too freely. That, however, should soon yield to appropriate treatment. The right eye has a very slight error of refraction, but otherwise is quite a sound one. Though he complains of some subjective sensations of occasional headache, there does not appear to be any obvious cause for these which could be assigned to the injury, and his condition is such that, having for the past fifteen months been engaged in work at the pithead, he is now, in my opinion, as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work underground.'

"(6) Following upon said report the appellants lodged in process in the Sheriff Court at Kirkcaldy a minute craving the Court to end the claimant's compensation as at 13th January 1911. The claimant lodged answers to said minute stating, inter alia, that he had not recovered from the injuries which he had sustained, and that he had not recovered his earning capacity following upon said injuries; that he was still under medical treatment; that since the date of the accident the socket of the left eye, which had been removed, had been in an inflamed condition, painful and suppurating; that he suffered from headaches during his shift and after; that these headaches were brought about through his having to stoop or bend, and were a result of the injuries which he had sustained; that they interfered with his capacity for work and his earning ability; and, further, that the sight of the remaining eye was weak and became dim and fagged by the end of the shift. The claimant further stated that while his earning capacity had been, and was at that time, much reduced, as a result of the injuries which he had sustained, he was quite prepared to try work below ground so that his earning capacity might be properly tested. He averred, further, that a certain period at least should elapse to enable him to accustom himself to his altered condition.

"(7) After hearing parties' agents on the minute and answers, I repelled the answers for the claimant as irrelevant, and terminated his compensation from the date of the medical referee's report, namely, 13th January 1911.

"(8) Against this decision the claimant appealed by stated case to the First Division of the Court of Session, when the following question of law was submitted for the opinion of the Court:—'In the circumstances above stated was I entitled to end the compensation payable to the appellant (now respondent)?'

"(9) On 17th June 1911 the Court issued the following interlocutor:

July 12, 1912. — ‘The Lords, having considered the stated case on appeal, and heard counsel for the parties, answer the question of law in the case in the negative in hoc statu; recall the determination of the Sheriff-substitute as arbitrator, and remit to him to allow parties a proof of their averments, and to proceed as accords.’ *

Arnott v.
Fife Coal Co.,
Limited.

“(10) I thereupon appointed proof to be led on 21st July 1911, when the following facts were proved, viz.:—(a) That the claimant, since the date of the accident, had not worked underground, but that he had made various applications for work underground without success. (b) That it was impossible to say whether, if the claimant had returned to work underground in January 1911, he would have regained his former earning capacity by 21st July. (c) That there is no standard of earning capacity for one-eyed miners who are able to work at the face. Each individual must have a standard for himself. The power of the sound eye, the inherent capacity of the individual to adjust himself to altered conditions of work, and the degree of self-confidence which enables a miner to overcome a natural, perhaps nervous, timidity, which is engendered by a sense of augmented danger in his occupation, are all elements personal to the injured man, which affect his earning capacity when he returns to his former occupation. Some men, after the loss of an eye, are able to return to work at the face, and, after a time, to earn as much as formerly. Others are unable to adapt themselves to the new conditions, and to continue work underground. (d) That the claimant is presently working on the surface, and is only able, on account of his injuries, to earn 18s. a week. There was no evidence before me as to his earnings prior to the accident, except that they were more than £2 per week. (e) It was not proved that the claimant, if he had been working at the coal face, would have been earning more than he was earning on the pithead.

“I accordingly dismissed the appellants’ application for review.”

The question of law for the opinion of the Court was:—“Was I entitled to dismiss the application of the appellants?”

The case was heard before the First Division on 2nd March 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—Wage-earning capacity depended primarily on physical capacity,¹ and here the medical referee had found conclusively that the respondent was physically capable of returning to his ordinary work. The onus of meeting that finding, by proving that nevertheless the wage-earning capacity was diminished,² lay on the workman³; and he had failed to discharge it. The mere fact that he happened to be earning a certain sum, or that he had unsuccessfully applied for other employment, was not conclusive as to his earning capacity.⁴ For all that was stated in the case his want of success might be due to the state of the labour market. There was nothing in the facts found by the arbitrator to justify his holding, and accordingly the question should be answered in the negative.

* Reported 1911 S. C. 1029.

¹ Carlin v. Stephen & Sons, Limited, 1911 S. C. 901, Lord Salvesen, at p. 907.

² Rosie v. Mackay, 1910 S. C. 714.

³ M’Ghee v. Summerlee Iron Co., Limited, 1911 S. C. 870.

⁴ Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co., (1905) 7 F. 975; Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Limited, 1910 S. C. 51; Cardiff Corporation v. Hall, [1911] 1 K. B. 1009.

Argued for the respondent;—There was no onus on the workman here to prove diminished wage-earning capacity, for there was no finding of fully restored physical capacity. The referee had only found him “as fit as any other one-eyed man”; and that implied “not as fit as a two-eyed man.” In any case the test was not physical capacity but wage-earning capacity,¹ and no evidence had been led to show what work the workman was capable of doing and had an opportunity of obtaining. On the facts found proved by the arbitrator he had ample justification for continuing the partial compensation.²

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—[After narrating the circumstances, and referring to the fact that their Lordships had, in the former appeal, remitted to the arbitrator to allow a proof]—Your Lordships did that, I take it, because you considered that the report of the medical referee did not disclose complete recovery from the accident. The case had disclosed that the man was a one-eyed man, and it did not disclose complete capacity for his old employment underground, because it did not say that he was fit to resume his old employment, but that he was as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume. The case had also disclosed that there was a good averment by the workman that his earning capacity was interfered with by his present condition, which present condition was attributable to the accident.

Now, upon that the learned Sheriff-substitute allowed a proof, and he sets forth the facts. The first fact that he sets forth is that the claimant, since the date of the accident, had not worked underground, but that he had made various applications for work underground without success. He then goes on to say that there is no standard of earning capacity of one-eyed miners, that some one-eyed men get on better than others, and then he finishes up with the following finding: “That the claimant is presently working on the surface, and is only able, on account of his injuries, to earn 18s. a week.” Upon that he dismissed the appellants’ application for review, that is to say, he continued the old compensation.

I think it is impossible to disturb that finding, because I think the Sheriff-substitute has found as a matter of fact that the claimant is only able, on account of his injuries, to earn 18s. a week. We had already held that the medical report, as it stood, was not conclusive in the circumstances of this case as to the man’s capacity to resume work; and I think the matter is ended when the proof which was taken on that judgment discloses facts upon which the Sheriff-substitute has arrived at the finding—a finding upon fact with which we have no right to interfere—that the applicant has not worked underground, that he has not been able to secure work underground, and that he is only able, on account of his injuries, to earn 18s. a week, which, of course, is much less than his old wages were.

¹ Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited, [1911] 1 K. B. 1048, Fletcher Moulton, L.J., at p. 1054; Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co. 7 F. 975.

² Proctor & Sons v. Robinson, [1911] 1 K. B. 1004; Cardiff Corporation v. Hall, [1911] 1 K. B. 1009.

July 12, 1912. I am therefore for answering the question of law in the affirmative, and saying that the learned Sheriff-substitute was right.

Arnott v.
Fife Coal Co.,
Limited.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree with your Lordship. The Court considered that the report of the medical referee was not exhaustive of the question put to him, because, although he had given a report as to the man's condition, the result to which he came was, not that the workman was fit for his former work, but that he was as fit as any one-eyed man to resume his work underground. He did not tell us whether every one-eyed man is as fit to work underground as the man with two eyes, and his finding as to the present workman's fitness left it a matter of doubt whether he was still as able to work after having lost his eye as he was before the accident. Accordingly your Lordships remitted to the Sheriff-substitute to proceed to take proof, and upon that the question for him was obviously a pure question of fact—it was to ascertain whether this man was as fit or was not as fit for his work as before, notwithstanding his having lost an eye.

Well, then, he makes an answer in fact which appears to me to establish two propositions—in the first place, that the claimant has been working on the surface and has not been able to work underground because he has not been able to obtain work. He has made various applications for work underground without success. And, secondly, it establishes that, on account of his injuries, he can only earn 18s. a week, that is, by working on the surface.

The Sheriff-substitute also gives a finding with reference to the general question raised by the medical referee's report as to the ability of one-eyed men to work, and that shows that he had considered whether as matter of experience it had been found that a man who had lost his eye was as good for work underground as if he had two eyes, and the conclusion is that some men are able to work at the face although they are labouring under that misfortune and others are not. But that only shows that the arbitrator has fairly considered all the questions, and, as the result of his considerations, has reached a decision on the question of fact, which I do not think your Lordships can disturb.

I therefore agree that the question should be answered as your Lordship proposes, and that the Sheriff-substitute's decision is final.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I have great difficulty in this case owing to the way in which the learned Sheriff-substitute has stated the result of the proof before him, but as your Lordships are satisfied, I do not think it necessary or desirable that I should criticise further these statements. I agree in the judgment your Lordship proposes.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I agree with your Lordships. It was argued to us that the facts stated as proved did not conclusively show that the inability to get work was due to the injury, and that was based on a criticism of subhead (a), in which the Sheriff-substitute says "that the claimant, since the date of the accident, had not worked underground, but that he had made various applications for work underground without success." It was contended that that did not exclude the idea that his want of success in getting employment was due to the conditions of the labour market.

Then subhead (d) was criticised, of which the first clause was "that the July 12, 1912. claimant is presently working on the surface," and it was said that that might, taken along with subhead (a) be consistent with this view that the reason he was working on the surface was that he was unable to get work underground in consequence of the conditions of the labour market. But then I think it is impossible to construe the findings as a whole upon that view, because the arbitrator goes on to find, in express terms, that the workman is only able to earn, on account of his injuries, 18s. a week. I think that excludes altogether any idea of not finding employment because there was no work to be got, and affirms that the workman's incapacity to earn wages is solely because of his maimed condition. The result is that the Sheriff-substitute finds that whereas his earnings prior to the accident were more than £2 per week, his earning capacity had been so reduced by the injuries he had sustained that his wages now were only 18s. a week.

Arnott v.
Fife Coal Co.,
Limited.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

On that statement I have come to the conclusion that the Sheriff-substitute was right.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the affirmative, and dismissed the appeal.

D. R. TULLO, S.S.C.—W. & J. BURNES, W.S.—Agents.

JOHN GRAY, Appellant.—Moncrieff, K.C.—Keith.

No. 175.

SHOTTS IRON COMPANY, LIMITED, Respondents.—Cooper, K.C.—Strain.

July 12, 1912.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), First Sched.

(1) (b), (3), and (15)—Incapacity for work—Wage-earning capacity—Report by medical referee of fitness for work—Finality of medical referee's report—Competency of further inquiry into wage-earning capacity.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

By agreement between a coal miner, who had received an injury to his thumb and was receiving compensation, and his employers the question of the workman's capacity to resume his former employment was referred to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act. The medical referee reported that the workman was "quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from" the injury. The employers thereupon applied to have the compensation ended, when the workman lodged answers in which he averred that having returned to work he had ascertained "that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury," and maintained that he was still entitled to partial compensation. The arbitrator having ended the compensation, the workman appealed and craved leave to lead evidence in support of his averments.

The Court dismissed the appeal, holding that, as the medical referee's report was final, and was from its terms conclusive as to the question raised by the workman's averments, proof of these averments was inadmissible.

Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited, [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77, and Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company, Limited, supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513, distinguished; and observed that where a medical referee's report is not from its terms conclusive a proof may be admissible.

Question whether a proof might not have been admissible if the workman had averred that, owing to the consequences of the accident, he had been unable to obtain employment.

July 12, 1912. IN an application under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for review of a weekly payment made to John Gray, coal miner, Shotts, by his employers, the Shotts Iron Company, Limited, the Sheriff-substitute at Airdrie (Glegg) ended the compensation and, at the request of the workman, stated a case for appeal.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

1ST DIVISION.
Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

The case set forth :—

“This is an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, arising out of a minute by the parties craving the Court under paragraph 15 of the First Schedule of said Act to refer the matter as to the pursuer's capacity for his former work as a miner to a medical referee appointed under said Act, including in such reference whether any incapacity from which the said John Gray may now suffer is due to the accident.

“On 15th January 1912 a reference was made to Dr James Barras, Govan, who had previously acted as medical referee between the parties under said Act. On 20th January 1912 the medical referee lodged his report, which is in the following terms :—‘In accordance with the reference made to me by the Sheriff-Clerk of the Sheriff Court at Airdrie upon the application of John Gray, 25 Tarbothie, Stane, Shotts, v. Shotts Iron Company, Calderhead Colliery, Shotts, I have on the 18th day of January 1912 examined the said John Gray, and I hereby certify as follows :—(1) The said John Gray is in good health and his condition is such that he is now quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from an accident to his thumb on 17th March 1911, now ten months ago. I reported upon this same case three months ago. Dated this 18th day of January 1912.—James Barras, M.D., Medical Referee.’”

“On 25th January 1912, in view of the terms of said medical referee's report, the defenders lodged a minute” craving the Court to end the pursuer's compensation as at 18th January 1912.

“On 2nd February 1912, when the minute for defenders was called in Court, the pursuer lodged answers in the following terms, viz. :—‘The pursuer objects to the craving of the defenders' minute being granted, in respect that he has returned to work, and has ascertained thereat that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury, notwithstanding the fact that he has, from a medical point of view, recovered therefrom. Pursuer is prepared to accept compensation at such reduced rate as his earnings justify, and has been willing to do so all along. Pursuer should be found entitled to expenses. Arthur H. Frame, Silverwells, Hamilton, pur.'s pror.’

“The case was heard before me on 9th February 1912, when, after hearing parties' procurators, I ended the pursuer's compensation as at 18th January 1912, and found the pursuer liable to the defenders in the sum of one guinea of expenses.”

The questions of law for the opinion of the Court were :—“(1) Does the said finding of the medical referee preclude the workman from leading evidence to show that, as a result of the accident, he has not recovered his former earning capacity? (2) In the circumstances stated should I have allowed the pursuer a proof of his averment that the said pursuer had not recovered his former earning capacity?”

The case was heard before the First Division on 29th May 1912.

Argued for the appellant ;—There was a distinction between physical capacity and wage-earning capacity. The medical referee's report might be conclusive as to physical capacity, but if the workman relevantly averred, as he did here, that his wage-earning capacity had been diminished by his accident, he was entitled to a proof of that averment.¹

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

Argued for the respondents;—The pursuer's averments here were irrelevant, for they raised no point which was not covered by the medical referee's report, and that was conclusive as to the matters with which it dealt. The cases relied on by the pursuer were distinguishable. In Duris,² and also in Rosie,³ the referee's report was not conclusive, and the workman's averments related to matters not disposed of by the report. In *Ball*⁴ there was no referee's report, and the workman relevantly averred inability to obtain employment owing to an effect of the accident which was disclosed in the stated case. In *Ball*⁴ Lord Shaw quoted with approval the dictum of Lord Salvesen in Carlin v. Stephen & Sons, Limited,⁵ to the effect that the workman's claim must depend on something which unfits him for obtaining employment.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—John Gray, coal miner, in the employment of the Shotts Iron Company, received an injury to his thumb. Ten months after, the employers and the said John Gray, not being at one as to his condition or fitness for employment, agreed, in terms of the fifteenth paragraph of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to refer the matter to a medical referee. The medical referee examined John Gray, and issued a certificate as follows:—"The said John Gray is in good health, and his condition is such that he is now quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from an accident to his thumb on 17th March 1911, now ten months ago. I reported upon this same case three months ago."

In view of that report the employers lodged a minute in which they craved that compensation be ended. To that minute the workman lodged an answer in which he said that he objected to the crave "of the defenders' minute being granted, in respect that he has returned to work, and has ascertained thereat that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury, notwithstanding the fact that he has, from a medical point of view, recovered therefrom. Pursuer is prepared to accept compensation at such reduced rate as his earnings justify." Upon that the learned Sheriff-substitute as arbitrator ended the compensation; and the question that is asked us is whether he was right in ending the compensation or whether he should have allowed the workman a proof.

It was strenuously contended for the workman that we were bound to allow him a proof, and that upon the grounds that were laid down by the House of Lords in the cases of Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited,⁴

¹ Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Limited, [1912] A. C. 496, also reported supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77; Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Limited, supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513; Rosie v. Mackay, 1910 S. C. 714, Lord President, at p. 720.

² Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

³ 1910 S. C. 714.

⁴ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

⁵ 1911 S. C. 901, at p. 907.

July 12, 1912. and Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company.¹ I am of opinion that in this case the learned Sheriff-substitute was right, and that no proof ought to have been allowed. I think the case is a complete contrast to the case we have just disposed of—Arnott v. Fife Coal Company, Limited,²—and that we are not in any way bound to allow a proof in spite of the cases quoted, which, of course, we should be bound to follow if we thought they ruled the matter.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

Ld. President.

It is better, perhaps, that I should first examine the cases in the House of Lords. In the first case—which was an English case, the case of *Ball*³—the man had met with an accident a great many years ago by which he lost the sight of an eye. But then the condition of that eye was such that the ordinary beholder would not, by looking at the man, come to the conclusion that the man was blind in one eye, though in fact he was. And the consequence was that, inasmuch as he was perfectly able to do his work—which was that of an edge tool moulder—with one eye, and as no employer suspected him of having less than two sound eyes, he got as much wages as anybody else. But then he had another accident to the blind eye, and the result of this second accident did not, of course, make any difference in his sight, because the eye was blind already, but the eye had to be removed, and, consequently, anyone could see that he was a one-eyed man. Under those conditions he applied for compensation, because, he said, “the result of my accident has been to injure my earning capacity.” Now, the decision which the House of Lords had to review in that case was a decision to the effect that, inasmuch as the particular accident had not altered the physical capacity of the man, because he was a one-eyed man before the accident and he was an efficient one-eyed man after the accident, therefore there could be no compensation. The House of Lords reversed that decision, because they said that if the accident was the cause of a diminution of wage-earning capacity, whether that diminution was due to what may be called direct physical deterioration or not, he was entitled to compensation. That comes out perfectly clearly from what the Lord Chancellor said. In the ordinary and popular meaning which he attached to the language of the statute he thought there was incapacity for work “when a man has a physical defect which makes his labour unsaleable in any market reasonably accessible to him, and there is partial incapacity for work when such a defect makes his labour saleable for less than it would otherwise fetch.” And Lord Shaw of Dunfermline said:—“It is necessary to keep clearly in view in such cases the distinction between inability to obtain work arising as the result of the injured or disfigured condition of the workman and inability to obtain work arising from the state of the labour market. It does not appear to me to be any part of the scheme of the statute to make the employer responsible for a non-employment which is owing to general economic causes.” But he considered in the other case that where inability to obtain work was the result of injured and disfigured condition, then compensation might be awarded. And accordingly what their Lordships did there was to remit the case for proof to see whether the man's averment could be substantiated—that now, as an obviously one-eyed man, he had a less earning capacity in the market than he had before his accident.

¹ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

² Supra, p. 1262.

³ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

The other case was the case of Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company.¹ That was a case in this Division of the Court where the merits were not considered, because, when the case came before your Lordships, it was admitted by counsel that it was ruled by the case in the Second Division of Boag,² and they stated that it had been brought here in order that it might be taken to the House of Lords. Accordingly this Division pronounced a formal judgment following the case of *Boag*³; so that what was being reviewed was not so much the case of *Duris*¹ itself as the decision in Boag.² The facts in *Duris*¹ were that a workman was injured, and after the injury he had been taken into employment by his old employers to do light work—not to do his own work—and was paid at a certain rate per week. After a time they discharged him, and then he asked an opportunity of proving that his applications for work had been unsuccessful, and that his want of success had been due, not to the state of the labour market, but to his incapacity and to the very limited type of work which was now within his powers. It was held in this Court that there was no case for review, because the workman did not aver any physical change in his condition. In the House of Lords that was held to be wrong, and the case was held to be covered by the case of Ball.³ The man in effect said:—"I am in an injured condition, and I offer to prove that the effect of my injury is that when I go into the market I cannot get the wages which I otherwise would."

Now, the present case is not a case like that of Duris,¹ where a change of circumstance is averred, and the question is whether there should be a proof allowed in order that there may be a review of the compensation because this is a case where there has been a reference to a medical referee. It is very important to see what the statute precisely says about these references to medical referees. There are references of more than one kind. This case is one dealt with in the first part of the First Schedule, paragraph 15, which, after providing for periodical examinations of an injured workman, goes on to say that, in the event of no agreement being come to between the employer and the workman as to the workman's condition or fitness for employment, the Registrar of a County Court, on application being made to the Court by both parties, may, on payment of a certain fee, refer the matter to a medical referee. Your Lordships will notice, first of all, that this reference can only be of consent. There is no possibility of forcing a workman to go to a referee; and if he does not consent then there must be a proof in the ordinary way. If he does consent, the Schedule goes on to say:—"The medical referee to whom the matter is so referred shall, in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of State, give a certificate as to the condition of the workman and his fitness for employment, specifying, where necessary, the kind of employment for

¹ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

² Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Limited, 1910 S. C. 51.

³ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.), footnote, p. 77.

July 12, 1912. and Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company.¹ I am of opinion that in this case the learned Sheriff-substitute was right, and that no proof ought to have been allowed. I think the case is a complete contrast to the case we have just disposed of—Arnott v. Fife Coal Company, Limited,²—and

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.
Ld. President.

that we are not in any way bound to allow a proof in spite of the cases quoted, which, of course, we should be bound to follow if we thought they ruled the matter.

It is better, perhaps, that I should first examine the cases in the House of Lords. In the first case—which was an English case, the case of *Ball*³—the man had met with an accident a great many years ago by which he lost the sight of an eye. But then the condition of that eye was such that the ordinary beholder would not, by looking at the man, come to the conclusion that the man was blind in one eye, though in fact he was. And the consequence was that, inasmuch as he was perfectly able to do his work—which was that of an edge tool moulder—with one eye, and as no employer suspected him of having less than two sound eyes, he got as much wages as anybody else. But then he had another accident to the blind eye, and the result of this second accident did not, of course, make any difference in his sight, because the eye was blind already, but the eye had to be removed, and, consequently, anyone could see that he was a one-eyed man. Under those conditions he applied for compensation, because, he said, “the result of my accident has been to injure my earning capacity.” Now, the decision which the House of Lords had to review in that case was a decision to the effect that, inasmuch as the particular accident had not altered the physical capacity of the man, because he was a one-eyed man before the accident and he was an efficient one-eyed man after the accident, therefore there could be no compensation. The House of Lords reversed that decision, because they said that if the accident was the cause of a diminution of wage-earning capacity, whether that diminution was due to what may be called direct physical deterioration or not, he was entitled to compensation. That comes out perfectly clearly from what the Lord Chancellor said. In the ordinary and popular meaning which he attached to the language of the statute he thought there was incapacity for work “when a man has a physical defect which makes his labour unsaleable in any market reasonably accessible to him, and there is partial incapacity for work when such a defect makes his labour saleable for less than it would otherwise fetch.” And Lord Shaw of Dunfermline said:—“It is necessary to keep clearly in view in such cases the distinction between inability to obtain work arising as the result of the injured or disfigured condition of the workman and inability to obtain work arising from the state of the labour market. It does not appear to me to be any part of the scheme of the statute to make the employer responsible for a non-employment which is owing to general economic causes.” But he considered in the other case that where inability to obtain work was the result of injured and disfigured condition, then compensation might be awarded. And accordingly what their Lordships did there was to remit the case for proof to see whether the man's averment could be substantiated—that now, as an obviously one-eyed man, he had a less earning capacity in the market than he had before his accident.

¹ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

² Supra, p. 1262.

³ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

The other case was the case of Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company.¹ That was a case in this Division of the Court where the merits were not considered, because, when the case came before your Lordships, it was admitted by counsel that it was ruled by the case in the Second Division of Boag,² and they stated that it had been brought here in order that it might be taken to the House of Lords. Accordingly this Division pronounced a formal judgment following the case of *Boag*²; so that what was being reviewed was not so much the case of *Duris*¹ itself as the decision in Boag.² The facts in *Duris*¹ were that a workman was injured, and after the injury he had been taken into employment by his old employers to do light work—not to do his own work—and was paid at a certain rate per week. After a time they discharged him, and then he asked an opportunity of proving that his applications for work had been unsuccessful, and that his want of success had been due, not to the state of the labour market, but to his incapacity and to the very limited type of work which was now within his powers. It was held in this Court that there was no case for review, because the workman did not aver any physical change in his condition. In the House of Lords that was held to be wrong, and the case was held to be covered by the case of Ball.³ The man in effect said:—"I am in an injured condition, and I offer to prove that the effect of my injury is that when I go into the market I cannot get the wages which I otherwise would."

Now, the present case is not a case like that of Duris,¹ where a change of circumstance is averred, and the question is whether there should be a proof allowed in order that there may be a review of the compensation because this is a case where there has been a reference to a medical referee. It is very important to see what the statute precisely says about these references to medical referees. There are references of more than one kind. This case is one dealt with in the first part of the First Schedule, paragraph 15, which, after providing for periodical examinations of an injured workman, goes on to say that, in the event of no agreement being come to between the employer and the workman as to the workman's condition or fitness for employment, the Registrar of a County Court, on application being made to the Court by both parties, may, on payment of a certain fee, refer the matter to a medical referee. Your Lordships will notice, first of all, that this reference can only be of consent. There is no possibility of forcing a workman to go to a referee; and if he does not consent then there must be a proof in the ordinary way. If he does consent, the Schedule goes on to say:—"The medical referee to whom the matter is so referred shall, in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of State, give a certificate as to the condition of the workman and his fitness for employment, specifying, where necessary, the kind of employment for

¹ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

² Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Limited, 1910 S. C. 51.

³ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.), footnote, p. 77.

July 12, 1912. which he is fit, and that certificate shall be conclusive evidence as to the matters so certified." It is quite obvious that the view of the statute is that there is to be finality as to the matters referred. Of course, one must then take the report of the medical referee and see what it says. The case of Arnott v. Fife Coal Company,¹ which we have just decided, is a very good instance of a case in which the report of a medical referee is not entirely conclusive—does not end the matters but still leaves them open; because there the medical referee did not affirm the fitness of the man for the particular class of work which he had been engaged in before the accident, but only said he was as fit as any other one-eyed miner was fit, leaving us to discover what that fitness came to, and this could only be discovered in a proof. We accordingly directed proof to be led in that case. But here, what the medical referee says is that the man is in good health and quite fit to resume his employment as a coal miner, having recovered from the accident to his thumb. Now, that report, like everything else, must be read fairly and read in the light of common sense, and not read in any extravagant sense that the words might possibly bear. Read in the light of common sense it is perfectly plain that this medical man says that the man had an accident to his thumb, but that it is completely well and has no effect upon his condition at all, and that the accident is merely historical. If I thought that the real meaning of the report was anything else I should come to a different conclusion, but I am quite certain that that is the meaning of the report.

Now, if that is so, I ask what is left to be proved. The claimant does not say that he cannot get work, but he says that he has gone to work and he has ascertained thereat that his earning ability has been considerably reduced, notwithstanding the fact that he has, from a medical point of view, recovered therefrom. That, I think, is a perfect contradiction in terms. Supposing we allowed a proof, what would the pursuer prove? I suppose he would prove that, whereas his earnings before the accident had been so-and-so, he had, as a matter of fact, been paid rather less since the accident. Why is he paid less? I suppose that he would show that, whereas he filled so many hutches in a day before the accident, he filled rather fewer hutches since the accident, and therefore did not get so much. Why! There might be one very good reason why—a possible reason—viz., that he did not choose to work so hard. There is also the possible reason that he had not such a good thumb; but he cannot say he has not got such a good thumb because he has consented to referring the question of the condition of his thumb to somebody else whose pronouncement upon that matter is to be conclusive. As a practical matter, I ask whether, if we are bound to allow a proof here, it would not be simply opening the door wide to malingering? What possible evidence could the employers lead? If it is the fact that a man has not worked so hard, the employers could not contradict the fact that the man had not turned out so many hutches since the accident. They could get evidence, doubtless, of doctors to say, "We do not believe this man when he says that his thumb is weaker, because we can see it is as good as ever it was." But that would be perfectly needless, because they have got the certificate of the medical July 12, 1912. referee, who, by the statute, is made final upon that matter, to say that that is so. Therefore it seems to me that it would be entirely wrong to allow the workman a proof of the fact that he is getting less wages, when the underlying reason for that fact would be a matter which it was entirely impossible to get at the real truth of, namely, whether his diminution in working capacity was due to his own laziness or not.

¹ Supra, p. 1262.

Not only must the report be read to ascertain what it really means to say, but it must also be remembered that there are accidents and accidents. If the accident is of the sort that occurred in Ball's case,¹ where the man is a one-eyed man, then there is a continuing injury even although the man, in one sense of the word, has recovered. The term "recovery" is, in a way, an ambiguous term. You may have recovered from an accident and yet you may not be exactly the same man as you were before. On the other hand, you may recover from an accident and you may be exactly the same man as you were before—the accident is merely historical. Now, wherever the accident is of such a character as to leave you after immediate recovery what we may call a different sort of man, there is always a question whether in the market your earning capacity is not different. Illustrations of these two cases are given in the House of Lords cases which I have just quoted. Another illustration was given in the case of Rosie v. Mackay,² where there is a sentence in the judgment which I humbly think is precisely in accordance—although it was our decision that was upset in *Duris*³—with what the House of Lords said. In *Rosie v. Mackay*² the principal question was the penny question; but, incidentally, I happened to say something about the accident there. That was a case of rupture. The man had completely recovered from the immediate effects of the rupture and he could work; but the rupture was there—it would never be cured. At any moment, either by carelessness in not wearing a truss or from some other cause, the rupture might become strangulated and give him very severe trouble; and what is more, if he had to answer to an employer as to his physical condition—if he had to confess himself a ruptured man and that he was now wearing a truss—the employer might say, "Well, I don't want you; I would sooner have a man perfectly sound who has not the chance of breaking down with rupture." And accordingly I said this: "The report of the medical referee on the agreed-on remit was conclusive as to the man's physical condition, and that condition was a condition of capacity to do what he had done before the accident. It was not, however, conclusive as to what has been conveniently called his wage-earning capacity, and, in my judgment, it would have been perfectly proper for the workman, had he so wished, to have tendered evidence to show that the wage-earning capacity of a ruptured man was less than the capacity he had before the accident; in other words, that he was not now worth so much in the labour market as he had been, and on that evidence the Sheriff might have come to a conclusion." Well, that was a good proposition in that case, but it is a bad proposition here, because the claimant does not

¹ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

² 1910 S. C. 714.

³ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

July 12, 1912. and cannot aver that the fact that he had in the past an accident to his thumb was such as to incapacitate him in the labour market from getting employment that he otherwise would have got. He does not say there is any employer who, on seeing his thumb, would say, "No, I won't take you." All he says is, "I do not earn as much as I could and did before." If that is not due to his own idleness, it can only be due to his thumb not being as strong as it was ; but he is barred from saying that because he has excluded himself by taking a reference to another person who has conclusively, in terms of the statute, said his thumb is as good as it was before.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

Ld. President.

Accordingly, I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned arbitrator here was right when he ended the compensation and refused further proof.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree with your Lordship. I think that what was decided in the case of *Ball*¹ we may take, as your Lordship takes it, from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor. Now in that case it was alleged that the result of the second accident by which the man was obliged to submit to the entire removal of an eye was that his disfigurement prevented him from obtaining work ; and the ground of the decision stated by the Lord Chancellor is that his injury did not prevent him from being able to work, but it did reduce him to a physical condition which prevented him from getting work suitable in the circumstances. Of course, it remained for the workman to prove that the physical condition of which he complained was due to an injury caused by an accident. That is the assumption of the Lord Chancellor's judgment, and upon that assumption he says if the man, as a consequence of the accident, is reduced to a physical condition which prevents him from getting work, then his earning capacity is so far diminished.

The question, therefore, seems to me, in the application of this case, to be whether we can find that this workman is entitled to prove that his physical condition consequent upon the accident prevents him from getting work. I think the conclusive answer to that is the answer your Lordship has given—that he himself agreed to submit that question to a referee whose deliverance upon it is final and conclusive in terms of the statute. The question to be referred to the referee, according to the terms of the statute, is as to the workman's condition and fitness for employment, specifying where necessary the kind of work, or whether he is unfit for work. To that the referee says he is now quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner. I do not think we can allow that question to be reopened without going directly against the provision that the referee's decision is to be final. The advantage to both workman and employer of this form of procedure is obvious. But at all events when people agree that a question between them shall be settled by the final decision of a referee, they must be bound by his decision when it is given. I quite agree that, if the workman could have said, "Notwithstanding my fitness, the condition to which I have been reduced by the accident is such that people will not give me employment," that would, no doubt, be a good case for inquiry.

¹ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

But he does not say so. I cannot read his statement as meaning that July 12, 1912. in fact he is not able to obtain work. He says he has obtained work. ^{Gray v.} All he says about it is that he has not been able to earn as much, which, ^{Shotts Iron} I presume, means that he is not able to do as much work since the accident ^{Co., Limited.} as before it. That would have been a very material point for him to Lord Kinnear. prove if the question had been still open, but that is just the question which he agreed to submit to the medical referee, and upon which the medical referee's judgment is final.

I am therefore unable to see any ground for differing from the Sheriff-substitute.

LORD JOHNSTON.—The real question in this case is, What is the effect and value of the answer of the medical referee on the points which the schedule provides may be put to him? Upon that point I concur in the judgment of your Lordships, and I would not venture to add anything but that I desire to state my view of the relation of this question to certain decisions in the House of Lords.

The peculiarity of the situation created by these decisions is this: that one of them proceeds in a case where there was no reference to a medical referee: the other proceeds in a case where there was such a reference; and yet they are treated by the House of Lords as if they raised the same question. In the case of Ball,¹ which is the leading case of the two, there had been no reference. Equally in the case of Boag,² decided in the other Division, which was commented on in Ball's case,¹ there had been no reference; and therefore the case of *Ball*¹ may be taken as an implied reversal of the case of Boag.² On the other hand, in the case of *Duris*³ there had been a reference; and yet the same law and the same reasoning was applied to the case of *Duris*³ as to the case of Ball.¹ Therefore one is led to ask how that is to be reconciled. It appears to me that it can only be reconciled in this way, viz., by noting that the medical referee's answer to the reference may be absolute, or it may be qualified; and that where it is qualified, as it certainly was in the case of Duris,³ there is left practically the same situation as if there had been no reference at all. But where, as here, the reply of the medical referee is absolute, the case is different. And there would be no value whatever in the finality clause if the workman was to be entitled, not to explain away a qualification, but to meet by a direct counter the absolute finding of the medical referee.

For these reasons I think that this case raises a totally different question from that which was before the House of Lords in the cases of *Ball*¹ and of Duris,³ and that it is open to us to consider it as such.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I am of the same opinion. The difficulty in the case is as to the construction of the report by the medical referee and what effect is to be given to it. The argument on behalf of the workman was that that report was conclusive so far as regarded the medical aspect of the case, but that there remains over another and further question, with which

¹ [1912] A. C. 496, supra (H. L.) footnote, p. 77.

² 1910 S. C. 51.

³ Supra (H. L.) 74, [1912] A. C. 513.

July 12, 1912. the medical referee could not deal, namely this, whether the man's earning capacity after the accident was as great as it was before. Now, it appears to me that that is not a fair way to deal with the report of the medical referee. I think the effect to be given to the report is that it certifies that the man had recovered his fitness for his work.

Gray v.
Shotts Iron
Co., Limited.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

If there had been in this case any averment on the part of the workman that, notwithstanding the facts being as set out by the medical referee, yet he was left, as the result of the accident, with a misshapen thumb or with some visible external injury which handicapped him, when he went into the labour market, from getting employment on equal terms with his competitors, then that would have raised a different question. But there is no suggestion in this case of anything of that kind. Accordingly, once the report of the medical referee is construed in the way I have indicated, the rest follows as has been said by your Lordship in the chair, and I agree with what your Lordship has said.

THE COURT answered the first question of law in the affirmative and the second question in the negative, and dismissed the appeal.

SIMPSON & MARWICK, W.S.—W. & J. BURNES, W.S.—Agents.

No. 176.

July 12, 1912.

Robertson v.
Wilson.

WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Pursuer.—G. Watt, K.C.—Lippe.
JAMES WATT WILSON, Defender.—Chree, K.C.—A. R. Brown.

Reparation—Negligence—Collision of vehicles—Side road entering main road—Duties of drivers on side road and main road respectively.

While it is the duty of vehicles approaching a main road from a side road to give way to vehicles on the main road, this rule does not absolve vehicles on the main road from the duty of approaching the entrance to the side road with caution.

Macandrew v. Tillard, 1909 S. C. 78, commented on and explained.

1ST DIVISION. WILLIAM ROBERTSON, M.D., Scone, brought an action against J. W. Lord Dewar. Wilson, Perth, concluding for £500 as damages in respect of injuries received by him in a collision between his motor cycle and the defender's motor car.

The case was tried before Lord Dewar, with a jury, on 19th January 1912. The facts of the case are stated in the following passage from the opinion of the Lord President:—"The facts are briefly these. A motor car was proceeding from Perth to Coupar-Angus along the main road. At a certain point on the road a side road, known as Crossford Road, enters the main road on the right hand side at an angle of about 60 degrees. Consequently a person coming from Crossford Road and proceeding to Perth enters the main road at an acutely re-entrant angle. In front of the motor car was a cart which was going in the same direction as the car. At the time the accident happened the motor car had assumed such a position—I suppose with the intention of getting past the cart—as placed it, i.e. the car, considerably to the right of the medium filum of the road, and in fact very near the verge. At that moment a motor cyclist emerged from the cross road on his way to Perth, and a collision followed. In respect of the injury which he thereby sustained the motor cyclist has July 12, 1912. brought the present action against the owner of the car."

Lord Dewar, in his charge, inter alia directed the jury:—"That it was the duty of the pursuer, before he emerged from the side road, to look out for and, if necessary, give way to all traffic on the main road; but there was also a duty on those using the main road to take all reasonable care of traffic coming from the side road." Counsel for the defender thereupon excepted to the portion of this ruling beginning with the word "but." Counsel for the defender further asked his Lordship to direct the jury "that if the jury are satisfied that the pursuer entered the main road from Crossford Road at a period when a collision with the defender's motor car was inevitable, the collision was caused by the fault of the pursuer, who cannot recover damages." Lord Dewar refused to give this direction, whereupon counsel for the defender excepted to this refusal.

Robertson v.
Wilson.

The jury returned a verdict for the pursuer.

The defender presented a bill of exceptions, and, on 5th March 1912, moved for and obtained a rule on the pursuer to show cause why a new trial should not be granted on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, in respect that the pursuer had been guilty of contributory negligence.

On 12th July 1912 counsel were heard before the First Division (with Lord Dewar) on the bill and on the rule.

Argued for the pursuer;—(1) The direction to the jury was correct. The rule laid down in *Macandrew v. Tillard*¹ did not relieve the user of the main road of all duty with regard to traffic approaching by a side road. (2) The question raised in the case was a simple question of fact, and the decision of the jury could not, therefore, easily be set aside. Whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the pursuer depended upon the circumstances of the case²; and the jury were well qualified to decide this point also.

Argued for the defender;—(1) The direction to the jury was inconsistent with the Lord President's statement in *Macandrew v. Tillard*¹ "that where there is any possibility at all of collision it is the business of the person on the side road to give way to the person on the main road," and that the driver of a vehicle on the side road was bound to have it under control in readiness for whatever state of affairs he might find on the main road. The Lord Ordinary was wrong, therefore, in the second branch of the direction which he gave, and he should also have charged the jury in terms of the direction which he had refused to give. (2) The verdict was wrong, as the evidence disclosed contributory negligence on the part of the pursuer, especially in the speed at which he approached the main road.

LORD PRESIDENT.—[After the statement of facts quoted supra].—In order to recover damages the pursuer has to show two things—first, that there was fault on the part of the driver of the car; and second, that there was no contributory negligence on his own part, the onus as to this latter question, however, being upon the other side if he has established the first proposition. In the course of his charge to the jury Lord Dewar gave the following direction: "That it was the duty of the pursuer before he

¹ 1909 S. C. 78.

² Campbell v. Train, 1910 S. C. 556.

July 12, 1912. emerged from the side road to look out for and, if necessary, give way to Robertson v. all traffic on the main road, but"—and here follow the words which give Wilson. rise to the first exception—"there was also a duty on those using the main road to take all reasonable care of traffic coming from the side road." Now, Ld. President. it is clear that if this exception is valid it must be because the proposition which begins with the word "but" is unsound. It is impossible to say that it is so. In support of his argument counsel for the defender cited the case of Macandrew v. Tillard,¹ and especially certain words which I there used, namely, "that where there is any possibility at all of collision it is the business of the person on the side road to give way to the person on the main road." Now, I think no one can read my remarks in that case, and also those of Lord Mackenzie, without seeing that that case does not support the defender's contention, for what I pointed out in that case is this, that while there is a duty on those using the main road towards the traffic on the side road, there is a greater duty on the part of those coming from the side road with regard to traffic on the main road. That case, therefore, in no way supports this exception, for it must be assumed that the Lord Ordinary said all that was necessary regarding the higher duty incumbent on those using the side road.

The second exception is as follows:—"Counsel for the defender further asked the Lord Ordinary to direct the jury 'that if the jury are satisfied that the pursuer entered the main road from Crossford Road at a period when a collision with the defender's motor car was inevitable, the collision was caused by the fault of the pursuer, who cannot recover damages.'" To have given a direction in such terms would, I think, simply have been to mislead the jury. The proposition is expressed in a way which is not only confusing, but is not even a correct use of English, for one cannot conceive of the pursuer entering the main road in the knowledge that a collision was inevitable—it was only upon entering that he became aware that a collision must ensue. The underlying idea of the sentence, however, is clear enough, viz., that the defender's counsel wanted the Lord Ordinary to tell the jury what, we must assume, he had already told them—that where two persons are approaching each other, one on the side road and the other on the main road, and if owing to the direction they are taking—be it with due care on the part of each—they would be bound to meet, it is the person coming from the side road who must give way and not the other. So much for the bill of exceptions.

With regard to the motion for a new trial, there is no doubt that the motor car was on the right-hand side of the medium filum of the road—probably with the intention of getting past the cart—when the collision occurred. But it was for the jury to say whether the driver of the car was in fault in choosing the debouchment of a side road for executing such a manœuvre. It was also for the jury to consider whether the pursuer was or was not guilty of such contributory negligence as to disentitle him to succeed. I do not, of course, mean that there must necessarily be the same degree of contributory negligence as was present in the case of Watson v.
North British Railway Company,² for the degree of caution required must vary with the circumstances of each case. In that connection I would specially refer to what was said by Lord Low in the case of Campbell v. Robertson v. Train,¹ where his Lordship pointed out that what was reasonable care depended very much upon circumstances. Whether the pursuer emerged from Crossford Road with reasonable care and caution, or whether he did so recklessly, was a question of fact for the jury, and they were quite entitled to find, as they did, that on his part there was no contributory negligence.

¹ 1909 S. C. 78.

² (1904) 7 F. 220.

I am therefore of opinion that the bill of exceptions should be repelled, and the motion for a new trial refused.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree with your Lordship on both points. As regards the bill of exceptions, I have only to add that I should have thought the first exception could not be sustained even if that part of the sentence to which it is taken were open to challenge, which I do not consider it to be. If the exception were good the proper direction to the jury would have been that it was the duty of the pursuer to look out for, and give way to, all traffic on the main road, and that there was no corresponding duty of care laid on the defender—for the exception is taken solely to the second branch of the direction quoted in the bill. Now I think if the case had been left to the jury on a statement of the pursuer's duty only and without reference to the defender's duty, the jury would have been misled, not because the law so laid down taken by itself would have been wrong, but because it would have been incomplete—it would be a misstatement of the rule stated by the Lord President in the case of Macandrew v. Tillard.² That rule is that it is the business of those who are on the cross road and going to cross the main road to look out when they enter the main road and to give way to traffic which is coming along the main road, but at the same time that it is certainly the business of persons driving on the main road to approach a crossing with caution. The direction to which exception is taken is entirely in accordance with the law so laid down. The rule laid down in that case applies to the drivers on both roads, and a duty of caution is imposed on the driver on the main road as well as upon the driver on the side road. As regards the second exception, I have no doubt that the direction asked for was properly refused.

On the question of the rule both questions contained in the issue, namely, that of the defender's fault and that of the pursuer's contributory fault, are questions of fact for the jury to decide, and there was ample evidence to justify the verdict if the jury were of that opinion.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I agree with your Lordships. In this case not only was there ample evidence to entitle the jury to arrive at their verdict, but I think that it was a sound verdict. I should have said no more but that I think this case is a valuable corollary to that of Macandrew.¹ In that case when one person was driving along a main road and the other was approaching by a side road, it was held that it was the duty of the latter to give way. That does not mean that the person driving along the main

¹ 1910 S. C. 556.

² 1909 S. C. 78.

July 12, 1912. road is relieved of all duty to the other. On the contrary he also must Robertson v. attend to the safety of the other, although he is entitled to expect that the Wilson. person coming in from the side road will give way. That, however, only Ld. Johnston. applies when there is no other traffic. It assumes that the person on the main road is keeping to his own side so as to leave space for other traffic.
This distinguishes the present case from that of Macandrew,¹ where there was no other traffic. In the present case there was a cart going along the main road in the same direction as the defender; and it was on that account that the defender failed to take proper care for the safety of the pursuer by choosing his opportunity to pass the cart just when the cart was passing the end of the side road. There is a passage in Mr Rollo's * evidence which is practically decisive of the case. He says that the car was travelling at sixteen miles an hour, and was so near to the cart that it could not have stopped behind it. "We were almost on the cart at the time of the collision. Evidently the horse when it heard the noise had made a jump, and our chauffeur had to get past to keep clear, and after we passed he came in front of the cart for a short distance. I shouted to the driver, and it was on my instruction that he passed the cart and stopped where he did.
He was just going to stop when I said, 'Go on.' The car was going at such a speed that it could easily have been stopped in a short distance. I should think it was going at somewhere between sixteen and seventeen miles an hour." He also says: "I remember him (the driver of the cart) saying that his horse was very nearly into us. I said, 'Yes; if we had not gone on a little bit he would have been.' That referred to the instruction I had given to the chauffeur to go on."

The result is to show that the motor car was on the point of passing the cart at such a speed and so driven as to imply fault on the part of the driver and his master as responsible for him. This narrative of the occurrence reveals a state of matters which fully justifies the verdict.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I agree with your Lordship in the chair.

LORD DEWAR.—I also agree.

THE COURT discharged the rule; disallowed the bill of exceptions; refused to grant a new trial; and of consent applied the verdict.

P. MACLAGAN MORRISON, Solicitor—AITKEN & METHVEN, W.S.—Agents.

¹ 1909 S. C. 78.

* A witness for the defence who was in the motor car with the defender on the occasion of the collision.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL OF THE COUNTY OF STIRLING AND OTHERS, No. 177.
Pursuers (Reclaimers).—Constable, K.C.—D. P. Fleming.

THE PROVOST, MAGISTRATES, AND COUNCILLORS OF THE BURGH OF FALKIRK, Defenders (Respondents).—D.-F. Dickson—Hon. W. Watson. July 12, 1912.
Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

Title to Sue—Ratepayer—Burgh—Rates and assessments—Declarator at instance of individual ratepayers that assessments by magistrates illegal.

The magistrates of a burgh, in fixing the burgh general assessment for the year, included in their estimate a sum for defraying a portion of the expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order for the extension of the burgh boundaries. The remainder of the expenses they proposed to defray out of the assessments for the following years.

Held that certain individual ratepayers, who had paid their assessments for the year, had a good title to bring an action against the magistrates for declarator that the defenders had no right to levy or exact rates from the pursuers for the purpose of paying these expenses.

Ewing v. Glasgow Commissioners of Police, (1837) 15 S. 389, (1839) M'L. & Rob. App. 847, distinguished.

Burgh—Powers of magistrates—Rates and assessments—Right of magistrates to levy rates to pay expenses of provisional order.

Held that the magistrates of a burgh had no right at common law or under statute to levy rates in the burgh to be applied towards the payment of expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order for, inter alia, the extension of the burgh boundaries.

ON 14th January 1912 the County Council of the county of Stirling, the Carron Company, William Forbes of Callendar, and others, owners of property and ratepayers within the burgh of Falkirk, brought an action against the Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of the burgh of Falkirk, in which they craved the Court, in the first place, to declare "that the defenders have no power, and are not entitled under the Burgh Police (Scotland) Acts, 1892 to 1903, the Town-Councils (Scotland) Acts, 1900 and 1903, or any other statutes, or at common law, to levy or exact any rates from the pursuers or other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk to be applied, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of any expenses incurred by the defenders in the promotion of or in connection with an application made by them in the session of 1911 to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order to extend the boundaries of the said burgh, to dissolve the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trustees, and transfer the powers and undertaking of the said trustees to the defenders, and for other purposes, or to apply any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected by them under the authority of the foresaid statutes during the assessment year 1911-1912, or in any future year, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the aforesaid expenses"; and in the second place, to interdict them "from levying or exacting from the pursuers or other ratepayers in the said burgh any rates under the said Burgh Police (Scotland) Acts, 1892 to 1903, or the Town-Councils (Scotland) Acts, 1900 and 1903, or otherwise, to be applied, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the fore-

1st DIVISION.
Lord Cullen.

July 12, 1912.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

said expenses, and from applying any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected by them under the authority of the said last-mentioned statutes, or otherwise, during the assessment year 1911-12, or in any future year, directly or indirectly in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the aforesaid expenses."

There were also conclusions in the summons relating to assessments levied under the Falkirk Corporation Gas Acts, which were not ultimately insisted in and with which this report is not concerned.

The facts out of which the action arose were as follows:—

In 1911 the Magistrates of Falkirk made an unsuccessful application for a provisional order for the extension of the boundaries of the burgh and the dissolution of the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust, and its transference to the Magistrates of Falkirk. The expenses incurred by them amounted to over £4000, which they paid to the parties entitled thereto by a draft on the general bank account of the burgh. In September they resolved to raise the amount of these expenses out of the general rates levied by them under their statutory powers on the owners and occupiers of property within the burgh, their intention being to spread the burden over the rates of the next few years. Accordingly the assessment of rates for the year 1911-1912 included a sum which was to be devoted to this purpose. A portion of these rates was collected prior to the raising of the present action on 14th January 1912, and the remainder subsequently to that date. The pursuers in the present action all paid their assessments timeously, with, in one case, a special reservation of a right to recover.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The defenders having no power to levy any burgh assessments or to apply the proceeds of any burgh assessments for the purpose of defraying the expenses of promoting the said provisional order, the pursuers are entitled to decree in terms of the . . . first conclusion of the summons. (3) The proposed application by the defenders of the burgh assessments levied by them . . . in or towards payment of the said expenses being ultra vires and illegal, the pursuers are entitled to interdict in terms of the second conclusion of the summons.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuers having no title to sue the present action, the action should be dismissed. (2) The action is incompetent. (5) The actings of the defenders complained of being legal and intra vires, the defenders should be assoilzied.

On 10th April 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.*

* "OPINION.—In 1911 the defenders, who are the Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of the royal burgh of Falkirk, made application to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order, the objects of which were to obtain a large extension of the boundaries of the burgh and to transfer to the defenders the powers and undertaking of the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust. The application was opposed, and, after inquiry, was thrown out. The expenses incurred by the defenders exceeded £4000.

"The question on the merits intended to be raised in this action is whether it is lawful for the defenders to provide the amount of these expenses out of the burgh general assessment. The pursuers are owners of property and ratepayers within the burgh for the year 1911-12. They conclude (first) for declarator that the defenders have no power under their statutes or at common law 'to levy or exact rates from the pursuers or

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First July 12, 1912. Division on 11th, 12th, and 18th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—On the question of Title.—The pursuers had a good title to sue. The Lord Ordinary had come to the conclusion that they had not, because of the decision in Ewing v. Glasgow Police Commissioners.¹ The soundness of that decision had in some respects been doubted,² but, in any event, the circumstances of that case were quite different from the present. In that case the pursuers were not vindicating their own individual patrimonial interests, but, in an actio popularis, were attacking the magistrates for malversation. Here, on the other hand, each of the pursuers had a patrimonial interest to vindicate. Each had paid the rates for the current year, and each would have to pay rates in the years immediately to come. The right of individual ratepayers to sue actions as to matters in which they, along with the rest of the community in which they

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk to be applied directly or indirectly 'towards payment of said expenses, 'or to apply any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected, by them under the authority of the foresaid statutes during the assessment year 1911-12, or in any future year, directly or indirectly in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the aforesaid expenses.' There is a second declaratory conclusion relating to assessments under the Falkirk Corporation Gas Acts, but it is now out of the case. The pursuers also conclude for interdict in terms corresponding to their declaratory conclusions, but at the hearing their counsel intimated that he did not press for interdict. Accordingly, the scope of the action is now limited to the first declaratory conclusion summarised above.

"Two questions have been argued: (1) Whether the pursuers have a sufficient title to insist in a declarator in such terms as they ask; and (2) on the merits, whether the defenders have power under the burgh statutes or at common law to provide the amount of the said expenses out of the burgh general assessment.

"As regards the first of these questions, it will be observed that the pursuers' declarator is not limited to such interest as they individually may have in the matter, and is not designed merely for the protection of themselves and their own properties from the exaction of an alleged illegal assessment. It extends to the interest of the whole ratepayers of the burgh. Further, it is not limited to the year 1911-12, quoad which the pursuers are within the body of burgh ratepayers, but extends to future years during which they may not be ratepayers. As regards the year 1911-12, the position is that the pursuers have paid the amounts of the assessment levied on them. No question of repetition is involved, so as to give the pursuers any direct and immediate patrimonial interest in the result of the suit. The assessment for 1911-12 was ex facie imposed and levied in a regular manner. The defenders have collected the amount of it. And the money so levied being thus in the coffers of the burgh, the question, so far, relates to an apprehended application of part of it to purposes which the pursuers allege are not in accordance with a due administration of the affairs of the burgh. As no question of repetition is involved, the effect of a decree decisive of the legality or illegality of an application by the defenders of part of the 1911-12 assessment towards particular objects will not directly benefit the pursuers. The money in question, if it cannot legally be applied to these objects, will remain in the hands of

¹ (1837) 15 S. 389, aff. (1839) M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

² Conn v. Corporation of Renfrew, (1906) 8 F. 905, Lord Kyllachy, at p. 911.

July 12, 1912.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

said expenses, and from applying any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected by them under the authority of the said last-mentioned statutes, or otherwise, during the assessment year 1911-12, or in any future year, directly or indirectly in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the aforesaid expenses."

There were also conclusions in the summons relating to assessments levied under the Falkirk Corporation Gas Acts, which were not ultimately insisted in and with which this report is not concerned.

The facts out of which the action arose were as follows:—

In 1911 the Magistrates of Falkirk made an unsuccessful application for a provisional order for the extension of the boundaries of the burgh and the dissolution of the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust, and its transference to the Magistrates of Falkirk. The expenses incurred by them amounted to over £4000, which they paid to the parties entitled thereto by a draft on the general bank account of the burgh. In September they resolved to raise the amount of these expenses out of the general rates levied by them under their statutory powers on the owners and occupiers of property within the burgh, their intention being to spread the burden over the rates of the next few years. Accordingly the assessment of rates for the year 1911-1912 included a sum which was to be devoted to this purpose. A portion of these rates was collected prior to the raising of the present action on 14th January 1912, and the remainder subsequently to that date. The pursuers in the present action all paid their assessments timeously, with, in one case, a special reservation of a right to recover.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The defenders having no power to levy any burgh assessments or to apply the proceeds of any burgh assessments for the purpose of defraying the expenses of promoting the said provisional order, the pursuers are entitled to decree in terms of the . . . first conclusion of the summons. (3) The proposed application by the defenders of the burgh assessments levied by them . . . in or towards payment of the said expenses being ultra vires and illegal, the pursuers are entitled to interdict in terms of the second conclusion of the summons.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuers having no title to sue the present action, the action should be dismissed. (2) The action is incompetent. (5) The actings of the defenders complained of being legal and intra vires, the defenders should be assolized.

On 10th April 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.*

* "OPINION.—In 1911 the defenders, who are the Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of the royal burgh of Falkirk, made application to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order, the objects of which were to obtain a large extension of the boundaries of the burgh and to transfer to the defenders the powers and undertaking of the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust. The application was opposed, and, after inquiry, was thrown out. The expenses incurred by the defenders exceeded £4000.

"The question on the merits intended to be raised in this action is whether it is lawful for the defenders to provide the amount of these expenses out of the burgh general assessment. The pursuers are owners of property and ratepayers within the burgh for the year 1911-12. They conclude (first) for declarator that the defenders have no power under their statutes or at common law 'to levy or exact rates from the pursuers or

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First July 12, 1912. Division on 11th, 12th, and 18th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—On the question of Title.—The pursuers had a good title to sue. The Lord Ordinary had come to the conclusion that they had not, because of the decision in Ewing v. Glasgow Police Commissioners.¹ The soundness of that decision had in some respects been doubted,² but, in any event, the circumstances of that case were quite different from the present. In that case the pursuers were not vindicating their own individual patrimonial interests, but, in an actio popularis, were attacking the magistrates for malversation. Here, on the other hand, each of the pursuers had a patrimonial interest to vindicate. Each had paid the rates for the current year, and each would have to pay rates in the years immediately to come. The right of individual ratepayers to sue actions as to matters in which they, along with the rest of the community in which they

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk to be applied directly or indirectly 'towards payment of said expenses, 'or to apply any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected, by them under the authority of the foresaid statutes during the assessment year 1911-12, or in any future year, directly or indirectly in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the aforesaid expenses.' There is a second declaratory conclusion relating to assessments under the Falkirk Corporation Gas Acts, but it is now out of the case. The pursuers also conclude for interdict in terms corresponding to their declaratory conclusions, but at the hearing their counsel intimated that he did not press for interdict. Accordingly, the scope of the action is now limited to the first declaratory conclusion summarised above.

"Two questions have been argued: (1) Whether the pursuers have a sufficient title to insist in a declarator in such terms as they ask; and (2) on the merits, whether the defenders have power under the burgh statutes or at common law to provide the amount of the said expenses out of the burgh general assessment.

"As regards the first of these questions, it will be observed that the pursuers' declarator is not limited to such interest as they individually may have in the matter, and is not designed merely for the protection of themselves and their own properties from the exaction of an alleged illegal assessment. It extends to the interest of the whole ratepayers of the burgh. Further, it is not limited to the year 1911-12, quoad which the pursuers are within the body of burgh ratepayers, but extends to future years during which they may not be ratepayers. As regards the year 1911-12, the position is that the pursuers have paid the amounts of the assessment levied on them. No question of repetition is involved, so as to give the pursuers any direct and immediate patrimonial interest in the result of the suit. The assessment for 1911-12 was ex facie imposed and levied in a regular manner. The defenders have collected the amount of it. And the money so levied being thus in the coffers of the burgh, the question, so far, relates to an apprehended application of part of it to purposes which the pursuers allege are not in accordance with a due administration of the affairs of the burgh. As no question of repetition is involved, the effect of a decree decisive of the legality or illegality of an application by the defenders of part of the 1911-12 assessment towards particular objects will not directly benefit the pursuers. The money in question, if it cannot legally be applied to these objects, will remain in the hands of

¹ (1837) 15 S. 389, aff. (1839) M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

² Conn v. Corporation of Renfrew, (1906) 8 F. 905, Lord Kyllachy, at p. 911.

July 12, 1912.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

lived, were interested had often been recognised,¹ even where such actions were at the instance of a single individual.² The defenders further challenged the form of action adopted by the pursuers, contending that the only competent form of action was suspension. This contention was entirely without foundation. It might be that, where the wrong complained of was a thing of the past, suspension would be the appropriate action,³ but where, as here, the wrong was an existing one, which was certain to be repeated in the future, an action of declarator with, if desired, a conclusion for interdict was the recognised remedy,⁴ even if the illegal act was merely threatened.⁵ It was, moreover, absurd to contend that the situation was in any way affected by the fact that the creditors had already been paid by drafts on the bank account of the burgh; and the suggestion that the proper defenders to the action would have been the persons who drew these cheques was also obviously untenable, if it was borne in mind that the defenders as part of the fruits of an assessment regularly imposed and paid. And therefore the pursuers will not in any way obtain any patrimonial benefit. The result, on this view, might be to diminish the defenders' estimates and lighten the amount of the burgh assessment for a future year. But it is impossible to say that this will benefit the pursuers. For they may not continue to be ratepayers within the burgh.

"Such being the conditions under which the pursuers' proposed declarator falls to be considered, it appears to me that, as the defenders contend, the principle of the decision in the case of Ewing v. Glasgow Commissioners of Police (15 Shaw 389, Maclean & Robinson's App. 847) applies; and that the pursuers have not set forth such 'a direct or immediate interest in the result' as to sustain their title to insist in the action. The pursuers might have brought a suspension of the assessment so far as sought to be levied from them respectively, as was done in the recent case of the Leith Dock Commissioners v. Magistrates of Leith (25 R. 126, 1 F. (H. L.) 65). The burgh Acts further provide them with the remedy of comparing at the audit of the burgh accounts. I am aware that in more than one case it has been said that an action of declarator is a form of remedy competent to a ratepayer. But it is not any declarator that is so competent. And, as the conclusions of the present summons stand, and no amendment has been proposed, it appears to me that it would be inconsistent with the case of Ewing to give effect to them.

"I am accordingly of opinion that the defenders' first plea in law falls to be sustained.

"As, however, the question on the merits was very fully argued, and as it is one of some general importance, I think it right that I should express my view upon it. I am of opinion that the defenders are not empowered by the burgh statutes or by common law to assess for the expenses of their unsuccessful attempt to extend the area of the burgh and, incidentally thereto, to obtain a transfer to themselves of the undertaking of Falkirk and

¹ Cowan and Mackenzie v. Law, &c., (1872) 10 Macph. 578; Wakefield v. Commissioners of Supply of Renfrew, (1878) 6 R. 259; Blackie, &c., v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, (1884) 11 R. 783, (1886) 13 R. (H. L.) 78.

² Grahame v. Magistrates of Kirkcaldy, (1882) 9 R. (H. L.) 91.

³ Leith Dock Commissioners v. Magistrates of Leith, (1897) 25 R. 126, (1899) 1 F. (H. L.) 65.

⁴ Mackay's Manual of Practice, pp. 139 and 375; British Fisheries Society v. Magistrates of Wick, (1872) 10 Macph. 426; Hedde v. Magistrates of Leith, (1897) 24 R. 662.

⁵ Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Co. v. Meek, (1849) 12 D. 153, at p. 158; Scottish North-Eastern Railway v. Gardiner, (1864) 2 Macph. 537.

one of the objects of the action was the protection of the pursuers in July 12, 1912. the future, and that the only persons who had the right of imposing rates, and against whose actings accordingly protection was required, were the Magistrates. If there was any doubt as to the competency of the action quoad the interests of the other ratepayers, the pursuers would not press for inclusion in the declarator of the words "or other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk," or of the concluding words "or to apply any part of the rates," &c. On the Merits.—The Magistrates were not entitled to assess for these expenses. They were only entitled to use their statutory powers of assessment to provide funds for carrying out the administrative purposes of the statutes which authorised these assessments.¹ Among these purposes the promotion of a provisional order for the extension of burgh boundaries was not included. It was not included in the Burgh Police (Scotland) Acts of 1892² or 1903,³ nor the Town-Councils

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

Larbert Water Trust. So far as the statutes are concerned, it appears to me that the principles laid down in the well-known case of Cowan v. Law, 10 Macph. 578, apply. The defenders are only entitled to use their statutory powers of assessment to provide funds for carrying out the administrative purposes of the statutes which authorise these assessments. Under the Burgh Police Act of 1892, the extension of a burgh is, to a defined extent, included within the sphere of burgh administration. It is so, however, only under certain statutory conditions. Further, the method of procedure to be followed—an application to the Sheriff of the county—is prescribed. Now the defenders' proceedings in connection with the proposed extension of the burgh were quite outwith these provisions of the statute and, therefore, not sanctioned by it as being within its administrative purposes. The defenders, however, appeal to sections 45 and 46 of the Act of 1892. These relate to certain kinds of special powers, outwith the normal powers of administration conferred by the Act, and provide procedure for obtaining them by way of an application to the Secretary for Scotland for a provisional order. They do not mention the subject of burgh extension; and, looking to the kinds of powers which are specially enumerated, and also to the fact that, as I have mentioned, burgh extension is made matter of express provision in an earlier compartment of the Act, I am inclined to think that the special powers contemplated in sections 45 and 46 do not include an extension of the burgh of such a nature as is not provided for under sections 11 to 14 of the Act. But, be it otherwise, section 46 assigns to the Secretary for Scotland the discretionary power of authorising a charge on the burgh assessments of the expense of proceedings for obtaining such special powers as sections 45 and 46 contemplate. And the defenders' proceedings here in question for the extension of the burgh of Falkirk were not taken under these sections.

"Reference was made to certain legislative enactments subsequent to the Act of 1892, and, in particular, to sections 11 and 16 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899. But it appears to me that these do not materially affect the issue, and that the question continues to be whether proceedings for the extension of a burgh, such as were here taken by the defenders, were within their normal administrative powers under the Act of 1892, for the expense of which they are entitled to assess the ratepayers within the burgh as for the purposes of the Act. In my opinion this question falls to be answered in the negative.

"The defenders submitted an argument to the effect that as they are the administrators of a royal burgh, and thus not merely administrators for ¹ Cowan and Mackenzie v. Law, 10 Macph. 578.

² 55 and 56 Vict. cap. 55.

³ 3 Edw. VII. cap. 33.

July 12, 1912.
 Stirling
 County
 Council v.
 Magistrates
 of Falkirk.

(Scotland) Act, 1900.¹ It was true that burgh extension was, in the Act of 1892, regarded as being within the sphere of burgh administration, but there the method of procedure was specified, viz., an application to the Sheriff of the county.² The defenders, however, relied on sections 45 and 46. These sections, it was true, provided for procedure by provisional order in certain expressly specified matters, but among them burgh extension was not included. Further, the provisional orders there provided for were to be applied for to the Secretary for Scotland according to a form of procedure which had not been complied with by the defenders. The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899,³ did not affect the matter, as it did not profess to deal with the question of the funds out of which Town-Councils might pay provisional order expenses. The fact that County Councils required a special statutory enactment in order to make the promotion and opposition of bills in Parliament special county purposes, the expenses of which might be defrayed in the ordinary way, told against and not in favour of the defenders. The fact, too, that the burgh of Falkirk was a barony burgh was quite immaterial. The defenders argued that, the burgh being a barony, they had powers of administration over and beyond those conferred by the Burgh Police Acts on ordinary burghs. That might be true if the barony burgh possessed a common good, so far as regarded the administration of the common good, but did not affect the fact that the defenders' powers of assessment were statutory and could only be used for statutory purposes. The fact that the immediate purpose of the assessment was in a sense legitimate, viz., the repayment of a debt due by the burgh to the bank on its current account, was obviously quite immaterial.⁴

Argued for the respondents;—On the question of Title.—The pursuers had no title to sue the present action. The action was an actio popularis at the instance of one or two ratepayers, the object of which was to call the Magistrates to account for their alleged illegal proceedings, and it had been settled in the case of *Ewing*⁵ that such an action was incompetent. Apart from the fact that the declarator was professedly on behalf of all the ratepayers, the pursuers had no personal defined statutory purposes, they fall to be regarded as having wider powers in regard to such a matter as burgh extension than the burgh statutes confer. This may be true, and it may follow that, where a burgh possesses a common good the disposal of which is not regulated by statute, it may be lawful for the corporation to defray out of the common good the cost of such an attempt at burgh extension as was in this case unsuccessfully essayed by the defenders. I express no opinion on this question, which is not raised for determination. The actual question at issue relates to the purposes for which the defenders may lawfully exercise their statutory powers of assessment. These are limited to providing funds for the statutory purposes. And, as I have said, the attempted extension of the burgh here in question does not, in my opinion, fall within these purposes."

¹ 63 and 64 Vict. cap. 49.

² Secs. 11 and 12.

³ 62 and 63 Vict. cap. 47, secs. 11 and 16.

⁴ The case of Lang v. Magistrates of Selkirk, (1748) M. 2515, was also referred to.

⁵ 15 S. 839, M'L. & Rob. App. 847; see also Magistrates of Lauder v. Spence, (1821) 1 S. 17; Burgesses of Inverury v. The Magistrates, Dec. 14, 1820, F. C.; Trinity House of Leith v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, (1829) 7 S. 374.

patrimonial interest in the action. Their possible interest in future years could not be considered, as it could not be taken for a fact in this case that they would continue to be ratepayers and, as they did not now ask repetition of the rates which they had already paid, they could derive no pecuniary benefit from success in the action, and pecuniary benefit was the test of patrimonial interest. The proper course for them to have adopted was either that each for himself should have brought a suspension of the assessment imposed on him,¹ or else that they should have taken the remedy provided by the Burgh Police Acts and appeared at the audit of the burgh accounts and stated their objections. In no view could a declarator be used for the purpose of determining the legality of future assessments.² Further, and in any view, the persons who had done the wrong, and who ought to have been sued, were the persons who had actually paid away the money, and not the present defenders. The expenses, moreover, had in fact been already paid out of the bank account, whereas the pursuers' action was based on the assumption that the expenses had not been paid. Cowan and Mackenzie v. Law,³ on which the pursuers founded, was distinguishable in that there the question of title was not raised and the funds were still extant, whereas in the present case they had been spent. Further in that case the individual wrongdoers and not the trustees were the parties sued, and the case of *Ewing*⁴ had not been cited. On the Merits.—The defenders were entitled to defray the expenses in question out of the rates, on the broad ground that they were incurred in the proper administration of the affairs of the burgh. Moreover, the Burgh Police Act, 1892, authorised the promotion of provisional orders by the magistrates of burghs,⁵ and thereby made the promotion of such orders one of the "purposes" of the Act for which the magistrates were empowered to levy assessments.⁶ The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1889, contained sections⁷ which were explicable upon no other hypothesis, and the Town-Councils Act, 1900,⁸ conferred on the magistrates of all burghs the very widest powers. In this connection it should not be forgotten that the defenders were administrators of a barony burgh and so had wider powers than those conferred by the burgh statutes. In any view it could hardly be denied that rates might be levied to repay the bank which had advanced the money in reliance on the financial stability of the burgh.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD MACKENZIE.—The pursuers in this case are owners of property and ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk, and the defenders are the Provost, Magistrates, and Council of the burgh of Falkirk. The purpose of the action is to determine whether it is lawful for the defenders to provide, out ¹ Leith Dock Commissioners v. Magistrates of Leith, 25 R. 126, 1 F. (H. L.) 65; Parochial Board of Bothwell v. Pearson, (1873) 11 Macph. 399.

² Allgemeine Deutsche Credit Anstalt v. Scottish Amicable Life Assurance Society, 1908 S. C. 33; Cuthbert v. Cuthbert's Trustees, 1908 S. C. 967.

³ 10 Macph. 578.

⁴ M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

⁵ Secs. 45 and 46.

⁶ Secs. 55 (3) and 59.

⁷ Secs. 11 and 16.

⁸ Sec. 7.

July 12, 1912.
 Stirling
 County
 Council v.
 Magistrates
 of Falkirk.

Lord Mac-
 kenzie.

of the burgh general assessment, for the expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order to extend the boundaries of the burgh and to transfer to the defenders the undertaking of the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust. That provisional order was opposed, and was thrown out, and the expenses which were incurred by the defenders amounted to over £4000. The conclusions of the action are for declarator and interdict. The conclusion for interdict was not pressed; and, accordingly, the question is whether the pursuers are entitled to get a decree of declarator and, if so, to what extent.

The case is in a somewhat different position, as regards the argument submitted, from that in which it was before the Lord Ordinary, because in this Court the pursuers did not insist upon their right to get a declarator that the defenders are not entitled to levy or exact rates from "other rate-payers," the pursuers' counsel recognising that, if that declarator were insisted in, this would be a popularis actio, and their position would conflict with the decision in Ewing's case.¹ Nor did the pursuers' counsel see their way to maintain that they were entitled to declarator that the defenders were not entitled to apply "any part of the rates" towards payment of the expenses. And, accordingly, the way in which the case comes before your Lordships is this, that all that the pursuers seek to resist is the proposed imposition upon them of any rates which are to be applied directly or indirectly in or towards payment in whole or in part of the expenses incurred by the defenders in connection with the provisional order. The question is whether that is a demand that they have a title to insist in.

The Lord Ordinary's view is that they have no title, and that view proceeds upon the decision, in the House of Lords, in the case of Ewing v. Glasgow Commissioners of Police.¹ The opinion of the Lord Ordinary is that what the pursuers are here attempting to do is not to vindicate a patrimonial right. If it be the case that the pursuers here have a direct patrimonial interest in the action to the extent to which they now insist in it, then the case of *Ewing*¹ will not apply, for in that case it was recognised, both in the Court of Session and also in the House of Lords, that an individual patrimonial interest is enough to entitle a pursuer to object to the imposition of an illegal tax. In Ewing's case¹ the Court of Session and the House of Lords extended the law laid down in previous cases, such as Inverury,² that private parties have no right to bring an action against the magistrates of a burgh in relation to matters connected with the common good. If such an action is to be brought, it must be brought at the instance of the Crown. In order to understand what was decided in Ewing,¹ it is necessary to have in view the fact that all the cases that were referred to by the Lord Chancellor, in the House of Lords, were cases dealing with common good in royal burghs. Ewing's case¹ extended the principle to the case of police funds raised by assessment which are under the administration of a town-council as police commissioners. This is pointed out by Lord Kyllachy in the case of Conn.³

If the action is not for the purpose of preventing malversation, but for the purpose of protecting a direct patrimonial interest, then the case of July 12, 1912.

¹ 15 S. 389, M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

² Dec. 14, 1820 F. C.

³ 8 F. 905.

*Ewing*¹ is not an authority against the pursuers insisting in it. The conclusion in Ewing's case¹ brings out quite clearly what the meaning of the decision was, because there was no conclusion there which would have protected the pocket of the pursuers. The conclusion was to have the defenders ordained to pay back into the funds of the police establishment money which, it was said, was being diverted from those funds. Accordingly, I think, when the modifications in the demand which is now made are taken into account, a great deal of the difficulty which the Lord Ordinary had is removed.

The point is made against the pursuers by the defenders that they have paid the assessments for the year 1911-12. But one of them—the County Council—paid under reservation of a claim for repayment; and the question raised in this case is not limited to the application of the assessments of one year, it is whether the defenders are right in the position which they have taken up, under which they propose to devote the burgh general assessment to liquidate this debt by instalments in future years. That raises a question which will directly affect the pecuniary interests of the pursuers. It is plain on the facts that that is what the defenders propose to do, because at a meeting on the 28th September 1911, they approved and adopted a minute of the finance committee, held two days before, to the effect that “it was agreed to defray the expense partly out of the rates levied by the defenders under their statutory powers from the owners and occupiers of property within the burgh.” And then there is a further part of the minute with regard to the payment of part of the expenses out of the gas assessment, a proposal which has now been dropped. The averment of the pursuers is not only that the defenders’ intention is to defray the expense to the extent of £1000 out of the burgh rates collected within the current year, but that they intend to defray the balance of the expense in a similar way in future years. That raises sharply the question whether they are entitled so to deal with the assessment. If they levy rates and apply them to that purpose, they must come out of the pocket of the pursuers, because I cannot regard as of serious importance in this case the suggestion that it is possible they may part with their property in the burgh.

The defenders further contended that there is only one way in which a party in a burgh on whom an assessment is imposed can protect himself, and that is by suspension and interdict. I think it is clear, on the authorities, that suspension and interdict is not the only remedy which is open to a person who is threatened in this way. I do not require to refer to any other authority than the opinion of Lord Watson in the case of Grahame.² It is there made clear that, when a person has an individual right, he can have a declarator in order to ascertain what that right is. The authorities cited by the defenders were cases in which the Court refused to decide hypothetical cases. The resolution of the defenders at their meeting of 28th September 1911 raised the question on which a decision is now sought. It was then agreed to defray these expenses out of rates to be paid by the

¹ 15 S. 389, M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

² 9 R. (H. L.) 91.

July 12, 1912.
Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

pursuers. The circumstances are thus different from those in Bothwell,¹ which was urged as an authority by the defenders. The two cases in 1908—*Allgemeine Deutsche Credit Anstalt*² and *Cuthbert*³—were premature declarators. For an instance of cases where a declarator was granted I refer to the case of *Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway v. Meek*⁴ and the Scottish North-Eastern Company v. Gardiner.⁵ Opinions were expressed in favour of trying such questions by way of declarator in the cases of the *British Fisheries Societies*⁶ and Heddle.⁷ Accordingly, I do not consider that the argument founded upon this being an inappropriate form of action is sound.

Another point was argued. It is said the whole of this sum of £4182, 17s. 2d. has been paid to the original creditors. Their debt is discharged; and therefore, the argument is, you cannot bring an action against the Magistrates in order to get back that money. It is no longer the original creditors who are to get the money; it is the bank. The date at which the whole of the creditors are said to have been paid was 26th October 1911. I am altogether unable to follow that argument. If what the defenders propose to do is illegal it obviously is out of the question to allow them, by borrowing money and paying it away, to say that now the matter is closed. The fact that cheques were drawn upon their bank account, and that these were cashed, and that the original creditors discharged their claims, cannot alter the true position of parties. It is at this point that another argument was used—that the wrong parties were being sued. It was maintained that those who had drawn the cheques are the people who ought to be sued. But the pursuers in this action seek to have it declared that the Magistrates of Falkirk are not entitled to take, in future years, rates from them for the purpose of replacing money that has been applied in paying the expenses of this unsuccessful bill. The only persons you could call in order to obtain complete protection is the body who impose the assessments.

The pursuers, in my opinion, have a title to insist in the action. On the merits there is nothing to be added to what is said by the Lord Ordinary. There is no answer to the pursuers' contention. Once it is decided that the pursuers have a title, the necessary result seems to me to be that the whole pleas of the defenders ought to be repelled.

There is no doubt that the defenders have been acting in perfect good faith, and that leads me to make the suggestion to your Lordships that, in a case of this kind, instead of proceeding at once to pronounce a decree of declarator, it might be appropriate, in order to give the defenders an opportunity of considering what they should do in view of the decision of the Court, to pronounce findings:—that the defenders have no power and are not entitled, at common law or under statute, to levy or exact any rates in the burgh of Falkirk from the pursuers to be applied, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment, in whole or in part, of the expenses incurred by the Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of the said burgh in the unsuccessful promotion of the provisional order referred to on record.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I concur in the opinion which has just been delivered.

¹ 11 Macph. 399.

² 1908 S. C. 33.

³ 1908 S. C. 967.

⁴ 12 D. 153.

⁵ 2 Macph. 537.

⁶ 10 Macph. 426.

⁷ 24 R. 662.

To begin at the other end—Were the defenders here entitled to raise a July 12, 1912. general assessment for the purpose of paying the bill which they had incurred by the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order? Upon that question there has really been no serious argument. After all, the inhabitants of Falkirk are only liable to be assessed for the purposes for which, and in the way in which, the statute says they may be assessed, and as soon as you get outside these purposes the assessment becomes simply and purely illegal. Therefore, when that is once settled, good faith has really very little, or nothing, to do with the legal question. It comes to this that, if what are called the preliminary defences of the defenders here are right, there is no malversation of statutory funds raised by assessment that a set of burgh magistrates could carry through which might not be successfully defended—in this sense that, according to the defenders' argument, no remedy could be obtained in this Court. I put it to Mr Watson several times during the debate that his arguments, especially his argument about payment to the bank, would have been equally good or equally bad if, instead of the money having been taken for the purpose of paying the expenses of this unsuccessful provisional order, it had been taken by the Magistrates in order to allow themselves a trip to Monte Carlo. According to Mr Watson's argument all you have got to do is, not to take the money directly out of the coffers of the town, but to borrow the money from the bank. And then, says he triumphantly, the person now to be repaid is the honest bank, which must get back the money it has lent. I am loath to suppose that our justice has come to that; and accordingly I do not think that the mere fact that the Magistrates here, instead of waiting until they got the assessment and then paying the money out of the assessment, first passed a cheque upon their general account in the bank and took the money in that way, can possibly make any difference.

The only other remark I want to make is that I agree with Lord Mackenzie's view of what was decided by the House of Lords in Ewing.¹ What was decided there was, in the first place, that the object of the action being to make the Magistrates restore a sum to the coffers of the town which they had improperly diverted, such an action was an actio popularis—and, secondly, that individual parties had no title to follow it forth. But where the action is at the instance of a man who says that you are telling him that you are assessing him for a purpose which is not within the powers of assessment of your statute, then he certainly and undoubtedly has a good cause of action.

I am of opinion therefore with Lord Mackenzie that we can give a remedy; and I think, in order to bring the two cases * which are now before us into line, there is no objection to making the findings which he suggests at this time. But assuredly it will further result that, if the town do not choose to pay attention to the findings that have been pronounced against them, I do not think we shall be so impotent as not to find a personal remedy. It is for the town to get out of this trouble into which they have

¹ 15 S. 389, M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

* The other case referred to is Farquhar & Gill v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, reported infra, p. 1294.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.
Ld. President.

July 12, 1912. fallen. If they have no common good, and in the case of Falkirk I should not suppose they had, the sooner they raise action against the persons who misused their funds the better, otherwise they will certainly find themselves before long subject to the penal consequences of an interdict.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

LORD KINNEAR.—I concur.

LORD JOHNSTON.—The defenders in this case, the Magistrates of Falkirk, promoted unsuccessfully a provisional order in 1911 for extension of the burgh boundaries and acquisition of the undertaking of the local water trust, and in this unsuccessful promotion incurred expenses to the extent of over £4000. On 28th September 1911 they resolved to defray these expenses out of the general rates levied by them under their statutory powers from the owners and occupiers of property within the burgh. It may be taken as admitted that the burgh general assessment for the year was laid on in September; that it was in course of collection during the winter 1911-12, a portion having been collected prior to the raising of this action on 14th January 1912, and a portion subsequently to that date; that the actual accounts incurred, and amounting to over £4000, have de facto been paid by drafts on the general bank account of the burgh; also that the Council, before the raising of this action, had resolved to provide for a portion of the expenses in question out of the assessment of the year 1911-12, and had estimated and assessed accordingly, but had resolved to postpone the provision for the remainder of the sum in question, to be spread over future years. Three ratepayers, two who are owners and occupiers and one who is an owner only, raise this process to challenge the legality of the action of the Town-Council. It is admitted that all have paid their assessments for the year, though one has done so under special reservation of the right to recover.

The Lord Ordinary has indicated the opinion that the action of the Council is ultra vires, and in this, in common, I understand, with your Lordships, I agree. But the Lord Ordinary, holding himself bound by the decision in Ewing v. Glasgow Commissioners of Police,¹ has sustained the defenders' plea to the pursuers' title to sue, and that question has been keenly contested.

The precise form of action is one of declarator and interdict, which at first sight would appear to be a most convenient mode of raising the question, and I think it would be unfortunate if we were compelled by any rule of practice to sustain the plea of no title. For in the declarator the question of right would be determined, and the pursuers have intimated, not (as the Lord Ordinary seems to think) that they did not stand upon their conclusions for interdict, but that if they obtained declarator in the terms concluded for they would not press for the interdict, which would naturally follow as an ancillary, so as to embarrass the Council, but would rely upon their naturally complying with any declarator obtained without their being placed under the sanction of interdict. The question of title must therefore be considered in view of the full conclusions of the summons of declarator and interdict.

The pursuers sue the Town-Council as Town-Council, and, therefore, having perpetual succession, for declarator that the defenders have no power, July 12, 1912.

¹ 15 S. 389, and M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

 by statute or at common law, "to levy or exact any rates from the pursuers or other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk to be applied, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment in whole or in part of the expenses incurred by them in the promotion" of the foresaid provisional order, or to apply any part of the rates levied or collected, or which may be levied and collected, by them under the foresaid statutes during the assessment year 1911-12 or any future year, directly or indirectly, in or towards payment in whole or in part of the aforesaid expenses. The relative conclusion for interdict against levying and applying the rates is an exact echo of the declarator.

Stirling
 County
 Council v.
 Magistrates
 of Falkirk.
 Ld. Johnston.

The Lord Ordinary founds the rejection of the action on three considerations:—First, that the declarator is not limited to the pursuers' individual interests, but extends to the interest of the whole ratepayers. If that be a good objection it is easily cured, either by the pursuers deleting the words "or other ratepayers in the burgh of Falkirk," or by the Court not including these words in the decree to be granted. But, as the pursuers have no exceptional position, it follows that if they have right to the declarator they ask in their individual case, they have only such right on grounds of universal application to all ratepayers. The question remains, Have the pursuers right as individual ratepayers to the remedy they crave?

Second, that they do not limit their conclusions to the year 1911-12, and quo modo constat that they will be ratepayers in any subsequent year? To that I think it is a sufficient answer both that pluris petitio will not in itself destroy their title to sue, and that as proprietors, if they have an interest to obtain this declarator regarding the year 1911-12, they have also an interest, in respect of their properties, to obtain it regarding future years, as the intended action of the Town-Council affects the value of their properties.

Third, that, as they have paid their assessments and do not in this action raise any question of repetition, they do not show any patrimonial interest. The money, his Lordship assumes, is ingathered and in the coffers of the burgh. If the pursuers succeed in their action, it will remain there as the fruits of an assessment regularly imposed and paid. The pursuers do not ask any of it back. The result of the excess assessment, if the pursuers are right, may diminish the assessment next year. But quo modo constat that the pursuers will have any interest in that year? This view appears to me to be too narrow. Not only have the pursuers as proprietors an interest in respect of their properties, but I think as ratepayers they have an interest in the administration of a burgh fund to which they have contributed. Admittedly they have an interest to avoid the contribution, and could have effected this by suspension. Equally I think they have an interest to prevent the misapplication of their contribution, and can effect this by interdict, which may conveniently, in accordance with our practice, be prefaced by declarator. And it must be remembered that the assessment was a general assessment, not restricted to the particular object to which part of it is proposed to be applied, and that, therefore, it was not necessarily known to them at the date of assessment that they were to be over-assessed for an improper object, nor is it clear that they could be heard to stay the levying of a general assessment, ex facie legal, because a portion of it was threatened to be devoted to an illegal object. It appears to me that

July 12, 1912. the conclusions of the summons include the really appropriate remedy, which is to stay the application of the assessment levied to the illegal purpose to which it is proposed to be diverted, and to that probably our decree may be conveniently restricted.

Stirling
County
Council v.
Magistrates
of Falkirk.

Ld. Johnston.

The Lord Ordinary has held himself bound by the case of Ewing.¹ But I do not think that that judgment has any real application. The illegality complained of was indeed the same as here, but the form of action was, as your Lordship has shown, wholly different. If after they have obtained their declarator and interdict in this case the pursuers find themselves obliged to take steps to compel the refunding of moneys illegally paid away, which I can hardly anticipate, they may find difficulty in the judgment in Ewing's case,¹ though I do not think that it is difficulty which will pass the wit of counsel to surmount. But the judgment is no obstacle to the remedy which they seek at present. Moreover, the value of Ewing's case¹ as an authority is a good deal detracted from by the fact that the Lord Chancellor, under misapprehension, bases his judgment upon certain cases which had to do with maladministration of common good and similar funds, which, according to our law, can only be challenged by the Crown.—Conn v. Magistrates of Renfrew.²

For these reasons I think that the Lord Ordinary's judgment falls to be recalled.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Recall said interlocutor [of 10th April 1912]: Repel the whole pleas in law for the defenders: Find that the defenders have no power and are not entitled at common law or under statute to levy or exact any rates in the burgh of Falkirk from the pursuers to be applied directly or indirectly in or towards payment in whole or in part of any expenses incurred by the Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of the burgh of Falkirk in the unsuccessful promotion of the provisional order referred to on record, and continue the case: Find the pursuers entitled to their whole expenses, and remit," &c.

JOHN C. BRODIE & SONS, W.S.—MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 178. FARQUHAR & GILL AND OTHERS, Complainers (Reclaimers).—Moncrieff, K.C.—Lippe.

July 13, 1912. THE LORD PROVOST, MAGISTRATES, AND COUNCILLORS OF THE CITY AND ROYAL BURGH OF ABERDEEN, Respondents (Respondents)—D.-F. Dickson—Chree, K.C.—Mercer.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

Title and interest to sue—Ratepayer—Burgh—Rates and assessments—Illegal assessments by magistrates—Suspension and interdict at instance of individual ratepayers.

The magistrates of a burgh, in fixing the water-rates for the current year, included in their estimate of expenditure to be paid out of the rates a sum representing half of the expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order and private bill. In an action of suspension and interdict brought against them by certain individual ratepayers in the burgh a plea of no title or interest to sue repelled.

¹ 15 S. 389, M'L. & Rob. App. 847.

² 8 F. 905.

Burgh—Powers of magistrates—Rates and assessments—Right of magistrates to levy rates to pay expenses of provisional order and private bill— July 13, 1912.
Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862 (25 and 26 Vict. cap. cciii.)— Farquhar & Gill v.
Aberdeen Corporation Water Act, 1885 (48 and 49 Vict. cap. cxxiii.)— Magistrates of Aberdeen.

Held that the magistrates of Aberdeen were not entitled, under their private water Acts or otherwise, to impose any assessment upon, or levy or exact any rates or charges from, ratepayers to be applied towards the payment of expenses incurred by the magistrates in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order and private bill for a new water supply.

Limitation of actions—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 61), sec. 1 (a)—Time limit—Applicability to action of interdict.

Observed by the Lord President that the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which impose a limit of time within which actions must be brought against public authorities, cannot be prayed in aid in a question of interdict, because the Court can only give interdict against what is a continuing wrong.

ON 13th October 1911 Farquhar & Gill, manufacturers, St Paul Street, Aberdeen, and others, all being ratepayers in the city and royal burgh of Aberdeen, brought an action of suspension and interdict against the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of the city and royal burgh of Aberdeen, in which they craved the Court “to suspend the proceedings complained of, and to interdict, prohibit, and discharge the respondents from laying any assessment upon or levying or exacting any rates or charges from the complainers or other ratepayers or contributors to the water revenue of the respondents in the district over which the respondents have powers of assessment under the Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862, and Acts amending the same, to be applied directly or indirectly in or towards payment in whole or in part of any costs incurred by the respondents or others in connection with an application made by them in the session of 1910, to the Secretary for Scotland, under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order to authorise them to obtain a new supply of water from the River Avon, or in connection with a private bill promoted by the respondents in Parliament in the said session of 1910 for the same purpose; or alternatively to interdict, prohibit, and discharge the respondents from applying any part of the rates and charges which may be levied and collected by them for the purpose of the said water revenue during the assessment year 1911-12, directly or indirectly, towards payment in whole or in part of the aforesaid costs; or to do otherwise in the premises as to your Lordships shall seem proper.” *
 1ST DIVISION.
 Lord Cullen.

* The Aberdeen Corporation Water Act, 1885 (48 and 49 Vict. cap. cxxiii.), which amended the Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862 (25 and 26 Vict. cap. cciii.), and subsequent relative Acts, by sec. 20 authorises the Town-Council to supply water for commercial purposes at rates to be fixed by the Town-Council from time to time. The Act provides:—Sec. 35. “The Town-Council . . . are hereby authorised . . . once in every year to estimate and fix the amount of money necessary to be levied for the purpose of defraying the costs and expenses of the water department for and during the year then current . . .”

Sec. 36. “The estimate to be made up in manner before provided shall

July 18, 1912.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

The following averments and answers were, inter alia, made by the parties:—(Stat. 4) “In the session of 1910 the respondents by a majority of 19 to 13 resolved to make application, and thereafter did make application, to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order to authorise them to obtain a new supply of water from the River Avon in Banffshire. On the draft order coming before the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons for consideration and report under section 2 of the last-mentioned statute . . . the Chairmen, after hearing parties, reported to the Secretary for Scotland that the application should not proceed by way of provisional order. The respondents then proceeded by way of private bill and promoted the Aberdeen Corporation Water Bill, 1910, with the result that the subsequent procedure took place in London instead of locally. The said bill was opposed by a number of traders, who, under section 20 of the said Act [Aberdeen Corporation Water Act] of 1885, were supplied with water and charged according to meter, and also by a section of the ratepayers. The said bill came before a Select Committee of the House of Lords, who decided that it was not expedient that the bill should proceed. The respondents incurred be submitted to and considered by the Town-Council, at a meeting to be held as soon as conveniently may be after they shall have obtained a copy of the Valuation-roll for the year then current, and at such meeting, or any adjournment thereof, the Town-Council may, and they are hereby authorised and required, in order to raise such a sum of money as, along with the public water-rate after mentioned and other water revenues of the Town-Council, shall be sufficient for the purposes aforesaid, annually to impose, assess, and levy a rate to be called ‘The Domestic Water-rate,’ upon and from the occupiers of all dwelling-houses, and of such parts of all shops and buildings as may be used as dwelling-houses, within the city, according to the yearly value thereof as entered in the Valuation-roll for the year then current. . . .”

Sec. 37 provides for the imposition of a public water-rate.

Sec. 42. “If in any year the revenue of the water department shall be more than sufficient for all the purposes to which it is applicable, the Town-Council shall, and they are hereby required to, carry the surplus to the credit of the account for the following year in reduction of the estimate of money required for such year; and when a deficiency occurs in one year it shall be provided for in the estimate and by assessment in the next year; and the Town-Council shall, as nearly as possible, so regulate the domestic water-rate that it may, one year with another, produce the amount of money required. . . .”

Sec. 43. “The rates and charges levied under . . . this Act and the other income of the water department shall be applied in manner following . . . First, in defraying the expenses of the management and maintenance of the water undertaking . . . the annual costs, charges, and expenses of providing and supplying water. . . . Second, in payment of the interest of money borrowed under the authority of the recited Acts and of this Act, in connection with the water undertaking. Third, in payment of the sum by the recited Acts, and this Act, directed to be set apart as a sinking fund in connection with the water undertaking. Lastly, in payment of such portion of the cost of enlarging or increasing and renewing and from time to time extending the works, mains, and pipes as the Town-Council shall think it reasonable to charge against the revenue for the year, and of any other necessary annual expenditure.”

great expense in connection with promoting the said bill in Parlia- July 13, 1912.
ment. The total amount of the said expenses is believed to be £15,521, 6s. 5d. The promotion of the said bill was inexpedient and ill-advised, and was not in the interests of the community. . . . With reference to the explanation in answer that the said sum of £15,521, 6s. 5d. has been paid out of the bank account kept by the respondents for the water undertaking and police purposes, it is explained that the ratepayers were not informed, and had no knowledge, before such payment, of the mode in which the said expenses were to be defrayed. . . .” (Ans. 4) “ . . . The total amount of the costs incurred by the respondents in connection with said draft order and private bill were paid by the respondents on or before 1st March 1911 out of the bank account kept by them for the water undertaking and general police purposes. Before the respondents as then constituted proceeded with the said provisional order and substituted bill, and conducted the case before the said Select Committee, they were advised by competent advisers and bona fide believed that the present supply of water to the city was unsatisfactory, both as regards its amount and its liability to dangerous contamination. . . .” (Stat. 5) “ . . . On 4th September 1911 [a resolution of the finance committee fixing the water-rates for the current year] was considered by the respondents and adopted by them, or by a majority of them. The complainers have reason to believe, and they aver, that the respondents, or a majority of their number, have included in the estimate of the expenditure of the water department for the current year ending 15th May 1912 the sum of £7760, being one-half of the said expenses incurred by the respondents in connection with the promotion of the said provisional order and bill. The complainers further believe and aver that the respondents have, for the purpose of meeting the said estimated expenditure of the water department, resolved to impose a public water-rate of 1½d. per £, in addition to imposing the said domestic water-rate of 5d. per £, and continuing the existing meter rates for supplies for other than domestic purposes. . . . Explained that there is no warrant either in the before-mentioned statutes or otherwise for any specific item of expenditure being charged against any specific item of revenue, and that it is ultra vires of the respondents to do so. The whole water revenue from whatever source it is derived constitutes trust money in the hands of the respondents to be administered by them for the statutory trust purposes. The respondents have been able to debit the said sum of £7760 in the estimated expenditure of the current year without increasing their rates or charges only in consequence of the fact that the payment to sinking fund in the current year has fallen to £8770, this being the last instalment, as against about £20,000 in previous years. The result of debiting the said sum of £7760 to the expenditure of the current year is thus to deprive the ratepayers of the benefit which would otherwise have resulted to them in the form of decreased rates and charges in consequence of the large diminution in the contribution to sinking fund for the current year.” (Ans. 5) “Admitted that the estimated expenditure of the water department for the current year includes the sum of £7760. Explained that the estimate provides for said sum being met out of the sum of £20,780 proposed to be levied from special water charges and from charges for water supply to shipping, being charges for other than domestic purposes.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

July 13, 1912.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

Explained that the respondents, while including the said sum of £7760 in the expenditure for the current year, have not increased the public water-rate, the domestic water-rate, or the rates and charges for supplies of water for other than domestic purposes. . . .” (Stat. 6) “It is illegal and ultra vires of the respondents to include in the said estimate of expenditure any part of the said expenses of promoting the said provisional order and bill, or to levy any assessments or exact any rates or charges under their Acts for the purpose of defraying the said expenses or any part thereof. If the said expenses were excluded from the said estimate, the rates chargeable as public water-rate and domestic water-rate would fall to be reduced and also or alternatively the charge to manufacturers and others taking water for other than domestic purposes under section 20 of the Act of 1885 would fall to be reduced. . . .” (Ans. 6) “ . . . The respondents are acting in accordance with what has always been the invariable practice of municipal bodies in Scotland, the promotion of such orders and bills and the payment of the cost thereof being in the circumstances regarded as incidental to and necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of the bodies concerned, as in fact they are. The promotion of the order and bill in question, and the payment of the costs thereof were in fact incidental to and necessary for the proper discharge of the respondents’ duties.”

The complainers pleaded, inter alia;—(2) The proposed use by the respondents of the funds obtained or to be obtained by them by assessment under the powers conferred on them by the Aberdeen Corporation Water Act, 1885, and relative statutes being illegal and ultra vires, interdict should be granted as craved. (3) It being ultra vires of the respondents under the statutes libelled to levy any assessments or exact any rates or charges to be applied in payment of the expense of promoting the Aberdeen Corporation Water Bill, 1910, or, alternatively, to apply any rates or charges levied and collected by them under the said statutes in payment of the said expense, the complainers are entitled to interdict in terms of one or other alternative of the prayer of the note.

The respondents pleaded;—(1) The action is excluded in respect of the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. (2) The complainers having neither title nor interest to insist in the present action, the note should be refused. (3) The complainers’ averments are irrelevant and insufficient to support the prayer of the note. (4) The expenditure in connection with the promotion of the provisional order and private bill having been incurred by the respondents in good faith in the execution of their statutory duties, the note should be refused. (5) The complainers’ averments, so far as material, being unfounded in fact, the note should be refused. (6) The assessment, and the rates and charges referred to, and the application of the proceeds thereof being according to law, the note should be refused.

On 10th April 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Cullen) pronounced an interlocutor sustaining the second plea in law for the respondents, and refusing the note.*

* “OPINION.—This case raises substantially the same question as that which has come before me for determination in the case of the County Council of the County of Stirling and Others v. The Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of the Burgh of Falkirk [supra, p. 1281]. I accordingly refer brevis-

The complainers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First July 13, 1912. Division on 18th June 1912.

The argument for the reclaimers was substantially the same as that submitted for the Stirling County Council in the preceding case — Stirling County Council v. Falkirk Magistrates.¹ In addition they maintained, in answer to the respondents' argument infra on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893,² that that Act could in no event apply, as the earliest action on the part of the respondents to which they took exception was their resolution of 4th September 1911.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

The argument for the respondents followed the line of argument submitted for the Falkirk Magistrates in the preceding case. They presented, however, the following additional arguments:—The Aberdeen Water Act of 1885, section 43, expressly authorised them to use the rates in paying the cost of "enlarging," "increasing," and "extending" the "works," and the expenses in connection with the provisional order and private bill for the new water-supply were incurred in furtherance of a proposed enlargement or extension of their works, and therefore were expressly authorised by their Act of Parliament. The wrong, if there had been a wrong, had already been done, and an action of suspension and interdict was too late.³ In any event, they were protected⁴ by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893,² section 1 (a). The wrongful act was the payment of the expenses, and that had been made in March 1911, more than six months prior to the raising of the present action. The under-noted case was also referred to.⁵

At advising on 13th July 1912,—

LORD MACKENZIE.—This case is really a fortiori of the case of the tatis causa to my opinion in the latter case. In accordance with it, I am of opinion that the defenders' second plea in law falls to be sustained and the note refused. While this is so, I am equally of opinion that the defenders' unsuccessful essay to obtain an extension of their existing powers under the Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862, and subsequent and amending Acts administered by them, mentioned on record, does not form a purpose under these Acts for the expense of which they are entitled to exercise the powers of assessment which the Acts confer on them."

¹ Supra, p. 1281. The following additional authority was cited:—Eadie v. Glasgow Corporation, 1908 S. C. 207.

² The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 61), enacts:—Sec. 1. "Where after the commencement of this Act any action, prosecution, or other proceeding is commenced in the United Kingdom against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such Act, duty, or authority, the following provisions shall have effect:—(a) The action, prosecution, or proceeding shall not lie or be instituted unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of, or in case of a continuance of injury or damage, within six months next after the ceasing thereof"

³ Steuart v. Parochial Board of Keith, (1869) 8 Macph. 26.

⁴ Spittal v. Corporation of Glasgow, (1904) 6 F. 828; Christie v. Corporation of Glasgow, (1899) 36 S. L. R. 694; Earl of Harrington v. Corporation of Derby, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; Attorney-General v. West Ham Corporation, [1910] 2 Ch. 560.

⁵ Perth Water Commissioners v. M'Donald, (1879) 6 R. 1050.

July 13, 1912. County Council of Stirling and Others v. Burgh of Falkirk,¹ which was disposed of yesterday. It raises a question whether the Magistrates of Aberdeen are entitled to impose and levy rates under the powers of assessment which they have under the Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862, and Acts amending the same, in order to meet the expenses—which amount to £15,521, 6s. 5d.—which were incurred by them in an unsuccessful attempt to obtain an extension of their existing powers under the Waterworks Act of 1862, the proceedings having been first by provisional order, and then by a private bill.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

The complainers have presented a note of suspension and interdict in general terms. The rates have not been paid—the assessments were laid on, but the rates were not levied, and the reclaimers describe themselves as being all owners of heritable property liable to pay the public water-rate; William-son, one of the reclaimers, is liable to pay the domestic water-rate, and Farquhar & Gill are consumers of water for other than domestic purposes.

The same argument was submitted here that was submitted in the Falkirk case¹ in regard to the point that the costs have all been paid. No doubt the costs were paid to the original creditors, as is set out in the pleadings, by 1st March 1911; but for the reasons that have been already given in the Falkirk case,¹ I do not think that that can affect the right of the complainers to have the remedy that they ask. It was not until September that the finance committee of the respondents resolved out of what fund this money should be taken. They had a meeting on the 1st September 1911, when it was resolved to impose the assessments for domestic water-rate at a particular rate on the different classes of proprietors and to provide for the supply of water for other than domestic purposes at the table of rates fixed in a previous year. Then, on the 4th September, the resolution was considered by the respondents and adopted by them. And the case made by the complainers—and about this there is no doubt—is that, in the estimate of the expenditure of the Water Department for the year ending 15th May 1912, the sum of £7760—being one-half of the expenses incurred by the respondents in connection with the promotion of the provisional order and the bill—was provided for, and, in the appendix with which we have been furnished, the way in which the budget is made up is perfectly clear.

I should notice in passing a point which is made by the respondents in Ans. 5—that, by including this sum of £7760 in the expenditure for the current year, the respondents have not increased the public water-rate, the domestic water-rate, or the rates and charges for the supply of water for other than domestic purposes. The broad fact, however, remains that the expenditure which is budgeted for in the year 1911-12 by the respondents amounts to the sum of £34,385—that is the expenditure that they have got to find revenue to meet; and, accordingly, they impose their charges in order to make up that figure. But for the charge which it is said is illegal, of £7760, their budget would only have required to be for a sum of £26,625. That would have been the figure which would have been required to have been made up out of revenue. In these circumstances it appears to me that the complainers have a direct patrimonial interest July 13, 1912.

¹ Supra, p. 1281.

 to say that "But for your illegal charge, what we would have been called upon to make up would have been less by £7760." It is out of the question, I think, for the respondents to contend that they can apply the revenue they get from water sold to this illegal charge, and then say to those who are ratepayers under the public and domestic water-rates that their rates are not going to be raised, and, therefore, they cannot complain. I think that is a way of dealing with the budget to which no countenance can be given.

Farquhar &
 Gill v.
 Magistrates
 of Aberdeen.
 Lord Mac-
 kenzie.

The position, therefore, is that in September the respondents resolved to meet the expenses in what, it is said, is an illegal manner. In October the interdict was applied for. It appears to me that the case of *Cowan*¹ is a direct authority for what is asked by the complainers here. It was argued by the Dean of Faculty that, in the case of Cowan,¹ the costs had not been paid. For the reasons already explained, I do not think that that makes any difference. Another point was taken—that in Cowan's case¹ the question of title was not raised, and that the case of *Ewing*² was not cited. Also for the reasons already explained, that can make no difference in the present case. Then it was suggested that, in Cowan's case,¹ the pleadings showed that it was the individual wrongdoers and not the trustees who were sued. I think it is quite plain, from the report and from the pleadings, that in that case the Court considered they were interdicting the trustees from laying on assessments and from levying rates.

The only point argued upon the merits of the case was one on the terms of the statute—that this was, under section 43, only an extension of existing works. I think, when the circumstances of the scheme are examined, it will be found that that argument is untenable.

Therefore I think that the complainers have a title and, on the merits, that the respondents have no defence.

It is right to notice one point which was pressed, which is this, that the respondents are here protected by the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act of 1893. That Act protects persons who are acting in the execution of a statutory or other public duty to this extent, that proceedings must be brought within six months next after the act or neglect or default complained of. I do not think it is necessary to go into the question whether the provisions of that Act apply to such a case as we are dealing with here. The conclusive answer is that it is impossible to say that there was any act to which the complainers could have objected until the resolution of the Town-Council in September. The contrary argument was that the wrong was done when the expenses were paid. In my opinion the wrong was done in September, because, until that date, the complainers could not be certiorated whether or not the respondents were going to take the necessary amount out of the common good. Accordingly, on the question of date, I think that any argument founded upon the Public Authorities Protection Act fails.

¹ Cowan & Mackenzie v. Law, (1872) 10 Macph. 578.

² Ewing v. Glasgow Commissioners of Police, (1837) 15 S. 389, (1839) M'L & Rob. App. 847.

July 18, 1912.

Farquhar &
Gill v.
Magistrates
of Aberdeen.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

I propose to your Lordships that the same course should be followed here as was followed in the case of Falkirk.¹ This is an application for interdict, and, of course, to put the respondents under interdict forthwith would be a stringent remedy. In order that the respondents may consider their position, I would suggest that an interlocutor should be pronounced repelling the whole pleas in law for the respondents; finding that they are not entitled to impose any assessment or levy or exact any rates upon the complainers under the Aberdeen Waterworks Act, 1862, and Acts amending the same, to be applied directly or indirectly in or towards payment in whole or in part of the costs incurred by the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of the royal burgh of Aberdeen in connection with the application made by them, in session 1910, to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, for a provisional order to enable them to obtain a new supply of water from the River Avon, and in connection with the promotion of a private bill in the same session for the same purpose; and continuing the cause.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I agree. I hope in this case there can be no difficulty, because we are given to understand that there is common good from which the money can be taken. I should like to add this—I do not understand how the Public Authorities Protection Act can ever be prayed in aid in a question of interdict, because I take it the Court can only give interdict against what is a continuing wrong.

LORD KINNEAR.—I concur.

The Lord President intimated that LORD JOHNSTON, who was absent at the advising, also concurred.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Recall said interlocutor [of 10th April 1912]: Repel the whole pleas in law for the respondents: Find that the respondents are not entitled to impose any assessment upon or levy or exact any rates or charges from the complainers under the Police and Waterworks Act, 1862, and Acts amending the same, to be applied directly or indirectly in or towards payment in whole or in part of the costs incurred by the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of the city and royal burgh of Aberdeen in connection with the application made by them in the session of 1910 to the Secretary for Scotland under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1889, for a provisional order to authorise them to obtain a new supply of water from the River Avon, or in connection with the private bill promoted by them in Parliament in said session for the same purpose, and continue the cause."

DALGLEISH, DOBBIE, & Co., S.S.C.—GORDON, FALCONER, & FAIRWEATHER, W.S.— Agents.

¹ Supra, p. 1281.

STEPHEN MASON RAE (George Brodie Paul's Trustee), First Party.— No. 179.

D. Anderson—W. L. Mitchell.

THOMAS JUSTICE & SONS, LIMITED, Second Parties.—Horne, K.C.— July 18, 1912.

W. T. Watson.

Paul's
Trustee v.
Thomas
Justice &
Sons, Limited.

Company—Members—Register of shareholders—"Holder" of shares—Company's lien over shares for debts due by "holder"—Person owning radical right in shares, but not on register.

The articles of association of a limited company bore that the company should have a lien on shares for debts due to it by "the holder" of the shares. A shareholder, in security for debts due by him to two banks, transferred to nominees of the banks certain shares of which he was the registered holder and they were registered in the names of the banks' nominees; and he also purchased certain other shares and registered them in the names of the same nominees. After the shareholder's death his estates were sequestrated. The banks, having recovered payment of the debts due to them from other securities, were prepared to transfer the shares in question to the trustee in the sequestration, whereupon the company claimed a lien over the shares in respect of a debt due to it by the deceased.

Held that "holder" in the articles of association meant "registered holder"; and, as the deceased was not the registered holder of the shares, that the company had no lien over them for his debt.

ON 9th December 1911 a special case was presented to which the 2^D DIVISION. first party was Stephen Mason Rae, C.A., trustee on the sequestrated estates of the deceased George Brodie Paul, and the second parties were Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited, Dundee.

The following narrative of the facts of the case and the contentions of parties is taken from the opinion of Lord Guthrie:—

"The late Mr George Brodie Paul, solicitor, Dundee, at the date of his death on 23rd January 1911, stood on the register of Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited, as the owner of certain shares in that Company. Certain other shares, which had been acquired by him and which had been registered in his name, had been transferred by him to nominees of the Bank of Scotland and the British Linen Bank in security of sums due by him to these banks respectively, and, at the date of his death, these shares stood registered in the names of these nominees. Certain other shares were acquired by Mr Paul, but were never registered in his name, the transfers having been taken direct from the sellers to the banks' nominees.

"After his death Mr Paul's estates were sequestrated on 29th July 1911, and the first party to this special case is the trustee on his sequestrated estates. Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited, are the parties of the second part. At his death Mr Paul was indebted to the second parties. Their claim in the sequestration amounts to £3854, 8s. 3d.

"The question relates to an alleged right of lien over certain of the shares mentioned in the case, claimed by the second parties for all moneys due to them by the late Mr Paul. The first party claims these shares as part of the bankrupt estate, to be distributed by him among Mr Paul's creditors.

"The banks are not parties to the case, because it is admitted that Mr Paul's obligations to them have been liquidated out of other estate of his held by them in security. Their nominees admit that they hold the shares for the first party, and are ready to transfer them to him.

July 13, 1912.

Paul's
Trustee v.
Thomas
Justice &
Sons, Limited.

"So far as regards the first set of shares above mentioned, namely, those standing at Mr Paul's death in his name on the Company's register, the first party admits that they are covered by the second party's lien. The dispute is confined to the other two sets of shares, namely, those which, at one time registered in his name, had been transferred by him to the banks' nominees in security of his obligations to the banks, and those which, although equally acquired by him and equally held at the time of his death by nominees of the banks in security of his obligations to the banks, were never registered in his name, the transfers having been taken direct from the sellers to the banks' nominees.

"Something was said about the second parties' common law right of lien over their shares, but the argument before us was confined to the right of lien, if any, created in their favour by article 27 of their articles of association.* By that article they obtain a right of lien on their shares for all moneys due to them from a 'holder' or 'joint holders' of the shares. The first party maintains that the word 'holder' is equivalent to 'registered holder,' and he, accordingly, as above mentioned, makes no claim to the shares standing registered in Mr Paul's name at his death. On the other hand, if, as the second parties maintain, the word holder means, or at least includes, the person having the radical interest in the shares, whether registered or not, the first party admits that the second parties will have a lien equally over the shares which are actually in dispute.

"Therefore, the only question in the case is whether the word 'holder' in article 27 of the articles of association includes owners of the shares—those having the radical right, whether registered or not—at the date when the question arises, or at any time."

The question of law for the opinion and judgment of the Court was:—"Are the second parties entitled to a lien in terms of their articles of association over the shares held by the deceased George Brodie Paul in their Company, so far as these shares were transferred to and held by nominees of the said banks at the date of the sequestration of the deceased George Brodie Paul?"

The case was heard before the Second Division on 10th July 1912.

Argued for the first party;—"Holder" in article 27 meant the registered holder, and could have no other meaning. The registered holder, whether or not he was in fact a trustee, and whether or not he

* The articles of association of Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited, provided:—

"27. The Company shall have a first charge or paramount lien on all shares (and such lien shall extend to all dividends and bonuses from time to time declared thereon) for all moneys due to it from the holder or any of the joint holders thereof, either alone or jointly with any other person, including all calls the resolutions for which shall have been passed by the directors, although the times appointed for their payment may not have arrived."

"35. The instrument of transfer of any share in the Company shall be executed by both transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain the holder of the shares until the name of the transferee is entered in the register of members in respect thereof."

"39. The board may in their discretion, and without assigning a reason therefor, refuse to register the transfer of any share to any person whom they shall not approve of as transferee. . . . The board may also refuse to register any transfer of shares on which the Company has a lien."

was registered as a trustee, was the only person who had any rights or liabilities in respect of the shares.¹ The beneficial owner was not recognised by the Company in any way, and the Company could have no claim against him. The banks could have realised the shares and applied the proceeds towards reduction of their debts, and had they done so, the second parties' right of lien would have been defeated. The second parties could not be in a better position because the banks had not exercised their right. The second parties were protected against the loss of their security through their power, under article 39, to refuse to register any transfer.

July 13, 1912.
Paul's
Trustee v.
Thomas
Justice &
Sons, Limited.

Argued for the second parties ;—The correct description of a person whose name was on the register was “member”²; “holder” was a wider term and included the owner of the radical right in a share. If, as was the case, such radical right could be arrested,³ it could also be the subject of a lien. In a question with the banks, the second parties admittedly had no claim to the shares, but when the security rights possessed by the banks had been satisfied, the right of lien which the second parties had, both at common law and under the articles, revived, and even if the question of law were answered in favour of the first party, the second parties would still be entitled to refuse to put him on the register.⁴ The case of the *Mexican Santa Barbara Mining Company*⁵ was distinguishable, for there the lien was, by the express terms of the articles, restricted to debts due by the “registered” holder.

At advising on 13th July 1912,—

LORD GUTHRIE.—[After the narrative quoted above]—I think the question of law falls to be answered in the negative, that is to say, in favour of the first party, first, on a construction of article 27 taken by itself, and, second, on that article, when read along with other articles in the articles of association.

The word “holder” does not seem to me applicable in any sense, either popular or technical, to the late Mr Paul, in regard to shares, which were either never registered in his name, or which, having been at one time registered in his name, had been subsequently registered in the names of others. In the one case, he never held the shares ; in the other case he had ceased to hold them. In the one case, his membership of the Company in respect of the shares had ceased, and he had no longer a holding in the Company ; in the other case, his radical right in the shares, or their value, never made him a member of, or gave him a holding in, the Company. It would not even be correct or proper to call him without qualification, in either case, the owner of the shares. He was not either the nominal, or ¹ Ex parte Mexican Santa Barbara Mining Co., (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 613 ; Muir v. City of Glasgow Bank, (1878) 6 R. 392, aff. 6 R. (H. L.) 21 ; Gillespie & Paterson v. City of Glasgow Bank, (1879) 6 R. 714, aff. 6 R. (H. L.) 104 ; Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. VII. cap. 69), sec. 27 ; Buckley on Company Law, 9th ed., pp. 74, 75.

² Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. VII. cap. 69), secs. 24, 25.

³ Lindsay v. London and North-Western Railway Co., (1860) 22 D. 571.

⁴ Bell's Trustee v. Coatbridge Tinplate Co., Limited, (1886) 14 R. 246.

⁵ 24 Q. B. D. 613.

July 13, 1912. the true, holder. Nor was he the apparent or nominal owner ; he was the true owner, that is the owner of the radical right to the shares, or their value. Paul's Trustee v. Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited. Lord Guthrie. This view is strengthened by reference to the other articles. It is admitted that, wherever the word "holder" occurs, as it frequently does, in other articles, it is always used in the sense of "registered holder." Reference may be made to the preceding articles, and to article 35.

But the second parties argued on the alleged hardship resulting from the first party's construction. It might be sufficient to say that the question is one of construction of a contract, and that there is no room in such a case for equitable considerations, except as affording a presumption where the expressions used are ambiguous, which they do not seem to me to be in this case. But, apart from this view, and the consideration that there may be equities both ways, article 39 disposes of any question of hardship, because, under that article the second parties could have refused to remove Mr Paul's name from the register, and could, at their own hand, have retained the right of lien against him, which they thus chose voluntarily to give up.

The case of the Mexican Santa Barbara Mining Company,¹ quoted by the first party, is instructive, although it is not directly in point. The Mexican Company sought a bankruptcy order against their debtor Perkins. He had obtained judgment against Dickey, a registered shareholder of the company, to the effect that he, Dickey, was a trustee of some of the shares registered in his name for Perkins. The company founded on one of their articles of association, giving them a first and paramount lien on all shares for all moneys due to the company from "the registered holder or holders thereof or other the person for the time being entitled thereto as against the company." The Court held that the company had no title to petition for Perkins' sequestration in virtue of their lien over the shares belonging to him but registered in Dickey's name. They negatived the contention that, Perkins being in equity the owner of the shares of which Dickey the registered holder had been declared to be a trustee for him, the articles gave the company a lien over that equitable interest for the debt which Perkins owed them. But, in that case, the expression "registered holder" made impossible the argument, which the second parties maintained before us. The company had to found on the later phrase "or other the person for the time being entitled thereto as against the company," words which seemed to lend some colour to their contention. I think the reluctance which the Court showed to give these words the meaning contended for by the company shows that, had the clause before them been expressed in the terms of article 27 in this case, they would have required much stronger grounds than any that have been stated to us for holding that Mr Paul, who had only the radical right, was, in the sense of that article, the holder of the shares.

I therefore think the question should be answered in the negative.

LORD DUNDAS.—I am of the same opinion. It was, I think, conceded—it is at all events, in my judgment, clear—that if "holder" in article 27 means "registered holder," the case for the second parties is gone. The registered holders of the shares owe them no debt in respect of which a lien could be asserted. I do not know whether Mr Paul was in fact indebted July 13, 1912. to the second parties when the transfers were taken in favour of the nominees of the banks. But it is immaterial to inquire into that, for, if the relation of debtor and creditor did then subsist between Mr Paul and the second parties, the latter missed the opportunity, which they had, of refusing to register the nominees, and thereby lost their lien in a question with Mr Paul; and if the relation did not subsist, the second parties cannot plead that any advances they subsequently made to Mr Paul were made upon the faith or on the security of shares held by him in their Company. Now, it seems to me to be quite plain that "holder" in article 27 does mean "registered holder," and that the word cannot, in any reasonable sense or upon any stateable ground, be held to apply to or include a person who may have the radical right to shares, but whose name does not appear upon the Company's register as holding them. I think the question must be answered in the negative.

¹ 24 Q. B. D. 613.

Paul's
Trustee v.
Thomas
Justice &
Sons, Limited.
Lord Dundas.

Something was suggested during the argument as to possible future difficulties, if the result of our decision should be adverse to the second parties. I do not see that any difficulty need necessarily arise, and there is no occasion to anticipate or speculate upon anything of the sort. I apprehend that the second parties' power under their articles to refuse to register transferees of shares is one which must be exercised by them in a reasonable manner.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD SALVESEN concurred.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the negative.

MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—WALLACE & BEGG, W.S.—Agents.

HUGH TENNENT AND OTHERS (James Brown Montgomerie-Fleming's Trustees), Pursuers (Reclaimers).—Blackburn, K.C.—D. P. Fleming. No. 180.

ALEXANDER KENNEDY, Defender (Respondent).—Chree, K.C.—D. M. Wilson. July 13, 1912.

Property—Building restriction—Superior and Vassal—Buildings to be "occupied as self-contained lodgings."

Montgomerie-
Fleming's
Trustees v.
Kennedy.

Certain ground, with buildings thereon, was feued out by a feu-contract which, besides a general nuisance clause against the carrying on of certain specified trades, contained a clause declaring that the feuar "and his foresaids shall be bound and obliged to maintain and uphold in good repair in all time coming on the said three steadings of ground the three lodgings now erected thereon which shall be occupied as self-contained lodgings." All the restrictions, prohibitions, &c., in the feu-contract were declared to be real burdens affecting the ground and buildings.

The proprietor of one of these self-contained houses proposed to convert the basement floor into premises to be occupied for a cabinet-making business (which was not a trade prohibited by the general nuisance clause), by gutting it, and severing it from the upper floors, and giving it a separate entrance. In an action at the instance of the superiors to interdict him from doing so—

Held (rev. judgment of Lord Skerrington) that the proposed occupation of the premises was in contravention of the restrictions in the feu-contract, and interdict granted against such occupation.

July 13, 1912. ON 30th June 1911 Hugh Tennent and others, the testamentary trustees of James Brown Montgomerie-Fleming, and as such superiors of certain subjects at 1 Grosvenor Terrace, Glasgow, on the lands of Horselethill, brought an action against Alexander Kennedy, their vassal in these subjects, for declarator that under the feu-contract upon which they were held "the defender, as now proprietor of the dominium utile of the said feu, Number thirty-eight, is not entitled to convert the basement floor of the self-contained lodging, forming No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace aforesaid, erected on said feu Number thirty-eight into premises for or in connection with a cabinetmaking and upholstery business, or to a purpose other than occupation as a part of the said self-contained lodging: And further, it ought and should be found and declared, by decree foresaid, that the said conversion, if so carried out, is and will be in breach and in contravention of the provisions of the said feu-contract: And upon it being so found and declared, the defender ought and should be interdicted, prohibited, and discharged, by decree foresaid, from making the said conversion, and from occupying, by himself or others, the said basement floor of said lodging for any purpose other than in connection with the occupation of the building as a self-contained lodging."

Montgomerie-
Fleming's
Trustees v.
Kennedy.

1ST DIVISION.
Lord
Skerrington.

The following narrative is quoted from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington):—

"This is an action for the purpose of enforcing an alleged obligation in a feu-contract relative to the maintenance and use of the buildings on the feu. The pursuers are the trustees of the late Mr Montgomerie-Fleming of Kelvinside, and as such they are the superiors of the defender, who purchased in 1909 the house No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace, Glasgow. This terrace extends from east to west along the south side of the Great Western Road. The house No. 1 is the eastmost house in the terrace, and it forms the corner house at the junction of the Great Western Road and Byres Road, which latter runs southward to the Dumbarton Road. The house No. 1 is also the eastmost point of the Kelvinside estate, a feuing property which extends for a long distance westward along the Great Western Road. The three 'steadings of ground' on which the houses Nos. 1, 2, and 3 Grosvenor Terrace had been already built 'with the lodging and other buildings erected thereon' were feued to a builder by the owners of the estate of Kelvinside conform to feu-contract, dated 27th November 1856. The present action relates only to the house No. 1. The defender is in course of converting the basement floor of this house (both in Grosvenor Terrace and Byres Road) into a cabinetmaker's and upholsterer's shop with a new and separate entrance from Byres Road. The defender's right to construct this entrance was challenged on record, but this point was given up by the pursuers' counsel. No interference is contemplated with the external wall of the basement fronting the sunk area in Grosvenor Terrace, except that a lavatory is to be constructed in the sunk area under the front door steps. This involves opening an access to the lavatory through the front wall of the basement, but the pursuers' counsel did not maintain that the defender was not entitled to do this. With these two exceptions, and also with the exception of certain buildings on the background and the opening of new windows facing Byres Road (none of which operations were challenged as illegal), the proposed operations are entirely within the house, and consist of the removal of the internal partitions on the basement floor and the substitution of metal beams and pillars for the support of the upper floors. The only question between the parties is whether the defender is entitled to separate the basement floor from the rest of the house, and to use that floor as a shop. That question cannot be answered without reading the whole feu-contract, but the clause principally founded on by the pursuers' counsel is as follows:—'Declaring as it is hereby expressly provided and declared, that the said Thomas Philip and his foresaids shall be bound and obliged to maintain and uphold in good repair in all time coming on the said three steadings of ground the three lodgings now erected thereon which shall be occupied as self-contained lodgings, and to rebuild the same when necessary of the same height, elevation and style of architecture, and upon the same foundations or sites with those now erected, to form a component part of the range or compartment of Grosvenor Terrace.' " *

July 13, 1912.
 —
 Montgomerie-
 Fleming's
 Trustees v.
 Kennedy.

* By a previous clause in the feu-contract it was provided as follows, viz., that the vassal, i.e. the second party, "or his foresaids shall not dig nor dispose of any clay, nor make nor burn any bricks, tiles, or pottery ware out of or upon the said grounds hereby disposed: And also declaring that the said second party and his foresaids, and the tenants and possessors of the said three steadings of ground, or of any part thereof, or of the houses or buildings erected or to be erected thereon, or any of them, shall not have power to carry on, erect or set down, and they are hereby expressly prohibited, interdicted, and discharged in all time coming from carrying on, erecting, or setting down upon or within the said three steadings of ground, or any part thereof, or the buildings erected or to be erected thereon, or any of them, any trade, business, or process of brewing, distilling, tanning, calico-printing, singeing muslin, making or preparing of candle, soap, starch, black ashes, tallow, oil lampblack, glue catcut, tripe, caoutchouc or Indian rubber, guttapercha, cudbear, vitriol, prussian blue, blood alum, soda, tartaric acid or bleaching or chemical acid or powder salt, or alkali of any kinds, boiling blubber, burning lime, manufacturing or grinding bones, slaughtering of animals, smelting or calcining of any metal or metallic ore, bones, or other substances, or any steam-engine, air-engine, starching work, glasswork, sugarwork, saltwork, deftwork, potterywork, ironwork, foundry, smithy forge furnace, machinework, cottonmill, flaxmill, silkmill, weaving shop or power-loom factory, and from letting out or using any part of the said ground for depositing dung or rubbish thereon, excepting what dung may be made or used as manure on the said ground itself, and in general from exercising or carrying on any of the said trades, businesses, processes, occupations, or manufactures, or any other trade, business, process, occupation, or manufacture; and from erecting any building on the said three steadings of ground, or either of them, that shall be hurtful, nauseous, or noxious, or occasion disturbance to the houses or inhabitants upon any part of the said lands of Horselethill belonging to the said first party in property and superiority, in favour of whom and their heirs, successors, feuars, and disponees, past and future, in the said lands, and each of them, the foregoing declaration and prohibition shall operate as a real lien and servitude upon the said three steadings of ground hereby disposed, and the buildings erected and to be erected thereon, and the same shall be and is hereby constituted a real lien and servitude upon the other parts of the said lands of Horselethill still belonging in property to the said first party, in favour of the said second party and his successors, in the said three steadings of ground hereby disposed; and the said first party bind and oblige themselves and their foresaids to insert a similar prohibition against nuisances in all dispositions and feu-rights to be hereafter granted by them of the other parts of the said lands of Horselethill belonging to them: And declaring that the said second party and his foresaids, and the tenants and

July 18, 1912.

Montgomerie-
Fleming's
Trustees v.
Kennedy.

The feu-contract also contained this provision:—"All which reservations, burdens, servitudes, conditions, restrictions, prohibitions, provisions, declarations, obligations, prestations, irritant clauses and others before written shall be real liens, burdens, and servitudes affecting the said pieces of ground and buildings thereon, and as such are hereby appointed to be engrossed in the instrument of sasine to follow hereon, and in all the future charters, precepts of clare constat, dispositions, conveyances, instruments of sasine, and investitures of the said three steadings of ground, or of the buildings thereon, or of any part thereof, otherwise the same shall, in the option of the said first party or their foresaids be void and null."

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(1) Under the feu-contract founded on the defender is bound to maintain the self-contained lodging forming No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace as a self-contained lodging, and to rebuild it when necessary of the same height, elevation, and style of architecture and upon the same foundations or sites, and he is therefore not entitled to make on the basement floor of said self-contained lodging the structural alterations and additions complained of, for the purpose of converting said floor to a use other than part of a self-contained lodging.

The defender pleaded;—(1) The pursuers' averments are irrelevant and insufficient to support the conclusions of the summons. (2) The alterations proposed by the defender not being struck at by the feu-contract the defender is entitled to absolvitor. (3) The pursuer having no interest to object to the operations proposed by the defender, the defender is entitled to absolvitor. (4) Esto that the operations proposed by the defender are in breach of the provisions of his feu-right, the pursuers having permitted similar or greater deviations by their other vassals, are barred from insisting in the present action.

On 9th February 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) dismissed the action.*

possessors of the said three steadings of ground and building thereon, or any part thereof, shall not have power, and he and they are hereby prohibited and discharged from erecting thereon any inn, hotel, or public stables, and from carrying on thereon the business of an inn, or hotelkeeper or stabler, or of selling porter, ale, beer, wines or spirituous liquors either by wholesale or retail without the express consent in writing of the said first party or their foresaids."

* "OPINION.—[After the narrative quoted above, the Lord Ordinary proceeded]—The pursuers' counsel interpreted this clause, and in particular the parenthetical expression 'which shall be occupied as self-contained lodgings,' as imposing upon the feuar and his successors a restriction as to the manner in which he and they might lawfully use the three several lodgings. Any use of the subjects except (1) as a dwelling-house, and (2) as a self-contained dwelling-house (whatever that may mean), was according to this argument expressly forbidden. I am of opinion that the clause quoted has nothing to do with the use of the subjects, but deals merely with the maintenance of the 'lodgings' or dwelling-houses erected thereon prior to the granting of the feu. The elaborate nuisance clause, which I have not thought it necessary to quote, implies that the feuar's common law right to carry on any unobjectionable trade in the premises is not taken away by the feu-contract; and I cannot hold that the parenthetical expression quoted has any such effect. Nor can I hold that the use of the word 'self-contained' (which is a word descriptive of the structure of a building) can

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First July 13, 1912. Division on 27th and 28th June 1912.

Argued for the reclaimers;—The Lord Ordinary was wrong in holding that the restriction here was not a restriction on occupation. It was not to be disregarded merely because the main restrictions on occupation were contained in a general nuisance clause and this restriction was introduced parenthetically in a subsequent clause.¹ When the deed here was examined the reason for that method of treatment was obvious. The general nuisance clause was framed to apply to all the lands of Horselethill, and the superior was taken bound to introduce similar restrictions in future feus of these lands. But this restriction was limited to this small portion of residential property only, and there was no obligation on the superior to burden the rest of Horselethill (much of which might not be residential) with a similar restriction. If, then, this was a good restriction on occupation, the defender's proposals were a direct contravention of it. Occupation as a "self-contained lodging," excluded conversion of the premises for the purpose of two separate and different occupations. In the cases in which an opposite conclusion had been reached the decisions had turned on the question of the structure only, and had proceeded on the ground that occupation by a single family was not precluded by the structural proposals there before the Court.² In the present case the basement of the defender's house, as altered, would be unsuitable for occupation as a dwelling-house, and accordingly the alteration would clearly be a contravention of the restric-

Montgomerie-
Fleming's
Trustees v.
Kennedy.

be twisted into meaning that the feuar shall not be entitled to let the subjects to more than one tenant at a time—a prohibition of a very unusual kind which if lawful would require to be very clearly expressed. I construe the parenthetical words as qualifying and interpreting the obligation of maintenance. In other words, each of the three houses must be maintained in such a state that it could be occupied as a dwelling-house by a single family. This obligation would, in my opinion render it unlawful for the feuar to make an external structural alteration, converting part of the dwelling-house into a shop with doors and windows of the kind appropriate for a shop and not for a dwelling-house. But it would not, in my opinion, prevent the feuar from using his dwelling-house or some part of it as a shop, or from making purely internal alterations with that object. If it had not been for the authorities I should have thought that the use of the word 'self-contained' would have made it incumbent on the feuar to resort to the device of maintaining an inside stair of communication between the basement and the upper storeys (which stair could be permanently closed by a locked door) but the decisions seem to be to the contrary effect. I accordingly dismiss the action. In the view which I have taken of the case it is not necessary to pronounce any decision on the defender's pleas of want of interest and acquiescence, but as these pleas were carefully argued, I may say that in my opinion the defender has not stated a relevant case in support of either of them.

"The following decisions were referred to as regards the construction of the feu-contract:—Moir's Trustees v. M'Ewan, (1880) 7 R. 1141; Buchanan v. Marr, (1883) 10 R. 936; Miller v. Carmichael, (1888) 15 R. 991; Assets Company v. Ogilvie, (1896) 24 R. 400; and Forrest v. Watson's Hospital, (1905) 8 F. 341."

¹ Ewing, &c. v. Hastie, (1878) 5 R. 439.

² Fraser v. Downie, (1877) 4 R. 942; Moir's Trustees v. M'Ewan, (1880) 7 R. 1141; Buchanan, &c. v. Marr, (1883) 10 R. 936; Miller v. Carmichael, (1888) 15 R. 991.

July 18, 1912.
 —
 Montgomerie-
 Fleming's
 Trustees v.
 Kennedy.

tion in question.¹ That the feu-contract did not provide that the subjects were to be occupied "only," or "in all time coming," as self-contained lodgings did not limit the clause in question to a restriction as to structure. As to interest, the pursuers clearly had an interest to preserve the residential character of Grosvenor Terrace, which consisted of large dwelling-houses of the highest class.²

Argued for the respondent;—The object of the clause in question in the defender's feu-contract was to secure the feu-duty and to preserve uniformity of appearance in Grosvenor Terrace. The proposed alterations here would not affect the appearance of the terrace, and would only increase the security of the feu-duty by providing an additional source of rent. If there was any ambiguity in the restrictions in the feu-contract they fell to be construed in favour of the freedom of the vassal.³ The elaborate restrictions in the nuisance clause of the contract must be taken as exhausting the restrictions intended to be imposed on occupation or use, and as there was no prohibition of cabinetmaking that occupation was not excluded.⁴ If the pursuers' contention was right that the clause here in question imposed a restriction on occupation, there would have been no necessity for inserting the nuisance clause at all. The only logical construction that could be put upon the terms of the feu-contract was that this clause of restriction dealt with structure only, and not with use. The defender's proposed alterations were not in violation of a structural restriction.⁵ Even though there should be two occupiers in the defender's premises, that was not inconsistent with its structural character as a self-contained lodging, because there might be more than one occupying tenant in a single self-contained lodging. The terms of the feu-charter in the case of Ewing v. Hastie,⁶ requiring use as "dwelling-houses only in all time coming," distinguished that case from the present, where neither the words "only" nor "in all time coming" were employed. The English decisions referred to for the reclaimers dealt with circumstances which were distinguishable from the present. In any event the condition of the neighbourhood surrounding the defender's premises had so changed since the date of the feu-contract that any interest which the pursuers might formerly have had in maintaining these restrictions had now ceased to exist.⁷ Further, the terms in which declarator and interdict were sought were too wide. Where interdict was pronounced against use of property the use prohibited must be clearly and definitely specified,

¹ Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900] 2 Ch. 388; Ilford Park Estates, Limited, v. Jacobs, [1903] 2 Ch. 522.

² Grant v. Langston, (1900) 2 F. (H. L.) 49, [1900] A. C. 383, was also referred to.

³ Middleton v. Leslie, (1894) 21 R. 781, Lord Kinneir, at p. 786.

⁴ Russell v. Cowper, &c., (1882) 9 R. 660; Fraser v. Downie, 4 R. 942, Lord Shand, at p. 946.

⁵ Inglis v. Boswell, (1849) 6 Bell's App. 427, L. C. Cottenham, at p. 439; Moir's Trustees v. M'Ewan, 7 R. 1141; Buchanan v. Marr, 10 R. 936; Miller v. Carmichael, 15 R. 991; Assets Co., Limited, v. Ogilvie, (1896) 24 R. 400, Lord Trayner, at p. 410.

⁶ 5 R. 439.

⁷ Earl of Zetland v. Hislop, &c., (1882) 9 R. (H. L.), 40; Menzies v. Caledonian Canal Commissioners, (1900) 2 F. 953, Lord McLaren, at p. 963.

so that the person interdicted might have no doubt as to what use he might make of his premises.¹

July 13, 1912.
 —
 Montgomerie-
 Fleming's
 Trustees v.
 Kennedy.

At advising on 13th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is an action brought by the superior of lands in Kelvinside against the proprietor of the house known as No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace, in order to enforce restrictions in the title of the house, which is one of a row of houses, and is what is known as a self-contained house. The proprietor has recently made some alterations with a view to changing its character. He has gutted the basement floor, and he proposes, in that basement floor, to establish a cabinetmaking and upholstery business. He has altered the rooms in the upper floors, having to find room for the kitchen which he has displaced; but in the upper floors he has made no structural alterations of a kind that need be noticed.

Now, of course, the matter depends upon the title. The title is contained in the feu-contract which was given out by the then proprietor of the lands of Kelvinside, and it contains various stipulations. The Lord Ordinary has held that the title does not contain any prohibition against use as business premises, but only contains certain prohibitions against structural alterations, which prohibitions, he considers, have not been infringed by the fact that the basement floor has been gutted. There is in the title this phrase:—"Declaring, as it is hereby expressly provided and declared, that the said Thomas Philip"—that was the original feuar—"and his foresaids shall be bound and obliged to maintain and uphold in good repair in all time coming on the said three steadings of ground the three lodgings now erected thereon which shall be occupied as self-contained lodgings, and to rebuild the same when necessary of the same height, elevation and style of architecture." Now, that, upon the face of it, looks like a prohibition against occupation except as self-contained lodgings, but the Lord Ordinary has held that it is not, upon the grounds (first) that it is expressed in a parenthetical form, and (secondly) that if it was meant as a prohibition against a certain occupation, he would have expected it in another portion of the deed, namely, in the long clause which prohibits any trade, business, or process of brewing, distilling, tanning, calico printing, and various other unpleasant commercial businesses which are all described, and, in general, prohibits the vassal from exercising or carrying on any of the said trades, businesses, processes, occupations, or manufactures, or any trade, business, process, occupation, or manufacture.

I do not think either of the reasons of the Lord Ordinary is sufficient to lead to that result. So far as the mere parenthetical expression is concerned, that makes no difference, as was shown in the case of Ewing v. Hastie.² There is no virtue or magic in an expression in a parenthetical form or in any other form. The whole question is, as was laid down long ago in the Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts,³ to discover from the deed whether the prohibition is intended to be a real burden upon the lands or merely a ¹ Reference was made to the case of Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts, (1834) 13 S. 226, 1 Rob. App. 296.

² 5 R. 439.

³ 13 S. 226, 1 Rob. App. 296.

July 13, 1912. prohibition which is personal to the first taker. I do not think, from the phrase I have already read, there is any question but that this is intended to be a real burden upon the lands. It is in collocation with the obligation to rebuild the self-contained dwelling-house in the same style of architecture, if for any reason it should get into disrepair or tumble down.

Montgomerie-
Fleming's
Trustees v.
Kennedy.
—
Ld. President. That seems to me to make it perfectly clear.

As regards the other matter, I think the Lord Ordinary omitted to notice that the superior here was proprietor of a large estate, over the whole of which he wished to put certain restrictions against what might be called noxious trades, and that that long clause was a clause which was applicable to the whole of his estate ; not only to what may be called the front ground of it, but to the back ground. When, however, he came to feu out a particular stance in what might be called the residential portion of his estate, he very naturally wished to impose other and further restrictions which would not have been at all proper for the whole of the ground, because, of course, he did not wish or propose that the whole of his ground should be occupied as self-contained lodgings.

Now, as to the meaning of a self-contained lodging, it is a well-known phrase in what may be called the Scottish building trade. No house-agent would have any difficulty in understanding it, and it means a house which has nothing of the common stair in it, which has its own door, and where the door gives access to the hall of the house ; and it certainly does not mean a house in which the basement storey is lopped off for the purpose of a shop with a separate entrance. Accordingly, I have no doubt that what is here proposed to be done is a contravention of the occupation clause.

I think that is enough, and indeed it is really all that we can do in the disposal of this case, because, so far as construction is concerned, although there are various conclusions in the summons as to construction, I do not think that you necessarily destroy the character of a self-contained house because you gut the basement. I quite agree that it is an unusual thing in a self-contained house to have a gutted basement ; but if you choose, I do not know why you should not clear out all the partitions upon your ground floor in order to make a ball-room, a billiard-room, or a skating rink, or anything you like, just as you might clear out the partitions of one of the upper floors, if you chose, for the same purposes.

Accordingly, I propose to your Lordships that, while the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor should be recalled, we should give something a good deal short of what the pursuers ask for in the form of a declarator. And the declarator I should propose is a declarator that "under and by virtue of the feu-contract mentioned in the declaratory conclusions of the summons, the defender as now proprietor of the dominium utile of the feu No. 38 therein mentioned, is not entitled to occupy the self-contained lodging forming No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace therein mentioned, erected on said feu No. 38, otherwise than as a self-contained lodging." And then, when it comes to the interdict, I do not propose to give any interdict against anything other than the one thing which the defender has proposed to do, and therefore I think the interdict should read, "Interdict, prohibit, and discharge the defender from occupying, by himself or others, the basement floor of said lodging for the purpose of a cabinetmaking or upholstery business." I do not think interdict could be given in larger terms than these, because, after all, that is the only thing the defender has proposed to do at present, and I do not see that it follows, when he is told that that is wrong, that he will propose to do anything else wrong. If we gave an interdict in general terms about a self-contained lodging, I think there would not be enough precision in it to put the defender in the position in which he is entitled to be when he has hanging over his head the danger arising from breaking an interdict.

July 13, 1912.
 —
 Montgomerie-
 Fleming's
 Trustees v.
 Kennedy.

—
 Ld. President.

I therefore move accordingly.

LORD KINNEAR and LORD MACKENZIE concurred.

The Lord President intimated that LORD JOHNSTON, who was absent at advising, also concurred.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against, and pronounced an interlocutor in the following terms:—"Find and declare that under and by virtue of the feu-contract mentioned in the declaratory conclusions of the summons, the defender as now proprietor of the dominium utile of the feu No. 38 therein mentioned is not entitled to occupy the self-contained lodging forming No. 1 Grosvenor Terrace therein mentioned erected on said feu No. 38 otherwise than as a self-contained lodging, and interdict, prohibit, and discharge the defender from occupying, by himself or others, the basement floor of said lodging for the purpose of a cabinetmaking or upholstery business, and decern."

H. B. & F. J. DEWAR, W.S.—PATRICK & JAMES, S.S.C.—Agents.

H. S. MACPHERSON & COMPANY, Appellants.—Macmillan, K.C.—
Hon. W. Watson.

No. 181.

JOHN MOORE (Surveyor of Taxes, Glasgow), Respondent.—
Sol.-Gen. Anderson—J. A. T. Robertson.

July 16, 1912.

Revenue—Income-tax—Assessment—Trade "exercised within the United Kingdom"—Income-Tax Act, 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. cap. 34), sec. 2, Sched. D.

Macpherson
 & Co. v.
 Inland
 Revenue.

A firm of manufacturers of yarns in Belgium employed as agents for the sale of their yarns in the United Kingdom a firm of yarn merchants and commission agents in Glasgow. The agents submitted the offers of intending purchasers to the Belgian firm for approval, and, after approval, entered into contracts on their behalf. The goods were consigned to the agents, by whom they were invoiced to the customers, and by whom payment was received and accounts were discharged on behalf of the Belgian firm. Monthly account sales and quarterly statements of expenses and commission were rendered by the agents to the firm.

Held that the Belgian firm exercised a trade within the United Kingdom in the sense of sec. 2, Schedule D, of the Income-Tax Act, 1853.

THIS was an appeal by stated case under the Taxes Management Act, 1880, at the instance of H. S. Macpherson & Company, yarn merchants and commission agents, Glasgow, John Moore, Surveyor of Taxes there, being the respondent, against a decision of the Income-Tax Commissioners whereby the appellants were assessed under, inter alia, July 12, 1912. Macpherson & Co. v. Inland Revenue. the Income-Tax Act, 1842, section 41 (as amended by the Income-Tax Act, 1853, section 5), and the Income-Tax Act, 1853, section 2, Schedule D,* as agents for Peltzer et fils, Verviers, Belgium, in respect of profits derived by Peltzer et fils from carrying on the trade or business of vendors of yarns within the United Kingdom, for the year ending 5th April 1911.

The case stated that the following facts were proved or admitted:—
 “(1) Peltzer et fils are manufacturers of yarns at Verviers in Belgium. (2) The appellants carry on business as yarn merchants and commission agents in Glasgow, and are agents for the sale of the yarns of Peltzer et fils in the United Kingdom. (3) The appellants stated that they have no written agency agreement between them and Peltzer et fils; but they are paid by commission on the business done, and are liable for one-half of the bad debts. (4) The orders received by the appellants are submitted to Peltzer et fils for approval, and, if approved, contracts are entered into in this country by the appellants on behalf of Peltzer et fils. (5) The goods are consigned to the appellants for delivery to the customers in this country to whom the goods are invoiced by the appellants in the form of invoice produced. (6) The appellants send account sales to Peltzer et fils monthly. A quarterly statement is rendered for expenses and commission. (7) The appellants receive payment for the goods and discharge the accounts on behalf of Peltzer et fils.”

A number of documents were also included in the case, consisting of sale-notes, invoices, and account forms of Macpherson & Company, and a correspondence relating to a particular transaction between a customer and Macpherson & Company on the one hand, and Macpherson & Company and Peltzer et fils on the other.

The sale-notes were signed H. S. M. & Co., and stated that the orders were booked “on account of the spinners P. & F.” The name of P. & F. did not appear on the invoices or accounts which bore to be rendered by “H. S. Macpherson & Co., Agents.” The correspondence showed that H. S. Macpherson & Company had no discretion in the matter of fixing prices, and that this fact was known to the customers, and that H. S. Macpherson & Company endeavoured to arrange prices to suit both parties.

The case was heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Mackenzie, and Lord Cullen) on 16th July 1912.

Argued for the appellants;—The question to be determined was, Were Peltzer et fils carrying on a trade within the United Kingdom? They were not trading within the United Kingdom,¹ but July 16, 1912. were merely trading with the United Kingdom, which was an entirely different thing.² The question was really a jury one, but the following points were conclusively in favour of the appellants' contention. Peltzer et fils had no branch or office and kept no stock in this country, and their name was nowhere exhibited, and they had no bank account. Their place of business was in Belgium, where all offers were finally considered and all contracts finally concluded, and these facts were within the knowledge of the customers, as was proved by the correspondence produced. The appellants were ordinary commission agents, the channel through whom the goods of Peltzer et fils, and also the goods of numerous other foreign traders, were distributed in the United Kingdom. They were not employees of Peltzer et fils, and had nothing to do with the handling or ascertainment of profits. They had not even the means of knowing whether the Scottish transactions of Peltzer et fils were in fact profitable, and could not compel their principals to disclose that information. What the Income-Tax Acts meant to tax was the foreign firm which had a branch of its business in this country. It was out of the question to say that the appellants, a firm of commission agents, were a branch of Peltzer et fils. The cases where income-tax had been held to be payable were all distinguishable from the present. In Watson v. Sandie & Hall,³ the goods were shipped to this country before the contracts were made, and the agents in the United Kingdom had full discretion as to prices. They invoiced the goods in their own names and guaranteed payment by the customers. In Turner v. Rickman,⁴ the agents paid freight, were liable for damage in transitu, and kept a stock of goods. In any event, *Grainger & Son v. Gough*⁵ was preferable to the last-mentioned case, and was in favour of the appellants. In Pommery & Greno v. Althorpe,⁶ the foreigner had an office, stock, and bank account in this country. In Werle & Company v. Colquhoun,⁶ the contracts were concluded in the United Kingdom and there was a branch office.

* The Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), sec. 41 (as amended by the Income-Tax Act, 1853, sec. 5), enacts:—“Any person not resident in [the United Kingdom] whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, shall be chargeable in the name of . . . any factor, agent, or receiver having the receipt of any profits or gains arising as herein mentioned and belonging to such person in the like manner and to the like amount as would be charged if such person were resident in [the United Kingdom] and in the actual receipt thereof. . . .”

The Income-Tax Act, 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. cap. 34), sec. 2, Schedule D, imposes income-tax, inter alia, “For and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person whatever, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, although not resident within the United Kingdom, from . . . any profession, trade, employment, or vocation exercised within the United Kingdom. . . .”

Argued for the respondent;—Peltzer et fils were carrying on or exercising a trade within the United Kingdom. The appellants were agents for Peltzer et fils, and as such made contracts, delivered goods, and received payment therefor in this country. These elements constituted the carrying on of a trade in this country. *Grainger & Son v. Gough*² was distinguishable, for in that case the contracts were not made and the goods were not delivered in this country. The appellants suffered no hardship in being assessed on the profits earned by Peltzer et fils, from whom they could recover any payments they made for income-tax on these profits. The fact that the appellants had not the information necessary to make a return was immaterial.⁷

LORD PRESIDENT.—The question in this class of case really comes to be a question of fact—whether foreign merchants do or do not exercise a

¹ Crookston Brothers v. Inland Revenue, 1911 S. C. 217.

² Grainger & Son v. Gough, [1896] A. C. 325.

³ [1898] 1 Q. B. 326.

⁴ (1898) 4 T. C. 25.

⁵ (1886) 56 L. J., Q. B. 155, 2 T. C. 182.

⁶ (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 753.

⁷ Pommery & Greno v. Althorpe, (1886) 56 L. J., Q. B. 155, per Denman, J., at p. 159.

July 16, 1912. trade within the United Kingdom. The mere fact that they are attacked, so to speak, not directly but through their agents, is an accident. Section 41 of the Income-Tax Act of 1842 allows the Revenue to collect the tax easily by proceeding against an agent in whose hands are the principal's moneys. Now in this case the agents are thus proceeded against, and there is no controversy that the agents have the principal's money in their hands, therefore there is no difficulty of the kind which wrecked the case of Crookston Brothers v. Inland Revenue.¹

Macpherson
& Co. v.
Inland
Revenue.

Ld. President.

Coming to the question whether Peltzer et fils are or are not exercising a trade in the United Kingdom, I rather think that it is truly a jury question. I do not think I should be adding to the store of knowledge in the profession if I again went through the long series of cases which have been decided on these points, all the more so because that has been done with great minuteness by the various learned Judges who delivered opinions in the case of *Crookston Brothers v. Inland Revenue*¹; and were I to do so, I should be doing little more than repeating what they there said. I therefore go straight to the facts of this case. Although it is a jury question, the facts are found for us. No doubt in those revenue cases we are always entitled, as an appeal Court, to draw inferences from the facts, but the facts themselves come before us, not on a proof, but in the form of findings. When I turn to the case I find that offers to buy goods at a price named are received by the appellants and are submitted to Peltzer et fils for approval, and, if approved, contracts are entered into in this country by the appellants on behalf of Peltzer et fils; and I find also that the goods are consigned to the appellants for delivery to the customers in this country, to whom the goods are invoiced by the appellants. I find further that the appellants receive payment for the goods and discharge accounts on behalf of Peltzer et fils. Now, if all those facts are given to me as true, I am driven to the conclusion that Peltzer et fils are exercising a trade in this country, and if so, they are liable in respect of the profits they make upon that trade. They are properly attacked through their agents, Messrs Macpherson & Company, who, if they do not choose, as they have not chosen, to state an account so that the amount of profits may be strictly determined, cannot complain if a random assessment is made upon them by the Crown.

Upon the whole matter I am of opinion that the determination of the Commissioners is right.

LORD MACKENZIE.—I am of the same opinion. The case, as put to us by Mr Macmillan, was really this: taking the facts as found here, Would any man say, in a popular sense, that Peltzer et fils were exercising a trade within the United Kingdom? Would a person not come to the conclusion that they were trading with the United Kingdom? I think the facts that have been found would lead the ordinary man to the conclusion that they were exercising a trade within the United Kingdom. What leads me to that conclusion is that contracts are made in this country by the appellants on behalf of Peltzer et fils; that apparently the appellants have a system by which they send account sales to Peltzer et fils monthly, and a quarterly July 16, 1912, statement is rendered for expenses and for the commission paid by Peltzer et fils to Macpherson & Company. Macpherson & Company receive payment for the goods. They discharge the accounts on behalf of Peltzer et fils, and the goods are consigned to Macpherson & Company for delivery to the customers in this country. That seems to me to be sufficient to lead to the reasonable conclusion that Peltzer et fils are carrying on business within the United Kingdom. The argument was used that no branch of Peltzer et fils had been opened in the United Kingdom. Personally, that argument would or would not move me in a case of this kind, according to the description of the article dealt in. One can quite well imagine that it would be very difficult to say that the trade of selling certain goods could be carried on within the United Kingdom without having a branch, in cases where it is necessary for a customer to see, handle, or sample the goods; but when one looks to the nature of the goods disclosed in the documents before us, it does not appear to me that that argument is of very much weight in this case.

¹ 1911 S. C. 217.

Macpherson
& Co. v.
Inland
Revenue.
—
Lord Mac-
kenzie.

The other points made in regard to there being no exhibition of the name Peltzer et fils, and their having no banking account, must be answered, I think, by applying this test: If anyone desired to get Peltzer et fils' goods in Scotland or in the United Kingdom, would he or would he not be able to get the necessary information to enable him to supply himself with them? I think there is sufficient on the facts before us to enable one to say that such a person would be told, "You can get Peltzer's goods quite well here; go to their agents, Macpherson & Company, in Glasgow."

With regard to the Solicitor-General's answer to the suggested practical difficulty of finding out the amount of the profits upon which the assessment is to be laid, I can only say this, that it is not necessary to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion upon that matter, because it is not one with which the Court have to deal. If the Act of Parliament says the amount of profits is to be ascertained, ascertained they must be whether that can be done in a satisfactory manner or not. Accordingly, I do not think we require to go into that matter in order to arrive at a conclusion in regard to this case. I am of opinion that the determination of the Commissioners is right.

LORD CULLEN concurred.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

J. W. & J. MACKENZIE, W.S.—SIR PHILIP J. HAMILTON GRIERSON, Solicitor of Inland Revenue—Agents.

- No. 182. JAMES FRANCIS SOUTER AND ANOTHER (Alexander Watt's Testamentary Trustees), AND OTHERS, First, Second, and Third Parties.—
 July 19, 1912. Valentine.
 Watt's MRS HELEN WATT OR JAMIESON AND OTHERS, Fourth and Fifth Trustees v. Parties.—T. G. Robertson.
 Jamieson.

Succession—Faculties and powers—Validity of exercise—Unrestricted power of appointment—Gift of liferent—Distinction between unrestricted powers of appointment and powers of apportionment among a prescribed class.

A testatrix by her will, after providing for the payment of certain legacies, bequeathed the "residue" of her estate to her sisters in liferent and to her nieces in fee. The testatrix, in addition to her own estate, had a power of appointment over a portion of her father's estate liferented by her, the power being in the form of a direction in her father's will to his trustees "to pay over her portion to such person or persons, and if more than one, in such proportions as she shall by any writing under her hand direct or appoint."

Held that the testatrix by the bequest of residue in her will had validly exercised the power of appointment conferred on her by her father's testament, notwithstanding that she thereby restricted the right of certain appointees to a liferent.

Observations on the distinction between a power to apportion a fund among the members of a prescribed class, and a power to appoint it among such persons as the donee of the power might direct.

- 2D DIVISION. ALEXANDER WATT, shipowner, Macduff, died in 1874, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement, by which he directed in regard to a certain share of the residue of his estate that his trustees should hold it in trust "for the use and behoof of my daughters, Helen Watt, Eliza Watt, and Jane Watt, equally between them in liferent for their liferent use allenerly, paying to each during her life the annual income or produce of [one-third of the said share], and on the death of each of my said daughters my trustees shall pay over the capital or fee to her children, if any, in such proportions as she by any writing under her hand shall appoint, or failing any such writing, to and among her children equally between them share and share alike: And in the case of any of my daughters dying without leaving issue, my trustees shall pay over her portion to such person or persons, and if more than one, in such proportions as she shall by any writing under her hand direct or appoint, and failing such direction and appointment, my trustees shall pay and divide the portion of any daughter or daughters dying without leaving issue to and among her surviving brothers and sisters, and the issue per stirpes of any predeceasing brothers and sisters, equally between them share and share alike."

Mr Watt's daughter Eliza became the wife of Dr John Ferguson. She died on 14th July 1911, predeceased by her husband, and without issue. Dr Ferguson, who had two sons by a previous marriage, left a will by which he bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife in liferent and his children in fee, but gave his wife an absolute power of disposal over his books and other personal belongings. She left a holograph last will and testament dated 2nd April 1910, which commenced:—"I, Eliza Watt or Ferguson, do hereby state and record my wishes as to the disposal of my property and belongings after my death. As sole executrix of my dear husband's estate, I desire that it should be dealt with first : . . . July 19, 1912.

 Any part of the estate left to me, or over which I have control, I hereby leave and bequeath to my stepsons . . .” The will then proceeded:—“As regards my own estate I do hereby leave and bequeath . . .” and the testatrix thereupon bequeathed a number of special legacies. She then proceeded to make a bequest of residue in the following terms:—“After any special legacies which I may now or hereafter make, I desire that the residue of estate shall be divided between my sisters, Helen Jamieson and Jane or Jeannie Gardner, in liferent,” and she destined the fee to her nieces, Nora Jamieson, Lena Gardner, and Leila Gardner, in certain proportions. Several codicils were annexed to the will, by which additional legacies were bequeathed, and an executor appointed, but which did not expressly deal with “residue.”

A question having arisen as to whether Mrs Ferguson had validly exercised the power of appointment under her father's will, a special case was presented to the Court.

The only parties to the case who offered contentions were (1) a surviving brother of Mrs Ferguson and three children of a predeceasing brother, third parties, and (2) Mrs Ferguson's executor, and the residuary legatees under her will, fifth parties.

The third parties contended that the testamentary writings did not, and the fifth parties contended that they did, operate as a valid and effectual exercise of the power of appointment.

The following question was submitted for the opinion and judgment of the Court:—“Has the power of appointment conferred upon the said Mrs Eliza Watt or Ferguson under her father's testamentary writings been validly exercised by her in her said testament and codicils?”

The case was heard before the Second Division on 12th July 1912.

Argued for the third parties;—By a bequest of his moveable estate a testator was admittedly presumed to execute any power of appointment of which he was possessed.¹ But the presumption was easily displaced by proof of a contrary intention,² and it was very slight when, as here, the exercise of the power had to be construed out of a bequest of residue.³ In the present case the testatrix, when making her will, had in view any powers of appointment which she possessed, as appeared from the reference to estate “over which I have control,” in the early part of the settlement when she was dealing with her husband's estate. But when she came to deal with her own estate there was no such reference, and the inference was that she did not intend to exercise a power of appointment by her bequest of residue. Further, the presumption was negatived by the fact that the testatrix's disposition of her estate, if it was to be regarded as an intended exercise of the power, would have been an invalid appointment. The appointment alleged here was invalid inasmuch as it gave the liferent of the appointed funds to one person and the fee to another.⁴ The

¹ Bray v. Bruce's Executors, (1906) 8 F. 1078.

² Mackenzie v. Gillanders, (1874) 1 R. 1050, per Lord Deas, at p. 1054.

³ Bowie's Trustees v. Paterson, (1889) 16 R. 983; Ramsay's Trustees v. Ramsay, 1909 S. C. 628.

⁴ Lennox's Trustees v. Lennox, (1880) 8 R. 14; Wood v. Cotton, (1888) 40 Ch. D. 41; Porter v. De Quetteville, (1890) 45 Ch. D. 179. (Lord Salvesen referred to Gillon's Trustees v. Gillon, (1890) 17 R. 435.)

July 19, 1912. direction to the trustees under the will conferring the power was to "pay over" the funds to the appointees. This could only mean payment of capital, and made it incompetent for the testatrix to restrict the right of any of the appointees to a liferent.

Watt's
Trustees v.
Jamieson.

Argued for the fifth parties;—Not only did the testatrix intend to exercise the power of appointment, but she had done so in a valid manner. Proof of her intention to exercise the power was, according to the general rule, supplied by the bequest of her moveable estate,¹ and there were no indications to the contrary. In considering the further question, namely, whether the power had been validly exercised, it was important to notice the terms in which the power was conferred: it was a power to "appoint" among such persons as the testatrix might direct. This was in effect a general power to test, and was quite different from a mere power to "apportion" the fund among the members of a class.² There was accordingly nothing to prevent the testatrix from restricting the right of the appointees to a liferent, since she had full liberty to deal with the fund by deed in any way she chose.

At advising on 19th July 1912,—

LORD DUNDAS.—[After narrating the facts]—I have no doubt that, upon the terms of Mrs Ferguson's will, her residuary bequest is so conceived as to operate as an exercise of the power conferred upon her by her father's settlement, unless a contrary intention can be justly inferred from the language of her will. A very recent and highly authoritative decision on this branch of the law is Bray v. Bruce's Executors.¹ The rubric bears that "a bequest of the moveable estate of a testator is to be construed as including any personal estate which he may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, and operates as an execution of such power unless a contrary intention appears by the will." The strength of the presumption is illustrated by the facts of the case and expressed in the opinions of the learned Judges. Mrs Bruce had, under the settlement of her deceased husband, three separate powers by way of appointment. By her will she expressly exercised two out of the three powers; but the will was silent as to her intention in regard to the third. A Court of seven Judges (Lord Stormonth-Darling doubting, but not dissenting) held, adhering to an interlocutor pronounced by me as Lord Ordinary, that the residuary clause of Mrs Bruce's will was a valid exercise of the power with which she had not expressly dealt. In the case before us I can find no ground for an argument to rebut the legal presumption nearly so strong as was available in Bray's case¹; and I am accordingly of opinion that the power conferred upon Mrs Ferguson by her father's settlement was validly exercised by her in terms of her will.

The contention urged by Mr Valentine as against the presumption came, as I understood it, to this: that Mr Watt's direction to his trustees, in the event of Mrs Ferguson's decease without leaving issue, to "pay over her portion to such person or persons, and, if more than one, in such proportions as she shall by any writing under her hand direct or appoint," was July 19, 1912. not duly echoed in, or carried out by, Mrs Ferguson's "desire" that the residue of her estate should be divided between her two sisters in liferent, with destination of the fee to her nieces as set forth in her settlement. It was argued, with ingenuity and some plausibility, that Mrs Ferguson's power under her father's settlement was in truth to apportion and divide the fund; and that, in respect she disposed of her residue in favour of beneficiaries in liferent and fee respectively, it could not be held, looking to the legal decisions on this subject, that she intended or professed to exercise that power; or otherwise, that, if she did so intend, the bequest is illegal and invalid as an apportionment.

¹ Bray v. Bruce's Executors, 8 F. 1078.

² Paterson's Trustees v. Joy, 1910 S. C. 1029, per Lord Johnston, at p. 1034.

When one looks fairly and carefully into the matter, I think this contention is fallacious. There is a complete and radical distinction between a power to apportion or divide a fund among the members of a prescribed class, and an unfettered gift of a fund to such person or persons, in such manner, and in such proportions as the donee of the power may direct or appoint. We are here, I think, clearly in the second of these categories, and not in the first. It is true that the word "appoint" is often used as equivalent to "apportion"; but the distinction I have indicated is a real one, and we must look to the substance as well as to the words in any given case. It has, no doubt, been decided that, in proper cases of apportionment or division among members of a class, the person who exercises the power must neither, on the one hand, give any portion of the fund to a stranger to the power, nor, on the other hand, restrict to a bare liferent the right of any member of the class who is admitted to the benefit, because (I apprehend) that does not, in the eye of the law, amount to an apportionment of a share of the fund to be divided. But the latter of these rules, which has, to my thinking, been pressed to an unfortunate extent in some of the cases, cannot, in my judgment, have any place at all where the donee of the power is not fettered by any reference to a prescribed class, but is free to direct or appoint the fund to or among any person or persons he pleases. In such case I see no reason why the donee of the power should not direct or appoint his gift in liferent and fee, just as well as in fee merely. So far as I am aware, the Court has never applied the somewhat artificial rule above indicated to a case where no class of beneficiaries is prescribed amongst whom the fund is to be apportioned or divided, and I do not suppose it is likely to do so. In the case before us, it appears to me that Mrs Ferguson's power under her father's settlement was quite unfettered; no class of beneficiaries was prescribed or suggested; she had right to dispose of the fund, in such manner as she pleased, to any person or persons, by writing under her hand, whether inter vivos or mortis causa, though, of course, the writing could only take effect in the event of her death without leaving issue. If I am right in this view, there seems to be no substantial force in a subordinate argument presented by Mr Valentine, to the effect that Mr Watt's direction to his trustees to "pay over" the fund must be read as meaning to pay it over once and for all, and therefore as excluding the idea of any interposed liferent rights. I think this would involve an unnecessarily restricted reading of the words "pay over," and I see no reason why the language of Mr Watt's settlement should not be wide

July 19, 1912. enough to include the payment over of the fund in liferent and fee, as Mrs
 Watt's Ferguson desired it should be made.

Trustees v.
 Jamieson.

Lord Dundas. For the reasons stated, I am of opinion that no contrary intention can in this case be shown to rebut the presumption that Mrs Ferguson intended to exercise her power, and that she did validly exercise it by her last will and testament. I am therefore for answering the question put to us in the affirmative.

LORD SALVESEN.—[In his Lordship's absence his opinion was read by Lord Dundas]—In this case I have had more difficulty than Lord Dundas in holding that we should answer the question of law in the affirmative. My difficulty arises from the decision in the case of Baikie's Trustees v. Oxley.¹ In that case a power was given by a father to his daughter, then a widow, with reference to a sum of £2000, of which she had the liferent, to divide the fee "among such children, by such proportions as she shall direct." She appointed to one child £5 and the liferent of £1000, and to the other £995 and the fee of the £1000 so to be liferented. It was held by a majority of the First Division, diss. Lord Deas, that the above was, in part, a bad appointment, and that the whole deed was thereby vitiated. On a careful perusal of that case I think, however, it must be regarded as special, and not as laying down a rule that a party having a power of division of a fund among a class may not allot a liferent of the fund to one person and the fee to another, where there is no indication of the intention of the donor of the power to the contrary. This was expressly so stated in Lord Curriehill's opinion at the commencement. I do not, therefore, think that it really presents any obstacle to the judgment proposed; more especially as there is, in the present case, no difficulty as to the objects of the power. I cannot at present see any good reason why, if a power is conferred to appoint in such proportions as the donee of the power may direct, that power might not be validly exercised by giving a liferent of the whole or part of the fund to one, and the fee to others. In any event I think there is ground for saying that later decisions have modified and in part overruled the decision in *Baikie's*¹ case; and we were not referred to any direct authority where, in the case of a power to appoint without limitation as to the objects of the power, an appointment was held not to be good because it postponed the division of the fee, in whole or in part, in order to provide for a liferent.

On the other question I think we are bound by the case of Bray,² and that there is no sufficient indication of a contrary intention to overcome the strong presumption that a general disposition and settlement is to be construed as including all estate over which the testator had a power of appointment. I concur, therefore, in Lord Dundas's opinion, and very much for the reasons he has assigned.

LORD GUTHRIE.—I concur in the opinion of Lord Dundas.

Lord Dundas stated that his opinion was also concurred in by the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK, who was absent at the advising.

¹ 24 D. 589.

² 8 F. 1078.

LORD HUNTER was present when the case was advised.

July 19, 1912.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the affirmative.

Watt's
Trustees v.
Jamieson.

WINCHESTER & NICHOLSON, S.S.C.—A. STUART WATT, W.S.—Agents.

WILLIAM CAREY, Pursuer.—Macquisten.

No. 183.

ROBERT ORR CAREY AND OTHERS (Frederick Charles Carey's Trustees), Defenders.—Moncrieff, K.C.—J. M. Hunter.

July 19, 1912.

Process—Jury Trial—Case sent to sittings—Postponement of trial—Grounds for postponement—Act of Sederunt, 19th November 1910, sec. 4. Carey v. Carey.

Where one of the parties to a jury trial has objected to the trial proceeding at the sittings and the Lord Ordinary has repelled the objection and sent the case to the sittings, a postponement of the trial will not be granted unless strong grounds can be shown for interfering with the decision of the Lord Ordinary, or unless there has been a change of circumstances since the date of that decision.

Circumstances in which the Court refused a motion by the pursuer for the postponement of a jury trial which had been sent to the sittings, the grounds on which the motion was made being that one material witness was abroad and the address of another could not be ascertained.

ON 27th January 1912 an action was brought by William Carey ^{1ST DIVISION.} against Robert Orr Carey and others, the testamentary trustees of ^{Lord Dewar.} Frederick Charles Carey, for reduction of the testator's trust-disposition and settlement.

The case was in the Lord Ordinary's adjustment roll on 19th March 1912, when the adjustment was continued until 14th May.

Issues were approved on 22nd May and the Lord Ordinary fixed 21st November 1912 as the date of the trial.

On 27th June the defenders moved that the case be remitted for trial at the sittings. The pursuer objected to this course on the ground that he could not be ready to proceed with the case by that time. The Lord Ordinary (Dewar) repelled the objection and remitted the case for trial at the sittings, and the trial was fixed to take place on 26th July 1912.

On 19th July the case was called in Single Bills of the First Division (without Lord Johnston) on a notice of motion for the pursuer that the trial be postponed on the ground of the absence of material witnesses. He stated that one of his most important witnesses was in Switzerland, and that the address of another material witness was unknown.

Counsel for the defenders objected to postponement of the trial on the ground that their productions had been lodged and their witnesses cited for the date fixed.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is a motion for the postponement of a trial which has been fixed for the sittings and is set down to be tried next Friday. As your Lordships are aware, the practice in jury trials has been very much modified by a recent Act of Sederunt,¹ which swept away a great deal of the somewhat cumbrous and antiquated procedure which ¹ Act of Sederunt, 19th November 1910.

July 19, 1912. formerly obtained, and under the present Act of Sederunt the general scheme for the disposal of jury trials, a scheme which I may say was conceived entirely in the interest of the public, is that jury trials should, if possible, be tried by the Lord Ordinary. If, however, the Lord Ordinary should be unable to give a day for the trial before the next ensuing sittings, then it is intended that the trial should take place at the sittings in order to avoid delay. In this case the Lord Ordinary was applied to to fix a day for the trial after the adjustment of issues, which took place on 22nd May, but he could not give a day till November. Accordingly, the defenders took advantage of their right to move the Lord Ordinary to remit the case to the sittings for trial. It was in the power of the pursuer to object to this, as he did, and to give any good reason why he could not be ready for trial then ; but the Lord Ordinary did not consider that the reasons then tabled were sufficient, and he sent the case to the sittings. It is still perfectly competent, notwithstanding that, that either party should come to us and ask that the trial should be postponed, but I wish to lay it down for the guidance of the profession that such a motion will not be granted unless very strong grounds can be shown for interfering with the decision of the Lord Ordinary, or unless there has been a change of circumstances since the date of the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, e.g., the death or illness of one of the parties.

That being the general rule, I come to the application for postponement in this case. I cannot see that we have before us any good grounds for interfering with what the Lord Ordinary has done. There has been no undue haste in the proceedings here. The summons was signeted on 27th January 1912, but the pursuer, who has in his hands the progress of a case in its early stages, did not have the production held satisfied till 19th March, and the adjustment of the record was continued until the beginning of the summer session. Now all along the pursuer must have known that the trial was coming on, but the only thing he can say in moving for postponement is that one witness who is very material is in Switzerland, and that another material witness is a roving gentleman whose present address is unknown to the pursuer. I therefore think this motion should be refused.

LORD KINNEAR and LORD MACKENZIE concurred.

THE COURT refused the motion.

PURVES & SIMPSON, S.S.C.—SIMPSON & MARWICK, W.S.—Agents.

THE MARQUIS OF LINLITHGOW AND YOUNG'S PARAFFIN LIGHT AND No. 184.
MINERAL OIL COMPANY, LIMITED, Pursuers (Reclaimers).—

Rankine, K.C.—Clyde, K.C.—Hon. W. Watson.

June 11, 1912.

THE NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY COMPANY, Defenders (Respondents).—
D.-F. Dickson—Cooper, K.C.—Macmillan.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Compulsory Powers—Canal—Mines and Minerals—Reservation of minerals—Substance not regarded as a mineral at date of acquisition of lands—Oil shale.

A private Act passed in 1817, authorising the construction of a canal, reserved to the owners of any lands through which the canal should be made "the mines and minerals lying within or under the said lands." A statutory form was also provided by which lands acquired for the purpose of making the canal might be conveyed to the canal company, the registration of which was declared to have the same effect as a formal disposition followed by charter and sasine. The price of certain lands required for the formation of the canal was agreed upon and consigned in 1818, in which year the canal company entered into possession of them, and the canal was constructed and opened for traffic in 1822. The statutory conveyance of these lands, however, was not completed and registered until 1862.

In 1909 the representative of the vendor of the lands brought an action against the proprietors of the canal in which he sought declarator of his right of property in a seam of oil shale subjacent and adjacent to the canal within the lands in question. It was admitted by the defenders that by 1862 oil shale had become recognised as a "mineral" in the sense of the reservation, but they denied that it was recognised as a "mineral" in 1818.

Held (1) that what was denoted by the term "mineral" fell to be ascertained as at 1818, the date when possession of the lands passed to the defenders, and not at 1862, the date of the statutory conveyance; and (2) that in 1818 oil shale was not described as a mineral in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners; and defenders assolized.

Diss. Lord Johnston, who was of opinion (1) that oil shale was ejusdem generis with coal, a recognised mineral in 1818, and was therefore included in the reservation, and (2) that, in any case, on a construction of the statute, the terms of the reservation were wide enough to include a substance which first became recognised as a mineral after its date, and that the authority of decided cases did not compel the exclusion of a substance so circumstanced from a reservation in the terms in question.

Compulsory Powers—Canal—Right of support—Mines and Minerals—Notice to "stop working"—Union Canal Act, 1817 (57 Geo. III. cap. lvi.).

Terms of a private Act passed in 1817, authorising the construction of a canal, which were held to confer upon the canal company a right of support for their canal, but subject to the qualification that, where in order to support the canal the subjacent and adjacent minerals had to be sacrificed as a commercial subject, the company were bound to make satisfaction for the value of such minerals to the owner thereof.

Opinion that, where a private Act gave a right to a canal company to "stop the working" of minerals under or near their canal if necessary for its safety, an intimation from the canal company to the owner of the minerals that they would hold him liable for any damage done to the canal by working the minerals beneath it was, on the assumption that the minerals could not be worked beneath the canal without endangering it, a notice to "stop the working" in the sense of the Act.

June 11, 1912. ON 27th April 1909 the Marquis of Linlithgow and Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, his tenants in a seam of oil shale, brought an action against the North British Railway Company, the proprietors of an undertaking known as the Union Canal, in which it was sought to establish certain rights of the pursuers in this seam of oil shale, part of which underlay the defenders' canal.

Marquis of Linlithgow v. North British Railway Co.
1st Division.
Lord Skerrington.

The summons in the action concluded for declarator in these terms:—“(First) that the pursuer the said Victor Alexander John Marquis of Linlithgow is heritable proprietor of the whole minerals, and in particular of the seams of coal and shale or oil shale lying under or near the canal and works thereto belonging known as the Union Canal and belonging to the defenders, so far as the said minerals lie within or under the area in the county of Linlithgow outlined in red on the ordnance survey plan herewith produced, and that the pursuers Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, by virtue and in terms of the said lease are tenants of the whole coal and oil shale lying under or near the said Union Canal, so far as the said minerals lie within or under the area outlined in red on said plan: (Second) that the pursuers' mines and workings in and of the seam of oil shale belonging to them as aforesaid and known as the Broxburn main seam of oil shale, the present extent of which is delineated on the said plan, cannot be worked or carried (1) any further in the direction of or towards the defenders' said canal and works thereto belonging, or otherwise (2) within 40 feet or thereby on either side of the waterway of the said canal, without endangering the safety of the navigation of the said canal and the works thereto belonging; and that it is necessary for the safety of the said navigation and the works thereto belonging to stop the working of the pursuers' said mines and minerals [further in these directions], and that the pursuers have been and now are stopped within the meaning of the Act 57 George III. cap. lvi., and in particular section 113 of said Act, from working their said mines and minerals [further in these directions]: (Third) [Then followed an alternative declarator that the pursuers' mines had been carried as far towards the canal as they could be without danger to the mines, and that, owing to danger to the mines and to the canal, the pursuers were prevented from carrying them further by reason of the execution of the statutory powers with regard to the construction and maintenance of the canal]: (Fourth) that the defenders are bound under and in terms of the Acts 57 George III. cap. lvi., and 59 George III. cap. xxix., and other Acts relative to their undertaking, to make recompense or satisfaction to the pursuers according to their respective interests (1) for the value of the said mines and minerals the working whereof has been stopped as aforesaid, or otherwise (2) for the damage sustained by them respectively by reason of the execution of the powers conferred by said Acts, and in any event or otherwise (3) for the value of the said mines and minerals the working whereof has been stopped as aforesaid, in so far as said mines and minerals do not lie or are not within or under the lands or grounds belonging to the defenders under and by virtue of a disposition in favour of their predecessors the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, granted by the Right Honourable John Alexander Earl of Hopetoun, of date 30th May and 7th June, and recorded in the particular Register of Sasines applicable to the county of Linlithgow at Edinburgh 7th July, all in the year 1862.” There was also a conclusion that the defenders should be ordained to proceed to the ascertainment of the satisfaction falling to be paid to June 11, 1912. the pursuers.

The pursuers averred (Cond. 1) that the Union Canal was constructed by a company incorporated in 1817 by Act of Parliament, 57 Geo. III. cap. lvi.,* and was now vested in the defenders, and that

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

* The Union Canal Act, 1817 (57 Geo. III. cap. lvi.), is entitled "An Act for making and maintaining a navigable canal from the Lothian Road, near the city of Edinburgh, to join the Forth and Clyde Navigation Canal near Falkirk, in the county of Stirling, 27th June 1817."

The preamble sets forth the public utility of making and maintaining such a canal, and sec. 1 incorporates a company for that purpose.

Sec. 33 authorises the company to make a canal through certain enumerated parishes and townships between the points above mentioned, and to make and maintain feeders from certain rivers and streams.

Sec. 35 enacts:—"That it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Company, their Deputies, Agents, Officers, and Workmen, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, to enter into and upon the Lands and Grounds of or belonging to the King's Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, or of any other Person or Persons, Bodies Politic, Corporate, or Collegiate whomsoever, and to survey and take Levels of the same, or any part thereof, and to set out and ascertain such parts thereof as they shall think necessary and proper for making the said intended Canal, Reservoirs, Feeders, . . . and also to bore, dig, cut, trench, sough, get, remove, take, and carry away, and lay Earth, Clay, Stone, Soil, Rubbish, Trees, Roots of Trees, Beds of Gravel or Sand, or any other Matters or Things which may be dug or got in making the said intended Canal, Reservoirs, Feeders, and other Works, or in making any Basin or Basins, Feeder or Feeders, Aqueduct or Aqueducts, or out of the Lands or Grounds of any Person or Persons adjoining thereto, which the said Company are hereby empowered to enter for the Purpose of getting and taking away such Materials as may be necessary, requisite, and proper for making, carrying on, continuing, maintaining, or repairing the said intended Canal, Reservoirs, Feeders, and other Works . . . and also to construct, erect, make, and do all Matters and Things which they shall think convenient and necessary for making, effecting, extending, preserving, improving, completing, and using the intended Canal, Reservoirs, Feeders, and other Works, in pursuance of and according to the true intent and Meaning of this Act, they the said Company, their several Deputies, Agents, Officers, and Workmen, doing as little Damage as may be in the execution of the several Powers to them hereby granted, and making Satisfaction in Manner hereinafter mentioned to the Owners and Proprietors of, and other persons interested in any Lands, Tenements, or other Heritages, Waters, Watercourses, Brooks, or Rivers respectively, which shall be taken, used, removed, diverted, or prejudiced, for all Damages to be by them sustained in or by the execution of all or any of the Powers of this Act . . ."

Sec. 50 provides that "the lands and grounds to be taken or used for such canal and towing paths shall not exceed thirty yards in breadth," except at certain specified places.

It is further enacted:—

Sec. 59. "That the Vendor or Vendors, and all other Person or Persons interested in the lands to be sold to the said Company, as Superiors or otherwise, shall be entitled to the same Rights and Privileges from the remaining Parts of these Lands as if such Sale or Sales to the said Company had never been made."

Sec. 60. "That after any Lands, Grounds, Tenements, or Heritages, shall be set out and ascertained for making the said Canal, Reservoirs, and Feeders . . . it shall and may be lawful to and for all Bodies Politic, June 11, 1912. certain lands necessary for the construction of the canal belonging to Lord Linlithgow's predecessor were conveyed by him to the Company's successors by disposition dated 30th May and 7th June 1862, entry being declared to be at Whitsunday 1818, notwithstanding the date thereof.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

The history of the transactions which terminated in this disposition was narrated by the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) as follows:—
“The work began in 1818 and the canal was opened for traffic in 1822. The sum of £3000, the agreed-on price of the ground, was consigned by the Canal Company in 1818 under authority of the Court for behoof of the heirs of entail in the lands and barony of Hopetoun, and £1597, the remainder of the compensation money, being damages as assessed by arbitration in 1826, was similarly consigned in 1830. In 1851 the Canal Company and its statutory successor, the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, sued Lord Hopetoun for declarator that he was bound to execute a conveyance

Corporate, or Collegiate, Corporations aggregate or Sole, Heirs of Entail, Husbands, Trustees, Tutors, and Curators, and all and every Person or Persons whatsoever though under any legal Disability or Incapacity whatsoever, who is, are, or shall be seized, possessed of, or interested in any Lands, Grounds, Tenements, or Heritages, which shall be so set out and ascertained for the Purposes aforesaid, to contract for, sell, and convey the same, and every Part thereof, unto the said Company . . . and all such Contracts, Agreements, Sales, Conveyances, and Assurances, shall be made at the Expence of the said Company; and such of them as shall be made of any Lands, Tenements, or other Heritages to the said Company, may be made in the following Form, or in Words to the same effect; videlicet,
‘I, A. B. of . . . in Consideration of the Sum of . . . to me paid by . . . do hereby grant, dispo, and convey to the said Company, all [describing the Premises to be conveyed] and all my Right, Title, and Interest to and in the same, and every Part thereof, to hold to the said Company and their Successors for ever, by virtue and according to the true Intent and Meaning of an Act made in the Fifty-seventh Year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled An Act [here insert the Title of this Act], the said Premises to be holden Blench of and under me, my Heirs and Successors, for payment of a Penny Scots yearly, if asked allenarly. Consenting to the Registration hereof in the Books of Council and Session, or others competent for Preservation; and thereto I constitute my Procurators. In Witness whereof I have subscribed these Presents. Written by C. D. at Edinburgh this . . . day of . . . before these Witnesses . . .’

Which Conveyance being registered in Terms of the Clause of Registration therein contained, and recorded in the Register of Seisins of the County in which the premises conveyed shall be situated, and which the respective keepers of the Registers in such Counties are hereby authorized and required to register, shall have the same Effect and be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if a formal disposition had been executed and followed by Charter and Seisin, according to the Forms of the Law of Scotland, any Law, Statute, or Custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.”

Sec. 61. “Provided always, and be it enacted, That all and every Body or Bodies Politic, Corporate or Collegiate, Trustees, or other Persons hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey Lands, Tenements, and other Heritages, or any other Owner or Owners, and the Occupier or Occupiers of any Lands, Tenements, and other Heritages, through, in, or upon which the said Canal, Towing Paths, Quays, and other Works hereby authorised or intended to be made, or of any Mills or other Works from which any Water to supply the said Canal may or shall be taken or diverted, may and shall accept and of the lands bought by the Canal Company, and a final decree in June 11, 1912. favour of the pursuers was pronounced on 23rd February 1856.¹ It was not until May and June 1862 that a disposition was granted by Lord Hopetoun, with consent of the Canal Company, in favour of the Railway Company. This disposition was in the statutory form permitted by section 60 of the Canal Act of 1817, and it was recorded in the Register of Sasines on 7th July 1862.”

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

It was also averred by the pursuers that the father of the pursuer Lord Linlithgow let to the pursuers Young's Paraffin Light Company for a space of thirty-one years from 1905 the whole coal (including the coal or mineral commonly known as Torbanehill coal or mineral) and oil shale belonging to him within the area referred to in the first conclusion of the summons.

The pursuers' further averments and the defenders' answers thereto, so far as material to this report, were as follows:—(Cond. 4) “In receive Satisfaction for the Value of such Lands, Grounds, Tenements, Mills or other Works, Water, and Heritages, and for the Value of all Stone, Limestone, Clay, Gravel, Sand, and all other Materials whatsoever, which shall be taken by the said Company for the purposes of this Act, excepting such as are found in digging the Canal, and for the Damages to be sustained by making and completing the said Works herein before directed, in such Manner as shall be agreed upon by and between the said Parties interested respectively, or any of them, and the said Company; . . . and in case” they “cannot agree as to the amount of such Satisfaction, the same shall be ascertained and settled by the Verdict of a Jury of Fifteen substantial disinterested Persons, to be summoned and chosen by the Sheriff-Depute or Substitute of the County. . . .”

Sec. 62. “And be it further enacted That the said Juries respectively shall award all Determinations, Judgments, and Verdicts, which they shall respectively make and give in the Execution of the Powers hereby vested in them concerning the Value of Lands, Grounds, Mills, Tenements, and other Heritages, separately and distinctly from the Consideration of any other Damages sustained or to be sustained by any Person or Persons in consequence of the execution of any of the Powers of this Act, and shall distinguish the Value set upon the Lands, Tenements, and other Heritages, and the Money assessed or adjudged for such Damages as aforesaid, separately and apart from each other.”

Sec. 69. “That upon Payment or Consignation . . . of such Sum or Sums of Money as shall have been contracted or agreed for between the Parties, or ascertained by the Sheriff and a Jury as aforesaid, for the Purchase of any such Lands, Waters, Mills, Tenements, or other Heritages, or as a Recompence for the yearly Produce or Profit thereof, or as a Compensation for Damages as herein mentioned to the Proprietor or Proprietors of such Lands, Waters, Mills, Tenements, or other Heritages, or to such other Person or Persons as shall be interested therein, or entitled to receive such Money, Rent, or Compensation respectively, or upon Investment thereof, in Manner directed by this Act, for the Use of such Person or Persons so interested or entitled as aforesaid, as the Case may be, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Company, and their Agents, Workmen, and Servants, immediately thereafter to enter upon such Lands, Grounds, Mills, Tenements, and other Heritages respectively, and then and there, such Lands and Grounds, Waters, Mills, Tenements, and other Heritages, together with the yearly profits thereof, and all the Estate, Use, Trust, and Interest of any Person or Persons therein, shall from thenceforth be vested in and

¹ Union Canal Co. v. Earl of Hopetoun, (1856) 18 D. 655.

June 11, 1912. Marquis of Linlithgow v. North British Railway Co. terms of the said Canal Act of 1817 and disposition, the ownership of the mines or minerals lying or being within or under the lands so conveyed was reserved to the vendor, and is now vested in the pursuer the Marquis of Linlithgow. The shale presently in question is a mineral within the meaning of said Act. With reference to the explanations in answer, it is admitted that shale was not worked in this district for the extraction of mineral oil until after the date of said Act. Quoad ultra said answer is denied. The shale in question is bituminous shale, a substance of the nature of coal, being rich in carbon and hydrogen. By reason of the existence of these elements it has a high commercial value. Shale has been known and worked as a mineral since a period prior to the date of said Canal Acts. It requires blasting, and is worked by stoop and room. This shale has always been treated by the defenders and their predecessors as a mineral within the meaning of said Act, and compensation has become for ever the sole Property of the said Company, their Successors and Assigns, to and for the Use of the said Canal and other Works, but to or for no other Use or Purpose whatsoever."

Sec. 111. "That if any person shall wilfully and maliciously, and to the prejudice of the said Company, break, throw down, damage, or destroy any banks or other works to be erected and made by virtue of this Act, every such person shall be adjudged guilty of felony. . . ."

Sec. 112. "Provided always, and be it further enacted, That nothing herein contained shall extend to prejudice or affect the Right of any Owner or Owners of any Lands or Grounds in, upon, or through which the said Canal, or any Towing Paths, Wharfs, Quays, Basins, Tunnels, Feeders, Trenches, Sluices, Passages, Watercourses, or other Conveniences aforesaid, shall be made to the Mines and Minerals lying or being within or under the said Lands or Grounds, but all such Mines and Minerals are hereby reserved to such Owner or Owners of such Lands or Grounds respectively; and it shall and may be lawful to and for such Owner or Owners, subject to the Conditions and Restrictions herein contained, to work, get, drain, take, and carry away, to his, her, or their own use, such Mines and Minerals, not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing the said Canal, or any of the Works or Conveniences belonging thereto."

Sec. 113. "And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Company, or their Agents or Servants, at any Time or Times, upon reasonable Notice, in the Day-time, to enter upon any Lands through or near which the Canal and Works hereby authorized to be made shall be or pass, wherein any Mines shall or may have been dug, opened, or wrought, and likewise to enter into such Mines, and there to view, search, and measure, latch, and use all other Means for discovering the Distance of the said Canal and Towing Paths from the Working Parts of such Mines respectively; and in case it shall appear that any Mine hath been opened or wrought under the said Canal, or any of the Works belonging thereto, or so near thereunto as to endanger or damage the same, and that such endangering and damaging the Canal or other Works has been wilful, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Company, and their Agents, Servants, or Workmen, at the Expence, Costs, and Charges of the Owners or Proprietors of such Mine and Mines, and from Time to Time, to use all reasonable Ways and Means for repairing, supporting, sustaining, securing, and making safe, the said Canal, Towing Paths, and other Works; and such Expences, Costs, and Charges shall, in case such Mines shall have been so wrought or worked subsequent to the passing of this Act, be recovered by the said Company, in case of non-payment thereof upon Demand, by Action at Law in the Court of Session; and such Expences, Costs, and Charges shall when recovered be paid into the hands of the Clerk of the been paid by them therefor on that footing, and at the date of the June 11, 1912. disposition mentioned in cond. 1 [the disposition of 1862] it was being extensively worked in the district for the extraction of mineral oil." (Ans. 4.) "The statute and disposition mentioned are referred to for their terms. Admitted that the shale in question is bituminous in character and is now of commercial value. Admitted also that shale is now mined by stoop and room and requires blasting, and that the defenders have paid compensation for shale left unworked. Quoad ultra denied. Explained that shale is not a mineral within the meaning of the statutory reservation founded on by the pursuers. At the date of the passing of the said Canal Act of 1817, and for many years thereafter, shale was not known or worked as a mineral, and was not used or regarded as a substance of any commercial value. Its use for the manufacture of oil was not discovered and no shale was ever worked until a comparatively recent date." Conds. 5 and 6 referred to the lease of minerals to Young's Paraffin Light Company above mentioned. (Cond. 7) "Part of the minerals let under said lease consists of an isolated area of Broxburn shale situated under and on the north and south sides of the defenders' said canal. For the purpose of working this isolated area the pursuers Young's Company, soon after the commencement of said lease, and as thereby taken bound to do, opened a mine known as No. 41 Mine, Fawnspark, and constructed a private line of railway to the same, which mine enters the shale at the outcrop on the south side of the canal, the shale dipping northwardly under the canal and the mine following. The said isolated area of shale is shown tinted yellow on the map herewith produced." (Ans. 7) "Admitted that the pursuing Company have opened a mine known as No. 41 Mine, Fawnspark, in the vicinity of the defenders' canal, and that they have constructed a private line of railway to the same. The lease and the map produced are referred to. Quoad ultra no admission is made, and reference is made to answer 4." (Cond. 8) "On 20th March 1906, as said mine was near the canal, the pursuers Young's Company wrote to the defenders giving them notice that the workings from said mine were approaching the canal, and that they intended passing underneath it. In reply the defenders wrote, on 13th April 1906, that they would not object to mines passing under the canal for the working of the shale beyond if such mines

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

said Company for the Time being, for their Use and Benefit; and in case the said Company shall find it necessary for the safety of the said Navigation, or any of the Works thereto belonging, to stop the working of any Mines and Minerals under or near the said Canal, or any of the Works thereto belonging, the said Company shall and they are hereby required to make Satisfaction for the Value of such Mines and Minerals to the Owners, Occupiers, or other Persons entitled to receive the same, to be ascertained and determined" (in a manner subsequently prescribed by Act, 59 Geo. III. cap. xxix., referred to as The Canal Act, 1819).

Sec. 120. "That if at any Time or Times hereafter any Person or Persons shall sustain any Damage in his, her, or their Lands, Tenements, Heritages, or Property, by reason of the Execution of any of the Powers hereby given, and for which no Remedy is herein before provided, then and in every such Case the Recompence or Satisfaction for such Damage shall from Time to Time be settled and ascertained by a Jury as aforesaid; and the same may be recovered, levied, and applied in Manner herein directed with regard to any other Recompence or Satisfaction."

June 11, 1912. were securely made, kept, and left, so that the canal was not in any way injured or prejudiced thereby. . . .” (Cond. 9) “Thereafter, for the purpose of working the portion of said isolated area of shale lying on the north side of the canal, the said pursuers formed a single mine of narrow width under the canal. In course of forming that mine it was found that the main seam of Broxburn shale, which is about 5 feet 6 inches thick, is only a few feet from the bottom of the canal. This single mine was accordingly lined throughout with brick and converted into a tunnel between the north and south sides of the canal, the greater portion of the shale in said isolated area being on the north side. . . .” (Cond. 10) “The main Broxburn seam of shale in said isolated area has now been worked into pillars by means of said mine No. 41 on both sides of the defenders’ canal up to within the distance shown by the plan herewith produced. This method of working the shale is the ordinary and usual method. Owing to the said position of said seam of shale relatively to the defenders’ canal and the nature of the shallow intervening strata, the further working of said seam under or near the canal is, as the defenders themselves well know, impossible without imminent danger to the safety of the canal and the works thereto belonging and of the navigation thereof. In any event, the further working of said seam of shale within 40 feet or thereby of either the north or the south side of the waterway of the defenders’ canal is, as the defenders well know, impossible as aforesaid. . . .” (Cond. 11) “In these circumstances, the agents of the pursuers, by a letter dated 6th June 1907, wrote to the defenders in the following terms, viz.:—‘On behalf of the Marquis of Linlithgow, as proprietor, and Young’s Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, as lessees, we have to intimate that the workings from their No. 41 Mine, Fawnspark, in the main Broxburn seam of shale, in the lands and estate of Hopetoun, have now reached so far that further workings under and near the Union Canal property, or at least within 40 feet of either the north or the south side of the waterway of said canal, will endanger the safety of the navigation of the said Union Canal or of works thereto belonging. We have, therefore, to ask you to have the satisfaction ascertained for the value of the said main Broxburn seam of shale so far as under and near the said Union Canal property, or at least within 40 feet of the north and south sides of the said waterway (the working of which seam of shale has been stopped for the safety of the navigation of the said Union Canal and works thereto belonging), and that in terms of section 17 of 59 George III. cap. xxix., and section 61 of 57 George III. cap. lvi. If for any reason you are unwilling to proceed, we shall be obliged by your sending to us an undertaking freeing and relieving the said Marquis of Linlithgow and the said Young’s Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, of all possible claims of damage which may arise to you the said North British Railway Company, as proprietors of the navigation of the said Union Canal or works thereto belonging, or to any persons or corporations using or being otherwise interested in the said Union Canal or in the said Union Canal undertaking or works thereto belonging, through any further workings by the said Young’s Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, of the said main Broxburn seam of shale under and near or at least within 40 feet of either the north or south side of the waterway of said Union Canal. In the event of your preferring to have the satisfaction for the said shale ascertained by arbitration rather than in terms of section 17 of 59 George III. cap. xxix., the Marquis of Linlithgow and Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Company, Limited, will concur in such method of ascertainment.'” (Cond. 12) “To this letter the defenders' secretary replied as follows, on 8th November 1907:—‘I duly received your letter of 6th June, and subsequent reminders. The Company are not to proceed as you ask, nor will they grant any undertaking. They hold your clients responsible for all injury and damage to the canal or adjoining works from the workings or proposed workings.’ After various meetings between representatives of the parties, the agents of the pursuers wrote to the defenders the following letter, dated 11th December 1908:—‘Referring to the meeting of Mr Cross and Mr Lennox with you on 17th November, it will be obliging if you can now let us hear from you. Lord Linlithgow is going abroad soon for several months, and we are desirous of communicating your views to him and getting his final decision before he leaves.’ To this letter the defenders' secretary replied as follows on 23rd December 1908:—‘Referring to your letter of 11th inst., and meetings with your Mr Lennox and Mr Cross of Glasgow, this matter has been very carefully considered, and in view of the legal opinions we have obtained, the Company cannot admit any right on the part of your client or his tenants to work out shale from under the canal if by so doing the canal or relative works or conveniences will be injured, prejudiced, or obstructed, and this Company will hold him and them responsible for any such injury, prejudice, or obstruction that may be so occasioned. In these circumstances, I regret that no arrangements seem possible.’ . . .” (Cond. 13) “In these circumstances the pursuers have been and now are stopped from working the minerals under and near the canal within the meaning of section 113 of the Canal Act of 1817, or at all events are so stopped from working the minerals within 40 feet or thereby from either side of the waterway, and the value of the mines and minerals, the working of which has been stopped as above-mentioned, falls to be ascertained by a jury under and in terms of said Acts, and in particular of section 11 of the Canal Act of 1819. But the defenders, while they hold the pursuers liable for all damage to the canal or adjoining works from the mineral workings already made and from any future workings, refuse to proceed to the ascertainment of said value in manner foresaid.” (Ans. 13) “Admitted that the defenders refuse to proceed with the ascertainment of the value of the said shale, and that they hold the pursuers liable for any injury, prejudice, or obstruction to their undertaking caused by the working of the said seam. Quoad ultra denied. The defenders have not found it necessary for the safety of their canal or any of the works thereto belonging to stop the working of any mines and minerals under or near the said canal or any of the works thereto belonging,” (Cond. 14) “Further, or otherwise, the further working of the pursuers' said seam under or near the canal, or otherwise the working of said seam within a distance of 40 feet or thereby on either side of the waterway of said canal, is prevented not only by the danger involved to the navigation of said canal and to the works thereto belonging, but also by the danger involved to the pursuers' mineral workings from the presence of the defenders' canal and the danger of flooding therefrom. The pursuers are thus prevented by reason of the execution of the powers conferred by the defenders' Canal Acts from working any further their said seam of shale under

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

June 11, 1912. or near the said canal and works thereto belonging, or otherwise from working said seam so far as lying within a distance of 40 feet or thereby on either side of the waterway of said canal, and have sustained damage accordingly. With reference to the answer, the Canal Act of 1817 is referred to for its terms. Quoad ultra denied. The said lands taken by the defenders' authors were taken compulsorily. Whether the shale in question be a 'mineral' within the meaning of said Act or not, no recompense or satisfaction was made to the first-named pursuer's authors in respect of the restrictions on the working of said shale of which the pursuers now complain, nor did the defenders or their authors by taking said lands acquire the right to prevent the said pursuer or his authors from working the said shale in the ordinary and usual manner, except that conferred on the Canal Company by section 113 to stop the working of minerals on making compensation." (Ans. 14) "Admitted that the lands were taken compulsorily. Quoad ultra denied, and reference made to the preceding answer. The area of land outlined in red on the plan produced by the pursuers is part of the lands in, upon, or through which (within the meaning of the Canal Act of 1817, and in particular section 112 thereof) the canal and works were made, and in purchasing from the first-named pursuer or his author a part of his lands for the construction of the canal the defenders or their authors made recompense and satisfaction to the said pursuer or his author in respect of the conditions and restrictions put upon the working of the minerals both in the lands sold by him to the defenders or their authors and in the portion of his lands retained by him, including the said lands outlined in red on the said plan. The said pursuer or his author in selling to the defenders or their authors a portion of his lands was aware that the same was to be utilised for the construction of a canal, and that support for the said canal would require to be given both from the lands and minerals thereunder and from the lands and minerals in the portion of his lands retained by him."

In Cond. 15 the pursuers referred to the terms of section 120 of the Canal Act of 1817, and of section 11 of the Canal Act of 1819, dealing with the method of assessment of damages, and averred that the defenders had refused to proceed to have recompense or satisfaction for damages sustained by the pursuers ascertained in terms of these statutory provisions. In answer the defenders denied the application of these provisions to the present circumstances, and denied that the pursuers had sustained any damage for which they (the defenders) were responsible.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuers' averments being irrelevant and insufficient in law to support any of the conclusions of the summons, the action should be dismissed. (3) The defenders are entitled to absolvitor, in respect that shale is not a mineral within the meaning of the statutes founded on by the pursuers. (4) The defenders being entitled under the Canal Act of 1817, and in particular section 112 thereof, or otherwise at common law, to support for the canal and works from the minerals in the lands in, upon, or through which the canal and works were made, including the lands outlined in red on the plan mentioned in the summons, they are entitled to absolvitor. (5) The area of land outlined in red on the plan mentioned in the summons being part of the lands in, upon, or through which the canal and works were made, and recompense and satisfaction having been already made in respect of the restriction placed by statute on the working of minerals in the said June 11, 1912.

 area, the defenders are entitled to absolvitor. (6) The defenders not having found it necessary for the safety of their canal undertaking to Marquis of stop the working by the pursuers of the said Broxburn main seam of Linlithgow v.
 shale under or near the said canal, are not liable to make satisfaction North British to the pursuers for the value thereof or any part thereof. (8) The Railway Co.
 defenders' lands having been sold to them by the first-named pursuer or his author for the purpose of enabling them to construct thereon their authorised canal, the defenders are entitled to support for their said canal from the adjoining lands which belonged to the pursuer or his author and from the minerals therein.

On 30th June 1910 the Lord Ordinary (Skerrington) repelled the defenders' first plea in law, and allowed a proof.*

* "OPINION.—The pursuers are Lord Linlithgow and his mineral tenants, and the defenders are the North British Railway Company, who are the successors of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Union Canal Company. The pursuers seek to establish by declarator their right to statutory compensation in respect of their being compelled to leave unworked a seam of oil shale lying under and adjacent to the Union Canal. The pursuers must prove (1) that this shale is a mineral within the meaning of a private Act of Parliament passed in 1817, and of the conveyance granted in pursuance thereof in 1862; and (2) that it is impossible for them to work it without injuring the canal. The defenders' counsel, however, maintained that, even if these two points were proved, no compensation would, on a sound construction of the statute, be due to the pursuers. He accordingly moved to have the action dismissed without further inquiry, and both parties concurred in asking at this stage for a decision as to the construction of the statute. One would have expected that some light would have been thrown upon the question in dispute by the conveyance of 1862, which was granted as the result of a long litigation and more than forty years after the Canal Company had entered into possession of the ground—See The Edinburgh and Glasgow Union Canal Company and the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company v. Earl of Hopetoun, (1856) 18 D. 655. The disposition, however, makes no reference to minerals, but counsel on both sides agreed that as it was in the statutory form and bore that the lands were to be held 'by virtue and according to the true intent and meaning of' the Act of 1817, it must be construed as reserving the minerals under the subjects conveyed, and also as reserving to the granter such rights and imposing upon him such restrictions with reference to the working of the minerals, both subjacent and adjacent, as were expressed or implied in the Act.
 [His Lordship here summarised the provisions of the Act of 1817, and an amending section of the Act of 1819, and continued]—

"Such being the material clauses of the statutes, the general principles of construction applicable to such cases are familiar, and have nowhere been more clearly stated than by Lord Justice Bowen in the case of London and North-Western Railway Company v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. p. 16. As he points out, these principles are not hard and fast canons of construction, but are merely rules of good sense which one should follow in the absence of some good reason to the contrary. Applying these principles, one would expect that the parliamentary authority to make and maintain the canal would carry with it a right in favour of the Company to have the necessary support from the subjacent and adjacent strata. This implication is particularly strong in a case like the present, where the predecessor in title of the pursuers came into contractual relations with the Canal Company by selling it lands. On the principle of the *Caledonian Railway Company v.
 Sprot*, (1856) 2 Macqueen's Appeals, 449, one would be disposed to hold that Lord Hopetoun and his successors in title were debarred by their own con-

June 11, 1912.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Proof was thereafter led, and on 14th February 1911 the Lord Ordinary pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Assoilzies the veyance from doing anything to the prejudice of their own grant. The implication is less strong in the case of a stranger who had not sold lands to the Canal Company, but as the statute contains clauses providing compensation for every kind of injury due to the execution of the statutory powers, I see no reason to doubt that the Company acquired a right to support for its canal, which was good not merely against vendors and their successors, but also against owners of subjacent minerals and of adjacent lands and minerals with whom, or with whose predecessors in title, the Company had entered into no contractual relation. Counsel for the pursuers referred to section 59, and maintained that that section rebutted any presumption which might otherwise have arisen that the Company was entitled to have the canal supported. In my opinion that section has nothing to do with the right of support, its object, as I think, being to secure that a vendor through whose lands the canal passed shall be entitled during the remainder of a lease to recover from his tenant the full rent, leaving the tenant to make good his claim for loss of ground and severance and other damages directly against the Company. The clause also mentions superiors, and is intended to secure to them full payment of feu-duties and casualties out of the remaining lands other than those taken for the canal.

"Section 112, which has been already quoted in full, is consistent with the view that I have expressed as to the true meaning and scheme of the Act. It should be observed, however, that its application is very limited. It has nothing to do with the right of support in general, but merely with cases where there are minerals. Further, I read it as applying only to persons who, or whose predecessors, have sold land to the Company, and to minerals which are subjacent to the lands bought by the Company. In every case, however, where the section applies its meaning and effect are unambiguous. The mineowner may work provided he does not thereby injure, prejudice, or obstruct the canal or any of the works or conveniences belonging thereto.

"The pursuers' counsel argued that the concluding words of section 112 must be construed, not according to their natural meaning, but as referring to mineral workings of an unnecessary or extraordinary character. He referred to the case of Dudley Canal Navigation Company v. Glazebrook, 1830, 1 B. & Ad. (Q. B.) 59, which was followed in Stourbridge Canal Company v. Dudley, 1860, 30 L. J., Q. B. 108, and which was approved of by the Lord Chancellor (Chelmsford) in the Great Western Railway Company v. Bennett, L. R., 2 E. and I. App. 27, p. 39. I am of opinion that these authorities have no application to the present case. In the Dudley Canal Company case, the private Act enacted that the mineowner should not work the minerals under the canal, or within a distance of 12 yards therefrom, without first giving notice to the company, which was thereupon authorised to stop the work on paying compensation, failing which the mineowner was expressly authorised to work his minerals. The Court held, rightly no doubt, that this express statutory authority to work the minerals was irreconcilable with the proviso that no injury should be done to the canal, and accordingly they found themselves compelled to reconcile the two clauses by holding that the proviso applied only to workings of an unnecessary or extraordinary character. In the statute under construction, I find nothing which compels me to interpret section 112 otherwise than according to its natural meaning. On the contrary, the natural and obvious meaning of the section is in harmony with what I have already stated to be, in my opinion, the meaning and scheme of the statute as a whole. In support of his argument the pursuers' counsel further referred to the fact that section 113 makes special provision for the case where the mineowner 'wilfully' endangers or damages the canal, and he defenders from the first conclusion of the summons in so far as relating to the seams of shale or oil shale under the canal, and quoad

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

argued that the inference was that ordinary and proper working was permitted even although the canal was thereby endangered or injured. I do not so construe this part of section 113. That clause was, I think, intended to confer upon the Canal Company a valuable right which would not have belonged to it at common law or under any other section of the Act. Assuming, as I do, that the Company was entitled to have the canal supported, it still remained lawful for the mineowner to remove the adjacent and subjacent strata, and he was not guilty of any legal wrong until damage actually took place, although he might be restrained from working if injury was imminent and certain—See Darley Main Colliery Company v. Mitchell, 1886, 11 App. Cas. 127, per Lord Bramwell, p. 145. It follows that if the injury to the canal was trifling, the pecuniary damages, i.e., the cost of repair, might be small, though there might be grave reason to fear that in the future a serious subsidence involving much greater injury to the canal might take place. In such a case it might be of importance to the Canal Company to possess the right conferred upon it by section 113 of using all reasonable means for repairing, supporting, and securing the canal at the expense of the mineowner—a right, however, which is given only where the mineowner had acted wilfully. I agree with the defenders' counsel that this part of section 113, and the first part, which confers a power of inspection upon the Canal Company, are conceived entirely in the interests of the Company. The defenders' counsel, founding upon the principle noscitur a sociis, argued that the concluding words of section 113 were also conceived solely in the interests of the Canal Company, and were intended to confer upon it a right to stop the working of the minerals under or near the canal in circumstances where it could not prove that the workings would certainly injure the canal, and where it could not, therefore, obtain interdict founding on section 112. He also argued that it would be an advantage to the Canal Company to be able to avoid litigation and ensure absolute safety to the canal by making full compensation to the mineowner if and when the directors in the exercise of an honest discretion 'found' this course 'necessary for the safety of the said navigation.' The objection to this construction is that the defenders read section 113 as if it had enacted that 'it shall and may be lawful to the Company to stop the working' of the minerals in certain circumstances. There is no such enactment in the section. It merely assumes, correctly I think, that the Company possesses the power to stop the working of the minerals where that is necessary for the safety of the navigation, and it enacts that if this power is exercised compensation shall be made to the mineowner. Of course it is possible to construe section 113 as conferring upon the Company a right of stoppage different from and additional to that already conferred upon it, but I do not think it legitimate to resort to implication for the creation of a right when the language used receives full and satisfactory effect without it. I accordingly hold that if the Canal Company enforces the right of support conferred upon it by the statute, and by so doing injures the mineowner, compensation must be paid in terms of section 113—in other words, the language of that section is sufficient to rebut the presumption which would otherwise have arisen that all claims, present or future, at the instance of Lord Hopetoun or his successors in respect of injury to mineral workings had been completely satisfied and paid for when the canal was made in 1818. If section 113 had been silent as to compensation for injury to minerals, any such claims at the instance of a vendor or his successors in title would have fallen to be assessed in terms of sections 61 and 35 before the Canal Company took possession of the ground.

"The defenders' counsel submitted another and an alternative argument. Esto that the defenders would have to pay compensation if they interdicted June 11, 1912. ultra dismisses said conclusion: Dismisses the second and third conclusions of the summons, and assoilzies the defenders from the fourth conclusion thereof; and decerns. . . .” *

 Marquis of Linlithgow v. North British Railway Co.

the working of the minerals, founding on section 112, or if they in so many words called upon the mineowner to stop working, still they had in point of fact done neither of these things. They had not thought it necessary to consider whether the proposed workings would or would not injure the navigation, and accordingly they could not be said to have ‘found it necessary to stop the working.’ It appears, however, from their secretary’s letter of 23rd December 1908 (quoted in cond. 12) that they intimated that they would hold the pursuers liable in damages for any injury to the canal. The defenders accordingly stand upon their rights under the Act of 1817, and withhold their consent to any working which will injure the canal. If the defenders’ position was that they had no objection to the pursuers working so as to injure the canal, no one could say that the defenders were stopping the working of the minerals. But I can conceive no more effectual way of stopping the working than to call the mineowner’s attention to section 112 and to threaten him with an action of damages.

“The defenders’ counsel founded upon a decision by Lord Kinnear in an unreported action at the instance of the Clippens Oil Company, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, dated 8th January 1887. It was explained to me that in that case the parties had proceeded upon the assumption that their rights were governed by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and accordingly the judgment is a decision upon the construction of that statute, which is, I think, substantially the same as regards minerals as the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845. According to that familiar code, if the undertaker after receiving notice refuses to make compensation, the mineowner’s right and remedy is to go on with the working even if he destroy the pipe or the railway. Parliament no doubt assumed that a municipality or railway company would not allow its undertaking to be destroyed in order to avoid paying compensation. In the peculiar circumstances of the Clippens case, the remedy which I have described was really no remedy, because the Water Trustees told the Clippens Company that they were welcome to go on with their workings, even although the result might be to drown the miners, and to create a water famine in Edinburgh. Lord Kinnear’s judgment, as I understand it, came to no more than this, that he could find in the Waterworks Clauses Act no provision compelling the Water Trustees to buy the minerals and make compensation. The question in the present case is an entirely different one, viz., whether the defenders have or have not stopped the mineral workings. I decide that question against the defenders—on the assumption, of course, that the pursuers can prove that it is impossible for them to work without injuring the canal.

“I accordingly repel the first plea in law for the defenders, and allow the parties a proof of their averments, and to the pursuers a conjunct probation.”

* “OPINION.—The question in this case is whether oil shale is to be reckoned a ‘mineral’ as between a canal company and the owners of the estate through which the canal passes. The latest authorities on this branch of the law are the North British Railway Company v. The Budhill Coal and Sandstone Company, [1910] A. C., p. 116, and Great Western Railway Company v. Carpalla United China-Clay Company, Limited, [1910] A. C., p. 83, in the House of Lords; and the Caledonian Railway Company v. The Glenboig Union Fireclay Company, Limited, 1910 S. C. 951, in the Court of Session, but now under appeal. These cases turned upon the construction of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which refers to ‘coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals.’ In the Canal Act of 1817 there is no mention of any special kinds of mineral, but only of

The pursuers reclaimed, and the case was heard before the First Division (without Lord Kinneir) on 16th, 17th, 23rd, 24th, and 30th January 1912. During the discussion it was admitted by the defenders that oil shale was regarded as a mineral, in the sense of the reservation, in and after 1862.

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Argued for the reclaimers ;—There was a general presumption that, where land was taken under compulsory powers for such a purpose as the making of a canal, the works were entitled to support. This presumption became a necessary inference where there were provisions for compensation of the landowner for damage to surface or subjacent minerals, unless a contrary intention was expressed or clearly to be inferred from the Act.¹ Further, any presumption that satisfaction had been given in full when the price of the lands was paid was displaced where there were clauses in the Act dealing with satisfaction for minerals. As regarded the progress of legislation on ‘mines and minerals.’ In the opinions delivered in the Budhill case, some importance was attached to the enumeration of particular minerals as limiting the general term, and, of course, the clauses of the Act of 1845, which have to be incorporated into a conveyance of land for the purpose of making a railway are different from the corresponding clauses of the Canal Act. Notwithstanding these differences, I am of opinion that no material distinction can be drawn between the two statutes, and that the three decisions cited are binding and conclusive as regards the general principles to be applied in construing the reservation of mines and minerals in the Canal Act.

“ It does not seem to me doubtful that at the present day, and in Scotland, according to the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and of landowners (whom for shortness I shall refer to as business men), oil shale is a mineral of great value and importance. I merely mention in passing that it is obtained by underground mining, the working being either stoop and room or longwall ; and that since 1872 ‘mines of shale’ have been subject to the same inspection and regulation as coal mines. I have, however, come to the conclusion that the rights of the parties must be determined in view of the state of matters which existed in 1818 when the Canal Company bought the ground and entered into possession. The work began in that year and the canal was opened for traffic in 1822.—[His Lordship then narrated the acquisition of the land in question from Lord Hopetoun and referred to the disposition of 1862.]—Although such a disposition when recorded is declared to be equivalent to a disposition followed by charter and seisin, it did not, in the actual circumstances, operate as a transfer of property, but merely expressed in formal shape the transfer which had taken place many years before. Upon consignation of the last instalment of the price in 1830 the property of the ground passed once for all from the heirs of entail, and was from thenceforth vested in the Canal Company and its successors in virtue of the express provisions of section 69. This section is imperative, whereas section 60 is permissive unless one or other of the parties insists upon a conveyance being granted. That happened in the present case, and accordingly the proper evidence of the parliamentary title is the disposition. It seems to me, however, that an informal statutory title under section 69 and a formal statutory title under section 60 are one and the same thing except as to the mode of proof, and that each vests in the Canal Company neither more nor less than what it purchased. It would be unjust and also contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Act that any portion of the

¹ London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. 16, per Bowen and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.

June 11, 1912. this subject, there was no progressive policy in the Canal Acts, some of the earlier Acts containing a much fuller code dealing with minerals than others. But, generally speaking, the situation created by these Acts was this, that what was paid for and what was conveyed was the surface, the land as distinct from the subjacent minerals, coupled with a de facto right to support until the condition of the mineral field as regarded working, &c., became changed. The settlement of the mineral question was postponed until that time, but the right of the proprietor of the lands to any substance which he might choose to work remained with him unaffected, except in so far as it was limited by the obligation to support. That is to say, he was not entitled so to work as to bring down the undertaking, but the undertaking was bound to compensate him for the loss of his minerals as a commercial subject.¹ In the Act here in question sections 35, 60, and 61 were not to be read as giving any right in

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

heritable subjects which the Company had bought and paid for under its statutory powers should be excluded from its title. There is nothing either in the statute or in the disposition which compels me to adopt such an unreasonable construction. I accordingly decide that the seams of oil shale underlying the canal are the property of the defenders, as the successors of the Canal Company and of the original Railway Company, unless the pursuers can show that oil shale was known to business men and regarded as a mineral in 1818. There is a dictum of the Lord Chancellor at the close of his opinion in the Budhill case which supports my view that the crucial date is that of the purchase; and there is a dictum of the Lord President in the Glenboig case apparently to the opposite effect, but I interpret the latter as meaning merely that the rights of the Company depend upon a construction of their conveyance. What I have said as to the property of the oil shale under the canal, applies equally to the question whether the pursuers are now entitled to compensation in terms of section 113 of the Canal Act for the injury caused by the stoppage of the oil shale workings in the Hopetoun estate on each side of the canal.

"Shale, or as it is called in Scotland 'blaes,' is commonly found immediately above and below seams of coal and ironstone, and quantities of it have to be cut away in forming the underground passages. In longwall workings it is useful for filling the wastes, but in other cases it must be taken to the surface and put into bings. Mineral leases often bind the tenant to pay rent for the ground so occupied, and to restore the surface at the end of his lease. Some blaes heaps will burn if set on fire, and the material, after being burned, becomes hard and can be utilised for metalling roads. This method of disposing of blaes heaps may be challenged as a nuisance—Hislop v. Fleming, (1882) 10 R. 426, aff. 13 R. (H. L.) 43. Inflammable or bituminous shale was well known in Scotland long before 1818, but there is no evidence that it was generally or commercially used for road making before that date. Within the last thirty years it has been discovered that composition bricks can be made out of blaes, and in some cases a lordship is paid for the contents of what was formerly regarded as a refuse heap. The only kind of shale which is proved to have possessed any commercial value before 1818 is the alum ore or schistus which came before the Courts in The Hurlet and Campsie Alum Company v. Earl the minerals, having regard to the fact that there were clauses else- June 11, 1912.

¹ Edinburgh and District Water Trustees v. Clippens Oil Co., (1898) 25 R. 504, and (1899) 1 F. 899, per Lord President Robertson, at p. 908; Dudley Canal Navigation Co. v. Glazebrook, (1830) 1 B. & Ad. 59; William Dixon, Limited, v. Caledonian and Glasgow and South-Western Railway Companies, (1880) 7 R. (H. L.) 116; Great Western Railway Co. v. Bennett, (1867) L. R., 2 H. L. 27.

 where in the statute expressly dealing with minerals. The former clauses only provided that what was permanently occupied or taken Marquis of as material became the property of the canal. Sections 111, 112, Linlithgow v. and 113 contained a complete code dealing with the minerals. Sec- North British tion 112 was introduced as a proviso to section 111 dealing with Railway Co.
 malicious damage; it excepted from the operation of that section the working of minerals. This pointed to the fact that the statute contemplated the working of minerals in the transferred lands by the proprietor ab initio. The third proviso of section 113 was the crucial provision. Its effect was to put upon the Canal Company an obligation to pay for minerals as soon as it became necessary, for the safety of the canal, that the working should be stopped. There could be no doubt that according to the plain meaning of section 113 the defenders had in fact stopped the working, and the pursuers were Glasgow, (1850) 12 D. 704, aff. 7 Bell's App. 100. This substance forms the roof of certain very ancient and extensive coal wastes near Glasgow.

 Through long exposure to the air it decomposes in situ and ultimately becomes suitable for the manufacture of alum. This shale as a subject of commercial value and manufacture was in 1818, and still is, exceptional.
 What is now called oil shale was formerly included within the more general description of bituminous shale. Its characteristic feature is the presence of volatile hydro-carbons which, by the process of destructive distillation, yield crude oil, ammonia water, and gas. The latter is used in the works as fuel, but the two former are of great commercial value, and the crude oil is the basis of an important manufacturing industry. It is impossible to draw a hard and fast line between bituminous shale in general and oil shale in particular, either from a scientific or from a commercial standpoint.
 The practical test is distillation. Oil shale was first worked in Scotland between 1850 and 1860 by persons who wished either to rival Dr James Young, or to evade his well-known patent for obtaining paraffin from bituminous coal. This patent was dated in 1850, and the material used was the Boghead or Torbanehill mineral, which a jury in 1853 found to be a coal and not a shale. The oil shale to which I have referred was found associated with coal in the coal districts of Scotland from Bathgate on the east to Ayrshire on the west. Distilleries were established in these districts both before and after 1860, but they are all now extinct. Oil shale is, however, still worked in the coal districts for the manufacture of illuminating gas. Chemically there is a considerable resemblance between gas coal and oil shale, and in some cases they are practically indistinguishable. As a rule, however, oil shale is easily distinguishable both in appearance and also chemically. Generally, it is less valuable than gas coal, as it contains a larger proportion of ash on the one hand, and a smaller proportion both of fixed carbon or coke and also of volatile hydro-carbons. The Broxburn oil shale cannot be described as a coal except as a matter of scientific classification. The present mining and manufacturing oil shale industry of the Lothians is in a district which geologically is not part of the coal measures, and which does not extend west of Bathgate. Oil works were erected at Broxburn in 1860, and at West Calder in 1862. The earliest lease of 'oil, mineral, or shale' in the Lothians that has been produced was in August 1861, and refers to an estate immediately adjoining the part of Hopetoun now in question. There have also been produced two leases of 'bituminous shale' commencing at Martinmas 1861 in estates a few miles distant from the same locality. From 1866 the Broxburn seams of oil shale in the Hopetoun estates have been continuously worked and used for distillation.

"An elaborate proof was led, which was interesting both from a scientific

June 11, 1912. therefore entitled to satisfaction, assuming that oil shale was a substance included in the reservation. The first question which arose upon this point was, At what date was the meaning of the term "mines and minerals" to be ascertained? It was as at 1862, the date of the conveyance of the lands to the Canal Company, that the inquiry should proceed. The material date was that of the sale,¹ not of the agreement to sell. The contract under construction here was entered into in 1862, and must be construed according to the meaning of the language of 1862.² It was admitted that at that date oil shale was a mineral according to the test applied in recent cases, i.e., in the ordinary sense in which the term was used by landowners and by those engaged in mining and commerce.³ If, however, the defenders were right in their contention that 1818 was the date at which this question fell to be decided, the onus was upon them to show that this substance, which they admitted to be a mineral in 1862, and from an historical point of view, but it did not, in my opinion, go any length towards establishing the pursuers' case. It consisted to a large extent of references to the writings of mining surveyors and of scientific men published during the eighteenth and early years of the nineteenth century. For example, in 'A Natural History of the Mineral Kingdom,' by John Williams, mineral surveyor, published at Edinburgh in 1789 (vol. i., p. 82), the author mentions that certain kinds of blaes are called by Scots colliers 'creeshy blaes'—that is greasy blaes. On pages 83 and 235 of the same volume he refers to 'coal blaes' lying in heaps at Pitfirran in Fifeshire which contained such a quantity of natural mineral oil or petroleum that it burned if set on fire, though it was not consumed. He states that this shale, after burning, turned red and hard and formed a good material for making roads. He also observed (pp. 263-4) that shale or schistus 'impregnated with the fossile oil' is a 'false symptom of coal,' and is found at a great distance from coal. Some of the allusions by Williams and the other early writers may refer to strata soaked in mineral oil, naturally distilled by the intrusion of igneous rocks among oil-bearing strata. Again, the Pitfirran blaes heaps probably consisted not of what we call oil shale, but of blaes containing a certain, though commercially unimportant, amount of carbonaceous matter. Still, after making all due allowances, there seems no reason to doubt that the mining men of the eighteenth century in Scotland and elsewhere had come upon oil shale, and that they had supplied to the scientific writers of the period the information and the specimens which the latter utilised in their writings, their mineral collections, and their

¹ Hopetoun v. North British Railway Co., (1893) 20 R. 704.

² North British Railway Co. v. Budhill Coal and Sandstone Co., 1909 S. C. 207, 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1, per Lord Gorrell, at p. 8, [1910] A. C. 116; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., 1910 S. C. 951, per Lord President Dunedin, at p. 961, and 1911 S. C. (H. L.) 72, [1911] A. C. 290.

³ Counsel gave references to a series of cases in which this question had been under consideration (most of which are referred to in one of the most recent cases, North British Railway Co. v. Budhill Coal and Sandstone Co., 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1, [1910] A. C. 116), viz.:—Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie, (1887) 14 R. 346, (1888) 15 R. (H. L.) 94; Midland Railway Co. v. Robinson, (1889) 15 App. Cas. 19; Tod, Birleston, & Co. v. North-Eastern Railway, [1903] 1 K. B. 603; Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. v. Bain, (1893) 21 R. 134; North British Railway Co. v. Turners, Limited, (1904) 6 F. 900; Great Western Railway Co. v. Blades, [1901] 2 Ch. 624; Hext v. Gill, (1872) L. R., 7 Ch. 699; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington, 1912 S. C. (H. L.) 9.

was not a mineral at the earlier date. This onus they had failed to discharge. It was proved that at the earlier date it was known to have a potential if not an actual commercial value as a mineral. In the circumstances it was not fatal to the pursuers' case that an actual commercial value at that date had not been proved.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Argued for the respondents;—It was for the pursuers to show, upon construction of the statute, that they were entitled to call upon the defenders for compensation. A right of support was implied in the circumstances of the grant, subject to the statutory relation, and except in so far as it was varied or adjusted by the statute.¹ The only provisions in this statute dealing with minerals, and modifying the common law right of support, were contained in sections 112 and 113. The former section permitted the mineral owner to work his minerals provided he could do so without injury to the canal. According to the latter the Canal Company might stop such working chemical analyses. Mr Jameson, Regius Professor of Natural History and Lecturer on Mineralogy in Edinburgh, in his 'System of Mineralogy,' of which a second edition was published at Edinburgh in 1816, describes (vol. i., p. 434) 'Bituminous Shale' in words which may apply to oil shale, and cites a number of foreign authors who mention it. He also prints an analysis by a German chemist of a fairly rich specimen which contained carbonated hydrogen gas, empyreumatic oil, thick pitchy oil, ammoniacal water, carbon, &c. Long before the publications referred to, viz., in 1681, a patent had been granted for the manufacture of pitch and tar from coal. In 1694 there was a patent for the extraction of 'pitch, tar, and oil out of a sort of stone of which there is sufficient plenty within our dominions of England and Wales.' At that date no one would have described coal as a 'stone,' but it may be that the inventor thought to make a fortune out of a material which was then and is still sent to the rubbish heap. In 1742 there was a patent for a medicinal oil to be extracted from a black pitchy flinty rock 'which is commonly found lying next and immediately over the coal in coal mines.' Such an oil is stated in an eighteenth century book of materia medica to have been actually distilled—in the laboratory no doubt, but still as a commercial product. The value of 'Virtue-wells' had been known of old, and the artificial imitation of natural mineral oil was inevitable. There were patents in 1779 and 1781 for making tar pitch, oils, &c., from coal. There were also patents in 1837, 1845, and 1853 for the distillation of bituminous schistus. In England there is an oil shale called 'Kimmeridge Coal' from the village of that name in Dorsetshire, which has been used locally for centuries as a fuel. The same seam extends to Derbyshire and Yorkshire, where it has been used to some extent as fuel. Oil shale was commercially distilled in France and also at Kimmeridge before 1850. At the London Exhibition of 1851 medals were awarded for the distillation of oil from shale and also from bitumen. The evidence as a whole shows that long before 1818 the potential value for industrial purposes of bituminous shale had become apparent to many practical men, and that the only obstacle to its use in manufacture was the want of a process

¹ Caledonian Railway Co. v. Sprot, (1856) 2 Macq. 449; Eliot v. North-Eastern Railway, (1863) 10 Clark (H. L.) 333; London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. 16; Aitken's Trustees v. Rawyards Colliery Co., Limited, (1894) 22 R. 201; North British Railway Co. v. Turners, Limited, 6 F. 900; London and North-Western Railway v. Howley Park Coal Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 97; Hext v. Gill, L. R., 7 Ch. 699; Midland Railway Co. v. Checkly, (1867) L. R., 4 Eq. 19; Dudley Canal Navigation Co. v. Glazebrook, 1 B. & Ad. 59. The Lord President referred to In re Dudley Corporation, (1881) 8 Q. B. D. 86.

June 11, 1912. if they apprehended danger to their undertaking. If they took advantage of this clause an obligation to compensate arose, but there was no obligation to purchase put upon them. The provision of section 113 conferred an option on them; they were entitled to consider the condition of the workings¹ and to decide whether they would stop them or not. The fallacy of the pursuers' argument consisted in converting this option into an obligation. As Lord Kinnear said in the Outer House on 8th January 1887, in the unreported case of Clippens Oil Company, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, in reference to sections 22 and 25 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847: "The Act of Parliament appears to commit the duty of protecting the works of the undertaking to the undertakers themselves, by giving them the right to stop workings which they may apprehend to be dangerous. But it is for them in their discretion to determine whether they shall exercise that right.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

that was commercially practicable. Destructive distillation in the laboratory had proved that bitumen, a well known and valuable mineral substance, was contained in many shales, and accordingly I agree with the pursuers' counsel that bituminous shales during the eighteenth and early years of the nineteenth centuries bore a certain resemblance to some of the auriferous rocks of South Africa and copper ores of Arizona which, till recently were commercially worthless because their valuable contents could not be extracted otherwise than in the laboratory. Why oil shale was not used before 1818 for making illuminating gas is not explained, but probably in a comparatively new industry practical men preferred not to make further and unnecessary experiments. The pursuers have, in my judgment, failed to prove that oil shale was known and regarded by business men in Scotland as a mineral until many years after 1818. If necessary, I should go further, and hold that it is a legitimate inference from the proved facts that prior to 1818 bituminous shale, if and in so far as it was known to business men in Scotland, was regarded by them as a form of rubbish which increased the cost of production of coal and iron, and which no sane man would bring to the surface if he could avoid doing so. If the year 1862 is of any importance as regards the present question, my verdict would be that shale was regarded as a mineral at that date, even in the practically undeveloped district of the Lothians.

"Incidentally, and in the course of the proof, the defenders were allowed to lodge a horizontal and also a vertical section of the canal at the place in question. These sections, if correct, demonstrate that the canal has been cut through the seams of Broxburn oil shale, and that its puddle lining is bedded in and rests upon either the main seam or on one or other of the upper seams of the same shale. Assuming for the moment that oil shale has always been recognised in Scotland as a mineral, and that it would have been generally included within a reservation of minerals, it could not have been so reserved in the present case, because that interpretation of the reservation would deprive the Canal Company of the ownership of the land upon which their canal is built and would leave them with nothing more than a wayleave. Such a result would defeat the intention of the statute as expressed in sections 35, 60, 61, 66, and 69. I refer also to sections 112 and 113, which show that if oil shale is held to be a reserved mineral at this place the Canal Company could never buy, and the heirs of entail could never sell, the site on which the canal was built. The present case is a fortiori of one under the Act of 1845, seeing that a railway company may expressly purchase minerals before the expiry of its compulsory powers. As at present advised, I see no answer to this argument, but the defenders

¹ MacSwinney on Mines and Minerals, 4th ed., p. 422.

The responsibility rests upon them to decide whether their pipes are in danger, and the Court cannot substitute its discretion for theirs, or relieve them of their responsibility. They cannot be compelled to entertain apprehensions which they do not in fact entertain. And if they think there is no such danger as to make it prudent or necessary for them to interrupt the operations of a mineral owner, they are not required to compensate him for minerals which they have not rendered inaccessible, and which they leave him at liberty to obtain in the exercise of his ordinary rights." The canal proprietors were not bound to stop the workings even if they actually had suffered injury therefrom. A proprietor in such circumstances was entitled to work his minerals even to the effect of bringing down the canal.¹ The payment by the Canal Company to the pursuer's author, on consideration of which the conveyance was granted, must be held to have included compensation for the right of support as well as for the lands occupied. Provisions of other similar Acts had been the subject of judicial interpretation,² but these Acts showed no continuity

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

have of set purpose precluded themselves from urging it. They thought to gain a tactical advantage by refusing to admit that the shale workings must be stopped for the safety of the canal. In their anxiety to grasp at a shadow they have dropped the substance. Their counsel did not move to be allowed to amend the record; and in the circumstances an amendment could not have been allowed except on stringent conditions, including permission to the pursuers to lead further evidence. As regards the defence, which I have described as shadowy, the proved facts are (1) that the oil shale under and near the canal cannot be further worked without destroying the canal, and (2) that the pursuers, being neither law-breakers nor lunatics, are not likely to work so as to injure the canal, even although the defenders have astutely refrained from calling upon them to 'stop the working.'

"My decision as to the ownership of the shale under the canal does not affect the pursuers' right to use a mine running under the canal which was constructed with the consent of the defenders as an access to the workings on the north of the canal.

"The result is, that the defenders are entitled to absolvitor from the first conclusion of the summons in so far as relating to the seams of shale or oil shale under the canal; and that, quoad ultra, this conclusion should be dismissed, as it raises questions which are not controversial. The second and third conclusions fall to be dismissed, and the defenders are entitled to be assolizied from the fourth conclusion."

¹ Ruabon Brick and Terra-Cotta Co., Limited, v. Great Western Railway Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 427; The Queen v. Great Western Railway Co., [1893] 62 L. J., Q. B. 572; Scottish North-Eastern Railway v. Stewart, (1859) 3 Macq. 382.

² Counsel referred to Dudley Canal Co. v. Glazebrook, 1 B. & Ad. 59; The Queen v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Co., (1842) 3 A. & E. 528; Cromford Canal Co. v. Cutts, (1848) 5 Railway Cas. 442; The Queen v. Aire and Calder Navigation Co., (1861) 30 L. J., Q. B. 337; Dunn v. Birmingham Navigation, (1872) L. R., 7 Q. B. 244, aff. 8 Q. B. 42; In re Corporation of Dudley, 8 Q. B. D. 86; Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. v. Knowles, (1887) 20 Q. B. D. 391, 14 App. Cas. 248; London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. 16; Glamorganshire Canal Navigation Co. v. Nixon's Navigation Co., Limited, (1901) 8 L. T., 53; Rex v. Leeds and Selby Railway Co., (1835) 3 A. & E. 683; Edinburgh and District Water Trustees v. Clippens Oil Co., (1900) 3 F. 156, per Lord Pearson, at p. 163, (1903) 6 F. (H. L.) 7.

June 11, 1912. of policy, and no rule of universal application could be drawn from them. Each Act must be construed according to its own terms. As Marquis of Linlithgow v. North British Railway Co. regarded the question whether oil shale was included in the reservation, the date at which it fell to be answered was at 1817, the date of the Act, or 1818 the date when the lands were handed over. At neither date was oil shale a mineral in the sense of the reservation. The bargain by which the lands were acquired was completed vi statuti, by consignation and entry in 1818.¹ The pursuers could at anytime thereafter have been compelled to grant a formal conveyance, and the fact that they had avoided this duty until it was enforced by the defenders by process of law could not have the effect of modifying in their favour the original contract.² It was a pure question of fact³ whether in the vernacular, i.e., the ordinary language of the commercial man or of the lawyer drafting a conveyance in 1818, oil shale, or blaes as it was then called, was spoken of as a mineral. The evidence answered this question in the negative. All that the evidence amounted to was that the ingredients and properties of this substance had been the subject of investigation in the laboratory, and were treated of in scientific works, and such evidence was clearly insufficient.

At advising on 11th June 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—I do not think I need to give an account of the circumstances of this case, because they are set forth with great precision in the opinions of the Lord Ordinary which are under review.

The Railway Company, as proprietors of the canal, although under the Lord Ordinary's decision they have won their case, yet take advantage of the reclaiming note to raise the question which I think logically comes first. They asked us, as the case, they said, would go further, to pronounce a judgment upon the statute in question here to the effect that the provisions of the statute were such that under a transference or sale effected in accordance with its provisions an absolute right of support was given, which would make it unnecessary to consider whether this particular substance is a mineral or not.

I think they are entitled to our opinion upon that matter. The case is, perhaps, on this branch not altogether easy, and for this reason, that the statute with which we have here to deal is one of the comparatively early instances of this class of legislation, indeed I may say a very early instance so far as Scotland is concerned, although in England, with a very much larger canal system, there are a larger number of instances, and it is possible to find decisions, as was done in the very able argument that we had presented to us by counsel, and to abstract from these decisions dicta which raise formidable arguments upon the one side and upon the other. I do not think, although it was proper that these decisions should have been brought to our notice and that we should have had the advantage of being referred to them, it would be to any good purpose that I should examine June 11, 1912.

¹ Kelvinside Estate Co. v. Donaldson's Trustees, (1879) 6 R. 995; Commissioners of Caledonian Canal v. Smith, (1900) 8 S. L. T. 124.

² Union Canal Co. v. Earl of Hopetoun, (1856) 18 D. 655.

³ Menzies v. Earl of Breadalbane, (1822) 1 Sh. App. 225; Gillespie v. Russell, (1854) 17 D. 1; Great Western Railway Co. v. Carpalla United China Clay Co., Limited, [1910] A. C. 83.

those older cases, because after all is said and done, each case comes to be a decision upon its own statute and its own statute alone, and the phrase- Marquis of ology of these statutes undoubtedly does vary, and some small expression Linlithgow v.
in one which you do not find in another may give a turn to the interpreta- North British tion. I therefore go straight to the statute with which we have here to Railway Co.
deal. It is not out of place to remember that, although we are now dealing Ld. President.
with the large corporation of the North British Railway Company, that Company is merely the successor of a very small company which got power to make a canal from the Lothian Road in Edinburgh to Falkirk. It was not a work of extraordinary magnitude, and it was not a work that could have gone on at all if a very extravagant price was to be paid to the landowner for the facilities. The Act is what I may call of doubtful expression even upon the question of acquiring. The Legislature had not at its date settled down into the forms with which we are now so familiar after the long train of decisions under the Railways Clauses Acts and the Lands Clauses Act. It had not settled down to allowing people to take lands according to the provisions of these Acts, and the original expression here rather reminds one of the older effort of the Legislature in connection with the making of the Caledonian Canal and afterwards of the Crinan Canal, where the power given is not one first of all to take lands and then to construct works, but a power to make and maintain a canal. A power is also given to take various things in connection with the canal, that is to say, there are powers given to take water, and there are powers given to take materials, and there are various phrases about compensating for damage so done. But without the precision of expression which one afterwards finds I do not think one can read the Act without seeing that it was intended that the lands upon which the canal itself actually is set should be taken ; in particular, you have in section 60 a provision for a statutory conveyance. Such a provision was at that date something entirely novel ; it was, in fact, a sort of precursor of the system which did not come into general use for very many years afterwards, I mean the system which was first introduced by the legislation of 1847, under which the registration of a conveyance was given an effect equivalent to the seisin of the lands conveyed. Section 60 provides for this sort of conveyance, and says that its registration shall have the same effect as if a formal disposition had been executed and followed by charter and seisin ; there is a general damages clause in section 61, and there are provisions for vesting of the property, which I shall deal with hereafter.

I confess that if the statute had stopped there I do not think there would be any doubt. One would then have been within the law of the Caledonian Railway Company v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Company,¹ namely, that as there is an intention to allow land to be taken for the purpose of a canal, and as the land is to be devoted to that purpose, it must be assumed that there was given with the land an obligation for support, without which the grant of the lands would be really useless. But the statute does not stop there, and we come to sections 112 and 113. There was a good deal

¹ 1910 S. C. 951.

June 11, 1912. of argument upon the way this section 112 came in. I do not think that in a statute of this date any weight can be put upon the fact that the phraseology introduces it as if it were a proviso. I think it is immaterial whether it is so conceived or not. The enactment is in these words:—

Marquis of Linlithgow v. North British Railway Co.
 —
 Ld. President. “Nothing herein contained shall extend to prejudice or affect the right of any owner or owners of any lands or grounds in, upon, or through which the said canal . . . shall be made, to the mines and minerals lying or being within or under the said lands or grounds, but all such mines and minerals are hereby reserved to such owner or owners of such lands or grounds respectively; and it shall and may be lawful to and for such owner or owners, subject to the conditions and restrictions herein contained, to work, get, drain, take and carry away, to his, her, or their own use, such mines and minerals, not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing the said canal, or any of the works or conveniences belonging thereto.” Now, if that section had stood alone, I confess I should not have been dislodged from my opinion, but it is to be observed that the reservation of minerals is “subject to the conditions herein contained,” and I also observe this, that that section obviously treats mines and minerals as known things, that is to say, either known in the most extensive sense of the word by being worked at the present moment, or being ready for anybody to work. It does not treat the terms as scientific terms, leaving it to the future to find out whether particular substances were minerals or not. Coming next to section 113, this section allows the Canal Company at any time to enter into any mines—that must obviously mean mines that are open—and there to make such investigations as seem to them proper for finding out whether there is any damage likely to come to the canal, and if they find that danger has been created to the canal, and that that danger has been wilfully created, they are entitled to put things right at their own expense and charge the mining company the cost of so doing. The section concludes with these words:—“And in case the said Company shall find it necessary for the safety of the said navigation or any of the works thereto belonging, to stop the working of any mines and minerals under or near the said canal, or any of the workings thereto belonging, the said Company shall, and they are hereby required to make satisfaction for the value of such mines and minerals to the owners, occupiers, or other persons entitled to receive the same,” and that is to be determined by arbitration. There is also a general clause of damage in section 120.

Now, the general result of section 113, to my mind, is that it does mean to make the Canal Company pay for the mineral which cannot be obtained otherwise than by endangering the safety of the canal, and that the obligation of support, which, but for the words of the section, is given, is taken away to this extent that a payment must be made where it is necessary, in order to support the canal, to sacrifice the working of minerals. Accordingly, upon that point I am against the contention of the Railway Company, or, in other words, I agree with the Lord Ordinary. I quite agree with the Lord Ordinary that you cannot put stress upon the words “stop the working” by reading them as only meaning physically stopped or stopped by interdict. I think the North British Railway Company effectually did stop the working of the mineral when they said they maintained all rights and held the mining company liable for all damage that might ensue from any June 11, 1912. destruction of the canal by the water being drawn off. In other words, I think the words I have already used are really substantially accurate, that when minerals have to be sacrificed as a commercial subject, then the payment comes in.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. President.

That makes it necessary to decide whether the particular material which is being worked here is a mine or mineral. When we come to this question it seems to me we now come directly into the track of authority which has recently been worked out by the House of Lords in cases under the Railways Clauses and Lands Clauses Acts, and here I think one is bound to take the criterion laid down by Lord Halsbury in Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie,¹ and accepted by the Lord Chancellor in the Budhill case,² and to determine what was the meaning of these words in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners, "at the time when the purchase was effected." The Lord Ordinary has said that there is an expression of mine which seemed to go against that in the Caledonian Railway Company v. Glenboig Fireclay Company,³ in which I say that the question whether a particular substance was a mineral or not must be considered in the light of whether at the date of the conveyance that substance was described as a mineral. There was no question in that case as between the date of the acquisition and that of the formal conveyance, and if it were necessary to do so, I should explain that I was using the words "at the date of the conveyance" in an absolutely general sense, and not trying to draw a distinction between the question of a written conveyance and the time the transfer takes place. I think that the matter must obviously be judged of at the time when the lands passed, because when the lands passed, then was the time when something was given and something was reserved. If it had been matter of ordinary bargain, the terms of the bargain would have had to express what was given and what was reserved; as it is, the statute expresses the reservation, and says minerals must be reserved. You must take the application of that at the time when the bargain was made. This matter, I think, is quite settled by the 69th section, which provides that when the money is ascertained and consigned then the heritages are to be vested in and to become for ever the sole property of the said Company, their successors and assigns. That happened in 1818 in this case, and the mere fact that the actual written conveyance was not executed for many years thereafter is neither here nor there. Taking it as 1818 then, I come to the same conclusion as the Lord Ordinary. I do not think that in the view of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners at that date shale, as it is now known, was a mineral. I look upon the matter in exactly the same way as the Lord Ordinary, that if the shale was removed at all at that time it was removed in order to open up a way to more valuable material. It is true that chemists and geologists of the period knew that there were certain properties in the stuff, but it was not as matter of fact commercially worked, and I do not think, if you come to it, that there is any better proof of that than the ordinary use of language. If you talk

¹ 15 R. (H. L.) 94, at p. 95.

² 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1, at p. 4.

³ 1910 S. C. 951.

June 11, 1912. nowadays, ever since the oil industry has been extant, about shale, you mean oil shale, oil-bearing shale. Nobody at that time would have talked about shale in that sense, and "blaes," which was what they called it, was not at all a synonym, although this oil-bearing shale was included in what was then called blaes. Nowadays, if you talk to a miner about "blaes," he would understand any blaes, and not necessarily that blaes only which is composed of oil-bearing shale. In other words, I think the use of the word "shale" as equivalent to oil-bearing shale in ordinary parlance really is the best proof that shale has assumed its place among the commercial minerals. In those days nobody knew it could be worked to produce oil, and it was only when the Torbanehill mineral was worked that it assumed the practical character it now has. On that matter I need not say more, because I entirely agree with the result at which his Lordship has arrived.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Id. President.

There is one further question in the case which I have not found it necessary to determine ; but on which, if I had to give a judgment, it would also be in favour of the Railway Company. It has been settled, as I expressed it in the Glenboig case,¹ that "inasmuch as the words to be interpreted are those which define the exception to a grant, they must not, whatever their meaning in such a vernacular, be so applied as to make the exception swallow up the grant, which would be the case if the substance in question, forming the ordinary subsoil of the district, were held to be a mineral and within the exception." I think practically this case comes within that observation, not that I can say that the whole subsoil of the district is shale, but rather on the ground that this canal is really located in a seam of shale, and to hold that by their conveyance the Canal Company got nothing, would, I think, be driving the whole matter too far ; and therefore I think on this ground also it is necessary that the Railway Company should succeed.

I say also that I think if it had been the case that the value of shale was recognised as it now is, no canal would ever have been made here, because I do not think the small company could have afforded to pay the price that they would have required to pay. I think that probably throws a light on what people thought at that time, when they were talking about minerals. Accordingly, my view is that the judgment of the Lord Ordinary should be affirmed and the reclaiming note refused.

LORD JOHNSTON.—This case involves the now familiar question of the rights in minerals where land is compulsorily taken. But the Union Canal was made under Acts of 1817 and 1819, which long preceded the Lands Clauses Act of 1845 and the relative legislation, and the terms of its special Acts are peculiar, and differ from those of the general Acts, under which most of the cases on this subject have arisen. Moreover, it is the fact that the commercial importance of oil shale was wholly unknown at the time when the Canal Acts were passed and the canal made, and in fact only came to be known about the year 1860 ; and as no case of the kind has yet arisen regarding oil shale, the present case becomes of great importance, not merely to the parties, but to those engaged in the paraffin industry of Scotland June 11, 1912. generally.

¹ 1910 S. C. 951.

It is first necessary from my point of view to ascertain from the proof certain facts of a general nature. As these depend on scientific evidence, and there is difference of opinion in detail, it is not easy to be quite sure of one's ground. But I think that the following is satisfactorily substantiated.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Id. Johnston.

There was much controversy on the evidence as to the relation between coal and shale, the pursuers seeking to bring oil shale under the general category of coal, and the defenders disputing this proposition. I have no hesitation on the evidence in concluding that, though oil shale comes in a sense under the term coal, and though coal proper shades off into shale in such a way that it is difficult, if not impossible, to draw a boundary line between coal and shale, broadly speaking shale and its peculiar species oil shale are not coal, as that term is ordinarily understood both scientifically and practically. It is true that some coals might as well be classed as shales and some shales as coals, and that there is as much difference between some descriptions of coal and other descriptions of coal as between the former and some descriptions of shale. But notwithstanding, it is impossible to arrive at the conclusion that the same generic term coal covers them all.

Both coal and shale are deposits which have been subjected to pressure. But it appears to be generally accepted that coal is a deposit of organic matter of vegetable growth, deposited in situ, where it has grown, and subsequently overlaid by other strata and compressed thereby, and that shale is a sedimentary deposit, transported in suspension by water, and gradually settling, the substance in suspension being of the nature of the mud that forms clay beds, but sometimes carrying with it, also in suspension, organic matter, probably derived from aquatic vegetation, and, in the same way as coal, being subsequently overlaid by other strata, and subjected to compression. Coal may therefore be said to have mainly an organic origin and shale an inorganic, though in the former there may be a mixture of the inorganic element in varying degree, and though in the latter there may be a mixture of the organic in equally varying degree. The latter fact is of essential importance in the present case, for upon it depends the distinguishing characteristic of oil shale.

The word "coal" signifies something which, when kindled, will glow as it is consumed, and its root idea is something which can be used for fuel. "The fire of coals on the hearth" of the Authorised Version was doubtless a fire of wood. The word "shale" signifies something which is laminated or scaly, and its root idea is not derived from its use or its properties, but from its formation. The word "shale" is therefore per se, in mining parlance, a word of more indefinite application than the word "coal."

What is commonly regarded as coal varies on the one side from the best anthracite, which is almost entirely fixed carbon with little or no ash or inorganic matter, through household which contains little, and manufacturing, which contains more, to stuff containing so much ash as to be of little or no value; and on the other side from the commonest gas coal to the Torbaneites, at which stage one is reaching substances which are so much

June 11, 1912. on the borderland, that it is difficult to determine whether to account them coals or shales.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

But shale varies in an equal degree. It has been fairly described as indurated clay. It is most frequently found in connection with coal in the pavement or roof of the coal seams. But it is also found apart from the coal measures altogether. It is a miner's term for what is, to all appearance, a laminated rock met with in coal mining, some of which, when it overlies the coal, comes away with the coal, and has to be dealt with. In the ordinary case it is useless and a hindrance in coal mining—in fact what the working miner terms “dirt.”

But when shale is oil bearing or oil shale it ceases to be “dirt,” and on the contrary becomes very valuable, and is worked for its own sake. It is only some shales that contain the substance productive of oil to a profitable degree. These are the oil shales. It has been ascertained that in these shales there is embedded a quantity of microscopic corpuscles of a yellowish colour, and that the richness of the shale in oil depends upon the proportion of these corpuscles present. They are, as I have said, supposed to be of aquatic vegetable origin, and to have floated down in suspension with the mud, and so to have become embedded in the mud, which on settling and coming under pressure formed the shale bed. That is only a scientific assumption. What is certain is that the richness of the shale in oil corresponds with the proportion of these corpuscles present. This oil does not permeate the shale, and cannot be expressed. It can only be obtained by destructive distillation.

But much difficulty in determining the true position of oil shale is introduced by the fact that, chemically, some substances classed as coal vary so little in their composition from oil shale that it is difficult to account for their being classed as coal, without admitting the oil shales along with them into that category. These are the various forms of what is known as gas coal, and the still more doubtful substances known as Boghead coal, Torbanehill mineral, and its congeners, the Torbaneites. These cannot be used, any more than shale, directly as fuel. But they may all be used indiscriminately for the production of gas or oil, and, equally, oil shale may be used, and sometimes is used, for the production of gas instead of oil. At the same time, for some recondite reason, the so-called gas coals are more profitably and economically used for production of gas, and oil shale for the production of oil, and hence their industrial and commercial application.

To illustrate the difficulty of the problem, where does coal end and oil shale begin, the case of *Gillespie v. Russel*¹ may be referred to. The question was there raised whether the Torbanehill mineral was included in a lease of the coal in the estate of Torbanehill. The case, as it involved directly a question of damages, was sent to a jury, who returned as the result of their verdict an affirmative answer to the above question. While the verdict could not be set aside as against evidence, it is, I think, open to doubt on the evidence whether the Torbanehill mineral was included in the term coal within the meaning and intention of the parties to the lease, or even whether it was a coal in any proper sense, and whether a Court would so have found. And it is remarkable that the substance never has been called coal, but always Torbanehill mineral, as if it was something unique. It cannot escape remark that if the Torbanehill mineral was a coal, it must have been covered by the statutory reservation of the Acts with which we are concerned, yet it had never been heard of, and its properties were unknown until after Mr Russel began to work it as a coal in Torbanehill under his lease. The closer bearing of the case on the present arises from this, that Torbanehill mineral is the substance which was first used for the distillation of oil. Dr Young, in the fifties of last century, had discovered the possibility of commercially producing oil from substances of the gas coal nature, and in the application of his patent he selected Torbanehill mineral as the best medium. This was the start of the paraffin oil industry as a commercial undertaking. In the next decade, however, it was found by Bell that the same oil could be distilled in the same way from shale, and that by the use of shale he could circumnavigate Young's patent. Hence, while the paraffin industry in general dates from about 1850, the paraffin industry using shale as its raw material, or the shale oil industry, dates from about 1860.

¹ 17 D. 1.

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.
Ld. Johnston.

It is thus from the close analogy of the oil-bearing shales to the gas coals, headed by the Boghead coal and the Torbanehill mineral and the Torbaneites, that there is difficulty in determining that, though these have been classed among coals, oil-bearing shales are to be excluded from that category. The identity of their chemical composition (for it must be borne in mind that Dr Tatlock's tables refer to gas coals and not to household coals) gives strong indications that the higher grade gas coals have had the same origin as shale rather than as coal proper. And the fact that, in the Torbanehill mineral, there is found present an excess over any shale yet found of the yellow corpuscles already referred to confirms the impression that there is no real generic distinction between, at any rate, the higher grade gas coals and oil shale.

I have gone into this matter at some length, because I regard the question whether oil shale should be classed as a coal in a case of compulsory purchase to be a very narrow one, and its determination to be very difficult. Nor do I think that it has received the attention which it deserves. If the question were to be regarded scientifically, and independently of the statutes, and all that has come and gone regarding them, my own conclusion would be that if oil shale is a mineral, it is so because it is a mineral per se, and not because it is a coal and coal a mineral. But the fact that other substances have been classed as coals, and therefore minerals, which are very doubtfully coals, and equally possibly shales, while it does not compel to the scientific classification of oil shales as coal, does appear to me to have a material bearing upon the question whether oil shale, though its distinguishing properties were not known, or at least appreciated, at their date, is not to be deemed a mineral within the conception of the Union Canal statutes of 1817 and 1819. For after all it is the term mineral, not the term coal, which occurs in them.

That question depends, in the first place, upon whether oil shale is to be regarded, in the sense of the railway and other statutes, as a mineral in the present day. If it is not, it must be by reason that the shale formation

June 11, 1912. is merely a common rock of the district, and that oil shale is just an indistinguishable part of the general shale formation. Shale, where not of oil-producing quality, but merely indurated clay, may possibly be classed as ordinary rock of the district, part of the support of the surface. But where a band or bed of shale is oil producing, it ceases to be common rock. It is as distinct from common shale as china-clay is from common clay. And it must be kept in mind that while ordinary shale is commonly found over large areas of the country, and particularly in those both in England and Scotland which are carboniferous, oil shale is only found in a few places, chiefly, though not entirely, in Scotland, and that, where it is found, the superficial extent of the strata is very limited, even in Linlithgowshire, the district in question, which is by far the most important of these. I cannot conceive any reason for classing it as common rock of the district, or for now excluding it from the term "mineral" in the sense of the statutes, or, in that connection, distinguishing between it and the many descriptions of natural deposits, also of very limited area, which, practically identical with it in chemical composition and not impossibly in origin, have been classed as coals, and therefore accepted as statutory minerals. It must, I think, be at all hands admitted that if common shale is one of the ordinary rocks of the country underlying the subsoil, there is something exceptional in oil shale, both in the point of higher value and of rarity, to apply the expression used by Lord Loreburn, L.C., in the Budhill case.¹ To discuss the question further, would, I think, be a waste of your Lordships' time.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.
—
Ld. Johnston.

It must then be accepted that oil shale is shale with a difference, and so apart from common shale as to require, in relation to compulsory purchase, to be regarded as a separate substance, and a substance which, though scientifically it may be distinguished from coal, is hard to distinguish, on any intelligible basis, from many substances which have in practice been classed as coal. But it has to be admitted that though oil shale may be a mineral in the sense of the statute in question, it was not so regarded in 1817, when the first Union Canal statute was passed, and it is maintained that that only is in each case a statutory mineral which was so regarded at the time the statute was passed, or at least at the time the parties came to transact by virtue of the statute. But to say that in 1817 oil shale was not regarded as a mineral means simply that it was not regarded separately at all. It certainly was not regarded as not a mineral; its uses were not known, and it therefore received no consideration practically or commercially in relation to mining. It was neither considered as a mineral, nor was it considered as not a mineral; it had received no practical or commercial consideration whatever. But, for all that, it was in 1817 known to geologists and mining engineers—then, no doubt, very few in number—that certain substances of a rocky nature, chiefly found in connection with coal, but also separate, sometimes unnamed and sometimes called shale or schistus, which is the foreign equivalent, were, as they said, impregnated with oil. Their attention had been drawn to this fact because, in some cases, oil was found oozing from the rock, and in others because the substances had a greasy appearance and could be kindled, though they would not consume. From the descriptions the oil could be nothing but petroleum, and the rock oil shale. The explanation of the oil being sometimes found to ooze from the rock must be that intrusive igneous rock had caused naturally to a small extent the destructive distillation which, for commercial purposes, is now effected artificially, for oil shale is not impregnated with oil, though it will produce it.

¹ 1910 S. C. (H. L.) at p. 3, [1910] A. C., at p. 126.

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.
Ld. Johnston.

I do not think that it is possible to read the excerpts from the various works adduced by the pursuer without being satisfied that, though scientific mining, mineralogy, and geology had not made great advances by the end of the eighteenth century, it was known to those who were engaged in the study of mining, and from a practical, and not merely a scientific, point of view, that the substance now commonly called shale was occasionally oil-bearing. At the same time it is equally clear that prior to the Union Canal Company acquiring its rights under the Acts of 1817 and 1819 these persons were not aware that the fact could be turned to a commercial use, and had not even directed their attention to that question, though certain experiments made with different classes of coal certainly showed that things were tending in that direction.

I think, therefore, that the question starts at 1817 in this position, that the qualities of oil shale were, though its potentialities were not, known to scientific enquirers in relation to mining, and that they, if asked, would have classed the substance as a mineral; but that neither its qualities nor its potentialities were known to, or considered by, the ordinary miner, or by commercial men, or by landowners. This, however, is not, I venture to think, in the present case conclusive. For, accepting for the sake of the argument the hypothesis that that only is a statutory mineral which was so regarded at the date of the acquisition of rights under the statute, I think that it is to take too narrow a view of the question to exclude a mineral generically so nearly akin to recognised minerals, merely because it was not known, at the time the statute passed, that it had to a high degree properties which such recognised minerals also had—though that also was not at the time known—in lesser and varying degree. In fact I am unable to draw such a distinction between coal, gas coal, and oil shale, as would, on the hypothesis in question, admit all classes of coal because they are coal, among, and exclude oil shale, because it is a shale, from, the statutory minerals of 1817. It is too nearly ejusdem generis. And on this ground I should be prepared to give judgment.

But in view of your Lordship's opinion, it is necessary to look at the case on the assumption that oil shale is a distinctive and newly discovered mineral. But in doing so I must take leave to look with some care at the particular statute in question, for what it means by a reference to "minerals" depends not so much upon a priori considerations, as upon its purview and scope. I have, therefore, given to the statute a careful perusal as a whole, and not merely to excerpted clauses. I know that it is impossible, where the land itself is conveyed, to describe in strict conveyancing language the right of the disponee as a combined right of aqueduct and of way. But the Union Canal statute of 1817 does not go very strictly to work from the conveyancing point of view, and rather makes the theoretical and technical bend to the practical. And so I think, notwithstanding the wider terms

June 11, 1912. used, that the statute really contemplates rather the grant of a combined right of aqueduct and of way, than of property, in the full sense, in the Marquis of Linlithgow v. land.

North British Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

Having been passed at a date long prior to the reduction of the law of compulsory purchase to a code, this Act does not follow quite the same logical sequence as do the general statutes of 1845-1847. After constituting the subscribers a company, it proceeds (section 33) to authorise them to make a canal, to be called the Edinburgh and Glasgow Union Canal, within certain enumerated parishes, and to supply it with water from certain streams. At first sight this would appear to be a roving commission to make the canal according to the Company's discretion, but subsequent sections (sections 50 and 51) contain limitations upon the power, restricting the breadth of land to be taken and used for the canal and towing paths to thirty yards in breadth, and on the line set out on a deposited plan, with relative book of reference, though (section 53) with a limited power of deviation. The important feature, however, of section 33 is that the authorisation is limited to the making and maintaining a canal of five feet depth of water, except (section 114) at one particular spot. This limitation favours the view that in the mind of the Legislature it was in reality a right of aqueduct with a right of way for the towing path which was being conferred on the Company. It is further noticeable that the powers conferred by section 33 are not preceded or accompanied by any express power to take. The power to take land is entirely inferential, and continues so through the whole course of the statute.

Passing to section 35, the Act authorises the Company to enter upon lands in order to set out and ascertain such parts as they may consider necessary for making the intended canal. Though it is not expressly said so, this power must be read as controlled by the parliamentary plan and book of reference of sections 50 and 51 already referred to. But then the section goes on to empower the Company to dig, cut, trench, get, remove, take, and carry away earth, clay, stone, soil, beds of gravel or sand, or other matters or things "which may be dug or got in making the said intended canal." This is a somewhat remarkable special power and quite unnecessary to be conferred if the property in the land is really given and taken in the ordinary sense; and again, as it seems to me, this confirms the impression that, notwithstanding the implied compulsory power to take land, the contemplation of the Legislature was merely to confer a surface right.

There follows, however, an important clause (section 59) enacting that the vendors and all persons interested in the lands to be sold to the Company "shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges from the remaining parts of these lands as if such sale or sales to the said Company had never been made." This expressly leaves the proprietor free to exercise his proprietary right, so far, at any rate, as adjacent minerals are concerned, and effectually disposes of any claim on behalf of the Company, at any rate for lateral support—*cf. Bennett v. Great Western Railway Company.*¹

The compulsory power to take is, as I have said, entirely inferential. Section 60 empowers all persons whatsoever, even though under disability, interested in the lands, &c., which should be set out and ascertained as June 11, 1912. above mentioned, for the purposes of the canal, to contract for, sell, and convey the same to the Company; and section 61 provides that all such persons may and shall accept and receive satisfaction for the value of such lands, &c., and for the value of all stone and other minerals (there being a prior power to take such for construction purposes from adjoining lands) which shall be taken by the Company for the purposes of the Act, "excepting such as are found in digging the canal," and for damages to be sustained by making and completing the works, as such satisfaction and damages should be agreed upon or ascertained by a jury, it being (section 62) a special direction that the value of lands, and the damages sustained in consequence of the execution of the powers of the Act, should be separately and distinctly ascertained. In the "excepting such as are found in digging the canal," there is the return to the idea of aqueduct merely.

¹ L. R., 2 H. L. 27.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

That the Legislature had in view nothing but a surface right is again made clear by section 69, which provides for the right of entry and possession on payment or tender of the purchase money. In the first place, it speaks of the sum or sums agreed on or ascertained for the purchase of such lands, &c., as a "recompense for the yearly produce or profit thereof"; and in the second place, it vests the estate and interest of the vendor in the Company "to and for the use of the said canal and other works, but to or for no other use or purpose whatever." That the compensation was expressly to be for the yearly produce or profit of the land is, I think, most material; and entirely consistently with this, as spoken to by Mr Watson, the solicitor for the Company, in his evidence, the satisfaction actually paid for the lands, at the time they were taken, was by agreement thirty years' purchase of an accepted agricultural or surface rental.

At a subsequent point in the Act there are special clauses dealing with minerals. Sections 112 and 113 enact, reading them shortly, that nothing contained in the Act should prejudice the right of the owner of any lands or grounds "in, upon, or through which" the canal should be made "to the mines and minerals lying or being within or under the said lands or grounds," that is, to the subjacent as well as to the adjacent mines and minerals, but reserving such mines and minerals to the owner, with power to work such mines and minerals subject to the conditions and restrictions contained in the Act, "not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing any of the works or conveniences belonging thereto." I pause here to note that, by the expression "in, upon, or through which," adjacent and subjacent minerals are placed in the same category and treated alike, and it is difficult to assume that the statute contemplated a restriction, by reason of the acquisition of the land, regarding the working of an after-discovered mineral subjacent, which was not (section 59) imposed regarding its working adjacent to the land taken. The restrictions referred to are to the effect that, should it appear from time to time on examination that the workings under or in the neighbourhood of the canal, either in a mine open at the date of the Act, or in one opened afterwards, are such as to endanger or damage the same, and that such endangering and damaging has been wilful, a statutory liability shall attach to the mineowner; but that otherwise, should the Company find it necessary for the safety of their navigation to stop the June 11, 1912. working of any mines and minerals under or near the canal, they may do so on making satisfaction for the value of such mines and minerals to the owners.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

In the interpretation of its provisions the case of the *Dudley Canal Navigation Company*¹ appears to me directly in point, and I refer to the opinion of Bayley, J. The scheme of the Act unquestionably is to give the Company a surface right sufficient for its purpose of aqueduct and of towing path, and to confer upon it no power to acquire, and to impose upon it no obligation to pay for, either subjacent or adjacent mineral support, but to give the Company right, as and when mineral workings approach the line of its canal, to acquire such support whenever it should find it necessary to do so, leaving the owner free to work, unless the Company elect to stop his workings and to compensate him, provided that in working he does no unnecessary damage to the navigation, or no extraordinary damage by working the mines out of the usual mode ; for the latter is all which I think is meant, either by "not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing the said canal," or "wilfully endangering or damaging the same"—Dudley Canal Navigation Company.¹

The distinctive position in which this Company is put in regard to minerals as compared with companies whose powers are derived from the legislation of 1845-47, or from Acts drawn on the same lines is, I think, this : The latter are not entitled (commencing with an enumeration) to any mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals under any land purchased by them, except such as may be got in the construction of their works, unless the same shall have been expressly purchased ; but they may acquire them with their land if they elect to do so ; and all such mines shall be deemed to be excepted out of the conveyance of such lands unless they have been expressly named therein and conveyed thereby (e.g., Railways Clauses Act, 1845, section 70). But, on the other hand, if the minerals are not so acquired, the onus is put on the mineowner, when his workings come within a prescribed distance of the line of the promoters' undertaking, to give notice to the promoters, when, if they think necessary, they may stop the workings on paying compensation. Whereas this Canal Company under its Acts has no power to acquire any minerals, and is not entitled to notice. On the contrary, nothing contained in the Act is to prejudice the right of the owner of land "in, upon, or through which" the canal shall be made, to the mines and minerals (no specification being attempted) within or under the said land. This, as it seems to me, not only emphasises, as in comparison with the general case, the surface nature of the right acquired by the promoters, but places the reserved right of the landowner to his minerals at its very highest, as one to minerals in general in the widest sense in which that word can be used relatively to the subject-matter of the statute.

Such being the scope of the Act, I should, if I were left to myself, have concluded that, when it provided (section 112) that nothing in it contained should prejudice or affect the right of the landowner, from whom a right of aqueduct and of way was acquired, to the mines and minerals in the lands in, upon, or through which the canal was to be made, and reserved these June 11, 1912.

¹ 1 B. & Ad. 59.

 mines and minerals to him in the terms which I have endeavoured to analyse, the statute intended to reserve to the landowner the mineral wealth in his lands in the most liberal and comprehensive sense, whether known to be present or yet to be found, whether exploited or not yet exploited, recognised or not yet recognised, and whether the potentialities were known or yet to be discovered.

Marquis of
 Linlithgow v.
 North British
 Railway Co.
 ———
 Ld. Johnston.

But I cannot proceed upon such conclusion if it be contrary to authority. Now, while it is admittedly impossible to give or to find, in the multitude of previously decided cases, a comprehensive definition of the statutory term "mineral" which has met with general acceptance, and while Judges of the greatest eminence have differed in their views, it is contended that the last word on the subject is contained in the cases of Hext v. Gill,¹ Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie,² and the Budhill Company's case.³ If by the last word is meant that these are the latest authoritative decisions on the subject, I assent. But if by "last" is meant "final," I hardly think that the noble and learned Lords who took part in these decisions were themselves so sanguine. I think that every decision has to be read in relation to its own circumstances, and, in particular, to the Act on which it proceeds, and every definition attempted as a guide in the same or similar circumstances and under similar Acts only, and not as an inflexible rule to be applied irrespective of circumstances and of the Act in question. The present case presents a new set of circumstances under which the question has never yet, I think, come up for judgment or even for consideration. These circumstances were not in contemplation of the Lords who pronounced in favour of the new criterion, and if I venture to examine its applicability to these new circumstances, I trust I may be assumed to do so with entire and respectful acceptance of the judgments in the cases in which it was announced. I need hardly repeat that the peculiar and novel circumstances of this case are that we have here an undoubted mineral, the properties of which were ex hypothesi unknown and even unsuspected at the date the Act was passed and the land taken, but which was none the less in the land, and is now known to be of considerable value.

The criterion assumed to have been adopted in these cases, or, rather, suggested by the first two of them and adopted in the last, is thus stated by the defenders, viz., that what is meant by "mines and minerals," where lands are taken compulsorily, is a question of fact, viz., what these words meant in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners at the time when the lands were so taken. The question which I venture to consider is, Was the rule so stated really adopted, and was it intended to be a universal and absolute rule to displace all other considerations?

I take first Hext v. Gill,¹ and it is important to notice that this, the first case in which the criterion is suggested, was not a case of compulsory taking, but of voluntary acquisition of the freehold of a copyhold tenement, reserving all mines and minerals. The substance was china clay, which at

¹ L. R., 7 Ch. 699.

² 15 R. (H. L.) 94.

³ 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

⁴ R

June 11, 1912. the time of the conveyance, 1799, was not known to exist in the tenement or in the district. But the case was complicated by the fact that the china clay could not be got by underground mining, but only by a system of open-cast working destructive of the surface. Mellish, L.J., held that on the authorities the right to everything under the surface and to all profit to be got from extracting anything from under it was intended to be reserved, but, the transaction in question being a voluntary one, that it was subject to an implied obligation of support, which in the circumstances rendered the reservation nugatory. James, L.J., agreed, holding that the authorities established a very convenient and consistent system, giving the mineral owner every reasonable profit out of the mineral treasures, and at the same time giving the landowner that protection without which the grant to him would be illusory. But he added obiter:—"But for these authorities, I should have thought that what was meant by 'mines and minerals' in such a grant was a question of fact, what these words meant in the vernacular of the mining world, and commercial world, and landowners at the end of the last century, upon which I am satisfied that no one at that time would have thought of classing clay of any kind as a mineral." Applying his new criterion his Lordship would thus have excepted china clay from the reservation. As I have said, these words were spoken with reference to 'such a grant'—that is, a conveyance proceeding on a voluntary contract of sale and purchase. And that James, L.J., in suggesting such criterion, was regarding it solely in its applicability to a voluntary sale his language makes perfectly clear.

Had there not been at different times a decided difference of opinion as to whether the same considerations applied in interpreting a grant of minerals in a voluntary and in a compulsory sale, I should hesitate to advance the contention that they do not do so. Where parties are transacting voluntarily, they may not know whether any minerals exist in the ground which is the subject of sale, and they cannot know their value. But they may fairly be regarded as insisting on and admitting respectively the reservation of the then known and recognised minerals, exactly as if they were enumerated, and basing the price agreed to be taken upon the chance of their existing in the subject and on a speculative estimate of their value. And the price agreed to be given may reasonably be supposed to be based on the complete property quoad ultra passing with all its chances. But under statutory reservation, the question is, I think, different. I should be prepared so to hold were the statutory reservation that of the general legislation of 1845-7, viz., a reservation of the whole coal, ironstone, or other minerals in terms of the clauses relating to mines in the general Acts, for I must read such reservation in the light of the provisions of those clauses. But it would be impertinent in me to enlarge upon that general question. I am concerned with a special Act whose provisions are different. Where then the sale is compulsory and under reservation by statute couched as the statute in question, it is not a grant under reservation of minerals, either particular or general, but it is a grant of the subject "according to the true intent and meaning of" an Act intituled, &c. I quote both from the Act, section 60, and from the actual conveyance. The grantee is sent to the Act, and every clause of the Act, for the extent and qualifications of the right acquired. The Act makes it clear that the June 11, 1912. Legislature intended no limited reservation of minerals, but a reservation per aversionem, and there is no pretext for saying that when parties come to transact under the Act and to fix the compensation for the rights compulsorily acquired, they either did or were entitled to base that compensation on a limited reservation of certain known minerals only, and on the chance of their existing and of their value, and of nothing else. Such would, I venture to think, be contrary to the scope and purview of such a statute.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

In Farie's case¹ the purchase was apparently by agreement, but under compulsory powers, and therefore truly compulsory. But the grant was not such as we have here, but contained an express reservation of "the whole coal and other minerals in said lands in terms of the clauses relating to mines in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847." The question in that case was whether a bed of ordinary clay, though of unusual thickness, fell under the reservation. It was under the soil certainly, but formed the subsoil, and could not be worked except open-cast, and to the destruction of the surface. In that case Lord Halsbury, L.C., while expressly guarding himself at the outset as wishing to decide nothing but what was necessarily involved in the particular case before the House, and finding simple grounds for rejecting the attempted extension of the reservation to common clay—at the same time expressed regret that the test which James, L.J., suggested, and which his Lordship thought would have been the true one and would have satisfied all difficulties, was not adhered to in Hext v. Gill.² Lords Watson, Herschell, and Macnaghten, on the other hand, found the case one of great difficulty, and each entered elaborately on its discussion, which would have been avoided had they been prepared to adopt the suggestion of James, L.J.

But in the Budhill case³ lands had been acquired by the North British Railway Company under compulsory powers and by statutory conveyances in terms of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, and the controversy regarded the working of sandstone which underlay the clay subsoil. In this case the House of Lords certainly adopted the interpretation of the term "minerals" suggested by James, L.J., in Hext v. Gill.² I do not for one moment propose to criticise their Lordships' judgments, but I think I am bound to consider the length to which this adoption of the criterion of James, L.J., was intended to be carried before I apply it to the present case. The House were engaged in construing the term "minerals" occurring in section 70 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. They were engaged in determining whether the common substance termed in Scotland sandstone, in England freestone, (for the attempt to prove it exceptional of its class failed) was included under such term, just as the Court in Farie's case¹ were engaged in determining whether common clay was included under the same term occurring in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. The difficulty which I experience in concluding how far the adoption by the House of the definition of James, L.J., is intended to be carried, arises from the fact

¹ 14 R. 346, 15 R. (H. L.) 94.

² L. R., 7 Ch. 699.

³ 1909 S. C. 277, 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

June 11, 1912. that there was another and patent ground of judgment which rendered its application unnecessary. The Lord Chancellor expresses the ground of his judgment thus:—"If it [sandstone] be a mineral, then what the railway company bought was not a section of the crust of the earth subject to a reservation of minerals, but a few feet of turf and mould, with a right to lay rails upon it, and liable to be destroyed altogether, unless the company choose on notice to buy the ordinary rock lying beneath it. . . . It was agreed at the bar that this was the ordinary freestone or sandstone. If the respondents are entitled to work this substance under this railway, the same must be true of chalk, or clay, or granite, or any other rock which forms the crust of the earth. . . . Speaking for myself, I will not adopt so startling a conclusion unless I am compelled by a decision of this House from which there is no escape. There is no such decision. . . . I cannot believe Parliament ever intended that the common rock of the district should be included in these words of reservation. If that were intended I can see no need for inserting such words as 'mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals.' The Act is therefore consistent with the view which, with all respect, appears the obvious and common-sense view, that the railway company is by the conveyance to acquire the land in general, and the reservation is only of what is exceptional, as Lord Ardwall clearly says." Having thus expressed his grounds of judgment in the particular case, his Lordship adds:—"It is impossible to give an exhaustive definition of the meaning of the much-debated words that are to be found in section 70. But I hope your Lordships may assist in their interpretation," and proceeds to re-state the canon of James, L.J., to this effect:—in order to include a substance in the term mineral under the Act of 1845, these two questions must be answered in the affirmative: (1) Was the substance exceptional, and (2) being exceptional was it regarded as a mineral in the vernacular, &c., at the time when the purchase was effected? This is undoubtedly more than an obiter dictum, yet it is not the ground of judgment. And I venture to think that it is expressed in terms which show that his Lordship meant it as a guide, and not as an absolute rule to be followed in all subsequent cases regardless of all other considerations.

Lord Gorell, again, after stating at the outset what is, I think, generally admitted, that it is reasonably clear that the word "minerals" in section 70 of the Act of 1845 must receive some limitation, considers six different definitions which had been suggested in previous judgments, and, inter alia, (6) that these words are used in the ordinary sense in which they are understood and used by landowners and those engaged in mining and commerce, and then expresses the opinion that "the true test of what the section means by 'mines of minerals' is there indicated." His Lordship does not in any part of his opinion confine the test to the date of the conveyance, and even in the conclusion adds "or are now," but it would seem, I think, that he really intended to do so. And though his Lordship states another and in this case sufficient ground of judgment, viz., that the clause of reservation was not meant "to include in its scope those matters which are to be found everywhere in the construction of railways such as clay, sand, gravel, and ordinary stone," he undoubtedly does make the application of James, L.J., cover the main ground of his judgment. The judgment June 11, 1912. of Lord Shaw of Dunfermline is in accordance with these opinions.

I acknowledge the cumulative weight of these three decisions. Yet I am unable to conclude that the last of them was intended to foreclose all future consideration of the question where a case arose which was clearly not before the minds of the noble and learned Lords concerned in the judgment, and where the rigid application of the canon adopted would in different circumstances and under a different Act work the injustice which it would here.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

—
Ld. Johnston.

It is certainly in favour of this view that in the Carpalla case,¹ decided by the House of Lords a month after, though accidentally reported before, the Budhill case,² in determining whether china clay was a mineral in the sense of the statute, the test so recently approved was not resorted to, but the case was decided on a review of very detailed evidence which led to "the conclusion that china clay was not part of the ordinary composition of the soil of the district; its presence was rare and exceptional." Nor can I omit to notice that, applying his own canon, James, L.J., would have excluded china clay from the reservation, while the House of Lords in the Carpalla case¹ affirmed a judgment which, on scientific and other evidence as to its genesis and composition, included the same substance in the reservation.

I do not, then, think that the question in the present case is foreclosed by the judgment in the Budhill case,² but that it is open to this Court to take a wider view, and to determine it on the other considerations which present themselves, and indeed force themselves on attention. These are:—

The relations between oil shale, gas coal, and coal, to which I adverted at the outset.

The fact that the landowner's rights do not depend upon the terms of the general Acts, 1845-47, but on the exceptional terms of a very special Act, which place the landowner and the Company in very special relations as regards minerals. To those I need not again refer in detail, except to add that these relations precluded the question of what were to be considered minerals, and what not, from being considered solely at the date the land was taken and compensation adjusted. The landowner could then secure, and de facto did secure, nothing more than the surface value of the soil of the area required. Hence it appears to me impossible, in justice to the situation created by the Act, that any distinction should be drawn between minerals recognised as minerals at the date of the Company acquiring their rights and other substances, equally undoubtedly minerals, whose properties and value remained yet to be discovered. If anything were necessary to emphasise this result it would be found in the conflict which the adoption of the contrary view would create between section 59 and section 112 of the Act of 1817. Section 59 conserves untouched the landowner's rights in adjacent lands absolutely and without any qualification. There is no discrimination between minerals and other rights, and no possible discrimination between minerals then known and minerals still to be discovered. Section 112 places adjacent and subjacent minerals in the same category

¹ [1910] A. C. 83.

² [1910] A. C. 116, 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

June 11, 1912. and again reserves them to the owner, subject to a special right to stop working on making compensation. The Company seek to limit this reservation to minerals known and recognised at the date of their acquiring their rights. In the face of section 59 that contention is untenable as regards adjacent minerals, and I think it follows that it is equally untenable as regards subjacent minerals, for the term "minerals" must have the same meaning in both sections.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

The further fact that in laying down in the Budhill case¹ the canon referred to, the House of Lords were not only dealing solely with a case under section 70 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, but had not before them the effect to which these words "at the date of the grant" might be pressed, and are being pressed in this case. They were dealing with well-known substances, whose composition, qualities, and uses were equally well known when the Acts were passed, the lands taken, and the question arose. Clay and sandstone and their respective uses had been known from the days of the Pharaohs, and they had never, except by scientists, been regarded as minerals. In this knowledge the Legislature spoke and the promoters in any particular case took. But in the vernacular these substances were not only not regarded as minerals, but they were regarded as not minerals. For the exclusion of these substances from the statutory minerals I see good reason. But I am unable to see such reason for making the effect of such a general reservation as we have here depend upon the state of knowledge and of practical use at the date when the statute passed or the land was taken. I cannot accept the words used by the noble and learned Lords who decided the Budhill case¹ as expressing the deliberate opinion that no substance can fall under the statutory reservation of minerals under any Act, and in any circumstances, which was not at the time the land was taken in the vernacular regarded as a mineral. It could not be so regarded among miners, commercial men, and landowners, unless, in point of fact, it was already in use to be worked at least in some place or district, and was an article of commerce. The result of such a limitation would go to exclude every substance, however truly a mineral and however exceptional and however important, the properties of which, at the date the land was taken, had not yet been discerned or even investigated, and which was not then regarded in the vernacular as a mineral, simply because it was not regarded at all. Such was not the case to which their Lordships' attention was directed, and I am unable to accept their suggested rule of construction as decisive where a case has occurred in circumstances to which their attention was not directed.

Were it attempted to maintain that shale in general was reserved, I should agree that both the grounds of judgment advanced in the Budhill case¹ would properly negative the contention. Shale is ordinarily not an exceptional substance, but a common rock of many districts. And shale has, like clay and sandstone, not only never been recognised in the vernacular as a mineral, but has always been recognised as not a mineral. But oil shale cannot be disposed of as merely common shale. It is a species exceptional in rarity, in the uses to which it can be put, or rather the products which can be obtained from it, and consequently in its value. June 11, 1912.

¹ 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

 There is some analogy between it and china clay. It is shale containing that from which oil may be distilled. China clay is clay formed by the disintegration of a particular rock, but it contains, as its specialty, the minute particles of felspar which, when separated from its other elements, is the substance from which china is produced. Hence their respective distinctions from ordinary shale and common clay and their corresponding values. If china clay can be regarded as a statutory mineral, though clay is not, equally may oil shale, though shale be not.

Marquis of
 Linlithgow v.
 North British
 Railway Co.

Ld. Johnston.

For these reasons, while in respect for your Lordship's opinion I must say so with due hesitation, I am unable to accept the Lord Ordinary's judgment.

I have only one other incidental point to touch on, viz., that which is raised by the defenders' sixth plea in law, which is intimately connected with the competency and relevancy of the action as laid. Concisely stated, it amounts to this: We, the Railway Company, are not concerned with the damage you may by your workings do to our canal; you may breach the bottom of our canal, but the result will only be to drown your mine, and probably neighbouring mines; when they are full, the water will again rise in our canal, and the damage to us will only be temporary inconvenience. Inconsistently, however, with this somewhat chauvinist plea, the defenders dare the mineowner to injure, prejudice, or obstruct their undertaking at his peril. The defenders cannot take up both attitudes. They misinterpret the last proviso of the 112th section of their Act, and they ignore the 120th. I cannot read their secretary's letters of 8th November 1907 and 23rd December 1908 as anything but a notice to stop working, such as they are entitled to give under section 113. Accordingly, they are bound to accept the consequences of having given such notice.

LORD MACKENZIE.—The theory of the action is that the pursuers are compelled to leave unworked a seam known as the Broxburn main seam of oil shale subjacent and adjacent to the Union Canal.

The first question which arises is whether, assuming the pursuers to be right on the facts, this would entitle them to be paid compensation by the defenders, having regard to the provisions of their private Act of Parliament. In the construction of this statute the principle to be applied is the same as that laid down in London and North-Western Railway Company v. Evans.¹ Where an express statutory right is given to make and maintain a thing necessarily requiring support, the statute, in the absence of a context implying the contrary, must be taken to mean that the right to necessary support of the thing constructed shall accompany the right to make and to maintain it—(per Bowen, L.J., quoted in *North British Railway Company v. Turners, Limited*²; *Elliot v. North-Eastern Railway Company*³; *Caledonian Railway Company v. Sprout*⁴). The title of the Canal Company to what they were permanently to occupy depends upon sections 35, 60, and 61 of the Act of 1817.⁵ They were bound to pay at the start for this, and also to

¹ [1893] 1 Ch. 16.

² 6 F. 900, at pp. 903-4, footnote.

³ 10 Clark (H. L.) 333.

⁴ 2 Macq. 449.

⁵ 57 Geo. III. cap. lvi.

June 11, 1912.

Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

pay damages in respect of anything temporarily interfered with. If there had been nothing but sections 35, 60, and 61 the position of the defenders would have been unanswerable, but there are sections later on which specially deal with minerals. These are sections 112 and 113. Although an argument was founded upon section 111, this may be disregarded. The effect of section 112 is to reserve to the owner the subjacent minerals, and it provides that he may work them "not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing the said canal or any of the works or conveniences belonging thereto." It does not apply to adjacent minerals, for as these could not be held to be embraced in the lands taken so they could not be excepted therefrom. The restriction upon the mode of working has been held by the Lord Ordinary not to be limited to wilful injury, and in this view I agree.

Section 113 deals with both subjacent and adjacent minerals, and its terms are such as to render it impossible for the defenders successfully to maintain that any claims by Lord Hopetoun or his successors in respect of injury to mineral workings had been assessed and paid at the time the canal was made. The difficulty in construing this section arises from the fact that its framers evidently thought the only risk of damage incurred was by the canal owners. The possibility that there would be even greater damage if valuable mineral workings were drowned out owing to a breakage in the canal does not seem to have occurred to them, or, at all events, is not provided against in unambiguous language. The section is divided into three parts. The first gives a right to the Canal Company to inspect the mines. The second provides for the repair of wilful damage at the expense of the mineowner. The third is in these terms :—"In case the said company (i.e., the Canal Company) shall find it necessary for the safety of the said navigation, or any of the works thereto belonging, to stop the working of any mines and minerals under or near the said canal, or any of the works thereto belonging, the said company shall and they are hereby required to make satisfaction for the value of such mines and minerals to the owners, occupiers, or other persons entitled to receive the same." The defenders argued that this gave an option to the Canal Company alone; that there was no obligation on them to inspect; and that, even if they did inspect, it was left entirely to them to say whether they would stop the working. Upon a reasonable construction of the section it appears to me that if the Canal Company do inspect, as has been done here, if it is proved as a fact in the case, as the evidence here shows, that it is necessary for the safety of the navigation to stop the working of the mines and minerals under and near the canal, and if the Canal Company intimate to the mineowners that they will hold them liable in damages for any injury to the canal, this in effect is stopping the working of the minerals. In that event the Canal Company is liable to pay compensation to the owner for the value of what may be held to be minerals. I therefore agree with the Lord Ordinary on this branch of the case.

The next point is whether the shale in question is a mineral which has to be paid for. The test to be applied is that laid down by Lord Halsbury in *Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie*¹ and the Lord Chancellor in the Budhill case.¹ The Court has to determine what these words mean in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners. The Lord Chancellor says this is to be determined at the time when the purchase was effected. In the present case three dates have been suggested as the crucial period, viz., 1817, the date of the Act, 1818, the date when possession was obtained, and 1862, the date of the conveyance. As between 1817 and 1818 there would be no difference in result. If, however, 1862 be taken there would be a difference. At the later date it is conceded that the shale in question was according to the vernacular or in common parlance a mineral. The dispute is whether it can be so regarded at either of the earlier dates. Reference was made to observations by the Lord President in the Glenboig case² as supporting the view that the date of the conveyance should be taken. It is evident, however, that the point which is now of importance was not present in that case. For the reasons stated by the Lord Ordinary I am of opinion that the question must be determined with reference to the year 1818, when the Canal Company bought the ground and entered into possession. This was the date of the purchase. The protracted delay in obtaining a conveyance was due to the position taken up by Lord Hopetoun. The question of fact therefore is whether oil shale was regarded as a mineral in 1818. The expression in the Act is "mines and minerals," and an argument was used that the term "mines" covered anything that could be got by mining. This would be to give much too wide a meaning to the reservation, which, in my opinion, does not include more than would be covered by the word "minerals" alone. The evidence of some of the skilled witnesses, e.g., Mr Rankine and Mr Gemmell, is to the effect that, in their view, everything from the roots of the grass downwards is included in the term "minerals." This view cannot be taken since the decision in the case of Farie.³

¹ 15 R. (H. L.) 94.

June 11, 1912.
 Marquis of
 Linlithgow v.
 North British
 Railway Co.
 Lord Mac-
 kenzie.

The question is whether in the year 1818 oil shale was according to the vernacular of that period or in common parlance a mineral. In my opinion it was not. The term "oil shale" was not known previous to 1860; what was known before that as a scientific fact was that oil could be distilled from certain shales, but until or shortly before 1860 there was no distillation of shale for oil for commercial purposes. In 1818, although the substance may have been known to exist, and though the fact may have been known to men of science that it had a potential value, the power of realising that value had not been ascertained, and it was not ascertained until Dr Young's discoveries in the middle of the century. In 1818 it was not, in the opinion of the mining or commercial world, a mineral. Mention is made by Williams, who, according to the pursuers' argument, was not purely a scientist, of strata of blaes or shale which are very common and exceedingly numerous in coal countries. This is in the second edition of his work published in 1810, in which he refers to what the Scotch colliers call "creashy" (greasy) blaes, and says that some of these glossy greasy blaes will actually burn when fire is set to them though they will not consume. Further on he describes the appear-

¹ 1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1.

² 1910 S. C., at p. 961.

³ 15 R. (H. L.) 94.

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

ance and composition of schistus in language that the pursuers' counsel maintained was exactly appropriate to oil shale. There is evidence of the use of blaes or shale for fuel, and in Dorsetshire the Kimmeridge shale was put to this purpose two hundred years ago. As regards what Mr Rankine calls "mineral uses," this was confined at the date in question to its use as waste material for putting on footpaths and carriage-drives. Several patents were referred to, the earliest being Becher's in 1681, then Eele's in 1694, and Betton's in 1742. This last was for the invention of "An Oyl Extracted from a flinty rock, for the cure of rheumatick and scorbutick and other cases," the rock being described as "Black pitchy, flinty rock," which, it was suggested in argument here, was shale, not coal. The other patents were for coal. The defenders' witness, Professor Marshall, admits that Betton's patent might refer to bituminous shale, but points out that it was merely a laboratory experiment. In 1781 a patent was taken out by Lord Dundonald for extracting oil from coal, and in Mr Galletly's Treatise, published in 1876, the statement is made that works were established at Muirkirk in Ayrshire, which were in operation for fifty years (from 1781 to 1831) for the working of this patent, by which a tar yielding brown oil, naphtha, and ammonia was obtained. Mollerat's patent followed in 1837, for an improvement in the manufacture of gas, in which mention is made of the oil obtained by the distillation of pit coal and of bituminous schistus, "the use of which has yet been overlooked." The claim in it is for the apparatus therein described for the continuous distillation of bituminous schistus. There is, however, no evidence of any apparatus being worked at or prior to 1818 for the extraction of tar or pitch or oil from shale. Professor Tatlock refers to the earlier patents in his evidence, and says he does not think any of those earlier than Dr Young's ever came into practical use. He also refers to Kirkton's Elements of Mineralogy, published in 1794, which describes bituminous shale as looking like bad coal, and Jameson's System of Mineralogy, published in 1816, which includes in the extracts from bituminous shale empyreumatic oil and thick pitchy oil.

Shale in its chemical constitution is indurated clay. There are infinite gradations between coal, on the one hand, and clay on the other. Chemically, coal and shale contain the same ingredients, and for this reason Professor Tatlock says he has always regarded shale as a mineral as much as coal. This shows that for the purposes of the present case evidence based on analysis is not of much assistance in determining whether oil shale was a mineral according to the vernacular in 1818. As was pointed out by the Lord President in the Torbanehill case,¹ the fact that Torbanehill mineral consisted of certain component parts, which are the component parts of coal, would not necessarily make it coal. It depends on the proportions. Coal and shale are distinct and different substances, and, as the pursuers' leading witness says, "I don't think any mining engineer would designate shale by the term coal." Cannel coal, which is described in the Statistical Account of Scotland (Lesmahagow part) for 1793, as having some resemblance to jet, contains a much larger percentage of fixed carbon than shale does. The description given by Professor Gregory is that Fawnsparke shale (the shale in question here) stands between the clay on the one hand and the coal on the other, and that it is nearer the coal than the clay on account of its economic value. As regards commercial use, he says that, though Torbanehill mineral was used from about 1850, it was 1860 before the other shales were recognised as having a commercial value. Probably the nearest approach to a commercial use before 1818 is that described in Lewis's Materia Medica (London, 1761), which, according to the preface, includes the substances commonly prepared as articles of commerce. It is there stated that on submitting mineral bitumens to a degree of heat in closed vessels an acidulous liquor, an oil approaching to the nature of petroleum, is obtained. Reference is also made to the genuine sort of mineral oil which is extracted by distillation from a hard bitumen or kind of stone coal found in Shropshire and other parts of England, and the statement is made that an oil obtained by distillation from a particular bitumen is directed by the London College to be kept in shops. The pursuers' evidence comes to this, that the commercial use of oil shale was not known in 1818, though it was known that oil could be extracted from certain coal measures, amongst which shale might have been contained. Except in the case of Lord Dundonald's patent, and the use for medicinal purposes, distillation had not been resorted to for practical purposes at that time. It was not until the geological survey of Scotland in 1892 that the out-crops of oil shale were shown. In the survey of 1859 there are no shale out-crops indicated, though the coal and limestone are. Shale is included in the Coal Mines Regulation Act of 1872, but not in the Act of 1860.

¹ 17 D. 1.

June 11, 1912.
Marquis of
Linlithgow v.
North British
Railway Co.

Lord Mac-
kenzie.

For these reasons I am of opinion that oil shale was not regarded as a mineral in 1818, and that the judgment of the Lord Ordinary ought to be affirmed.

THE COURT adhered.

HOPE, SIMSON, & LENNOX, W.S.—JAMES WATSON, S.S.C.—Agents.

JOSEPH CONSTANT, Pursuer.—Sandeman, K.C.—C. H. Brown.
ALFRED CHRISTENSEN, Compearing Defender.—D.-F. Dickson— Armit.

No. 185.
June 20, 1912.

Ship—Maritime lien—Necessaries—Necessaries supplied in foreign port.

Constant v.
Christensen.

Held (by the Lord Ordinary, Dewar) that the law of Scotland, like the law of England, does not recognise a maritime lien for necessaries even when they have been supplied to a ship in a foreign port.

ON 14th June 1911 Joseph Constant, London, brought an action in the Court of Session for declarator and sale of the steamship "Baltic," at that time lying in the harbour of Bo'ness.

The action was directed against the owner of the ship and certain other defenders, but only one of the defenders, viz., Alfred Christensen, coal merchant, Copenhagen, compeared and lodged defences in the action.

The facts of the case were thus narrated by the Lord Ordinary (Dewar):—

June 20, 1912. "This is a competition upon the price of a ship sold by judicial warrant, and the question for decision is whether the pursuer, a mortgagee, has a preferable claim to the proceeds in virtue of his mortgage, or whether the compearing defender is to be preferred in virtue of an alleged maritime lien.

Constant v.
Christensen.

"The 'Baltic' belonged to Herz Klompus, a Russian subject, and was registered at the port of Libau, Russia. By account current mortgage, dated 1st November 1910, executed in London, Klompus mortgaged the vessel to the pursuer, Joseph Constant, a London ship-owner, in security of the sum of £2400 due on account current, conform to memorandum of agreement, also executed in London on the same date. By this memorandum of agreement the owner agreed to pay the £2400 in thirty equal instalments of £80 each, and further agreed that if any of the instalments should not be paid on their due date all the money should become immediately due and payable. The owner failed to pay the instalments, and the whole £2400, with interest, thereupon became due. On 26th April 1911 the pursuer raised an action in the Sheriff Court at Linlithgow for payment of this sum and arrested the 'Baltic,' which was then lying at Bo'ness harbour, on the dependence of the action. On 12th May the Sheriff decerned against the owner for payment, with interest, and granted warrant to the pursuer to enter into possession of the 'Baltic' and sell her and apply the proceeds in satisfying his claim.

"On the 8th May 1911 the compearing defender, Alfred Christensen, coal merchant, Copenhagen, raised an action in the Court of Session against the owner Klompus for £150 for coals supplied and cash advanced to the master of the 'Baltic' for the purchase of necessaries on 10th April 1911 when she was lying at the port of Copenhagen. He also arrested on the dependence of the action, and obtained decree on 30th May.

"On the 14th of June 1911 the pursuer raised the present action [of declarator and sale], and the 'Baltic' has now been sold and has realised £1255, and this sum has been consigned. The pursuer claims to be ranked and preferred primo loco to the fund in medio to the extent of £2400, with £13, 13s. of expenses, in virtue of his mortgage and in respect of his arrestment; while the compearing defender maintains that his claim for £150 falls to be ranked preferably, on the ground that he has by the laws of Scotland and of Denmark a maritime lien in respect of the coals supplied and the advance made to the master of the 'Baltic,' and he further pleads that the mortgage upon which the pursuer's claim is based is invalid according to the law of Russia, by which law, he maintains, the rights of parties fall to be determined."

The case was heard on 29th May 1912.

The contentions of the parties and the authorities cited are stated in the opinion of the Lord Ordinary.

On 20th June 1912 the Lord Ordinary sustained the claim of the pursuer as mortgagee, and repelled the claim of the claimant Christensen.

"OPINION.—[After the narrative of facts given supra]—I do not think that either the law of Denmark or the law of Russia has application to a case of this kind. It was decided in the case of Clark v. Bowring & Company, 1908 S. C. 1168, that the law of Scotland only can be applied in determining the ranking of claims on a British ship locally situated in Scotland; and in the 'Tagus,' [1903] P. 44, where a foreign vessel was within English jurisdiction, the same rule was applied—(See also the 'Mecca,' June 20, 1912. [1895] P. 95). I think, therefore, the only question is whether, according to the law of Scotland, the compearing defender has a maritime lien for the necessities he supplied and the cash he advanced to the master of the 'Baltic.' I am of opinion that he has not.

Constant v.
Christensen.

"By the law of some foreign countries a person who supplies necessities has a lien upon the ship, and at one time he could maintain such a suit in England; but in 1835 it was decided in the case of the 'Neptune,' (1835) 3 Kn. P. C. 94, that the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction to try such a case, and that the material or necessities man could only bring an action against the owner and not against the ship. Then when the Act of 1840 gave the Court jurisdiction over necessities supplied to a foreign ship (which by the Act of 1861 was extended to all ships, including British ships), it was contended that this extension of jurisdiction created a lien for necessities, but in the 'Pacific,' (1864) 33 L. J., P. M. A. 120, and again in the 'Heinrich Bjorn,' (1885) 10 P. D. 44, and (1886) 11 App. Cas. 270, where all the authorities are reviewed, it was held that the 'material man,' by the mere fact of his supplying necessities in no case obtains the ship as a security until he institutes his suit in Court, and any security he may thus obtain is subject to any existing claims. It is therefore quite settled by the Admiralty law as administered in England, that the 'material man' has no maritime lien for necessities—(Abbott, Law of Merchant Ships and Seamen, 14th ed., p. 184).

"But it was maintained on behalf of the compearing defender that this was not in accordance with the law of Scotland. He admitted that in Scots law there was no lien for necessities supplied in a home port, but argued that Scotland always had recognised a maritime lien for necessities supplied in a foreign port; and I was referred to the cases of Maxwell v. Wardroper, (1726) M. 6266; Ropework Company of Port-Glasgow v. Crosses, (1761) M. 6268, and Hamilton v. Wood, (1788) M. 6269. But these decisions do not appear to support the defenders' contention. In Maxwell's case, which was decided in 1726, a claim was made for a hypothec in respect of material furnished for building a ship which was sold before completion. It was pled for the other creditors that 'time and experience, the great reformers of laws, have taught us that most part of the conventional and tacit hypothecs introduced by the common law were a burdensome nuisance, of great hindrance to commerce.' This plea received effect, and the claim to establish a hypothec was rejected. In the Ropework Company case, decided in 1761, ropes had been supplied at Port-Glasgow to a ship going to Virginia, and it was held that the claim of the company which supplied the ropes was preferable. But this decision was not followed in the later case of Hamilton v. Wood, decided in 1788. Wood repaired a ship belonging to a bankrupt at Port-Glasgow, and claimed a right of hypothec, and the trustees for other creditors objected. The Lord Ordinary decided in favour of Wood; but, on a reclaiming note being presented the Court transmitted the case for the opinion of English counsel on the law and practice of England, and after obtaining an opinion, recalled the Lord Ordinary's judgment, and decided that the furnishers had no hypothec or right of bottomry on the ship. And on 15th June 1789 the House of Lords approved the decision and dismissed the appeal. Those cases appear only to decide that there is no maritime lien for necessities or repairs supplied to a vessel in a home port. I cannot find anything in them or in the text-writers to which I was referred (viz., Stair, i. 12, 18; Erskine, iii. 1, 34; Bell's Com., i. 573) to suggest that there is any peculiarity in the law of Scotland which distinguishes it from the Admiralty law of England. On the contrary, the case of Hamilton v. Wood, followed later by Hay v. Le Neve, (1824) 2 Sh. App. 395, and Boettcher v. Carron Company, (1861) 23 D. 322, shows that there is no distinction between English and Scottish law in this branch of jurisprudence. The maritime

June 20, 1912. code is neither English nor Scottish, but British law. This was very clearly set forth in the case of Currie v. Macknight, [1897] A. C. 97, where Lord Watson said, at p. 103,—‘From the earliest times the Courts of Scotland exercising jurisdiction in Admiralty causes have disregarded the municipal rules of Scottish law, and have invariably professed to administer the law and customs of the sea generally prevailing among maritime states. In later times, with the growth of British shipping, the Admiralty law of England has gradually acquired predominance, and resort has seldom been had to the laws of other states for the guidance of the Courts.’

Constant v.
Christensen.

“I am accordingly of opinion that the claim of the pursuer falls to be sustained.”

J. & J. Ross, W.S.—BEVERIDGE, SUTHERLAND, & SMITH, W.S.—Agents.

No. 186. A. V. BROWER (Mrs J. V. Brower's Executor), Pursuer and Complainer (Reclaimer).—Macmillan, K.C.—Lord Kinross.

July 12, 1912. H. CHEYNE AND ANOTHER (Hon. Mrs Ramsay's Trustees), Defenders and Respondents (Respondents).—Macphail, K.C.—G. C. Stewart.

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

Trust—Administration—Investments—Foreign investments—Deposit of security writs in foreign country—Duty of trustees to creditor attaching beneficiary's interest.

By her trust-disposition and settlement a testatrix directed her trustees, on the death of a liferenter, to convey her whole estate to A, an American citizen, and gave them special powers of investment in American securities, desiring them to act in this matter under the advice of a New York trust company. The trust funds were invested by the trustees in American securities, and the security writs were deposited with this company.

During the subsistence of the liferent an American creditor of A, by means of an arrestment and furthcoming, obtained a decree of the Scottish Courts adjudging to her A's whole interest in the trust-estate. Thereafter the creditor brought an action against the trustees in which she averred that the form in which the securities stood would, by American law, entitle A to demand delivery of them from the custodiers thereof on the liferenter's death, and maintained that the defenders were bound to invest the funds in such form as would prevent her right under the Scottish decree being thus defeated; and she also sought to interdict the defenders from returning the security writs to America, whence they had been brought for the purpose of the actions.

The Court assolized the defenders, holding that their administration could not be interfered with, as the acts complained of were not in breach of the trust in respect (1) that the trustees were entitled under the trust-deed to deposit the securities in New York, and (2) with regard to the investments, that they were under no duty to do anything for the purpose of fortifying the pursuer's position which would not have been required in the ordinary course of the administration of the trust.

1ST DIVISION. THESE were actions of accounting and payment and of suspension and interdict at the instance of Mrs Jenny V. Brower, Utica, U.S.A., against Harry Cheyne, W.S., Edinburgh, and the Honourable Charles Maule Ramsay, as trustees acting under the trust-disposition and settlement of Mr Ramsay's deceased wife. During the dependance of the actions the pursuer died, and her executor, A. Vedder Brower, Utica, U.S.A., was sisted as pursuer in the actions.

Lord Hunter.

By her trust-disposition and settlement Mrs Ramsay bequeathed July 12, 1912. the whole free income of her estate to her husband, and directed that, on his death, her whole estate should be paid to her brother, William R. Garrison, a citizen of, and resident in, the United States, as his absolute property. The deed also contained the following clause:—

—
Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

"I give special power to my said trustees and executors to retain the whole or any part of my means and estate in the securities in which the same may be at the time of my death, or to alter and vary these securities and to invest any part of my means and estate in securities of a similar kind to those held by me at the time of my death, hereby declaring that as regards any American securities which I may hold at the time of my death, it is my wish and desire that my trustees and executors should be guided by the advice of the Metropolitan Trust Company of the city of New York, and that my trustees and executors shall have full power to invest in any American security approved by the said Metropolitan Trust Company, and shall also have power to lend out the trust funds on the debentures or deposit-receipts or other securities of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament or charter, whether of Great Britain or any of its Colonies."

Mrs Brower, who had certain claims against Mr Garrison, arrested his reversionary interest in Mrs Ramsay's estate in the hands of the trustees so as to found jurisdiction against him in the Scots Courts, and proceeded with an action against him. Her action was undefended, and she obtained decree against Mr Garrison on 19th August 1908 for sums amounting in all to £11,226, 12s. 1d. In her action Mrs Brower, on 20th July 1908, had arrested Mr Garrison's interest in Mrs Ramsay's trust on the dependence of the action and in security of the sums sued for. Having obtained her decree, Mrs Brower then raised an action of furthcoming against Mr Garrison as principal debtor and Mrs Ramsay's trustees as arrestees. This action was also undefended. In the course of proceedings therein the Court, by decree dated 16th July 1909, found that the arrestment validly attached Mr Garrison's reversionary right in the trust-estate, that the trustees held the estate subject to the arrestment and the attachment thereby created, and that the pursuer was entitled to have Mr Garrison's reversionary right and interest made available and furthcoming in the process to the extent and effect of satisfying her debt. On 31st May 1910 the Court remitted to an actuary to value the reversion, and, a report having been obtained that the present value of the reversion was £9664 or thereby, the Court appointed the reversion to be exposed to public roup at the upset price of £10,000. This was done; but no offer of the upset price was made, and, thereafter, by decree dated 8th July 1910, the reversionary right of Mr Garrison was in the action of furthcoming adjudged to belong to Mrs Brower.

Thereafter on 29th November 1910 Mrs Brower brought the present action of count, reckoning, and payment against Mrs Ramsay's trustees. The conclusions of the summons were for (1) declarator that the defenders were bound to pay to the pursuer the whole of the trust-estate upon the termination of Mr Ramsay's life interest, or, otherwise, to render to the pursuer or her assignees just count and reckoning for their intromissions as trustees with the trust-estate; (2) an order on the defenders to produce to the Court Mrs Ramsay's trust-disposition and settlement; (3) an order on the defenders to July 12, 1912. produce an account of their intromissions with the trust-estate whereby the amount of the residue thereof might be ascertained; and (4) an order on the defenders to produce in each year an account of their intromissions for the preceding twelve months. There was also a conclusion for the sequestration of the estate, which was ultimately not insisted in.

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

In this action the defenders on 2nd March 1911 were ordained to lodge in process accounts of their intromissions with the capital of the trust-estate. These accounts having been lodged, objections thereto and answers were lodged, and after a hearing in the Procedure-roll, the Lord Ordinary (Guthrie) on 7th December 1911 pronounced an interlocutor appointing the defenders within one month to lodge in process the security writs constituting the investments representing the capital of the trust-estate. These writs, which for the most part were deposited in New York, were thereupon brought to Scotland, and lodged in process. The pursuer then submitted further objections to the defenders' accounts, which the Lord Ordinary (Hunter) allowed to be received in process. In these objections the pursuer set forth:—(Obj. 2) "With reference to the following mortgages, viz., A. C. Woodruff (balance), $10,000; S. B. Mahan (balance), $17,500; Isaac Freidenheit, $10,000; Selma C. Johnson (balance), $2000, the pursuer objects to the form in which the title to these securities stands. According to American law, where notice of a trust in the person of the mortgagee is given to the mortgagor on the face of the mortgage, the mortgagor is bound to see to the application of the sum contained in the mortgage in terms of the trust, and is entitled to make payment direct to the beneficiary entitled to the same in terms of the trust disclosed. In the case of the Woodruff mortgage the present title, as appears from the abstract lodged, stands in name of the defenders as trustees under Mrs Ramsay's last will and testament, conform to assignation in their favour by the defender Mr Ramsay as the deceased's executor, dated 11th November, and filed 14th December 1909. On 25th October 1904 there was filed the said last will and testament of Mrs Ramsay and certificate of probate, and the abstract of the said last will and testament sets forth that on the death of the defender Mr Ramsay the deceased's whole estate is to go to Mr Garrison as his absolute property. The mortgagor has thus notice of the trust, and, on the death of the defender Mr Ramsay, would be entitled to pay over the sum of $10,000 remaining due on this mortgage to Mr Garrison direct, notwithstanding the acquisition by the pursuer of Mr Garrison's whole rights in the trust-estate. The defenders, notwithstanding the decrees obtained by the pursuer on 16th July 1909 and 8th July 1910, have thus failed to take any steps to protect the interests of the pursuer in the said mortgage; and, since 16th July 1909, the whole sum therein contained has been, and continues to be, exposed to the risk of being carried off by Mr Garrison or his creditors." The same objection was also stated with regard to other mortgages on which the capital of the trust-estate was invested. (Obj. 5) "As regards the security writs, which until recently have been in the hands of the North-Western Trust Company of St Paul and the Metropolitan Trust Company of New York, which comprise all the securities of any realisable value except the Freidenheit mortgage, which has been in the hands of the defenders' law-agents in Scotland, the pursuer refers to the terms of the receipts granted by these Trust Companies, Nos 45 and 46 of process.* The pursuer believes and avers that according to July 12, 1912. American law the custodiers of security writs, if notified of a trust affecting the same, would be entitled and bound to deliver the same to the beneficiary entitled absolutely thereto. On the death of the defender Mr Ramsay the pursuer believes and avers that Mr Garrison would accordingly be entitled to demand delivery of the security writs if deposited with the said Trust Companies on receipts in the terms of those produced, and thus to defeat the rights of the pursuer." (Obj. 6) "The pursuer respectfully submits that in the circumstances she is entitled to call upon the defenders to take steps to have the trust-estate invested in such form and in such securities deposited in such custody in this country as will not expose the rights which she holds under the decrees of the Court of Session in her favour to defeat by Mr Garrison or his creditors."

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

Parties were heard in the Procedure-roll on the objections, and thereafter the Lord Ordinary (Hunter), on 16th March 1912, pronounced the following interlocutor:—" . . . (1) Repels the objections for the pursuer to the accounts lodged by the defenders contained in the closed record on these and answers thereto, No. 55 of process, and also in the further objections, No. 151 of process; and (2) in respect the pursuer does not now insist upon any of the conclusions of the summons other than accounting, assoilzies the defenders from the whole conclusions of the summons, and decerns. . . ."†

* No. 45 bore that the securities were held "for account of the estate of Martha E. Ramsay." No. 46 bore that the securities were held by the North-Western Trust Company "as agent for Charles Maule Ramsay and Harry Cheyne, as trustees under the last will and testament of Martha Estelle Ramsay."

† "OPINION.—[After narrating the circumstances in which the action was raised and the procedure in the case]—The pursuer's counsel asked me to allow them a proof of two averments of American law made by them in objections 2 and 5 of their further objections. The first of these averments is to the effect that 'According to American law, where notice of a trust in the person of the mortgagee is given to the mortgagor on the face of the mortgage, the mortgagor is bound to see to the application of the sum contained in the mortgage in terms of the trust, and is entitled to make payment direct to the beneficiary entitled to the same in terms of the trust disclosed.' She says that, in the case of certain of the American investments on mortgage, the mortgagor has notice of the trust in Mr Garrison's favour, but not of the decree in her favour. The second averment is—'The pursuer believes and avers that according to American law the custodiers of security writs, if notified of a trust affecting same, would be entitled and bound to deliver the same to the beneficiary entitled absolutely thereto. On the death of the defender Mr Ramsay the pursuer believes and avers that Mr Garrison would accordingly be entitled to demand delivery of the security writs if deposited with the said trust companies on receipts in the terms of those produced, and thus to defeat the rights of the pursuer.' The trust companies referred to have until recently held in their hands securities of the trust under receipts granted to the trustees, Nos. 45 and 46 of process.

"The pursuer supports her objections to the account, and in particular her application for a proof upon the points referred to, upon the ground that the vouchers do not properly instruct the capital of the estate unless they show that the securities are taken in such form as to protect her rights under the decree which she has obtained.

"It has to be kept in view that the pursuer does not maintain that the

July 12, 1912.

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

On 12th January 1912 Mrs Brower brought the note of suspension and interdict in which she craved the Court "to interdict, prohibit, and discharge the said respondents as trustees foresaid, and all others acting under their authority, from withdrawing or removing furth of Scotland any of the documents of title of the securities which constitute the trust-estate in their hands or under their administration, except for such temporary purposes as may be necessary in the ordinary and proper course of administration of the said trust-estate; and further and in particular, from transmitting to the United States of America, or elsewhere furth of the jurisdiction of the Court of Session, for the purpose of deposit and retention there, the documents of title forming Nos. 57 to 150 inclusive of the process in the action at the instance of the complainer against the respondents as trustees foresaid, the summons in which was signeted on 29th November 1910, and which is presently in dependence before Lord Hunter (Ordinary)." She averred:—"The complainer is advised that if the said securities are permanently retained abroad, the Courts of the United States will claim jurisdiction over the same on the death of the liferenter, and that she will be occasioned serious difficulty and expense in making effectual the decree which she holds from the Court of Session. The respondents are aware that the result of the deposit of the securities in America may be to defeat the decree of the Court of Session." In their answers the respondents averred that the trust-estate was at Mrs Ramsay's death, and still was, invested almost entirely in American securities, and that, in accordance with her instructions in her settlement, they had acted in all questions as to the investments on the advice and under the guidance of the Metropolitan Trust Company of New York. They also averred (Article 6):—"In consequence of the nature of the trust and the character of the investments, the respondents have from time to time found it necessary investments are not such as the defenders are entitled to hold in terms of the trust which they are administering. She could hardly successfully do so, as Mrs Ramsay in her will provided:—[His Lordship narrated the clause regarding the trustees' powers of investment, which is quoted above].

"A creditor who has attached by decree of furthcoming the interest of a beneficiary is, or may be, entitled to know that the trustees have made proper investments within their power under the trust, and to see that payment or conveyance is not made to the beneficiary in defiance of his decree. I know of no authority, however, in legal decision or principle to justify the proposition that he is entitled to impose new and additional positive obligations upon the trustees, necessitating an inquiry into foreign laws as to a possible competition between that creditor and the beneficiary or his other creditors as to foreign investments lawfully held by them, and necessitating, it may even be, an entire re-arrangement of the trust securities. I am not, therefore, prepared to allow the pursuer a proof of American law on the points referred to, and, as no other objection except the one I have dealt with was argued, I repel the whole of the pursuer's objections to the defenders' accounts, both those contained in the record on the objections and answers and those contained in the further objections.

"As I have already indicated, there are other than accounting conclusions in the summons. Lord Guthrie in the opinion expressed by him when ordering accounts reserved consideration thereof; but, as I invited argument thereon and as I understand the pursuer does not desire to insist upon any of them if I am against her upon the question in the accounting with which I have dealt, I am prepared to assoilzie the defenders from the whole conclusions of the first action raised against them."

and expedient for the proper administration of the trust to deposit for July 12, 1912. safe custody most of the security writs with either the said Metropolitan Trust Company or with the North-Western Trust Company of St Paul, Minnesota. The security writs were held by both companies to the order of the respondents, and could only be uplifted by the defenders or the survivor of them. Since 9th January 1912 the respondents have uplifted the security writs deposited in America (with the exception of the writs applicable to two investments, which were required in America), and with these exceptions have lodged the whole security writs in process in terms of the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor of 7th December 1911."

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

The complainer pleaded ;—(1) The rights and interests of the complainer as sole fiar of the said trust-estate being endangered by the threatened transmission and retention abroad of the said securities, the complainer is entitled to interdict as craved. (2) The respondents being bound in accordance with proper and prudent trust administration to retain the securities of the said trust-estate under their own control and custody in Scotland, interdict should be granted in terms of the prayer of the note.

On 16th March 1912 the Lord Ordinary (Hunter) refused the prayer of the note.*

* " OPINION.—[After stating the terms of the prayer of the note]—From her averments it would appear that the complainer is apprehensive lest, if the securities are retained abroad, the American Courts might claim jurisdiction over them on the death of the liferenter. Although an American, she has obtained against another American a decree in absence in Scotland. She does not, however, desire that either this decree or the decree of forthcoming which followed thereon should be submitted to challenge in the Courts of her own country.

" The respondents explain in their answers that the trust-estate was at Mrs Ramsay's death, and still is, invested almost entirely in American securities. They further explain that in accordance with express directions of the truster, they have acted in all questions connected with the trust investments on the advice and under the guidance of the Metropolitan Trust Company of the city of New York. In article 6 of their statement of facts they say :—[His Lordship quoted the averment printed above].

" In support of the complainer's application I was referred to two cases, Maclachlan v. Meiklam, (1857) 19 D. 960, and the well-known case of Orr Ewing, 11 R. 600, rev. 13 R. (H. of L.) 1. In the former of these cases the trustee, in whose favour a bond and disposition in security had been granted, was found 'entitled to interdict against the deeds constituting the provision and his trust and security, and the title-deeds of the estate, being removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Court of Session.' That case, however, affords no warrant for a beneficiary intervening in a trust and asking that trustees should be restrained by the Court from exercising their discretion as to the place for depositing the security writs. The question did arise in the Orr Ewing case, where, in an action by beneficiaries against trustees, there were conclusions, inter alia, for declarator that the trustees were not entitled to deposit the title-deeds, writs, or evidents of the estate in the custody of any Court furth of Scotland, and for interdict against their removing the title-deeds beyond the jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts, or, alternatively to the conclusion for interdict, for sequestration of the trust-estate and appointment of a judicial factor. In the Inner House decree was pronounced in terms of the declaratory conclusion of the summons, and a judicial factor was appointed. The House of Lords, although adhering to the judgment of the First Division so far as

July 12, 1912.

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.

The pursuer reclaimed in both actions, and the cases were heard before the First Division (consisting of the Lord President, Lord Johnston, and Lord Skerrington) on 21st and 22nd May 1912. At the hearing *Orr Ewing's Trustees v. Orr Ewing*¹ was referred to by the respondents.

At advising on 12th July 1912,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—The deceased Mrs Charles Ramsay left a will by which she gave her whole property to trustees consisting of her husband, the Hon. Charles Ramsay, and Mr Cheyne, a domiciled Scotsman. The trustees were to hold her property in order to give the liferent of the property to her husband if he survived her, and, upon the expiration of that liferent, the fee was to go to her brother, Mr Garrison, an American subject. She gave, in her settlement, particular directions that the trustees might continue all her American investments. There was an investment clause the appointment of a judicial factor was concerned, reversed the judgment so far as finding in terms of the declaratory conclusions of the summons. At the foot of page 4 of 13 R. (H. L.) the Lord Chancellor said,—‘The first declaration seems to assume that there is something in the terms of the trust created by John Orr Ewing’s will prohibitory of, or repugnant to, any administration of the trust-estate elsewhere than in Scotland; and the Lord President has treated the pursuers’ demand as, for that reason, ex debito justitiæ; saying, “If the defenders, as trustees and executors, had voluntarily proposed to remove the estate out of Scotland, for the purpose of carrying on the administration elsewhere, it will hardly be disputed that the pursuers would have been entitled by interdict to prevent this being done.” For that view I am unable to discover any foundation in the terms of the trust-disposition and settlement. It is true that the trust is created by a Scottish deed, and is technically a Scottish trust. But there are no words requiring the administration of the funds belonging to the residuary estate, when realised by the trustees, to be in Scotland only; on the contrary, the trustees are authorised to invest the whole or any part of those funds in real securities (not restrained to Scotland), or in personal securities of certain specified kinds, in any part of Great Britain or Ireland or of the British colonies or dominions. If, in the honest exercise of those powers, they had invested those funds in English securities, they would have been acting in accordance with their trust; and I do not understand on what principle they could have been interdicted from so doing. The fact that they have not done so cannot alter the terms of the trust or justify a declaration not warranted thereby.’ Lord Blackburn, at the foot of page 20 of the same report, says:—‘If the majority of the trustees at any time came to reside in England, and bona fide thought it best for the interest of the estate that the whole funds should be vested in English securities and managed in England, there is nothing expressed in the deed to prevent their doing so. I cannot, notwithstanding what is said by the Lord President, think that there would have been any ground for an interdict to prevent them from doing so.’

“A case may be made by a beneficiary of so exceptional a character as to justify the Court in interfering with trustees in the exercise of the discretion which I think they possess of selecting such place as they think most suitable for the custody of the security writs of the trust. But I am of opinion that no relevant averments have been made by the complainer to support the present application. I shall, therefore, refuse interdict and dismiss the note.”

¹ (1884) 11 R. 600, rev. (1885) 13 R. (H. L.) 1, 10 App. Cas. 453.

which gave a power to invest the trust funds in American investments—I July 12, 1912. mean a clause with power to invest in other than what are called trust investments in this country—and, in particular, there was a special direction that she hoped her trustees in the management of her estate would be guided by the advice of a certain financial company in New York. Mrs Ramsay died and the trustees entered into possession, and have since administered the fund up to the present time, and—Mr Ramsay still being alive—have paid the proceeds of the funds year by year to him.

Brower's
Executor v.
Ramsay's
Trustees.
—
Ld. President.

Now, it seems that Mr Garrison, the fiar, had incurred debts in America, and Mrs Brower, one of his American creditors, came over to this country, founded jurisdiction against him by an arrestment in the hands of the trustees ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and obtained in absence a decree for the debt due to her. Having obtained that decree, she then raised an action of furthcoming against the trustees. That action also was not defended, and in that action, after unsuccessfully exposing for sale the fee—the enjoyment of which, of course, cannot be had until after the death of Mr Ramsay, which may not occur for many years yet—she obtained a decree adjudging the fee to belong to her. In following out that decree she raised an action of count and reckoning against the trustees. She could not raise one of payment, because there is no present debt due to her; but she maintained, and maintained successfully, before the Court that she was entitled to see the accounts of the trustees and the security writs in order to satisfy herself that the trustees were not paying away the trust-estate. The trustees acceded to that. They lodged their accounts and replied to such objections as were made to them; and they also, upon a special crave, got up all the security writs and produced them in process—I say got up, because, as a matter of fact, the trustees, for their own convenience, kept the security writs to a great extent in America, the investments being largely American.

The question that has now arisen, and the only question that was argued before your Lordships upon this reclaiming note, is this: the pursuer in the action, the holder of this decree of furthcoming, who is now Mrs Brower's executor—she having died while the action was pending before the Lord Ordinary—first of all objects to the security writs going back to America. His objection is founded really upon two grounds. He objects to their being in America at all, and he makes averments to this effect. He says that “if the security writs are left in America, I offer to prove—if I am allowed a proof—that by American law Mr Garrison, the fiar, on the death of Mr Ramsay, the liferenter, will be himself entitled without help from the trustees, and indeed in spite of them, to demand and obtain delivery of the security writs from the trust companies with whom they are deposited, if they have been notified of the trust; and in any case, that the American Courts will not respect the decree that has been obtained in the Scottish Courts as excluding all other and competing claims, but will allow any other creditors of Mr Garrison, of whom I believe there are plenty, to come in; and accordingly the advantageous position that I have at present secured will be defeated; and, as this is a Scottish trust, and I am in possession of a decree obtained in the Scottish Courts, the order that I ask is one that I am entitled to obtain from the Court.” The Lord Ordinary has not given July 12, 1912. effect to that. I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary's judgment is right.

 Brower's
 Executor v. In the first place, I think that, quite apart from the general law laid down Ramsay's in Orr Ewing's case,¹ it would be impossible to say of this trust, looking to Trustees. the particular injunction that I have already mentioned, that it was, in any sense, a breach of trust to keep the security writs in America. On the Ld. President. contrary, I think the testatrix obviously contemplated that the security writs might be kept there.

I next come to the more formidable objection as to the alleged possibility of Mr Garrison obtaining delivery of the security writs, and as to the effect which the fact of the writs being in America may have upon the action of future creditors. The solution of that question lies in this : we are only here, and our jurisdiction can only be invoked in this count and reckoning, to prevent anything of the nature of breach of trust. There is no question of asking for payment, because the trustees are not due any money ; they are paying that regularly to the liferenter. It is only if there is a breach of trust that they can be restrained. Now, I cannot see that they are guilty of breach of trust because, through an action of theirs which is otherwise legal, there is danger, not truly to the interests of the beneficiary, but to the particular way in which Mrs Brower obtained her assignment of the right of a beneficiary. She only came here, of course, as the assignee of the beneficiary. She was not here a free assignee, but a forcible assignee, if I may coin a phrase. She forced herself, through process, into Mr Garrison's shoes ; but the objection which she stated and which her executor now insists in does not disclose any danger to the right which Mr Garrison would have claimed if he had been left in, but is an objection which has to do with the way in which she forced herself into Mr Garrison's shoes. Now, of course, I quite agree that it is not in the mouth of our Court to say that the way in which she forced herself in was wrongful, for it was done under the processes of this Court ; but none the less, it does not seem to me that it is the duty of the trustees, in order to fortify the position to which this forcible assignee has attained, to do something which they would not have done in the ordinary course of the administration of the trust, for this is not a matter of protecting the trust-estate against the depredations of what I may call outsiders.

Accordingly, upon the whole matter, I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary's judgment is right, and that the reclaiming note should be refused.

LORD JOHNSTON.—I agree with your Lordship that the judgment reclaimed against should be affirmed, and for the reasons so lucidly expressed by the Lord Ordinary who pronounced it.

Mrs Brower, who is an American, by the use of a method of constituting jurisdiction intended to enable a native of this country to obtain justice against a foreigner without the necessity of following him to the Courts of his own country, obtained a decree in absence in this Court against another American. Even when used for the purpose for which it was introduced, this mode of founding jurisdiction is liable to result in injustice. But its use by one foreigner against another foreigner is not unlikely to be an abuse July 12, 1912.

¹ 11 R. 600, rev. 13 R. (H. L.) 1.

 which does not warrant any peculiar consideration being accorded to the user. By following out the process so commenced, and availing herself of the forms of our procedure, Mrs Brower, still in absence, has succeeded in vesting herself with an ostensible title to her alleged American debtor's interest in this trust-estate, and that trust-estate by no means clearly a Scots one. Until she has a contradictor, this Court must recognise the title she has so acquired. But it is a title to a reversion. She has no present exigible interest, as the trust-estate is held for another in liferent. Under the procedure she has followed Mrs Brower assumes the place of the fiar, and is entitled to require that the trust be administered precisely as he might have required, that is as the truster directed, but no more. The trustees owe their powers to the truster, and their duty is to carry out the trust as imposed on them by her. But Mrs Brower takes higher ground. She maintains that they have new and different duties imposed upon them by her having acquired the rights of the fiar, and demands that they shall so conduct the trust as to protect, not the interest of the fiar or her interest as in his right, but her title to that interest. Being evidently apprehensive that her title is not beyond challenge, she demands that the trustees shall take steps not required by their duty to the truster or to the fiar, which may obviate certain risks to her title. With that the trustees have no concern, and they are not so to be drawn away from the administration of their trust according to its terms.

Brower's
 Executor v.
 Ramsay's
 Trustees.
 —
Ld. Johnston.

I would add that I think that Mrs Brower has received from the trustees and from the Court an amount of consideration beyond what she was entitled to. The form of her action is virtually an attempt to throw this estate into Chancery, quite unprecedented in our practice, and I desire to reserve my opinion as to the competency of her proceeding and as to whether she was entitled even to the rope she has had. She has, in my opinion, received more than courtesy from the trustees, and more than consideration from the Lord Ordinary who had the earlier conduct of the cause.

LORD SKERRINGTON.—I agree with your Lordship in the chair.

THE COURT adhered to both interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary, of date 16th March 1912, and refused the reclaiming notes.

GUILD & SHEPHERD, W.S.—MACKENZIE & KERMAK, W.S.—Agents.

INDEX OF MATTERS

IN 1912 SESSION CASES.

Cases decided in the House of Lords are printed in Italics.

ACCRETION. See Succession, 12.

ACQUIESCENCE. See Personal Objection.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT.

A. S., 11th July 1828, pp. 171, 208 972.

A. S., 10th March 1870, p. 355.

A. S., 20th March 1907, p. 892.

A. S., 26th June 1907, pp. 37, 253, 966, 1073, 1145.

A. S., 10th April 1908, pp. 627, 628.

A. S., 4th November 1910, pp. 288, 300.

A. S., 19th November 1910, p. 1325.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE. Application to restrain publication of statements tending to prejudice course of justice—Contempt of Court.

During a strike at Glasgow acts of violence were committed, in connection with which certain persons were apprehended and charged with having been part of a riotous mob which forced the Allan Line shed at Princes Dock. Prior to their trial the Glasgow Herald newspaper published a letter commenting on the occurrences, and calling on the magistrates to take steps to prevent their repetition. The letter contained this passage :—"Instances have occurred which clearly demonstrate the determination of the men to carry out their leaders' advice, notably that in which the Allan Line sheds at Princes Docks were rushed and the 'Sicilian' boarded, when a number of men were arrested, and subsequently remitted to the Sheriff." The accused persons presented a petition to the High Court, setting forth the letter, and craving the Court to prohibit the newspaper from publishing any statement relative to the acts with which the petitioners were charged, or anything prejudicial to their case. Held that, there being nothing in the letter complained of but a statement of facts already known to the public, it was not prejudicial to the petitioners' case, and petition refused. Cowie v. George Outram & Co., Limited, (J.) p. 14.

AGENT AND CLIENT. Trustee acting as law-agent to trust—Appointment—Remuneration.

1. Circumstances in which a law-agent was held to have been validly employed by a body of testamentary trustees, and to be entitled to remuneration for his services. Observed that when trustees intend to exercise a power to appoint one of their number to be law-agent to the trust, the only proper procedure is to make the appointment and to record it in the minutes of the trust, although, as matter of law, the appointment may competently be proved in other ways. Lewis's Trustees v. Pirie, p. 574.

AGENT AND CLIENT—Continued.

Agent-disburser—Action settled by parties pending appeal—Right of agent to be sisted in order to obtain decree for expenses.

2. In an action in the Sheriff Court the Sheriff pronounced decree against the defender and found him liable to the pursuer in expenses. While an appeal was pending in the Court of Session the parties, without the knowledge of the pursuer's agents, came to a compromise, in terms of which the pursuer accepted a sum in full settlement of all his claims of principal and expenses in the action. The defender having moved the Court, in respect of this settlement, to assoilzie him from the conclusions of the action and to find no expenses due to or by either party, the pursuer's agents lodged a minute in which they craved to be sisted as parties to the action in order that decree might be pronounced against the defender in their favour as agents-disbursers for the expenses of the action. Held that the agents were entitled to be sisted in terms of their minute. Ammon v. Tod, p. 306.

See Expenses, 16, 17—Partnership, 2.

AGENT AND PRINCIPAL. Disclosed principal—Order from brokers for ship's stores—Liability for price.

- A ship chandler received an order from a firm of "steamship owners and brokers" in these terms:—"Please supply the s.s. 'Silvia' with the following stores." He delivered the goods under the erroneous belief that the firm were the owners of the vessel, and sought to hold them liable for the price. Held that the firm were not liable, in respect that they were acting as agents for the owners, and—since the latter could be discovered by reference to the Register of Shipping—as agents for a disclosed principal. Armour v. Duff & Co., p. 120.

ALIMENTARY PROVISION. Liability to diligence—Alimentary liferent to beneficiary under trust—Debt due by beneficiary to trust-estate—Retention of liferent in satisfaction of debt—Excess over reasonable alimentary provision.

- A person entitled under a will to the liferent of a share of residue was also a debtor to the trust in respect of money which had been advanced to him by the testator. The liferent was declared to be strictly alimentary and not attachable for debt. After paying all creditors on the trust-estate, a balance, without including the debt due by the liferenter, remained for division among the residuary legatees. In an action by the beneficiary for payment of his liferent provision, held that the judicial factor on the trust-estate was not entitled to retain the whole of the beneficiary's share of income in satisfaction of the debt, but that he was entitled to retain so much thereof as exceeded a reasonable aliment. Hardie v. Macfarlan's Judicial Factor, p. 502.

ARBITRATION. Construction of arbitration clause—Proviso as to notice of dispute.

1. A contract for the supply of certain machinery to a company by the manufacturers contained a clause referring disputes and differences to arbitration, with a proviso that no dispute or difference should be deemed to have arisen or be referred to arbitration "unless one party has given notice in writing to the other of the existence of such dispute or difference within seven days after it arises." By a letter to the manufacturers the company's engineer gave notice of rejection of part of the machinery supplied. After more than seven days' interval the manufacturers wrote that they could not accept the rejection. No formal notice was given by either party of the existence of a dispute. Objection having been taken to the application of the arbitration clause, in respect that no notice of the existence of a dispute had been timeously given, held that the proviso with regard to notice had been duly complied with and that the arbitration clause was applicable, in respect that no dispute had arisen until the manufacturers wrote refusing to accept the rejection, and that their letter of refusal itself constituted notice of the existence of a dispute. James Howden & Co., Limited, v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, p. 920.

ARBITRATION—Continued.

Arbiters not named.—Reference to "arbitration in Glasgow"—Application to appoint arbiter—Averment of custom of trade as to appointment—Arbitration (Scotland) Act, 1894, secs. 1, 2, and 3.

2. One of the parties to a contract for the sale of oil, under which disputes were referred to "arbitration in Glasgow," presented a petition in the Sheriff Court, under the Arbitration (Scotland) Act, 1894, for the appointment of an arbiter, and averred that the expression quoted imported into the reference clause a custom of the oil trade in Glasgow, by which each party nominated an arbiter, and the arbiters an oversman. The Sheriff allowed a proof of the alleged custom. The other party to the contract maintained that the reference to arbitration was not sufficiently specific to come within the scope of the Arbitration Act, 1894. Held that there was a relevant averment of a custom which would, if proved, make the reference clause sufficiently specific to fall within the scope of the Arbitration Act, and that proof of the custom had been properly allowed. United Creameries Co., Limited, v. Boyd & Co., p. 617.

Jurisdiction—Forum conveniens.

3. A Scottish company entered into a contract with an English company to be executed in Wales, which contained an arbitration clause providing for the settlement of disputes by arbitration within the meaning of the English Arbitration Act. The Scottish company, having used arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem, brought an action in Scotland against the English company, in which the question was raised whether the matters in dispute were covered by the arbitration clause. The defenders pleaded forum non conveniens, in respect that the contract was an English one to be implemented furth of Scotland, and that the arbitration clause demanded construction according to the law of England. Circumstances in which the Court repelled this plea, found that the matters in dispute fell to be determined by arbitration in terms of the contract, and sisted process in hoc statu until the matters should be so determined. James Howden & Co., Limited, v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, p. 920.

See Lease, 3—Limitation of Actions, 2—Local Government, 3—Process, 31, 34.

ARRESTMENT. Jurisdictionis fundandæ causa—Subjects arrestable—Sum consigned in hands of Clerk of Court.

- A foreigner brought an action in the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire against a Scotsman for payment of certain sums alleged to be due for limestone and sand. The defender admitted liability for the sum claimed for the limestone, but denied that he was due anything for the sand in respect of a counter claim with regard to it which he stated in the action. With his defences he consigned in the hands of the Sheriff-clerk the amount claimed for the limestone, taking a simple receipt which did not specify the purpose of the consignment. The action was afterwards settled on terms which involved the return to the defender of the sum he had consigned. Before the action was settled a creditor of the foreigner arrested in the hands of the Sheriff-clerk the consigned money jurisdictionis fundandæ causa, and on the strength of this arrestment brought an action in the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire against the foreigner. Held that the arrestment was bad in respect that, at the time it was laid on, the Sheriff-clerk was under no obligation either to pay or to account for the consigned sum to the foreigner; and plea of no jurisdiction sustained. Shankland & Co. v. M'Gildowny, p. 857.

ARRESTMENT—Continued.

ASSESSMENT. See Rates and Assessments.

ASSOCIATION. Voluntary association—Unregistered trade union—Alteration of rules—Power to change.

In an action to determine the validity of certain proposed alterations in the rules of an unregistered trade union possessing a written constitution which did not expressly provide for the alteration of the rules, observations on the power of the members of a voluntary association to alter the constitution by a vote of the majority or by the votes of delegates. Wilson v. Scottish Typographical Association, p. 534.

BANKRUPTCY. Sequestration—Claims—Delay in lodging claim—Interdict of payment of dividend—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, sec. 125.

A husband, who was executor on his wife's estate, having become bankrupt, a judicial factor was appointed on the executry estate. The judicial factor lodged a claim in the husband's sequestration, but not until after a meeting of the commissioners, held as provided for in sec. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1856, at which they had declared a first and final dividend. The judicial factor (although he was aware of the progress of the sequestration from other sources) had received no notices from the trustee, as the bankrupt (who denied that he was due any debt to himself as his wife's executor) had not inserted any such debt in his state of affairs, and the trustee was unaware that such a claim was to be made. Held that, as there was no fault on the part of the bankrupt or his trustee, and as the delay in lodging the claim was due to the judicial factor's own remissness, the latter was not entitled to interdict the trustee from paying away the estate. Hodge v. Wishart, p. 1012.

BETTING. See Justiciary Cases, 3, 5, 6.

BILL OF EXCHANGE. Liability of endorser—Waiver of statutory requirement as to presentment and notice of dishonour—Onus of proof—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, secs. 46 (2) (e), 50 (2) (b).

A bill, which had been endorsed, was not presented for payment at maturity nor was notice of dishonour given to the endorser, as required by statute to avoid discharge of the endorser's liability. After the bill was due a payment to account was made by the endorser, under the erroneous belief, as she alleged, that she was not an endorser, but a joint acceptor and so liable in payment. In an action for payment of the balance due under the bill, held that the presumption, arising from the payment to account, that the endorser had waived the statutory requirements had been rebutted by proof that that payment had been made in error; and that, in consequence of the failure of the holder to observe these requirements, the endorser was freed from liability. Observations as to the presumptions and the onus of proof with regard to waiver of the statutory requirements. Mactavish's Judicial Factor v. Michael's Trustees, p. 425.

BOUNDARY. See Burgh, 12.

BUILDING REGULATIONS AND RESTRICTIONS. See Burgh, 7-9—Crown—Property, 1-4.

BURGH. Powers of magistrates—Right of magistrates to levy rates to pay expenses of provisional order.

1. Held that the magistrates of a burgh had no right at common law or under statute to levy rates in the burgh to be applied towards the payment of expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order for, inter alia, the extension of the burgh boundaries. Stirling County Council v. Magistrates of Falkirk, p. 1281.

Powers of magistrates—Right of magistrates to levy rates to pay expenses of provisional order and private bill—Aberdeen Police and Waterworks Act, 1862—Aberdeen Corporation Water Act, 1885.

2. Held that the magistrates of Aberdeen were not entitled, under their private water Acts or otherwise, to impose any assessment upon, or levy or exact any rates or charges from, ratepayers to be applied towards the payment of expenses incurred by the magistrates in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order and private bill for a new water supply. Farquhar & Gill v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, p. 1294.

Duties and Liabilities of Magistrates—Accident caused by defective footway—Disused railway embankment in burgh area frequented by public—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 4 (31)—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 104 (2) (c).

3. Held that the magistrates of a burgh were under no obligation to keep in a safe condition an embankment in the burgh, situated between a public railway and the seashore, belonging to a private owner, and frequented by the public with his tacit consent, on which the magistrates had provided seats, the place in question being neither a street in the ordinary sense of the term, nor a public street or public footpath within the meaning of the Burgh Police Acts. Taylor v. Magistrates of Saltcoats, p. 880.

Orders and requisitions of Magistrates—Formation of private streets—Cost of formation—Subjects assessable—Subjects not in burgh valuation-roll—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, secs. 137, 365.

4. Opinion per curiam that notices given by the Magistrates of a burgh under the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, requiring the formation of a private street in the burgh, were valid, although the lands in respect of which the notices had been served were not entered in the burgh Valuation-roll. Christie v. Magistrates of Leven, p. 678.

Orders and requisitions of Magistrates—Appeal against order for formation of streets—Appeal on ground that appellant's property not in burgh—Competency—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 339.

5. Held that the right of appeal, given by sec. 339 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, to any person aggrieved by any order of the Magistrates made under the Act, is given upon the hypothesis that the property in respect of which the order is made is situated within the burgh, and accordingly that an appeal against an order to form a footway by a person whose ground of objection was that his property was not situated within the burgh was incompetent. Christie v. Magistrates of Leven, p. 678.

Responsibility of drainage and road authority—Discharge of surface water—Flooding of agricultural land in burgh—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, sec. 28.

6. The tenant of a market garden on the estate of Craigentinny, which was annexed to the Burgh of Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, brought an action against the Magistrates of Edinburgh (a) as the drainage authority, (b) as the road authority, for damages caused to his garden by the overflowing of the Craigentinny Burn due to the rapid discharge of surface water from the higher levels of the drainage area after heavy rainfalls. The water reached the garden in part directly from the burn which formed the garden's southern boundary, in part from a road which crossed and drained into the burn, and formed the eastern boundary of the garden. Circumstances in which the Court assolized the defenders, having regard, inter alia, to section 28 of the Act of 1900, which prohibited the defenders from interfering with the watercourse of the burn. Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 1199.

BURGH—Continued.

Building regulations—Statutory prohibition of certain class of buildings—Title of individual objector to plead statutory prohibition—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38.

7. In a petition for lining presented to the Dean of Guild in Glasgow, objection was taken by the proprietors of adjoining subjects on the ground that the buildings would be in contravention of the statutory restrictions contained in section 38 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900. The Dean of Guild found that the objectors' property would not be injuriously affected in any way by the proposed buildings, repelled the objection, and granted the lining. In an appeal, the Court, accepting this finding as a finding in fact, held that, as the objectors had no interest, they had no title, to enforce the restrictions of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act; and refused the appeal. Opinion that the decision of the Dean of Guild as to the effect of the proposed buildings on the adjacent property was not necessarily final, but might, in certain circumstances, be open to review by the Court. Maguire v. Smith's Trustees, p. 410.

Building regulations—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, secs. 4 and 38—"Enclosed space of back ground" in "hollow square."

8. The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38, prohibits the erection of buildings other than those of a specified class "within the enclosed space of back ground in any hollow square," and by sec. 4 defines a hollow square as including certain geometrical figures enclosed by buildings and streets. Circumstances in which the site of proposed buildings was held to be within the enclosed space of back ground in a hollow square. Porter v. Nisbet, p. 400.

Building regulations—Discretion of Dean of Guild to sanction erection of buildings within enclosed space of back ground in hollow square—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38.

9. Held that the effect of section 38 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, which prohibits the erection of buildings within the enclosed space of back ground in a hollow square, but which contains a proviso that, where certain requirements are satisfied, the Dean of Guild may grant decree for the erection, was to put it entirely within the discretion of the Dean of Guild, in the case of buildings which satisfied these requirements, to grant or to refuse the lining. Porter v. Nisbet, p. 400.

Street—Private Street—Railway—Road "forming part of any railway"—Railway lines forming "obstructions" in a street—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 4 (31)—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 104 (2) (d).

10. In 1889 a railway company, under section 38 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, which provides for the purchase by a railway company by a voluntary agreement of land for extraordinary purposes, acquired a strip of ground in a burgh. The strip consisted of an unformed road which had been used by the public as a right of way for traffic of every description since 1841, and continued to be so used after its acquisition by the railway company, who did not utilise it for any purpose connected with the railway until 1908, when they laid a double line of rails along it. Held, in a question between the magistrates of the burgh and the railway company, that the strip did not form "part of any railway," and was therefore "a street" within the meaning of sec. 4 (31) of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. v. Magistrates of Ayr, (H. L.) p. 87.

BURGH—Continued.

Street—Private street—Railway lines forming "obstructions" in a street—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 104 (2) (d).

11. Rails laid by a railway company in a private street held to be "obstructions" within the meaning of sec. 104 (2) (d) of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. v. Magistrates of Ayr, (H. L.) p. 87.

Boundary of administrative area—Sea boundary—High-water mark.

12. Opinion per curiam that the boundary of the administrative area of a burgh fixed as "the line of high-water mark" was a fluctuating boundary, and accordingly that land from which the sea had receded was within the administrative area. Christie v. Magistrates of Leven, p. 678.

Trade Incorporation—Alteration of bye-laws—Incorporation nearly extinct—Transference of funds to new governing body—Application of benefits to an educational charity—Burgh Trading Act, 1846, sec. 3.

13. *The Incorporation of Maltmen of the burgh of Stirling, an ancient trading corporation whose membership had become reduced to that of a single member, presented a petition under the Burgh Trading Act, 1846, for the sanction of the Court to certain proposed alterations on the bye-laws of the Incorporation. There had been no applications for admission to the Incorporation for fifty years, and it appeared to be improbable that there would ever again be anyone qualified for admission. The purposes of the proposed alterations were to associate the provost and magistrates of the burgh with the members of the Incorporation, if any, as a governing body, and to apply the funds, so far as not required for the existing purposes of the Incorporation, for the benefit of an educational trust in the burgh. The Court, in respect that no objections had been stated by any party interested or by the Lord Advocate, granted the prayer of the petition. Incorporation of Maltmen of Stirling, p. 887.*

Trade Incorporation—Alteration of bye-laws—Application by sole surviving member of incorporation—Proposed alterations for benefit only of sole member's relations—Sanction of the Court—Power of Court to make alternative scheme—Burgh Trading Act, 1846, sec. 3.

14. *The Incorporation of Tailors of Edinburgh, an ancient trading corporation whose membership had become reduced to that of a single member, presented a petition under the Burgh Trading Act, 1846, for the sanction of the Court to certain proposed alterations on their bye-laws. The practical effect of the proposed alterations would have been to relax the conditions of entry in favour only of relations of the sole member, and to admit his widow to benefits which she would not otherwise have been entitled to enjoy. The petition was opposed, inter alios, by representatives of the tailoring trade in Edinburgh, who moved for a remit that a scheme might be prepared and submitted to the Court for the amendment of the existing regulations, and for the future administration of the Incorporation and its funds. The Court dismissed the petition, holding that the alterations on the bye-laws proposed by the Incorporation, being in effect a scheme for the endowment of the family of one member only, were not such as the Court ought to sanction, and refused the respondents' motion for a remit to prepare a scheme, in respect that the Court was not entitled to impose a scheme upon an unwilling corporation: the Lord President observing that such a petition was* not an appeal to the nobile officium of the Court, but only to the exercise of its statutory jurisdiction. Incorporation of Tailors of Edinburgh v. Muir's Trustee, p. 603.

BURGH—Continued.

See Justiciary Cases, 1, 2—Loan—Local Government, 3, 4—Police Offences—Public Health, 3, 4, 8, 9—Reparation, 12—Title to Sue and Defend, 6, 7.

BYE-LAW. See Police Offences.

CANAL. See Compulsory Powers, 2, 3.

CAUTIONER. See Process, 1.

CHARITABLE AND EDUCATIONAL BEQUESTS AND TRUSTS. Uncertainty—

“Religious and charitable institutions in Glasgow and neighbourhood.”

1. A testator directed his trustees to “pay and divide” a sum of £250 “among such religious and charitable institutions in Glasgow and neighbourhood as they may select, and in such proportions as they may think proper.” Held that the bequest was not void from uncertainty. M'Phee's Trustees v. M'Phee, p. 75.

Failure of charitable object—Cy près.

2. A testator directed his trustees to apply the residue of his estate “in founding, erecting, and endowing in Paisley an industrial school for females.” At the date of the testator's death it was open to a private individual to found or to contribute to an industrial school, but when the residue became available the effect of supervening legislation (which established industrial schools chargeable on the rates) had been to make such individual foundation or contribution impossible. Held that, as the terms of the bequest did not disclose any general charitable intention but only the favouring of the particular object that had failed, there was no room for the application of the doctrine of cy près; and that the bequest had accordingly lapsed. Burgess's Trustees v. Crawford, p. 387.

See Burgh, 13—Revenue, 7.

COMPANY. Members—Register of shareholders—“Holder” of shares—Company's lien over shares for debts due by “holder”—Person owning radical right in shares, but not on register.

1. The articles of association of a limited company bore that the company should have a lien on shares for debts due to it by “the holder” of the shares. A shareholder, in security for debts due by him to two banks, transferred to nominees of the banks certain shares of which he was the registered holder and they were registered in the names of the banks' nominees; and he also purchased certain other shares and registered them in the names of the same nominees. After the shareholder's death his estates were sequestrated. The banks, having recovered payment of the debts due to them from other securities, were prepared to transfer the shares in question to the trustee in the sequestration, whereupon the company claimed a lien over the shares in respect of a debt due to it by the deceased. Held that “holder” in the articles of association meant “registered holder”; and, as the deceased was not the registered holder of the shares, that the company had no lien over them for his debt. Paul's Trustee v. Thomas Justice & Sons, Limited, p. 1303.

Reduction of capital—Objecting creditor—Security for creditor's debt—Debt due to landlord for future rent—Whether debt contingent—Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, sec. 49.

2. A company, occupying premises under a lease of which four years had still to run, presented a petition for confirmation of a resolution to reduce its capital. The landlords of the premises objected to the reduction of capital unless provision was made to secure the payment of their rent during the remainder of the lease. The company offered to appropriate in security a sum less than the full amount of the rents to become due, and maintained that, the landlords' debt being contingent, the Court should approve of the offer as sufficient. Held that, as the company admitted the full amount of the debt, and as that amount was neither contingent nor unascertained, the case fell under subsec. (3) (i.) of sec. 49 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and the company was bound to provide security for the full amount of the debt. Palace Billiard Rooms, Limited, v. City Property Investment Trust Corporation, Limited, p. 5.

COMPANY—Continued.

Winding-up—Voluntary winding-up—Petition for the appointment of committee of inspection—Consent of liquidator—Procedure—Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, sec. 188.

3. A petition having been presented in terms of section 188 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, for the appointment of a committee of inspection in the voluntary winding-up of a limited company, the Court, on the production of a letter from the liquidator consenting to the application, granted the prayer of the petition de plano without ordering intimation or service. Marlow, p. 625.

COMPENSATION. Action for two separate sums—Decree for one—Right to set off against expenses awarded to defender.

In an action, concluding for payment of two sums on different grounds of liability, the pursuers obtained decree for one of the sums only, and the defender was awarded modified expenses. A motion was thereafter made for decree for the defender's expenses in name of the agent-disburser, which was opposed by the pursuers on the ground that they would thereby be deprived of their right to set off the sum for which they had obtained decree against the expenses found due to the defender. The Court refused the motion. Masco Cabinet Co., Limited, v. Martin, p. 896.

COMPULSORY POWERS. Railway—Mines and Minerals—"Freestone"—Whether freestone a mineral a question of fact—Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 70.

1. Whether "freestone" is or is not a mineral within the meaning of sec. 70 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, is always a question of fact to be determined in view of the particular circumstances of each case. Averments that certain "freestone" was a mineral which were held relevant to go to proof. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington, (H. L.) p. 9.

Canal—Mines and Minerals—Reservation of minerals—Substance not regarded as a mineral at date of acquisition of lands—Oil shale.

2. A private Act passed in 1817, authorising the construction of a canal, reserved to the owners of any lands through which the canal should be made "the mines and minerals lying within or under the said lands." A statutory form was also provided by which lands acquired for the purpose of making the canal might be conveyed to the canal company, the registration of which was declared to have the same effect as a formal disposition followed by charter and sasine. The price of certain lands required for the formation of the canal was agreed upon and consigned in 1818, in which year the canal company entered into possession of them, and the canal was constructed and opened for traffic in 1822. The statutory conveyance of these lands, however, was not completed and registered until 1862. In 1909 the representative of the vendor of the lands brought an action against the proprietors of the canal in which he sought declarator of his right of property in a seam of oil shale subjacent and adjacent to the canal within the lands in question. It was admitted by the defenders that by 1862 oil shale had become recognised as a "mineral" in the sense of the reservation, but they denied that it was recognised as a "mineral" in 1818. Held (1) that what was denoted by the term "mineral" fell to be ascertained as at 1818, the date when possession of the lands passed to the defenders, and not at 1862, the date of the statutory conveyance; and (2) that in 1818 oil shale was not described as a mineral in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners; and defenders assoilzied. Marquis of Linlithgow and Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Co., Limited, v. North British Railway Co., p. 1327.

COMPULSORY POWERS—Continued.

Canal—Right of support—Mines and Minerals—Notice to "stop working"—Union Canal Act, 1817.

3. Terms of a private Act passed in 1817, authorising the construction of a canal, which were held to confer upon the canal company a right of support for their canal, but subject to the qualification that, where it was necessary, in order to support the canal, that the subjacent and adjacent minerals should be sacrificed as a commercial subject, the company were bound to make satisfaction for the value of such minerals to the owner thereof. Opinion that an intimation from the canal company to the owner of the minerals that they would hold him liable for any damage done to the canal by working the minerals beneath it, was a notice to "stop working" in the sense of the Act, on the assumption that the minerals could not be worked beneath the canal without endangering it. Marquis of Linlithgow and Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Co., Limited, v. North British Railway Co., p. 1327.

CONSIGNATION. See Process, 1.

CONTEMPT OF COURT. See Administration of Justice.

CONTRACT. Construction—Prior communings—Sale of heritage—Disposition—Prior articles of sale.

1. Articles of sale for the sale of a heritable estate contained certain conditions as to the rights of the purchaser and the seller respectively in the rents. A sale was effected in terms of the articles, and was followed by a disposition which contained an assignation of rents in the statutory form. Held that the rights of parties in the rents were regulated by the terms of the disposition to the exclusion of the conditions contained in the articles of sale. Butter v. Foster, p. 1218.

Construction — Hire-purchase agreement — Character of instalments — Appropriation of instalments as between capital and interest.

2. An agreement for the hire-purchase of certain furniture had endorsed on it an inventory of the furniture hired with cash prices annexed, the summation of which amounted to £7543. The agreement stipulated for payment by the hirer of annual sums of varying amount, the total of which was £8649; and further provided that the hirer might at any time become the purchaser of the furniture "by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners." The hirer who had in the course of several years paid in terms of the agreement sums amounting in cumulo to £4966, desiring to become the purchaser of the furniture, tendered to the owners the sum of £2577, being the difference between the sums so paid and £7543, the "endorsed price." On a construction of the agreement, held that the expression "whole sums previously paid" must refer to the portion of the sums paid attributable to capital, to the exclusion of the portion attributable to interest; and, accordingly, that the pursuer was not entitled to become the purchaser of the furniture on payment of the sum tendered. Taylor v. Wylie & Lochhead, Limited, p. 978.

CONTRACT—Continued.

Construction—Construction of arbitration clause—Proviso as to notice of dispute.

3. A contract for the supply of certain machinery to a company by the manufacturers contained a clause referring disputes and differences to arbitration, with a proviso that no dispute or difference should be deemed to have arisen or be referred to arbitration "unless one party has given notice in writing to the other of the existence of such dispute or difference within seven days after it arises." By a letter to the manufacturers the company's engineer gave notice of rejection of part of the machinery supplied. After more than seven days' interval the manufacturers wrote that they could not accept the rejection. No formal notice was given by either party of the existence of a dispute. Objection having been taken to the application of the arbitration clause, in respect that no notice of the existence of a dispute had been timeously given, held that the proviso with regard to notice had been duly complied with and that the arbitration clause was applicable, in respect that no dispute had arisen until the manufacturers wrote refusing to accept the rejection, and that their letter of refusal itself constituted notice of the existence of a dispute. James Howden & Co., Limited, v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, p. 920.

Construction—Condition—Condition precedent—Certificate of engineer that price payable.

4. A contract for the supply of machinery contained provisions for payment of the price by certain instalments, to be paid after production of the certificate of the purchasers' engineer that such instalments were due and payable. A portion of the machinery having been rejected by the purchasers, an action was brought by the sellers for the unpaid balance of the purchase price without production of the engineer's certificate that the balance sued for was due and payable. Held, on a construction of the contract, that the production of a certificate from the engineer had not been made a condition precedent to the right to recover payment, and, accordingly, that the action was competent. James Howden & Co., Limited, v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, p. 920.

Implement—Mutual obligations—Party in breach of his obligation—Title to enforce implement of counterpart.

5. Two persons agreed for the lease of an hotel, and stipulated that the tenant should take over the furniture and stock at a valuation, and should deposit £200 in bank in their joint names to account of the valuation price. After the money had been deposited, but before the furniture and stock had been taken over, the tenant intimated that he did not intend to carry out the contract, and brought an action against the landlord for delivery of the deposit-receipt. The defender lodged a counter claim of damages for breach of the agreement. Held that the pursuer, having declined to perform his part of the contract, could not call upon the defender to fulfil his obligations until the latter had had an opportunity of constituting his claim of damages, and, accordingly, that the pursuer was not entitled, hoc statu, to delivery of the deposit-receipt. Dingwall v. Burnett, p. 1097.

Breach—Measure of damages—Penalty or liquidate damages—Penalty clause—Claim for damages in excess of penalty.

6. An agreement between two persons for the lease of an hotel contained mutual obligations of different kinds and of varying degrees of importance. Inter alia, the tenant was taken bound to apply for a transfer of the licence, to manage the hotel for the landlord until the licence was transferred, and to take over the stock at a valuation. The minute of agreement also provided :—"Both parties hereto bind and oblige themselves to implement their part of this agreement under the penalty of £50, to be paid by the party failing to the party performing or willing to perform over and above performance." The tenant having refused to go on with the lease or to carry out the agreement at all, the landlord claimed damages for breach of contract to the amount of over £300. Held (1) that the sum stipulated in the agreement was not liquidate damages but a penalty, and (2) that the landlord's claim for damages was not limited to the amount mentioned in the penalty clause. Dingwall v. Burnett, p. 1097.

CONTRACT—Continued.

Breach—Damages for delay—Measure of damages—Provision for liquidate damages for delay—Failure of contractor to complete contract—Completion of contract by other parties—Applicability of provision for liquidate damages.

7. A contract for the construction of certain works by a specified date contained a clause providing for liquidate damages at certain rates to be paid by the contractor for each week's delay beyond that date. It was further provided that if the contractor should suspend the works the employers might take possession of the plant and materials and engage others to complete the contract. The contractor became bankrupt and suspended the works, and the employers thereupon engaged other persons to complete them, but they were not completed until at least six weeks after the date specified in the original contract. Held that, while the employers were entitled to sue the contractor for damages for breach of contract, they could not found on the liquidate damages clause, as that clause applied only where the contractor had himself completed the contract. British Glanzstoff Manufacturing Co., Limited, v. General Accident, Fire, and Life Assurance Corporation, Limited, p. 591.

See Jurisdiction, 2—Reparation, 22.

CONVERSION. See Succession, 2.

CORPORATION DUTY. See Revenue, 7.

COUNTY. See Local Government, 3, 4.

CROWN. Exemption of the Crown from statutory restrictions—Building restrictions—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, secs. 67 and 78.

The Commissioners of Works, as managers of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Edinburgh (which are Crown property), applied to the Dean of Guild for warrant to erect the first wing of certain proposed buildings in the Gardens, the building line of which would encroach within 30 feet of the centre line of a public street. The plans lodged showed the completion of the buildings on the same building line extending further down the street. The Edinburgh Corporation offered no opposition, and the lining was granted and the first wing of the buildings was erected. Two years afterwards the Commissioners applied for warrant to complete the buildings by erecting the other wing in accordance with the original plans, and a lining was granted. The Corporation thereupon passed a resolution, in terms of section 67 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, that no buildings should be erected within 30 feet of the centre of the street, and brought an action of interdict against the Commissioners. The Court assolized the defenders; on the ground that the proposed buildings were exempted from the operation of section 67 by virtue of the provisions of section 78 exempting buildings "vested in" the CROWN—Continued.

Crown, which applied to future buildings as well as to existing buildings. Observations on the extent to which the Crown is bound by restrictions contained in local Acts. Magistrates of Edinburgh v. Lord Advocate, p. 1085.

See Patent—Process, 10—Justiciary Cases, 4.

CURATOR AD LITEM. See Process, 23.

CURATOR BONIS. See Judicial Factor—Process, 23.

CUSTOM. See Arbitration, 2—Heritable Office—Statute, 1.

CY PRÈS. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 2.

DAMAGES. See Contract, 6, 7—Reparation.

DEAN OF GUILD. See Burgh, 7-9—Public Health, 7.

DEATH DUTIES. See Marriage-Contract, 1.

DECREE. See Diligence.

DILIGENCE. Decree—Service of charge on decree—Scarcity of messengers-at-arms—Service by post—Service by Sheriff-officer—Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882, sec. 3.

A pursuer who had obtained in the Court of Session a decree for payment against a defender in Thurso, presented a petition in which he stated that the nearest available messenger-at-arms resided in Inverness, and craved the Court to authorise service by post of a charge upon this decree; or, alternatively, to authorise any sheriff-officer in Caithness to act as messenger-at-arms. Held that the Court could not grant authority for service by post; but authority granted to a sheriff-officer to serve the charge and to carry through the diligence. Whyte, Ridsdale, & Co., p. 1095.

DOCK. See Reparation, 16.

DUTIES ON LAND VALUES. See Revenue, 8, 9.

ELECTION LAW. Household occupation franchise—“Part of a house occupied as a separate dwelling”—Inhabitant occupier of unfurnished apartments in a dwelling-house—Representation of the People Act, 1884, secs. 2, 7 (4).

1. A widower was enrolled as a county voter as tenant of a house which consisted of three rooms and a kitchen. He, however, only occupied one of the rooms, the rest of the house being occupied by his daughter and her husband and family. The daughter cooked her father's meals in the kitchen, but he partook of them in his own room. His son-in-law paid him half the total rent and taxes, and owned the furniture in the portion of the house occupied by himself and his family. All the apartments and the street door were fitted with locks and keys, the key of the street door being left in the lock, and the last person coming in at night locking the door. Held that the son-in-law was not entitled to the franchise as an inhabitant occupier of a separate dwelling. Gregory v. Traquair, p. 637.

Lodger Franchise—Occupation “separately and as sole tenant”—Room occasionally shared with a guest—Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 4, subsec. 2.

2. A son paid for and had the sole right to occupy a bedroom in his father's house. Held that the fact that during the period of qualification for the lodger franchise he had occasionally ex gratia allowed a young brother (who could have had a bed of his own) to sleep in the room with him, did not prevent him from having occupied the room "separately and as sole tenant" within the meaning of sec. 4 (2) of the Representation of the People Act, 1868. Milne v. Douglas, p. 635.

ELECTION LAW—Continued.

Lodger Franchise—Member of brotherhood occupying room in college.

3. A member of a voluntary association or brotherhood, which devoted itself to teaching, occupied a bedroom in a college belonging to the brotherhood. He was not paid for his services, but was provided with board, lodging, clothing, and everything necessary for his maintenance. Held that he was not a "lodger" for the purposes of the franchise, in respect that there was no contract of location, either express or implied, between him and the brotherhood, under which he had a right to occupy the room. O'Connell v. Blacklock, p. 640.

ENTAIL. Powers of heir in possession—Sale of growing timber by heir of entail—Right of succeeding heir to prevent cutting of timber—Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

1. The heir in possession of an entailed estate entered into a contract, constituted by offer and acceptance, with a firm of wood merchants for the sale to them of certain lots of standing timber on the estate, under the condition that the purchasers should themselves cut down and remove the timber, half the price to be paid within six days of the acceptance and the remainder when half the timber was cut, and the timber to be at the purchasers' risk from the date of acceptance. The heir died before all the timber was cut, and on the succeeding heir seeking to interdict the purchasers from proceeding with the cutting of the timber, held (1) that the property therein had not passed to the purchasers in virtue of the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893; and (2) that the growing timber being pars soli passed to the succeeding heir unaffected by this personal contract of his predecessor; and interdict granted. Morison v. A. & D. F. Lockhart, p. 1017.

Disentail—Consents—Entail executed under Private Act—Old or new entail—Entail Amendment Act, 1848, sec. 28.

2. Under the directions of a trust-deed which came into operation in 1842 certain lands were entailed. In 1873 a private Act of Parliament was obtained, under which part of the lands was sold, and others purchased in substitution therefor and entailed on the same series of heirs and under the same conditions and prohibitions. The Act provided that the heirs entitled to succeed to the lands originally entailed, and to the lands directed by the Act to be entailed, should, "notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, be entitled to avail themselves of all the benefits and privileges conferred upon heirs of entail" by the Entail Acts then in force. In a petition presented in 1912 by the heir of entail in possession for disentail of the substituted lands, held (1) that the lands in question were entailed under the authority of the private Act of 1873 and not of the trust-deed of 1842, and were accordingly held under a "new" entail; and (2) that there was no provision in the private Act of 1873 that the lands in question were to be in the same position as regarded proceedings for disentail as the lands originally entailed; and, accordingly, that the lands could be disentailed only with the consent of the three nearest heirs. Morison v. Morison's Curator, p. 1117.

Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48—Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17.

3. The Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48, and the Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17, provide that where, under deeds ex-

ENTAIL—Continued.

cuted after 1848 and 1868 respectively, a party of full age and born after the date of the deed is in possession of land or estate subject to conditions restricting his enjoyment thereof, or where estate, heritable or moveable, is held in liferent by or for behoof of such a party, he shall be deemed the absolute proprietor thereof. Held that these provisions had no application to the case of an annuity. Drybrough's Trustee v. Drybrough's Trustee, p. 939.

See Superior and Vassal, 3.

ERROR. Essential error induced by misrepresentations—Error as to substance—Modern imitations of antique furniture.

A dealer in modern and antique furniture sold to a customer ten ribbon-backed chairs, which he described in a receipt for part payment of the price as a "set of antique mahogany chairs," but which proved not to be genuine antiques, but to be modern imitations. The price stipulated was a fair price for the articles actually sold. The seller gave no history of the chairs or guarantee that they were antique, but he made certain representations, held not to be fraudulent, which induced the buyer to believe that he was buying a set of old chairs. Circumstances where held that there had been such misrepresentation as to the substance of the articles sold as to entitle the buyer to rescind the contract. Edgar v. Hector, p. 348.

See Bill of Exchange.

EXECUTOR. Executor-nominate—Confirmation—Danger to estate—Judicial factor.

1. A master made a general settlement in favour of his servant, and appointed him to be his executor. On the servant applying for confirmation objection was taken by the trustees under a former settlement of the testator and by his next of kin, who averred that the testator was weak and facile, and that the servant obtained the settlement in his favour by fraud and circumvention. They also averred that they had already brought an action for reduction of the settlement on that ground, and that, as the servant was a person of no substance, there was danger of the estate being lost should he be confirmed as executor. The Court dismissed the application for confirmation, and appointed a judicial factor on the estate, reserving right to the applicant to renew his application should the action of reduction be unsuccessful. Simpson's Executor v. Simpson's Trustees, p. 418.

Payment of debts—Provision for contingent debts—Personal liability of trustees and executors.

2. Three years after the death of a testator, who had granted a letter of guarantee, his testamentary trustees were called upon by the persons in whose favour the guarantee was granted for payment of the sum due thereunder. The trust-estate had proved insufficient to pay the testator's creditors in full, and the trustees, having paid away to them the greater part of the estate, had not sufficient funds left to pay the claim under the guarantee. The creditors under the guarantee thereupon brought an action in which they sought to have the trustees found personally liable for the sum guaranteed, in respect that they had received notice of the guarantee, and that it was their duty to have made provision for payment thereof. The Court assuiled the trustees from the conclusion for personal liability, holding that, as they were not trustees for creditors, they were entitled after six months to pay the testator's debts primo venienti without making provision for this contingent claim. Taylor & Ferguson, Limited, v. Glass's Trustees, p. 165.

ELECTION LAW—Continued.

room "separately and as sole tenant" within the meaning of sec. 4 (2) of the Representation of the People Act, 1868. Milne v. Douglas, p. 635.

Lodger Franchise—Member of brotherhood occupying room in college.

3. A member of a voluntary association or brotherhood, which devoted itself to teaching, occupied a bedroom in a college belonging to the brotherhood. He was not paid for his services, but was provided with board, lodging, clothing, and everything necessary for his maintenance. Held that he was not a "lodger" for the purposes of the franchise, in respect that there was no contract of location, either express or implied, between him and the brotherhood, under which he had a right to occupy the room. O'Connell v. Blacklock, p. 640.

ENTAIL. Powers of heir in possession—Sale of growing timber by heir of entail—Right of succeeding heir to prevent cutting of timber—Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

1. The heir in possession of an entailed estate entered into a contract, constituted by offer and acceptance, with a firm of wood merchants for the sale to them of certain lots of standing timber on the estate, under the condition that the purchasers should themselves cut down and remove the timber, half the price to be paid within six days of the acceptance and the remainder when half the timber was cut, and the timber to be at the purchasers' risk from the date of acceptance. The heir died before all the timber was cut, and on the succeeding heir seeking to interdict the purchasers from proceeding with the cutting of the timber, held (1) that the property therein had not passed to the purchasers in virtue of the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893; and (2) that the growing timber being pars soli passed to the succeeding heir unaffected by this personal contract of his predecessor; and interdict granted. Morison v. A. & D. F. Lockhart, p. 1017.

Disentail—Consents—Entail executed under Private Act—Old or new entail—Entail Amendment Act, 1848, sec. 28.

2. Under the directions of a trust-deed which came into operation in 1842 certain lands were entailed. In 1873 a private Act of Parliament was obtained, under which part of the lands was sold, and others purchased in substitution therefor and entailed on the same series of heirs and under the same conditions and prohibitions. The Act provided that the heirs entitled to succeed to the lands originally entailed, and to the lands directed by the Act to be entailed, should, "notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, be entitled to avail themselves of all the benefits and privileges conferred upon heirs of entail" by the Entail Acts then in force. In a petition presented in 1912 by the heir of entail in possession for disentail of the substituted lands, held (1) that the lands in question were entailed under the authority of the private Act of 1873 and not of the trust-deed of 1842, and were accordingly held under a "new" entail; and (2) that there was no provision in the private Act of 1873 that the lands in question were to be in the same position as regarded proceedings for disentail as the lands originally entailed; and, accordingly, that the lands could be disentailed only with the consent of the three nearest heirs. Morison v. Morison's Curator, p. 1117.

Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48—Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17.

3. The Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48, and the Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17, provide that where, under deeds executed after 1848 and 1868 respectively, a party of full age and born after the date of the deed is in possession of land or estate subject to conditions restricting his enjoyment thereof, or where estate, heritable or moveable, is held in liferent by or for behoof of such a party, he shall be deemed the absolute proprietor thereof. Held that these provisions had no application to the case of an annuity. Drybrough's Trustee v. Drybrough's Trustee, p. 939.

ENTAIL—Continued.

See Superior and Vassal, 3.

ERROR. Essential error induced by misrepresentations—Error as to substance—Modern imitations of antique furniture.

A dealer in modern and antique furniture sold to a customer ten ribbon-backed chairs, which he described in a receipt for part payment of the price as a "set of antique mahogany chairs," but which proved not to be genuine antiques, but to be modern imitations. The price stipulated was a fair price for the articles actually sold. The seller gave no history of the chairs or guarantee that they were antique, but he made certain representations, held not to be fraudulent, which induced the buyer to believe that he was buying a set of old chairs. Circumstances where held that there had been such misrepresentation as to the substance of the articles sold as to entitle the buyer to rescind the contract. Edgar v. Hector, p. 348.

See Bill of Exchange.

EXECUTOR. Executor-nominate—Confirmation—Danger to estate—Judicial factor.

1. A master made a general settlement in favour of his servant, and appointed him to be his executor. On the servant applying for confirmation objection was taken by the trustees under a former settlement of the testator and by his next of kin, who averred that the testator was weak and facile, and that the servant obtained the settlement in his favour by fraud and circumvention. They also averred that they had already brought an action for reduction of the settlement on that ground, and that, as the servant was a person of no substance, there was danger of the estate being lost should he be confirmed as executor. The Court dismissed the application for confirmation, and appointed a judicial factor on the estate, reserving right to the applicant to renew his application should the action of reduction be unsuccessful. Simpson's Executor v. Simpson's Trustees, p. 418.

Payment of debts—Provision for contingent debts—Personal liability of trustees and executors.

2. Three years after the death of a testator, who had granted a letter of guarantee, his testamentary trustees were called upon by the persons in whose favour the guarantee was granted for payment of the sum due thereunder. The trust-estate had proved insufficient to pay the testator's creditors in full, and the trustees, having paid away to them the greater part of the estate, had not sufficient funds left to pay the claim under the guarantee. The creditors under the guarantee thereupon brought an action in which they sought to have the trustees found personally liable for the sum guaranteed, in respect that they had received notice of the guarantee, and that it was their duty to have made provision for payment thereof. The Court assuiled the trustees from the conclusion for personal liability, holding that, as they were not trustees for creditors, they were entitled after six months to pay the testator's debts primo venienti without making provision for this contingent claim. Taylor & Ferguson, Limited, v. Glass's Trustees, p. 165.

EXECUTOR—Continued.

Beneficiary suing for debt due to executry estate—Executor sisted as pursuer—Conditions as to expenses—Act of Sederunt, 20th March 1907, sec. 2 (a).

3. An action, in which it was sought to establish that a certain debt was due to the estate of a deceased intestate, was brought by one of the deceased's next of kin in his own name. The Lord Ordinary having dismissed the action on the ground that the pursuer had no title to sue, conditions as to expenses under which the Court allowed the executor of the deceased to be sisted as a pursuer in the action. Morrison v. Morrison's Executrix, p. 892.

EXPENSES. Proof—Hearing on evidence—Expense of copy of notes of evidence.

1. It is always a question of circumstances whether a successful litigant should be entitled to charge against his opponent the expense of obtaining the notes of evidence. But if the litigant proposes to make such a charge he must intimate the fact to the Lord Ordinary at the time when he asks for the notes, and must obtain the Lord Ordinary's leave to that effect. Otherwise it will be held that he asks for them simply for his own convenience, and must pay for what he gets. Smith v. Watson, p. 553.

Misleading statements on record.

2. Circumstances in which successful defenders were refused full expenses on account of misleading statements in their defences, calculated to induce the pursuer to proceed with the action which he might otherwise have abandoned. Armour v. Duff & Co., p. 120.

Successful and unsuccessful defenders—Liability inter se.

3. In an action of reparation for personal injuries, brought against two defenders, in which each defender maintained that the injury was caused by the fault of the other, the Court in assoilzieing one defender found him entitled to expenses against the other. Laing v. Paull & Williamsons, p. 196.

Beneficiary suing for debt due to executry estate—Executor sisted as pursuer—Conditions as to expenses—Act of Sederunt, 20th March 1907, sec. 2 (a).

4. An action, in which it was sought to establish that a certain debt was due to the estate of a deceased intestate, was brought by one of the deceased's next of kin in his own name. The Lord Ordinary having dismissed the action on the ground that the pursuer had no title to sue, conditions as to expenses under which the Court allowed the executor of the deceased to be sisted as a pursuer in the action. Morrison v. Morrison's Executrix, p. 892.

Resignation of curator—Expenses of discharge and new appointment.

5. A curator bonis was appointed to a lunatic, whose whole estate amounted to less than £2000. Fifteen months after his appointment the curator, who desired to resign in order that he might take up a post that had been offered him abroad, petitioned the Court to discharge him and to appoint a new curator. Held that the expenses of the discharge and new appointment did not, in the circumstances, form a good charge against the ward's estate. Halliday's Curator Bonis, p. 509.

Special Case—Question depending on construction of an Act of Parliament.

6. In a special case arising out of a marriage-contract, where there was no arrangement between the parties as to expenses, and where the main question concerned the construction of an Act of Parliament and not of the deed, the unsuccessful party was found liable in expenses. Dundas's Trustees v. Dundas's Trustees, p. 375.

EXPENSES—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Unsuccessful action of damages against employer—Application for assessment of compensation—Expenses of application.

7. Circumstances in which held that a workman, who had been unsuccessful in an action of damages for personal injuries against his employers, but had thereafter applied for, and been awarded, compensation under sec. 1 (4) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, was entitled to the expense of obtaining the award of compensation. Slavin v. Train & Taylor, p. 754.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Appeal by stated case—Expenses of the appeal.

8. In a stated case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the Court found the appellant entitled to the "expenses of the appeal." Upon a note of objections to the report of the Auditor, who had disallowed the expenses of obtaining the stated case from the Sheriff, the Court allowed a modified fee of three guineas for these expenses, and observed that in future a modified fee of three guineas and a half would be allowed. Observed further that there is no distinction between an award of "expenses of the appeal" and an award of "expenses of the stated case." M'Laughlin v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 250.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Expenses of lodging a condescendence.

9. In an appeal by stated case from the decision of an arbitrator dismissing an application for compensation in respect that the workman had failed relevantly to aver the happening of an accident, the Court permitted the workman to submit a condescendence of the specific facts on which he relied, and thereafter allowed it to be received, and remitted to the arbitrator to proceed; but, in a question as to the taxation of the parties' accounts, refused to allow the appellant (who had been awarded the expenses of the appeal) the expenses of preparing and lodging the condescendence. M'Laughlin v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 250.

Husband and Wife—Divorce for adultery—Expenses against co-defender—Taxation as between agent and client—Conjugal Rights (Scotland) Act, 1861, sec. 7.

10. Section 7 of the Conjugal Rights (Scotland) Act, 1861, authorises the Court, in an action of divorce for adultery at the instance of the husband, to decern against the person with whom the wife is proved to have committed adultery, provided he has been cited, for the expenses of process, and directs that "the same shall be taxed as between agent and client." Held that the provision as to taxation is imperative, and that there is no necessity of inserting in the interlocutor a direction to the Auditor. Fairgrieve v. Chalmers, p. 745.

Taxation as between agent and client in Sheriff Court action—Application of provisions of Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1 (b).

11. In a Sheriff Court action against a public authority the defenders were successful, and, in terms of sec. 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, were awarded expenses to be taxed as between agent and client. Held that, as the provisions of the Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, regulating fees in the Sheriff Court, applied to taxation as between agent and client as well as to taxation as between party and party, the defenders could not recover charges for the employment of skilled witnesses which had not been certified by the Sheriff as required by the Act of Sederunt. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Taxation as between party and party—Expenses of trustees.

12. A special case, which was presented to determine questions regarding the disposal of a particular portion of a trust-estate and to which the trustees were parties, stated that it had been agreed that "the taxed expenses of the several parties" should be paid out of the fund in dispute. The Court, in disposing of the case, found "the whole parties to the special case entitled to their expenses as the same may be taxed by the Auditor," out of the fund in dispute. Held that under this finding the trustees' account of expenses fell to be taxed as between party and party, and not as between agent and client. M'Gregor's Trustees v. Kimbell, p. 261.

EXPENSES—Continued.

Taxation—Fees to counsel—Fees to skilled witnesses.

13. In a case, brought to determine whether fireclay was or was not a mineral and involving an elaborate investigation of the state of scientific knowledge on the subject, the Court, having consulted the Auditor and being satisfied that he had directed his attention to the particularity of the case, repelled certain objections to the fees of counsel and skilled witnesses, observing (1) that counsel's fees must be considered, not necessarily with a view to the day for which they are allowed, but with a view to remuneration upon the case as a whole; and (2) that fees for research in London were properly allowed where the books required for the purpose were only to be found in the British Museum. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., Limited, p. 511.

Taxation—Counsel in Sheriff Court—Higher debate fee—Time for making application for certification—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, General Regulation VI., and Table of Fees, cap. I. 16.

14. A motion under the Act of Sederunt of 10th April 1908, for a higher debate fee, or for the sanction of counsel in the Sheriff Court, should properly be made to the Judge who tried the cause; and although it is not incompetent to delay the motion until the case is before the Sheriff on appeal or before the Court of Session, in such circumstances it will only be granted if it is shown, not only that the application is well founded, but also that there is very good reason why the motion has not been made before. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Taxation—Skilled witnesses in Sheriff Court—Witnesses not certified by Sheriff—Appeal to Court of Session—Application for certification—Time for making application—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, Table of Fees, cap. X. 5 (b).

15. A successful respondent in an appeal from the Sheriff to the Court of Session, to whom expenses were awarded, held not to be entitled to include therein charges for the services of skilled witnesses in a proof before the Sheriff-substitute, not certified by the Sheriff-substitute, on the ground that the motion for certification, not having been made to the Judge who tried the case or within the time allowed by the Act of Sederunt, could not be entertained in the Court of Session. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Taxation—Debate fee in Sheriff Court—Attendance fee in Sheriff Court—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, General Regulations VI., and Table of Fees, cap. I. 12 (1) and 15 (2).

16. Expenses were awarded as between agent and client in an action which had been debated before the Sheriff-substitute and Sheriff for eleven and twenty-three hours respectively. The successful party in moving for the allowance of higher debate fees asked, as an alternative, that he should be found entitled to an attendance fee at ten shillings per hour, which would have amounted to more than the higher debate fees asked for. Held that this alternative proposal could not be entertained. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

EXPENSES—Continued.

Decree in name of agent-disburser—Action for two separate sums—Decree for one—Right to set off against expenses awarded to defender.

17. In an action, concluding for payment of two sums on different grounds of liability, the pursuers obtained decree for one of the sums only, and the defender was awarded modified expenses. A motion was thereafter made for decree for the defender's expenses in name of the agent-disburser, which was opposed by the pursuers on the ground that they would thereby be deprived of their right to set off the sum for which they had obtained decree against the expenses found due to the defender. The Court refused the motion. Masco Cabinet Co., Limited, v. Martin, p. 896.

Decree in name of agent-disburser—Action settled by parties pending appeal—Right of agent to be sisted in order to obtain decree for expenses.

18. In an action in the Sheriff Court the Sheriff pronounced decree against the defender and found him liable to the pursuer in the expenses of the action. While an appeal was pending in the Court of Session the parties, without the knowledge of the pursuer's agents, came to a compromise, in terms of which the pursuer accepted a sum in full settlement of all his claims of principal and expenses in the action. The defender having moved the Court, in respect of this settlement, to assoilzie him from the conclusions of the action and to find no expenses due to or by either party, the pursuer's agents lodged a minute in which they craved to be sisted as parties to the action in order that decree might be pronounced against the defender in their favour as agents-disbursers for the expenses of the action. Held that the agents were entitled to be sisted in terms of their minute. Ammon v. Tod, p. 306.

See Process, 6.

FACILITY. See Fraud, 1, 2.

FACULTIES AND POWERS. See Succession, 11.

FEE AND LIFERENT. See Succession, 5, 6, 10, 11.

FISHINGS. Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 21—Possession of salmon in close time—Defence that salmon taken with rod and line—Onus of proof.

The Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 21, renders liable to a penalty any person who shall "have in his possession any salmon taken" during the "annual close time." It has been decided that "annual close time" refers only to net-fishing, and that there is no offence if the salmon was taken by rod and line at a time when rod-fishing was open. Held that proof of possession within the close time is prima facie proof of the offence, and that the onus of establishing capture by rod and line rests on the accused. Fishmongers of London v. Stiven, (J.) p. 28.

See Justiciary Cases, 12.

FOREIGN. See Arbitration, 3—Jurisdiction, 1—Trust, 5.

FORUM CONVENIENS. See Jurisdiction, 2.

FRANCHISE. See Election Law.

FRAUD. Facility and circumvention—Testament—Reduction—Sufficiency of averments of impetration.

1. In an action for the reduction of certain testamentary writings, executed during the latter years of a testator who died at the age of ninety-three, by which the children of a deceased daughter were excluded in favour of the testator's surviving children, the pursuer (an excluded grandchild) averred that the testator during the latter years of his life was in a weak and facile condition, and that one of his surviving daughters, B, taking advantage of that condition, induced him to make the testamentary dispositions complained of. The defenders objected that the pursuer did not aver any specific facts regarding the impetration of the deeds and that there was nothing which could relevantly connect B with the alleged impetration. Held that the bare averment of impetration, when read along with certain averments as to the surrounding facts and circumstances, disclosed a relevant case of fraud and circumvention against B; and issues allowed. Horsburgh v. Thomson's Trustees, p. 267.

FRAUD—Continued.

Facility and Circumvention—Will—Reduction—Relevancy of averments that testator's relatives suffered from mental disease.

2. In an action for reduction of a will on the grounds of insanity and of facility and circumvention, the pursuer averred that the testator was peculiarly liable to suffer from mental disease as mental disease was hereditary in his family, and, in support of this, made specific averments as to the diseased mental condition of various near relatives of the testator. Objection having been taken to the relevancy of these averments, held that the averments were not necessarily irrelevant, and objection repelled. Houston v. Aitken, p. 1037.

Contract to construct railway—Alleged fraudulent misdescription of nature of soil—Proof of fraud.

3. A railway company invited tenders for the construction of a line of railway, and, for the information of intending offerers, exhibited what purported to be a journal of bores taken along the proposed line. A firm of contractors to whom that journal had been exhibited tendered for the work, and a lump sum contract was entered into with them for the construction of the railway. During the progress of the work the contractors discovered that the strata contained more rock or hard substance than they had anticipated, and it ultimately appeared that the so-called journal was not the actual record kept by the borers (who were not professional borers but were ordinary servants of the company), but was compiled by the company's engineer from notes supplied by the borers, and that in several instances he had described strata as soft which the borers had described as hard or rock. Held that the representations made to the pursuers with regard to the journal of bores were not false or fraudulent, in respect that the engineer had compiled the journal honestly and to the best of his ability, and had only altered the descriptions given by the borers where he honestly believed these descriptions to be erroneous. Boyd & Forrest v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co., (H. L.) p. 93.

See Justiciary Cases, 14, 16, 17.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY. Friendly Societies Act, 1896, sec. 68 (7)—Competency of stated case after judgment in inferior Court.

Held that a case stated under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, sec. 68 (7), must be stated during the progress of the reference, and cannot be stated after the Court or arbitrator has given judgment. Smith v. Scottish Legal Life Assurance Society, p. 611.

GAMING. See Justiciary Cases, 3, 5, 6.

HERITABLE AND MOVEABLE. See Succession, 2.

HERITABLE OFFICE. Principal Usher in Scotland—Emoluments—Fees from Peers of the United Kingdom—Treaty of Union, 1706, Art. 20—Act of Union, 1707—Statute—Custom.

At the time of the Union the holder of the office of principal Usher within the Kingdom of Scotland was, under a royal charter dated 21st January 1686, ratified by Act dated 15th June 1686, entitled to fees from all

HERITABLE OFFICE—Continued.

Scotsmen receiving honours from the King as sovereign of Scotland, and from Englishmen in Scotland who received such honours. In an action of declarator brought in 1908 by the holders of the office, held that, inasmuch as Article XX. of the Act of Union did not enlarge the rights of the office but merely reserved these rights unchanged, its holders were not entitled to fees from recipients of honours whose titles were not purely Scottish titles but were titles of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and that, as Article XX. was unambiguous in its terms, no consideration could be given to the fact that from 1766 to 1904 the holders of the office had claimed and received such fees. Walker Trustees v. Lord Advocate, (H. L.) p. 12.

HIRING. See Contract, 2.

HORSE. See Sale, 2.

HOUSING. See Public-Health, 8, 9—Sheriff, 10-12.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. Proof of marriage—Presumption of legitimacy—Presumption where parents have not enjoyed status of married persons and the de quo quæritur is existence of marriage.

1. In a competition for the distribution of an intestate estate certain of the claimants averred that a marriage had taken place in 1819 between Lieutenant D., an officer in a Highland regiment, and A., a milliner in Glasgow, and that their father was the legitimate offspring of that marriage. The existence of the marriage was denied by the other claimants. At a proof no direct evidence of the marriage, either documentary or otherwise, was adduced, nor was it shown that Lieutenant D. or any of his family had ever acknowledged the marriage, or made any allusion thereto, or that the parties had ever lived publicly together or enjoyed the status of married persons. The claimants relied mainly on hearsay evidence as to statements made by A. and her sisters, and on an unbroken tradition in A.'s family to the effect that Lieutenant D. and A. had been married persons. They maintained that, in the circumstances, there was a presumption of legitimacy which had not been displaced, and that the marriage was proved. Held that the marriage had not been proved, the Lord President observing that the presumption of legitimacy applied only where persons were living more or less in the married state, and did not apply where the de quo quæritur was whether there was a marriage or not. Deans's Judicial Factor v. Deans, p. 441.

Widow's allowance for mournings—Discharge of legal rights.

2. A widow's allowance for mournings is a privileged debt due by her husband's estate, and is not discharged by her acceptance of provisions under her husband's will which are therein declared to be "in full satisfaction of all terce of lands, jus relictæ, or legal share of moveables, and any other right or claim competent to her" through his decease. Griffiths' Trustees v. Griffiths, p. 626.

Wife's capacity to contract—Assignment of spes successionis—Mandate to wife's father's trustees to retain her share of his estate.

3. A married woman, with consent of her husband, undertook that any debt due by her husband to her father at the latter's death should "form a debt due" by her and "a deduction from" her share of her father's estate. The agreement was contained in a deed signed by her and delivered to her father. In an action for legitim brought by her against her father's trustees after his death (when her husband's indebtedness to her father admittedly exceeded her share of legitim), the pursuer pleaded that the agreement was not binding upon her, in respect that it was a personal obligation undertaken by a married woman. Held that the agreement was binding, in respect that it was more than a personal obligation by the wife, being a mandate to her father's trustees to retain her share of his estate, and was effectual even though the subject dealt with was a spes successionis. Coats v. Bannochie's Trustees, p. 329.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—Continued.

Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, sec. 2—Policy "for the benefit of" the wife.

4. Terms of a policy described as an "endowment bond" effected by a husband with a life assurance society, which were held to constitute the policy a policy "for the benefit of his wife" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, the proceeds of which fell to the widow and not to the husband's creditors. Chrystal's Trustee v. Chrystal, p. 1003.

Divorce—Divorce for Adultery—Collusion.

5. Observed that in Scotland there cannot be collusion unless facts are proved which show that the oath of calumny has been falsely sworn; and that the mere fact that a woman, who may have repented of misconduct, gives information to her husband afterwards will never be collusion. Fairgrieve v. Chalmers, p. 745.

See Expenses, 10—Process, 12, 41.

INCOME-TAX. See Revenue, 2-5.

INNUEENDO. See Reparation, 4-7.

INSANITY. Facility and Circumvention—Will—Reduction—Relevancy of averments that testator's relatives suffered from mental disease.

In an action for reduction of a will on the grounds of insanity and of facility and circumvention, the pursuer averred that the testator was peculiarly liable to suffer from mental disease as mental disease was hereditary in his family, and, in support of this, made specific averments as to the diseased mental condition of various near relatives of the testator. Held that the averments were not necessarily irrelevant. Houston v. Aitken, p. 1037.

INSURANCE. Life insurance—Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, sec. 2—Policy "for the benefit of" the wife.

A married man effected with a life assurance society a policy of assurance, described as an "endowment bond," in terms of which the society undertook, in consideration of the payment of certain annual premiums, to pay to him the principal sum assured, with interest and profits, on the expiry of twenty years. The society also undertook, in the event of the husband's death before the expiry of the twenty years, to pay the principal sum assured to his widow, whom failing, to the husband's executors, administrators, or assigns. The husband having died within the twenty years, survived by his widow, and his estate having been sequestrated, held that the policy in question was a policy "for the benefit of his wife" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, and accordingly that the proceeds thereof fell to the widow and not to the husband's creditors. Chrystal's Trustee v. Chrystal, p. 1003.

INTERDICT. Title of proprietor to interdict nuisance affecting letting value of his property.

1. Opinions that the law of Scotland allows "a proprietor to apply for interdict in respect of operations by a third party, complained of by his tenant, and lowering, or reasonably calculated to lower, the letting value of his tenement." M'Ewen v. Steedman & M'Alister, p. 156.

Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893—Applicability to action of interdict.

2. Observed that the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection

INTERDICT—Continued.

Act, 1893, which impose a limit of time within which actions must be brought against public authorities, cannot be prayed in aid in a question of interdict, because the Court can only give interdict against what is a continuing wrong. Farquhar & Gill v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, p. 1294.

See Bankruptcy—Process, 25, 27—Right in Security, 1—Title to Sue, 7.

INTEREST. Rate of interest—Rate where trustees personally liable.

Circumstances in which the representatives of a trustee, who were found liable to refund to the trust-estate a sum of money which had been lost through his negligence, were ordained to pay interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent. Lees' Trustees v. Dun, p. 50.

See Contract, 2.

ISSUE. See Reparation, 2.JUDICIAL FACTOR. Curator bonis—Resignation of curator—Expenses of discharge and new appointment.

A curator bonis was appointed to a lunatic, whose whole estate amounted to less than £2000. Fifteen months after his appointment the curator, who desired to resign in order that he might take up a post that had been offered him abroad, petitioned the Court to discharge him and to appoint a new curator. Held that the expenses of the discharge and new appointment did not, in the circumstances, form a good charge against the ward's estate. Halliday's Curator Bonis, p. 509.

See Executor, 1.

JURISDICTION. Foreign—Reconvention—Continued dependency of action of convention.

1. A Scottish company, using arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem, brought an action in the Court of Session against an English company. The English company appeared to defend, and subsequently brought a counter action against the Scottish company. The actions were conjoined, and both were finally disposed of in the Inner House upon a reclaiming note, with a finding of expenses in favour of the Scottish company, and the accounts of expenses were remitted to the Auditor to tax and to report. Before the Court had approved of the Auditor's report and decerned for expenses, and while the period for appeal to the House of Lords was still current, the Scottish company brought another action arising out of the same subject-matter against the English company, and pleaded jurisdiction ex reconventionem. When this action was raised, the English defenders were making no claim against the pursuers, but had paid the sums due by them under the decrees in the conjoined actions, and were also willing to pay the accounts of expenses in these actions when taxed. Held that the English company was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Scottish Court ex reconventionem, inasmuch as the original actions had been finally disposed of on the merits by a decree of that Court. Hurst, Nelson, & Co., Limited, v. Spenser Whatley, Limited, p. 1041.

Forum conveniens—Contract—Construction.

2. A Scottish company entered into a contract with an English company to be executed in Wales, which contained an arbitration clause providing for the settlement of disputes by arbitration within the meaning of the English Arbitration Act. The Scottish company, having used arrestments ad fundandam jurisdictionem, brought an action in Scotland against the English company, in which the question was raised whether the matters in dispute were covered by the arbitration clause. The defenders pleaded forum non conveniens, in respect that the contract was an English one to be implemented furth of Scotland, and that the arbitration clause demanded construction according to the law of England. Circumstances in which the Court repelled this plea, found that the matters in dispute fell to be determined by arbitration in terms of the contract, and sisted process in hoc statu until the matters should be so determined. James Howden & Co., Limited, v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, p. 920.

JURISDICTION—Continued.

See Arrestment—Sheriff, 1—Trade Union, 2, 3.

JUS QUÆSITUM TERTIO. Trade union rules—Agreement with member to pay sick benefit to dependants—Revocable agreement—Claim by dependant.

The rules of a trade union, which could be altered at the will of the general council, provided that if a member became insane his wife, family, or parent, if dependent upon him, should be eligible to receive sick benefit for one year. In an action at the instance of the wife of an insane member against the union for recovery of sick benefit, the defenders maintained that, as the rules could be altered, the pursuer had no indefeasible jus quæsitum tertio, and so had no title to sue. Held that as the agreement embodied in the rules, though revocable, had not been revoked when the pursuer's claim arose, she had a good title to sue. Love v. Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland, p. 1078.

JUSTICIARY CASES. Procedure—Proof—Admissibility of witness—Witness present in Police Court when other witnesses examined—Evidence (Scotland) Act, 1840, sec. 3.

1. Section 3 of the Evidence Act, 1840 (which relaxes the common law rule excluding a witness who has heard the evidence given by other witnesses), applies only to proceedings in the Courts specified in the section, among which the Burgh Police Court is not included; and accordingly, in proceedings in that Court, it is a good objection to a witness that he has been present in Court during the examination of other witnesses in the case. Docherty and Graham v. M'Lennan, (J.) p. 102.

Procedure—Proof—Admissibility of witness—Examination of additional witness after case closed.

2. Held that it was not competent for the prosecutor in a criminal trial in a Burgh Police Court, even with the leave of the presiding magistrate, to adduce a witness after the case for the prosecution had been closed. Docherty and Graham v. M'Lennan, (J.) p. 102.

Procedure—Proof—Complaint libelling second offence—Stage at which previous conviction should be proved—Street Betting Act, 1906, sec. 1—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, sec. 34.

3. Where a previous conviction was libelled as an aggravation and not as a substantive charge, held that it had been competently proved after the accused had been found guilty of the offence for which he was prosecuted; and that it would have been incompetent to prove it in causa. Campbell v. Kerr, (J.) p. 10.

Procedure—Proof—Public and official documents—Regulations for the Territorial Force—Extent to which Regulations prove themselves—Necessity of lodging copy in process—The Army Act, 1881 (as amended by the Annual Army Acts to 1911), sec. 163—The Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, sec. 26 (2).

4. Held that the Regulations for the Territorial Force and for County Associations may be proved by production of a copy purporting to be printed by a Government printer without other evidence; but that the Court does not take judicial notice of the Regulations, and, therefore, that a prosecutor desiring to found on them must lodge a copy in process before closing his case. Todd v. Anderson, (J.) p. 105.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Statutory Offences—Betting—Aggravation—Complaint libelling second offence—Stage at which previous conviction should be proved—Street Betting Act, 1906, sec. 1—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, sec. 34.

5. The Street Betting Act, 1906, which prohibits betting in public places, imposes a certain penalty for a first offence and a larger penalty for a second offence. A complaint charged an accused with a contravention of the Act, and that "such offence is a second offence, you having been previously convicted as in the list annexed, whereby you are liable" to the larger penalty. Held that the previous conviction was libelled as an aggravation and not as a substantive charge, and had been competently proved after the accused had been found guilty of the offence for which he was prosecuted; and that it would have been incompetent to prove it in causa. Campbell v. Kerr, (J.) p. 10.

Statutory Offences—Betting—"Public place"—"Unenclosed ground"—Open shed on quay—Street Betting Act, 1906, sec. 1.

6. On a quay belonging to a harbour trust there was a shed, in the sides of which there were large openings without gates or doors. The public had free access to both quay and shed. Held that the shed was "unenclosed ground," and was a "public place" within the meaning of the Street Betting Act, 1906. Campbell v. Kerr, (J.) p. 10.

Statutory Offences—Managing a brothel—Manager found "in" a "building or part of a building" used as a brothel—Common stair leading to brothel—Glasgow Police Act, 1866, sec. 142.

7. A person, who managed as a brothel a house situated on the first floor of a common stair, admitted a man and woman to the house for the purpose of prostitution but did not himself enter the house; he was then met by two constables on the stair-landing outside the door of the house with the key of the door (which he had locked) in his possession. Held that he was found "in" the house in the sense of section 142 of the Glasgow Police Act, 1866. M'Intyre v. Thomson, (J.) p. 19.

Statutory Offences—Coal-mine—Facilities for checkweigher—Failure to provide "shelter from weather"—Shelter not artificially heated—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 13 (2)—Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals) Act, 1905, sec. 1 (4).

8. Held that the fact that the owners of a colliery provided no means for the artificial heating of the checkweigher's weigh-house did not constitute a failure to provide him with "a shelter from the weather." Dalmellington Iron Co., Limited, v. Mackenna, (J.) p. 63.

Statutory Offences—Motor Car—Charge of exceeding speed limit—Proof of warning or notice of intended prosecution—Motor Car Act, 1903, sec. 9.

9. In a prosecution for a contravention of section 9 of the Motor Car Act, 1903 (which imposes a speed limit), the prosecutor must prove that the warning or notice of the intended prosecution required by the section was given to the accused; and a conviction, without such proof, is bad. Dickson v. Stevenson, (J.) p. 1.

Statutory Offences—Frequenting public place with intent to commit felony—"Place adjacent to a street or highway"—Hotel—Vagrancy Act, 1824, sec. 4—Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, sec. 15.

10. Held that the entrance hall and staircase of the Central Station Hotel in Glasgow, which opened directly on to a public street, was a "place adjacent to a street or highway" in the sense of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, sec. 4 (as amended and applied to Scotland by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, sec. 15), which is directed against suspected persons or reputed thieves frequenting such a place with intent to commit felony. M'Intyre v. Morton, (J.) p. 58.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Statutory Offences—Hanging “linen clothes or other such article” on roadside hedge—Herring nets—Ejusdem generis—General Turnpike Act, 1831, sec. 96—Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act, 1878, sec. 123 and Schedule C.

11. Held that a complaint, which charged an accused with contravening section 96 of the General Turnpike Act, 1831, by hanging herring fishing-nets on a roadside hedge, was irrelevant, as herring fishing-nets did not fall under the category “linen clothes or other such article.” Patience v. Mackenzie, (J.) p. 7.

Statutory Offences—Fishing within “exclusive fishery limits of the British Islands”—Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, secs. 7, 28, and First Schedule—Application of Schedule to Foreigner not a subject of a Power signatory to the convention in the Schedule—Complaint—Relevancy.

12. A Norwegian subject, the master of a trawler registered in Norway, was convicted on a complaint which set forth that, contrary to the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, he had fished “within the exclusive fishing limits of the British Islands as defined by Article II.” of the First Schedule to that Act, viz., at a point within three miles of a line drawn across a certain bay. The First Schedule consists of an international convention entered into between Great Britain and certain countries, of which Norway is not one. Held that the accused, not being the subject of a signatory nation, was not bound by the provisions of the convention, and that, accordingly, as the locus of the offence was defined in the complaint by reference to these provisions, the complaint was irrelevant; and conviction quashed. Jensen v. Wilson, (J.) p. 3.

Statutory Offences—Possession of salmon in close time—Defence that salmon taken with rod and line—Onus of proof—Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 21.

13. The Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 21, renders liable to a penalty any person who shall “have in his possession any salmon taken” during the “annual close time.” It has been decided that “annual close time” refers only to net-fishing, and that there is no offence if the salmon was taken by rod and line at a time when rod-fishing was open. Held that proof of possession within the close time is prima facie proof of the offence, and that the onus of establishing capture by rod and line rests on the accused. Fishmongers of London v. Stiven, (J.) p. 28.

Statutory Offences—Travelling in tramway without paying requisite fare—Proof of fraud—Tramways Act, 1870, sec. 51.

14. Held that a person cannot be convicted of an offence under section 51 of the Tramways Act, 1870, which makes it an offence to travel without having paid the requisite fare, unless it appears that he acted with fraudulent intention. Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co., (J.) p. 23.

Statutory Offences—Weights and measures—Weighing and selling goods under weight—Necessity of libelling both weighing and selling—Power of specified officials to enter premises where goods exposed for sale—Right to delegate power—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 430.

15. Held (1) that, as section 430 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, in terms imposed a penalty only on persons who both sold and also incorrectly weighed goods, a complaint which charged the accused merely with selling goods under weight was irrelevant; (2) that under the section the powers therein conferred were confined to the officials mentioned, and could not be delegated; and that, accordingly, a sale to a messenger sent by one of these officials for the purpose of purchasing the article would not support a charge of contravention of the section. Masterton v. Soutar, (J.) p. 74.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Statutory Offences—Weights and Measures—Selling goods under weight—Implied representation as to weight—Label “Not sold by weight”—Fraudulent intent—Glasgow Corporation Act, 1907, sec. 60.

16. A boy entered a shop belonging to a limited company and presented a written order for $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. of butter. The salesman, without remark, handed him a mould or print of butter contained in a wrapper on which was printed “This article is not sold by weight.” The butter weighed only 3 oz. $7\frac{1}{2}$ drams, and the sum paid by the boy was the price, according to the current wholesale rates, of that quantity of butter. The company had instructed their employees not to sell butter by weight, but this instruction was not always obeyed. The company having been convicted of a contravention of section 60 of the Glasgow Corporation Act, 1907, held (1) that the butter had been represented as being of the weight asked for, the notice on the wrapper not being sufficient to displace the representation implied in the transaction between the buyer and seller; but (2) that the company were entitled to the benefit of the exception in that section, having proved that the deficiency in weight arose without any fraudulent intent; and conviction quashed. Galbraith’s Stores, Limited, v. M’Intyre, (J.) p. 66.

Statutory Offences—Weights and Measures—Selling goods under weight—Goods weighed along with wrapper—Absence of fraudulent intent—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 430.

17. A firm of provision merchants was in the practice of making up their tea in packets in readiness for delivery to purchasers. The tea contained in the packets, which were sold as $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. packets, fell below that weight by $5\frac{1}{2}$ drams, the weight of the paper wrapper of the packet; and on the outside of the wrapper was printed “This packet is guaranteed gross weight.” It appeared that in the district where the firm carried on business “gross weight” was understood to mean the combined weight of an article and its receptacle; and that in the grocery trade it was a general practice for a grocer, when he was weighing tea in the presence of the purchaser, to put a paper bag along with the tea into the scales. A purchaser having been supplied with one of these packets in response to a request for $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of tea,—held that section 430 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, was not thereby contravened, as it appeared from the circumstances that the deficiency in the weight of the tea was not due to fraudulent intent. So held also in circumstances which were similar, except that the words printed on the packet were: “Full weight of tea including wrapper.” Masterton v. Soutar, (J.) p. 74.

Review—Advocation—Interlocutor finding libel relevant—Competency of advocation.

18. A person charged under an indictment in the Sheriff Court having, before the diet fixed for trial of the case, brought an advocation of the Sheriff-substitute’s interlocutor at the first diet, repelling objections to the relevancy of the libel on the ground that it disclosed no crime and was also wanting in specification, held that the advocation was incompetent, and the bill refused. Muir v. Hart, (J.) p. 41.

See Administration of Justice—Penalty—Public Health, 1, 2—Sheriff, 14—Statute, 2.

LAW-AGENT. See Agent and Client.

LEASE. Urban tenement—Premises let for specific business—Business interfered with by operation carried on by landlord on adjoining premises.

1. The top flat of an urban tenement was let to a tenant for the purposes of a photographic business. During the tenancy the proprietor of the tenement carried out alterations upon the lower flats which necessitated extensive building operations, and these caused structural and other damage in the top flat and interference with and detriment to the tenant's business. Held that, while the landlord was admittedly bound to restore the structural damage done to the tenant's premises, he was also liable in damages (1) for injury done to the tenant's furniture and materials; (2) for injury to his business during the work of restoration; and (3) for injury to his business during the landlord's building operations, but only in so far as this was due to physical and tangible injury to the premises (as from vibration or dust), and not where it was immaterial or temporary (as from noise or occasional obstruction to the access). Observed (distinguishing the law of England) that in Scotland a landlord carrying on operations in suo is liable in reparation to his tenant for the consequences thereof only in so far as they amount to a derogation from his grant. Observations on the distinction between the liability of a landlord and of a neighbouring third party for the consequences of operations carried on in suo. Huber v. Ross, p. 898.

LEASE—Continued.

Management—Outgoing—Rules of good husbandry—Five-shift rotation of crops—Obligation of tenant to sow grass seeds with waygoing white crop.

2. The tenant of a farm obliged himself under his lease to cultivate it "agreeably to the rules of good husbandry," and in particular "by at least the five-shift rotation," which was therein defined. Under this rotation the white crop on one-fifth of the land at his outgoing fell to be followed by young grass in the next year. Held that the tenant was bound in the last year of his lease to sow grass seeds along with his waygoing white crop upon that portion of the land, he receiving reasonable remuneration therefor; or, alternatively, to grant all necessary facilities to the landlord or incoming tenant to do so. Gordon v. Hogg, p. 986.

Outgoing—Valuation of sheep stock—Arbitration—Basis of valuation.

3. A lease of a farm provided that the tenant should, at the end of the lease, leave the sheep stock on the farm to the proprietor or incoming tenant at a valuation to be fixed by arbitration. In a case stated under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, with regard to the basis of valuation to be adopted by the arbiter, held that it is the duty of the arbiter to value the sheep upon the basis of their value to an occupant of the farm in view of the arbiter's estimate of the return to be realised by such occupant from them, in accordance with the course of prudent management, in lambs, wool, and price when ultimately sold; and not upon the basis either (1) of market value only, or (2) of the cost and loss which would be involved in the re-stocking of the farm with a like stock if the present sheep stock were removed. Held further that the arbiter is entitled to take into account both current market prices and the special qualities of the sheep, both in themselves and in their relation to the ground, which in his opinion will tend either to enhance or to diminish the return to be realised from them by an occupant of the farm. Observations, per curiam, on the valuing of the stock as part of the farm as a going business, and on the consideration to be given to acclimatisation. Williamson v. Stewart, p. 235.

See Right in Security, 1—Sale, 6.

LEGACY. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts.

LEGITIM. See Marriage-Contract, 2.

LIEN. See Company, 1—Ship, 1.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1
 (a)—Time limit—Applicability to action of interdict.

1. Observed by the Lord President that the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which impose a limit of time within which actions must be brought against public authorities, cannot be prayed in aid in a question of interdict, because the Court can only give interdict against what is a continuing wrong. Farquhar & Gill v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, p. 1294.

Claim for compensation against Local Authority under Public Health Act, 1897—Application to Local Government Board for appointment of arbiter—Limitation of time for taking proceedings—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, sec. 166—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, secs. 1, 3.

2. A veterinary surgeon, duly authorised, seized and carried away under sec. 43 of the Public Health Act, 1897, meat which appeared to him to be diseased, but which eventually did not prove to have been diseased. The owners of the meat claimed compensation from the local authority for the value of the meat, and presented an application to the Local Government Board, more than six months after the seizure of the meat, for the appointment of an arbiter to ascertain the compensation due. Held that the proceedings were timeously taken, in respect that this was not the case of an "action or prosecution" for a "wrong" in the sense of sec. 166 of the Public Health Act, which had to be brought within two months, nor of an "action, prosecution, or other proceeding" in the sense of sec. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, which had to be brought within six months. Held further (per Lord Salvesen) that, in any event, an action, prosecution, or other proceeding on account of an act done under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, would fall within the proviso in sec. 3 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, so as to exclude the application of that statute. Corporation of Glasgow v. Smithfield and Argentine Meat Co., Limited, p. 364.

LIQUIDATE DAMAGES. See Contract, 6, 7.

LOAN. Issue of redeemable stock by a municipality—"Redeemable"—Edinburgh Corporation Stock Act, 1894, sec. 5—Edinburgh Improvement and Tramways Act, 1896, sec. 83.

The Corporation of Edinburgh, under powers conferred by Acts of Parliament, issued Corporation stock, the certificates of which bore that the holders were the proprietors of a certain value "of Edinburgh Corporation two and a half per cent Redeemable Stock, subject to the Acts of Parliament relating thereto . . . Redeemable at par after Whitsunday 1927." Held, on a construction of the certificate, together with the Acts which authorised, and the resolution of the Corporation which effected, the creation of the stock, that the Corporation were bound on the application of the holders to redeem the stock at par at Whitsunday 1927, and had not merely an option of so doing. British Linen Bank v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 139.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Issue of redeemable stock by a municipality—"Redeemable"—Edinburgh Corporation Stock Act, 1894, sec. 5—Edinburgh Improvement and Tramways Act, 1896, sec. 83.

1. The Corporation of Edinburgh, under powers conferred by Acts of Parliament, issued Corporation stock, the certificates of which bore that the holders were the proprietors of a certain value "of Edinburgh Corporation two and a half per cent Redeemable Stock, subject to the Acts of Parliament relating thereto. . . . Redeemable at par after Whitsunday 1927." Held, on a construction of the certificate, together with the Acts which authorised, and the resolution of the Corporation which effected, the creation of the stock, that the LOCAL GOVERNMENT—Continued.

Corporation were bound on the application of the holders to redeem the stock at par at Whitsunday 1927, and had not merely an option of so doing. British Linen Bank v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 139.

Rates and assessments—Exemptions—“Ground exclusively appropriated as burial ground”—Cemetery only partially occupied and earning profit—Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1.

2. Held that the whole of a portion of ground belonging to a cemetery company fenced off and enclosed for burial purposes, was “exclusively appropriated as burial ground,” and accordingly exempted from assessments and rates under the Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1, notwithstanding the facts (1) that the lairs into which it was divided were only in course of being sold and occupied, and (2) that the company derived a profit from the sale of lairs. Wood v. Western Cemetery Co., Limited, p. 1173.

Burgh—County—Extension of burgh boundaries—Inclusion of portion of county—Adjustment of liabilities by arbiter—Method of adjustment—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, sec. 50—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 96.

3. In an arbitration under sec. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, as applied by sec. 96 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, between an extended burgh and the adjoining county the county maintained that the Sheriff was bound to make his adjustment of liabilities on the principle of apportionment according to the rateable values of the area taken into the burgh and the area retained by the county. Held that there was no one particular method of adjustment incumbent on the arbiter; and accordingly that he was entitled to choose his own method, with which the Court would not interfere unless it was clearly wrong. Lanark County Council v. Magistrates of Motherwell, p. 1251.

Burgh—County—Extension of burgh boundaries—Inclusion of portion of county—Adjustment of liabilities—“Property”—Claim by county for loss of prospective and contingent income—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, sec. 50—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 96.

4. A tramway company, authorised by Act of Parliament to lay tramways in a county, were bound, in every year in which their profits sufficed to provide a certain dividend, to pay the county £50 for every mile of tramway laid in the county. A portion of the county in which lines were authorised, but not laid, having been transferred to a burgh, held that the contingent right to payments from the tramway company was not “property” within the meaning of sec. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, to be taken into account in adjusting the financial liabilities of the burgh and county. Lanark County Council v. Magistrates of Motherwell, p. 1251.

See Process, 34.

MALICE. See Reparation, 2, 3, 8.

MARRIAGE-CONTRACT. Construction—Death-duties—Incidence of duties—Obligation to “make up” the capital held by the marriage-contract trustees to a certain sum—Whether trustees entitled to receive capital sum free of death-duties.

1. A father was a party to his son’s marriage-contract which provided that a sum of £30,000 should be vested in the trustees, to be made up as follows:—(1) by an immediate payment by the father of £20,000; (2) by the appointment of the son to a share of a fund liferented by the father, valued at the date of the contract at £6250, but whose actual value could not be ascertained until the termination of the liferent; and (3) by an obligation undertaken by the father binding his executors to pay to the trustees the sum of £3750, or such other sum more or less as should “make up the sum of £30,000 to be received by the trustees.” Held that the father’s obligation did not bind his estate to make good the total sum of £30,000 free of all Government duties. Dundas’s Trustees v. Dundas’s Trustees, p. 375.

MARRIAGE-CONTRACT—Continued.

Antenuptial contract—Provisions in lieu of legitim—Power to revoke—Reserved power—Repugnancy.

2. A father by his marriage-contract settled on the children of the marriage or of any future marriage, equally or as he might appoint, the whole estate (subject to an annuity and certain liferents) then belonging to him or which might belong to him at his death, in satisfaction of their legitim, but reserved power to revoke or vary the provisions in their favour. Held that this reservation was not repugnant to the other provisions of the deed but was valid and effectual, and that the reserved power had been duly exercised by the father in his testamentary settlement, by which (after providing for certain annuities and a legacy) he bequeathed his whole estate to the children of the marriage in liferent and to their issue in fee. Simpson’s Trustees v. Taylor, p. 280.

See Revenue, 1—Succession, 4.

MASTER AND SERVANT. Unauthorised sale by servant—Liability of Master.

In the prosecution of a dairyman for selling, by the hand of his servant, milk which was not genuine, it was proved that the servant who sold the milk had no authority to do so, his duty being merely to deliver milk to his master’s customers. Held that, as the servant had exceeded his authority in selling the milk, there had been no sale by the accused; and that he must, therefore, be acquitted. Lindsay v. Dempster, (J.) p. 110.

See Reparation, 18, 19, 20—Workmen’s Compensation Act.

MESSENGER-AT-ARMS. See Diligence.MINES AND MINERALS. “Freestone”—Whether freestone a mineral a question of fact—Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 70.

1. Whether “freestone” is or is not a mineral within the meaning of sec. 70 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, is always a question of fact to be determined in view of the particular circumstances of each case. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington, (H. L.) p. 9.

Oil shale.

2. Held that in 1818 oil shale was not included as a mineral in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and land-owners. Marquis of Linlithgow and Young’s Paraffin Light and Mineral Oil Co., Limited, v. North British Railway Co., p. 1327.

Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887—Regulations—Enforcement.

3. Opinion (per Lord Kinnear) that the Coal Mines Regulation Act does not place upon mineowners an absolute duty of seeing that statutory rules are observed, but that, if injury occurs through a breach of a rule, the onus is on the mineowners of proving that they have done all in their power to prevent such breach. Black v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 33.

Duties on land values—Provisions as to minerals—Meaning of expression “minerals”—Felsite whinstone—Granite—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, secs. 20, 22, 24.

4. Held that all substances obtained from the crust of the earth, other than the surface soil, by mining, quarrying, or open working are minerals in the sense of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, with the exception of those substances expressly excepted in the Act; and accordingly that Felsite whinstone and granite, not being among the excepted substances, were minerals, and subject to mineral rights duty. Anstruther's Trustees v. Inland Revenue, p. 1165.

MINES AND MINERALS—Continued.

See Compulsory Powers, 3—Justiciary Cases, 8—Valuation Acts, 15.

MINOR AND PUPIL. Action of damages by father as tutor and administrator for his pupil children—Necessity for separate conclusions for each child. Held that a father, suing as administrator-in-law for his pupil children for damages for personal injuries suffered by them, must conclude for a separate sum for each child and not for a lump sum. Gray v. Caledonian Railway Co., p. 339.

MORA.

Observations (per Lord Salvesen) on the elements necessary to support the plea of mora. Lees's Trustees v. Dun, p. 50.

MOTOR CAR. See Justiciary Cases, 9—Reparation, 13.

NEGLIGENCE. See Reparation.

NEWSPAPER. Application to restrain publication of statements tending to prejudice course of justice.

During a strike at Glasgow acts of violence were committed, in connection with which certain persons were apprehended and charged with having been part of a riotous mob which forced the Allan Line shed at Princes Dock. Prior to their trial the Glasgow Herald newspaper published a letter commenting on the occurrences, and calling on the magistrates to take steps to prevent their repetition. The letter contained this passage:—"Instances have occurred which clearly demonstrate the determination of the men to carry out their leaders' advice, notably that in which the Allan Line sheds at Princes Docks were rushed and the 'Sicilian' boarded, when a number of men were arrested, and subsequently remitted to the Sheriff." The accused persons presented a petition to the High Court, setting forth the letter, and craving the Court to prohibit the newspaper from publishing any statement relative to the acts with which the petitioners were charged, or anything prejudicial to their case. Held that, there being nothing in the letter complained of but a statement of facts already known to the public, it was not prejudicial to the petitioners' case; and petition refused. Cowie v. George Outram & Co., Limited, (J.) p. 14.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. Trade Incorporation—Alteration of bye-laws—Application by sole surviving member of incorporation—Burgh Trading Act, 1846, sec. 3.

Observed that a petition under the Burgh Trading Act, 1846, sec. 3, presented by a trade incorporation for the sanction of the Court to certain resolutions and proposed alterations on the bye-laws of the incorporation, was not an appeal to the nobile officium of the Court, but only to the exercise of its statutory jurisdiction. Incorporation of Tailors of Edinburgh v. Muir's Trustee, p. 603.

See Trust, 3.

NUISANCE. Vibration caused by machinery—Industrial district.

Held that vibration due to the working of a gas-engine, whereby the structure of the adjoining premises was injured and the comfort of their occupants affected, constituted a nuisance which might be restrained by interdict, notwithstanding that the premises were situated in an industrial district of Glasgow. M'Ewen v. Steedman & M'Alister, p. 156.

ONUS. See Presumption.

PARENT AND CHILD. Presumption of legitimacy.

1. Observed by the Lord President that the presumption of legitimacy applied only where persons were living more or less in the married state, and did not apply where the de quo quæritur was whether there was a marriage or not. Deans's Judicial Factor v. Deans, p. 441.

Bastard—Aliment—Custody—Death of mother—Claim for aliment by maternal grandmother—Denial of paternity coupled with offer to accept custody of the child.

2. B. gave birth to an illegitimate child and claimed aliment from F., whom she alleged to be the father. F. denied paternity, but offered to pay aliment, and did so for four years until B.'s death, when he offered to take charge of the child himself. The offer was refused by B.'s mother, with whom the child was living and continued to live, and who subsequently brought an action against F. for a finding that he was the father and for payment as aliment of the sums disbursed by her for its support since B.'s death. In his defences F. denied paternity, and renewed his offer to take charge of the child. Held that F.'s offer to take charge of the child, even though coupled with a denial of paternity, was a conclusive answer to the claim for aliment made by its grandmother, who stood in no legal relationship to it and was under no obligation to support it and had no right to its custody. Brown v. Ferguson, p. 22.

PARTNERSHIP. Dissolution—Petition to Court—Expediency of procedure by petition—Partnership Act, 1890, sec. 35.

1. Two partners of a firm presented a petition to the Junior Lord Ordinary for an order dissolving the firm in terms of sec. 35 of the Partnership Act, 1890, in which they averred that the remaining partner's conduct was calculated to affect prejudicially the carrying on of the business. Answers were lodged by the remaining partner. The Court, holding that procedure by petition, while competent, was, in the circumstances, inexpedient, in respect that the parties were at variance on matters requiring investigation by means of a proof which would be more suitably conducted in an ordinary action, dismissed the petition. Macnabs v. Macnab, p. 421.

Liabilities of partners—Partner of firm of law-agents acting as secretary of company—Misapplication of company's funds—Liability of firm—Money received "in the course of its business"—Partnership Act, 1890, sec. 11 (b).

2. A company brought an action against a firm of law-agents and H., one of the partners, for repayment of sums embezzled by C., the other partner, during a period in which he was secretary of the company, and paid by him temporarily into the firm's account. Circumstances in which the Court assolized the defenders, holding (1) that they were not liable under the Partnership Act, 1890, sec. 11 (b), in respect that the moneys had not been received by the firm "in the course of its business"; and (2) that they were not liable at common law, in respect that they had discharged the onus which lay on them of proving that the firm had not been gratuitously benefited by the payments into its bank account. New Mining and Exploring Syndicate, Limited, v. Chalmers & Hunter, p. 126.

PATENT. Reduction—Patent affecting business of firm—Title and interest of individual partner to sue—Concurrence of Lord Advocate—Patents and Designs Act, 1907, sec. 94 (3).

In an action for revocation of a patent relating to concrete, brought with the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, the pursuer averred that he was a civil engineer, and was a member of a firm doing a large business in reinforced concrete, and that "the pursuer's business" was in danger of being affected by the enforcement of the defender's patent. The action was brought in the name of the pursuer as an individual and not of his firm. Held that the pursuer had a title and interest to sue in his own name. Observed that the concurrence of the Lord Advocate did not preclude the Court from considering the relevancy of the pursuer's averments. Melville v. Cummings, p. 1185.

PATENT—Continued.

PENALTY. Recovery of statutory penalty—Procedure—Summary application—Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836, secs. 2, 18, and 22—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, sec. 4.

Proceedings for the recovery of penalties under the Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836, must be brought under the forms of the Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, and not in the form of an ordinary action in the Sheriff Court. Glasgow Goldsmiths Company v. Mackenzie & Co., p. 992.

See Contract, 6, 7.

PERSONAL OBJECTION. Building restrictions—Enforcement—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, secs. 67 and 78.

1. The Commissioners of Works, as managers of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Edinburgh (which are Crown property), applied to the Dean of Guild for warrant to erect the first wing of certain proposed buildings in the Gardens, the building line of which would encroach within 30 feet of the centre line of a public street. The plans lodged showed the completion of the buildings on the same building line extending further down the street. The Edinburgh Corporation offered no opposition, and the lining was granted and the first wing of the building was erected. Two years afterwards the Commissioners applied for warrant to complete the buildings by erecting the other wing in accordance with the original plans, and a lining was granted. The Corporation thereupon passed a resolution, in terms of section 67 of the Act, that no buildings should be erected within 30 feet of the centre of the street, and brought an action of interdict against the Commissioners. The Court assolized the defenders, the ground of Lord Johnston's opinion being that the Corporation, by permitting the first warrant to be granted and a portion of the buildings to be erected within the 30 foot space, were barred from objecting to the completion of the buildings on the same building line. Magistrates of Edinburgh v. Lord Advocate, p. 1085.

Negligence of original trustee—Action by assumed trustees—Alleged delay and contributory negligence of pursuers—Right to maintain action for behoof of beneficiaries.

2. Assumed trustees brought an action against the representatives of a deceased trustee for recovery of funds which they alleged had been lost to the trust-estate through his negligence. The defenders pleaded that the pursuers were barred by mora, and by the fact that they had themselves been guilty of negligence which had contributed to the loss. Held that, assuming the truth of the allegations against the pursuers, they were still entitled to prosecute the action for behoof of the beneficiaries whom they represented. Lees's Trustees v. Dun, p. 50.

PLEDGE. See Right in Security, 2.

POLICE FORCE. See Reparation 2.

POLICE OFFENCES. Contravention of order regulating traffic—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 385.

Held that an "order," made by magistrates in pursuance of section 385 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, by which omnibuses were forbidden to turn in certain streets of the burgh was invalid, in respect that, as the regulation was intended to be permanent, it could be competently made only by bye-law. Taylor v. Nicol, (J.) p. 38.

POLICE OFFENCES—Continued.

POOR. Relief—"Able-bodied."

1. Circumstances in which a man, who had supported himself but had not earned, and deponed that he was not able to earn, enough to support his children also, was held to be able-bodied in a question as to the poor-law. Observed that a man who is able to support himself, but cannot support his children, is "able-bodied" within the meaning of the poor-law. Observed (per Lord Salvesen)—"I think it would be dangerous to hold that in determining whether a man is able-bodied within the meaning of the poor-law, regard should be had to anything but the physical (in which I include mental) condition of the man himself." Old Machar Parish Council v. Aberdeen Parish Council, p. 26.

Derivative settlement—Deserted children—Acquisition by father of new settlement during children's chargeability.

2. In 1905 four pupil children became chargeable (in respect of their father's refusal to support them) to the parish of Old Machar, where their father had then a settlement. In 1906 the father, who was able-bodied, left that parish and was not traced till 1909, when he was found in Aberdeen, where he had acquired a settlement. The children had in the meantime been supported by Old Machar, and that parish on discovering the father gave notice to Aberdeen of a claim of relief from the future maintenance of the children. Held that, owing to the location of the father as an able-bodied man with a settlement in Aberdeen, Old Machar ceased to be liable for the maintenance of the children from the date of the notice; that Aberdeen was bound to relieve Old Machar of the sums expended on the maintenance of the children after that date; and that it fell to Aberdeen to take such steps as they might think fit to make the father support his family. Old Machar Parish Council v. Aberdeen Parish Council, p. 26.

Pauper lunatic—Capacity to acquire settlement—Proof of insanity—Effect of certificate.

3. In an action between two parish councils to determine which was liable to support a female pauper who had been confined in a lunatic asylum on a certificate of insanity granted in 1908, the question depended upon whether, during the three years between 1903 (when she attained puberty) and 1906 she was mentally capable of acquiring a settlement in the parish in which she then resided. Held that, in determining the question of the pauper's mental capacity during these years, the certificate of insanity subsequently granted raised no legal presumption of incapacity at the earlier period, but was merely one among other items of evidence to be taken into consideration. Stirling Parish Council v. Dunblane Parish Council, p. 316.

Pauper lunatic—Action to determine liability for pauper lunatic—Competency of appeal to Court of Session—Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857, sec. 78.

4. Held that sec. 78 of the Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857 (which contains a clause making the Sheriff's decision final), only applies to the summary recovery of outlays with regard to pauper lunatics where there is no dispute as to the parties liable to reimburse these, and does not apply to actions brought to determine the liability of parishes inter se for the support of pauper lunatics, and accordingly does not prevent an appeal from the Sheriff to the Court of Session in such actions. Stirling Parish Council v. Dunblane Parish Council, p. 316.

See Process, 26.

POOR'S-ROLL. Reporters equally divided in opinion—Appeal from Sheriff Court.

1. Where the reporters on probabilis causa reported to the Court that they were equally divided in opinion as to the admission to the poor's-roll of an applicant who desired to prosecute an appeal against two adverse judgments in the Sheriff Court, the two advocates being in favour of, and the two law-agents against, the applicant's admission, the Court refused the application. Walker v. Smith, p. 1149.

Poverty—Circumstances warranting admission.

2. Held that a workman, who was earning 30s. a week and who was living apart from and was not supporting his family, was not entitled to be admitted to the poor's-roll for the purpose of defending an action of divorce. Penn v. Penn, p. 102.

PRESCRIPTION. Positive Prescription—Habite Title—Title by Progress—Service—Competency of looking at prior writs to ascertain character of possession.

In an action between a superior and his vassal, the latter asserted a proprietary right in a castle situated, as he alleged, on certain lands held by him, and founded his right on possession of the castle for the prescriptive period following on a decree of special service of the lands (in which the castle was not mentioned), with their parts and pertinents, recorded in 1880. Held that it was competent to look at the prior writs to ascertain the nature of the vassal's possession of the castle, and that, as these writs disclosed that the vassal's possession thereof was not as proprietor but as keeper for the superior, the service was not a habite title on which to found prescription; and claim for vassal repelled. Observations on the effect of a decree of service as the foundation for a prescriptive title. Duke of Argyll v. Campbell, p. 458.

PRESUMPTION. Bills of Exchange—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, secs. 46 (2) (e), 50 (2) (b).

Observations as to the presumptions and the onus of proof with regard to waiver of the statutory requirements of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. Mactavish's Judicial Factor v. Michael's Trustees, p. 425.

See Fishings—Ship, 6—Valuation Acts, 11—Workmen's Compensation Act, 5, 17.

PROCESS. Sisting of new pursuer—Beneficiary suing for debt due to executry estate—Executor sisted as pursuer—Conditions as to expenses—Consignation in lieu of caution—Act of Sederunt, 20th March 1907, sec. 2 (a).

1. An action, in which it was sought to establish that a certain debt was due to the estate of a deceased intestate, was brought by one of the deceased's next of kin in his own name. The Lord Ordinary having dismissed the action on the ground that the pursuer had no title to sue, circumstances in which the Court allowed the executor of the deceased to be sisted as a pursuer in the action on payment by the original pursuer of the expenses already incurred, and on consignation by him of the sum of £200, in lieu of caution, in security of any expenses in which the executor might be found liable in the course of the proceedings; the Court intimating that the executor would, in the future, be entitled to apply to the Lord Ordinary, if necessary, for further indemnification. Morrison v. Morrison's Executrix, p. 892.

Tender—Conjoined actions at the instance of different pursuers—Duty of defender to apportion sum tendered.

2. Where separate actions for salvage services at the instance of two pursuers having conflicting interests had been brought against the same defender and had been conjoined, opinion per curiam that, if the defender desired to put in a tender in the conjoined actions, he should (following the English practice) be obliged to apportion the sum tendered between the pursuers. Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur, p. 1235.

PROCESS—Continued.

Reclaiming—Printing documents for Inner House—Documents not in process.

3. It is the duty of the Clerks of Court in the Inner House to refuse to receive into process prints of any documents which are not already in process. If a party has failed to lodge a document on which he intended to found, he must move the Court for leave to lodge it. Grierson v. Mitchell, p. 173.

Reclaiming—Competency—Failure to box prints—Excusable cause—Conjoined actions—Record in one action only boxed—Judicature Act, 1825, sec. 18—A. S., 11th July 1828, sec. 77.

4. Objection was taken to the competency of a reclaiming note against an interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, disposing of two conjoined actions, on the ground that the reclaimer had boxed copies of the record in one only of these actions. The Court (after consultation with the Judges of the Second Division) repelled the objection, holding that it was within the power of the Court to permit prints to be lodged if in their view it was from some excusable cause that they were not lodged at the proper time, and that in the circumstances of this case there was excusable cause, looking to the confusion between the two records brought about by the conjoining of the actions. Henderson v. D. & W. Henderson, p. 171.

Reclaiming—Competency—Boxing—Failure to print amendments allowed in Outer House—Judicature Act, 1825, sec. 18—A. S., 11th July 1828, sec. 77.

5. Circumstances in which a reclaiming note was allowed to be received when amendments on the record, allowed in the Outer House on the last day of the proof, had not been added to the copies of the record boxed to the Court. Sharp's Trustee v. T. Y. Paterson & Co., Limited, p. 972.

Reclaiming—Double reclaiming notes—Competency—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 52.

6. A party can competently present a reclaiming note after his opponent has already reclaimed. But it is a question for the Auditor to decide whether there was any proper reason for presenting a second reclaiming note, and, if there was not, it will be his duty to disallow the expenses of that note. Observations on the circumstances in which a second reclaiming note may properly be presented. Fairgrieve v. Chalmers, p. 118.

Reclaiming—Effect of reclaiming note in bringing prior interlocutor under review—Interlocutor importing appointment of proof—Finality—Court of Session Act, 1868, secs. 28, 52—Act of Sederunt, 10th March 1870, secs. 1 (3) and 2.

7. Held that a reclaiming note against the judgment of the Lord Ordinary, disposing of the cause, did not submit to review under sec. 52 of the Court of Session Act, 1868, a prior interlocutor appointing proof which had not been reclaimed against within six days, in respect that that interlocutor had become final under sec. 28 of that Act, and secs. 1 (3) and 2 of the Act of Sederunt, 10th March 1870. Copeland v. Lord Wimborne, p. 355.

Proof or jury trial—Dangerous machine—Construction of tramway car.

8. In an action of damages for personal injuries brought against a tramway company, the pursuer averred that, as a tramway car passed her, her dress was caught by a stay that projected beneath the car between the front and rear wheels, whereby she was thrown down, and run over and injured. She averred that the accident was due to the faulty construction of the car, in respect that there were no guards covering the space between the front and rear wheels. Held that there were no such intricacies in the construction of the tramway car as to render the case unsuitable for trial before a jury; and issue allowed. Gibb v. Edinburgh and District Tramways Co., Limited, p. 580.

PROCESS—Continued.

Diligence for recovery of writs—Letter-books—Primary and secondary evidence.

9. In an action of suspension and interdict, the respondent obtained a diligence for recovery, inter alia, of letters written by the complainers or anyone on their behalf relating to certain matters on record, and "failing principals," for recovery of copies thereof. He subsequently applied for another diligence to recover, inter alia, the letter-books of the complainers' agents containing copies of letters relating to certain other specified matters. Held that as the respondent had not attempted to show that the principal letters were unavailable, he was not entitled, hoc statu, under the first diligence to recover the letter-books containing copies of letters written by the complainers' agents, or to obtain the second diligence. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Symington, p. 1033.

Diligence for recovery of writs—Action of damages for criminal charge made maliciously and without probable cause—Precognitions supplied to Crown officials.

10. In an action of damages in respect of a criminal charge, alleged to have been made maliciously and without probable cause, and to have been contained in certain documents including precognitions lodged by the defenders with the criminal authorities, the Court granted diligence at the instance of the pursuer for recovery of the precognitions, no objection to their production being stated for the Lord Advocate. Mills v. Kelvin & James White, Limited, p. 995.

Diligence for recovery of writs—Slender contained in newspaper report.

11. In an action of damages against newspaper proprietors for a slander contained in a report in their newspaper of a political meeting, the pursuer, who averred malice and founded on letters and paragraphs, reflecting on his conduct, published in previous issues of the newspaper as indicating malice, moved for a diligence to recover—(1) the manuscript notes or reports from which these paragraphs were printed; (2) all communications relating to the subject-matter of the paragraphs (a) passing between the defenders and their local correspondents, or (b) addressed to the defenders by members of the public; (3) (a) all notes of the proceedings of the meeting in question made by the defenders' reporters or correspondents, (b) all written reports of the meeting supplied to the defenders; and (4) all correspondence between the defenders and their local correspondents referring to the publication of the matters complained of. The Court, in consideration of the detailed averments of malice, granted the diligence. Reid v. Johnston & Co., p. 187.

Deposition of witness to lie in retentis—Divorce—Pursuer going abroad—Pursuer's evidence and oath de calumnia taken on commission before case called.

12. The pursuer in an action of divorce, who was employed abroad but had returned to Scotland for the purpose of raising her action and had been admitted to the poor's-roll, presented a petition in which she stated that she was compelled to return to her employment before the summons could be called (which, owing to the fact that her husband resided in Australia, could not be done within three months), and craved the Court to appoint a commissioner to take her oath de calumnia and her evidence, her deposition to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Court. The Court granted the prayer of the petition. Anderson, p. 1144.

PROCESS—Continued.

Jury Trial—Case sent to sittings—Postponement of trial—Grounds for postponement—Act of Sederunt, 19th November 1910, sec. 4.

13. Where one of the parties to a jury trial has objected to the trial proceeding at the sittings and the Lord Ordinary has repelled the objection and sent the case to the sittings, a postponement of the trial will not be granted unless strong grounds can be shown for interfering with the decision of the Lord Ordinary, or unless there has been a change of circumstances since the date of that decision. Carey v. Carey, p. 1325.

Conjunction of actions—Competing actions against same defender—Competency of conjoining actions—Method of conducting proof—Right of competing pursuers to cross-examine each other's witnesses.

14. Two shipowners brought separate actions against the same defender in respect of salvage services rendered to the defender's vessel. The claims of the two pursuers were mutually hostile. Held that the Lord Ordinary had rightly conjoined the actions, but his interlocutor varied by the addition of a declaration that (following the English practice) counsel for the one pursuer should have the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the other. Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur, p. 1235.

Action of damages laid alternatively at common law or under the Employers Liability Act—Necessity of discriminating between grounds of claim.

15. In an action concluding for damages at common law, or alternatively under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, held that the pursuer's averments, although they did not discriminate between the two grounds of claim, were relevant, in respect that they disclosed and gave notice of what was a good ground of claim either at common law or under the Act. Campbell v. United Collieries, Limited, p. 182.

Action of damages by father as tutor and administrator for his pupil children—Necessity for separate conclusions for each child.

16. Held that a father, suing as administrator-in-law for his pupil children for damages for personal injuries suffered by them, must conclude for a separate sum for each child and not for a lump sum. Gray v. Caledonian Railway Co., p. 339.

Multiplepinding—Competency—Double distress.

17. A small-debt action of multiplepinding was brought in name of an insurance company by a creditor of a deceased policy holder, the fund in medio being the sum due under the policy, and the object of the action being to supersede the necessity of executry administration. Held that the multiplepinding was incompetent, there being no double distress. Britannic Assurance Co., Limited, v. James Henderson, Limited, (J.) p. 31.

Multiplepinding—Condescence of fund in medio—Real raiser's right of retention against claimant.

18. In an action of multiplepinding the pursuer and real raiser may state in a condescence of the fund in medio, made up after claimants have been ranked by a final interlocutor, any claim of compensation or retention which he has against a claimant who has been ranked and preferred to the whole or part of the fund. Ramsay's Judicial Factor v. British Linen Bank, p. 206.

Petition for dissolution of partnership—Expediency of procedure by petition—Partnership Act, 1890, sec. 35.

19. Two partners of a firm presented a petition to the Junior Lord Ordinary for an order dissolving the firm in terms of sec. 35 of the Partnership Act, 1890. Answers were lodged by the remaining partner. The Court, holding that procedure by petition, while competent, was, in the circumstances, inexpedient, in respect that the parties were at variance on matters requiring investigation by means of a proof, which would be more suitably conducted in an ordinary action, dismissed the petition. Macnabs v. Macnab, p. 421.

PROCESS—Continued.

Special case—Method of stating questions of law.

20. Observations per curiam on the way in which questions of law should be stated in special cases. Davidson's Trustees, p. 693.

Special case—Competency—All parties interested not represented—Partial competency.

21. Circumstances in which held that a special case was competent in so far as it raised the question of a liferenter's right to immediate payment of the fee of the fund liferented, in respect that there were sufficient contradictors present; but incompetent in so far as it sought—in the event of the liferenter's claim being rejected—to determine the rights of parties in the fund on the termination of the liferent, in respect that the parties who might be interested could not be ascertained until that event happened, and so were not all necessarily represented in the case. Scott's Trustees v. Bruce, p. 105.

Special case—Competency—No real contention between the parties—Trust—Power to sell.

22. A special case, to which the parties were the trustees on a trust-estate and the beneficiaries interested in the estate, was brought to determine a question as to the trustees' power to sell certain heritable subjects, the trustees maintaining that they had no such power, the other parties maintaining that they had. All the parties, however, were agreed that a sale would be expedient. Held that, although there was no real contention between the parties, the special case was competent. Mitchell Innes's Trustees v. Mitchell Innes, p. 228.

Special case—Competency—Insane party—Curator ad litem—Curator bonis.

23. Where the curator ad litem to one of the parties to a special case represented to the Court that the party was insane, and submitted the question whether a curator bonis should not be appointed, the Court found it unnecessary to appoint a curator bonis, and, on the curator ad litem lodging a minute adopting the case on behalf of his ward, allowed the case to proceed. Swan's Trustees v. Swan, p. 273.

Appeal—Summary cause—Printing—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 8.

24. In an appeal in a summary cause to the Court of Session under sec. 8 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, only those portions of the process should be printed to which the Court is entitled to refer. Observations (per Lord Salvesen) as to the portions of the process to which the Court is entitled to refer in such an appeal, and opinion that, as the Sheriff's findings in fact are conclusive, the proof cannot be referred to. Cranston v. Mallow & Lien, p. 112.

Appeal—Competency—Value of cause—Action concluding for interdict and for £50 damages—Question of interdict exhausted prior to appeal—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 28.

25. The pursuers in an action in the Sheriff Court sought to interdict the defenders from interfering with subjects of which the pursuers were tenants, and claimed the sum of £50 in respect of damages. Interim interdict was granted; but before judgment was pronounced on the merits the pursuers' tenancy of the subjects expired. The Sheriff-substitute accordingly recalled the interim interdict; but, on the pecuniary conclusion, found the defenders liable in the sum sued for. Held that, as all that now remained in the action was the pecuniary conclusion which was below the statutory limit, appeal to the Court of Session was incompetent. David Allen & Sons Billposting, Limited, v. Dundee and District Billposting Co., Limited, p. 970.

PROCESS—Continued.

Appeal—Competency—Value of cause—Continuing liability—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 28.

26. An action was raised in the Sheriff Court by a parish that had maintained a person detained in a lunatic asylum against the parish. On her settlement for recovery of £17, 9s. 1d. expended on her maintenance, and for decree ordaining the defenders to free and relieve the pursuers of future expenditure. The only question raised in the action was whether, in the circumstances, the patient was a proper object of parochial relief. During the progress of the action the patient recovered and was discharged. Held that an appeal against the Sheriff's judgment was incompetent in respect that the sum concluded for did not exceed £50, and that there was no question of continuing liability which could exceed that amount. Melrose Parish Council v. Hawick Parish Council, p. 1029.

Appeal—Competency—Sentence in Sheriff Court for breach of interdict—Appeal to Court of Session.

27. A judgment of the Sheriff, imposing a sentence of fine or imprisonment in a petition and complaint for breach of an interdict granted in the Sheriff Court, can competently be appealed to the Court of Session. Maclachlan v. Bruce, p. 440.

Appeal—Competency—Action to determine liability for pauper lunatic—Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857, sec. 78.

28. Held that sec. 78 of the Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857 (which contains a clause making the Sheriff's decision final), only applies to the summary recovery of outlays with regard to pauper lunatics where there is no dispute as to the parties liable to reimburse these, and does not apply to actions brought to determine the liability of parishes inter se for the support of pauper lunatics, and accordingly does not prevent an appeal from the Sheriff to the Court of Session in such actions. Stirling Parish Council v. Dunblane Parish Council, p. 316.

Appeal—Competency—Appeal against order for formation of streets—Appeal on ground that appellant's property not in burgh—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 339.

29. Held that the right of appeal, given by sec. 339 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, to any person aggrieved by any order of the Magistrates made under the Act, is given upon the hypothesis that the property in respect of which the order is made is situated within the burgh, and accordingly that an appeal against an order to form a footway by a person whose ground of objection was that his property was not situated within the burgh was incompetent. Christie v. Magistrates of Leven, p. 678.

Appeal—Competency—Summary removing in Sheriff Court—Refusal of written answers—Discretion of Sheriff—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, First Schedule, Rules 119, 121, 122.

30. In a summary removing in the Sheriff Court the allowance of written answers is a matter for the Sheriff's discretion, and, even where written answers are tendered, a Sheriff is entitled to refuse them and to dispose of the cause summarily, with the effect of excluding review. Thomson v. Bent Colliery Co., Limited, p. 242.

Stated case by Sheriff—Friendly Societies Act, 1896, sec. 68 (7)—Competency of stated case after judgment in inferior Court.

31. Held that a case stated under sec. 68 (7) of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, for the opinion of the Court of Session on a question of law by the court or arbitrator to whom a dispute has been referred under the rules of a friendly society must be stated during the progress of the reference, and cannot be stated after the court or arbitrator has given judgment. Smith v. Scottish Legal Life Assurance Society, p. 611.

PROCESS—Continued.

Stated case by Sheriff—Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 39
 (1) (a)—Closing Order—Competency of stating case after judgment pronounced by the Sheriff.

32. The Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, allows any person aggrieved by a closing order to appeal to the Sheriff, and enacts (sec. 39) that the Sheriff may "at any stage of the proceedings on appeal" state a special case on a question of law for the opinion of the Court. Held that such a case must be stated during the progress of the appeal, and cannot be stated after the Sheriff has given judgment. Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation, p. 300.

Stated case by Sheriff—Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 39
 —Order on Sheriff to state a case—Procedure.

33. In an appeal to the Sheriff under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, against a closing order, the Sheriff, who had allowed a proof, refused to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Session. The appellant thereupon presented a note to the Court under sec. 39 of the Act for an order on the Sheriff to state a case, and appended a list of the questions of law which he desired to have stated. The Court sustained the competency of the note; but, by consent of parties, without ordering the Sheriff to state a case, answered the questions of law in the note, and remitted to the Sheriff to give effect to these answers. Kirkpatrick v. Town-Council of Maxwelltown, p. 288.

Stated case by Sheriff—Extension of burgh boundaries—Adjustment of liabilities—Arbitration by Sheriff—Competency of stating case after findings and allowance of proof—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, sec. 50 (3)—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 96.

34. Objection having been taken to the competency of a special case stated by a Sheriff when adjusting the financial relations between an extended burgh and county on the ground that, not having been stated until after the Sheriff had made certain findings and allowed a proof, it was not timeous, held that the case was timeously presented in respect that, no final judgment having been pronounced, it had been duly presented during the progress of the proceedings. Lanark County Council v. Magistrates of Motherwell, p. 1251.

Small-debt appeal—Review—Small Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, sec. 31—Wilful deviation from statute which prevents substantial justice being done.

35. A small-debt action of multiplepoinding was brought in name of an insurance company by a creditor of a deceased policy-holder, the fund in medio being the sum due under the policy. The summons did not comply with section 10 of the Small Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, which enacts that the "common debtors" shall be cited, the only parties cited being creditors of the deceased. The representatives of the deceased had not confirmed, and were not cited. The Sheriff-substitute, although aware of the fact that the statute had not been complied with, repelled an objection to the competency of the action based on that fact, and pronounced a decree of ranking and payment. Held that an appeal against this interlocutor was competent, as the Sheriff-substitute's intentional disregard of the statute was a deviation therefrom, which had taken place "wilfully," and which also prevented substantial justice from being done in respect that a decree in the action would not afford the insurance company complete exoneration. Britannic Assurance Co., Limited, v. James Henderson, Limited, (J.) p. 31.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Appeal by stated case—Appellant allowed to lodge a condescendence.

36. In an appeal by stated case from the decision of an arbitrator dismissing an application for compensation in respect that the workman had failed relevantly to aver the happening of an accident, the Court permitted the workman to submit a condensation of the specific facts on which he relied, and thereafter allowed it to be received, and remitted to the arbitrator to proceed. M'Laughlin v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 250.

PROCESS—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Appeal by stated case—Order for transmission of process—A. S., 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (f).

37. In an appeal by stated case the Court remitted to the arbitrator for a statement of the facts on which he had based his judgment. The arbitrator having reported, the appellant stated that the evidence in the arbitration had been recorded in shorthand, and moved the Court, in respect of the unsatisfactory nature of the arbitrator's report, to order the process to be transmitted to the Court of Session. The respondent made no objection, and the Court ordered the process to be transmitted. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, p. 37.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—Appeal by stated case—Remit to arbitrator to reconsider his award.

38. In an appeal by way of stated case in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Court, without answering the questions put, remitted the case to the arbitrator to reconsider his award in light of the opinions expressed by the House of Lords in a judgment pronounced after the date of his decision. Weir v. North British Railway Co., p. 1073.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, sec. 1 (4)—Unsuccessful action of damages against employer—Application for assessment of compensation.

39. Observations (per the Lord President) on the character of the proceedings and the scope of the inquiry that will follow on the granting of a motion for the assessment of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, made by a workman who has been unsuccessful in an action for damages. Slavin v. Train & Taylor, p. 754.

Removal to Court of Session for jury trial—Competency—Action of damages by father of deceased workman against son's employers—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, secs. 13 and 14—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, secs. 30 and 52.

40. In an action in the Sheriff Court at the instance of a father, whose son had been accidentally killed, against his son's employers for damages under the Employers Liability Act or alternatively at common law, the pursuer averred that the deceased paid his earnings to his parents for the maintenance of the house. The cause having, on the motion of the pursuer, been remitted to the Court of Session for jury trial under section 30 of the Sheriff Courts Act, 1907, the defenders objected to the competency of the remission on the ground that the pursuer, being a dependant of the deceased, or at anyrate his legal personal representative, was, in virtue of section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a "workman" in the sense of that Act, and that accordingly, by section 14 of that Act, his right to have the cause removed to the Court of Session for jury trial was excluded. Held that although it might be that the right of one in the position of the pursuer to have the cause remitted to the Court of Session had been taken away by sections 13 and 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the right, if taken away, had been restored by sections 30 and 52 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907. Lawrie v. Banknock Coal Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 20.

Remission of cause from Sheriff Court—Action of separation and aliment remitted to Court of Session—Power of Court to send it back to Sheriff—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 5.

41. A Sheriff having, ex proprio motu, remitted an action of separation and aliment to the Court of Session, the Court remitted it back to the Sheriff, holding (1) that the section does not prevent the Court from dealing with a remitted cause as it thinks fit, and in particular sending it back to the Sheriff; and (2) that as the record did not disclose any special difficulty in the case, the Sheriff was not justified in declining to exercise his jurisdiction. Dunbar v. Dunbar, p. 19.

PROCESS—Continued.

See Arrestment—Company, 3—Title to sue and defend—Workmen's Compensation Act, 30.

PROOF. Hearsay—Admissibility—Statements made by deceased person at date when his evidence would not have been admissible.

1. Opinion reserved by the Lord President as to the accuracy of the dicta of Lord Watson and Lord Blackburn in the Dysart Peerage case, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 489, to the effect that if a person at the time of an alleged marriage would not have been a competent witness to speak to the fact of the marriage, it was not possible afterwards to take his hearsay testimony, although, in the meantime, the law had been altered and he had become a competent witness. Deans's Judicial Factor v. Deans, p. 441.

Public and official documents—Regulations for the Territorial Force—Extent to which Regulations prove themselves—Necessity of lodging copy in process—The Army Act, 1881 (as amended by the Annual Army Acts to 1911), sec. 163—The Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, sec. 26 (2).

2. Held that the Regulations for the Territorial Force and for County Associations may be proved by production of a copy purporting to be printed by a Government printer without other evidence; but that the Court does not take judicial notice of the Regulations, and, therefore, that a prosecutor desiring to found on them must lodge a copy in process before closing his case. Todd v. Anderson, (J.) p. 105.

See Process, 9-12, 14—Reparation, 6, 7.

PROPERTY. Building restriction—Exemption of the Crown from statutory restriction—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906, secs. 67 and 78.

1. Observations on the extent to which the Crown is bound by building restrictions contained in local Acts. Magistrates of Edinburgh v. Lord Advocate, p. 1085.

Building restriction—"Villas or dwelling-houses"—Legality of erecting tenements.

2. In a disposition of a plot of building ground the disponent prohibited the erection of houses or buildings "other than villas or dwelling-houses with offices and such enclosing walls as my said disponent may think proper to build." Held that the erection of a tenement of dwelling-houses was not prohibited. Bainbridge v. Campbell, p. 92.

Building restriction—Title and interest of singular successor in dominant tenement to enforce.

3. A proprietor disposed to two purchasers two adjacent portions of his property, the dispositions containing mutual restrictions altius non tollendi imposed on each portion for the benefit of the other. On one of the purchasers proposing to erect buildings on his portion beyond the specified height, the singular successor of the purchaser of the other portion, which was situated ex adverso of the proposed buildings, and was separated therefrom by a distance of 60 feet, objected to the erection. He did not aver that any specific injury would be done to his property if the buildings were erected beyond the specified height. Held that the dispositions had created a servitude altius non tollendi, which the singular successor in the dominant tenement had both a title and, in virtue of the propinquity of his property, an interest to enforce. Proprietors of Royal Exchange Buildings, Glasgow, Limited, v. Cotton, p. 1151.

PROPERTY—Continued.

Building restriction—Superior and Vassal—Buildings to be “occupied as self-contained lodgings.”

4. Certain ground, with buildings thereon, was feued out by a feu-contract which, besides a general nuisance clause against the carrying on of certain specified trades, contained a clause declaring that the feuar “and his foresaids shall be bound and obliged to maintain and uphold in good repair in all time coming on the said three steadings of ground the three lodgings now erected thereon which shall be occupied as self-contained lodgings.” All the restrictions, prohibitions, &c., in the feu-contract were declared to be real burdens affecting the ground and buildings. The proprietor of one of these self-contained houses proposed to convert the basement floor into premises to be occupied for a cabinet-making business (which was not a trade prohibited by the general nuisance clause), by gutting it, and severing it from the upper floors, and giving it a separate entrance. In an action at the instance of the superiors to interdict him from doing so, held that the proposed occupation of the premises was in contravention of the restrictions in the feu-contract, and interdict granted against such occupation. Montgomerie-Fleming’s Trustees v. Kennedy, p. 1307.

Common interest—Pro indiviso ownership—Division of property.

5. A division of heritable subjects proposed by one of three pro indiviso proprietors was resisted by the others on the ground that a bond, which had been granted by the co-proprietors, existed over the subjects, and that the bondholders refused to allocate it in the event of division. The bond contained a provision that £500 should be paid annually towards reduction of the principal sum, and that so long as the interest and this annual payment were made the bond should not be called up or repaid for five years, of which only one had expired. Held that the pursuer was entitled to insist in her common law right to a division, in respect that it did not appear that a division would sacrifice the interests of any of the parties, and that, in entering into the bond, the co-proprietors could not be held to have bound themselves to refrain from resorting to a division during its subsistence. Morrison v. Kirk, p. 44.

See Local Government, 4—Nuisance—Title to Heritage.

PUBLIC HEALTH. Food and Drugs—Sale of milk deficient in fat—Unauthorised sale by servant—Liability of master.

1. In the prosecution of a dairyman for selling, by the hand of his servant, milk which was not genuine, it was proved that the servant who sold the milk had no authority to do so, his duty being merely to deliver milk to his master’s customers. Held that, as the servant had exceeded his authority in selling the milk, there had been no sale by the accused; and that he must, therefore, be acquitted. Lindsay v. Dempster, (J.) p. 110.

Food and Drugs—Genuineness of milk—Milk sold in condition yielded by cow—Deficiency of fat due to method of feeding—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, sec. 6—Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, (1) and (2).

2. In a complaint the offence charged was that of selling “sweet milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality of sweet milk, the article demanded by the purchaser, in respect that” it did not contain the percentage of milk fat and solids required by the Regulations, “contrary to the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, section 6, and to the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901.” It was proved that the milk did not contain the percentage of milk fat and solids required by the Regulations; that it had not been tampered with or adulterated, but had been sold in the same condition as yielded by the cows; and that the deficiency of milk fat and solids was due to the method of feeding, which had been purposely adopted to produce quantity of milk irrespective of quality. Held that the milk was "genuine" and that the accused was not guilty of the offence charged. Scott v. Jack, (J.) p. 87.

PUBLIC HEALTH—Continued.

Possession and sale of food—Seizure of meat erroneously alleged to be unsound—Claim for compensation—Liability of Local Authority—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, secs. 43, 164, 166.

- 3. A veterinary surgeon, approved by the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1897, seized and carried away, under sec. 43 of that Act, meat which appeared to him to be diseased, but which eventually did not prove to have been diseased. The owners of the meat claimed compensation from the local authority for the value of the meat. Held that the local authority were not relieved from liability by virtue of sec. 166 of the Public Health Act, the claim not being a claim of damages for an "irregularity" committed by one of their officers in the sense of that section, but a claim for compensation under sec. 164. Corporation of Glasgow v. Smithfield and Argentine Meat Co., Limited, p. 364.

Claim for compensation against Local Authority under Public Health Act, 1897—Application to Local Government Board for appointment of arbiter—Limitation of time for taking proceedings—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, sec. 166—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, secs. 1, 3.

4. A veterinary surgeon, under sec. 43 of the Public Health Act, 1897, seized and carried away meat which appeared to him to be diseased, but which eventually did not prove to have been diseased. The owners of the meat claimed compensation from the local authority for the value of the meat, and presented an application to the Local Government Board, more than six months after the seizure of the meat, for the appointment of an arbiter to ascertain the compensation due. Held that the proceedings were timeously taken, in respect that this was not the case of an "action or prosecution" for a "wrong" in the sense of sec. 166 of the Public Health Act, which had to be brought within two months, nor of an "action, prosecution, or other proceeding" in the sense of sec. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, which had to be brought within six months. Corporation of Glasgow v. Smithfield and Argentine Meat Co., Limited, p. 364.

Building regulations—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, secs. 4 and 38—"Enclosed space of back ground" in "hollow square."

5. The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38, prohibits the erection of buildings other than those of a specified class "within the enclosed space of back ground in any hollow square," and by sec. 4 defines a hollow square as including certain geometrical figures enclosed by buildings and streets. Circumstances in which the site of proposed buildings was held to be within the enclosed space of back ground in a hollow square. Porter v. Nisbet, p. 400.

Building regulations—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38—Discretion of Dean of Guild to sanction erection of buildings within enclosed space of back ground in hollow square.

6. Held that the effect of sec. 38 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, which prohibits the erection of buildings within the enclosed space of back ground in a hollow square, and which contains a proviso that, where certain requirements are satisfied, the Dean of Guild may grant decree for the erection, was to put it entirely within the discretion of the Dean of Guild, in the case of buildings which satisfied these requirements, to grant or to refuse the lining. Porter v. Nisbet, p. 400.

PUBLIC HEALTH—Continued.

Building regulations—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 38—Statutory prohibition of certain class of buildings—Title of individual objector to plead statutory prohibition.

7. Held that neighbouring proprietors who objected to a petition for lining on the ground that the proposed buildings contravened statutory restrictions, had no title to enforce these restrictions in respect that they had no interest, as their property would not be injuriously affected by the proposed buildings. Maguire v. Smith's Trustees, p. 410.

Building regulations—Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 43—“Back-to-back houses.”

8. In a petition to a Dean of Guild Court for warrant to erect a block of three-storied tenements,—each storey containing four dwelling-houses, two to the front and two to the back—it appeared from the plans produced that in the centre of each tenement there was a space or well containing a common stair which was roofed over, and that all the houses in each tenement entered from this well. It also appeared that in each storey the division between the front and back houses was formed in the centre by the walls enclosing the well, and on each side of the well by an unbroken wall common to the front and back houses. Held that the proposed houses were “back-to-back houses” within the meaning of sec. 43 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, which prohibits the erection of such houses as dwellings for the working classes; and that warrant for their erection fell to be refused. Murrayfield Real Estate Co., Limited, v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 217.

Building regulations—Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, secs. 15 and 17—Closing order—Dwelling-house—Tenement—“Dangerous or injurious to health”—Procedure—Form of order—Warning to owner.

9. A local authority, acting under section 17 (2) of the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, issued, upon a representation by their medical officer, a closing order with regard to a tenement of dwelling-houses, as being, in the words of the statute, a “dwelling-house . . . in a state so dangerous or injurious to health as to be unfit for human habitation.” Held (1) that a tenement of dwelling-houses was a “dwelling-house” in the sense of the Act, and that a closing order was competently issued with regard to a whole tenement generally; (2) that a closing order was competently issued without specifying as between two alternatives, whether the house was “dangerous” or “injurious to health”; (3) that, the closing order being in a statutory form which did not require a statement of the grounds upon which it was issued, non-disclosure of these grounds in the order did not render it inept; (4) that the closing order was competently issued without previous exercise by the local authority of their statutory powers under section 15 to require remedial works, and without affording to the owner of the house an opportunity of being heard. Kirkpatrick v. Town-Council of Maxwelltown, p. 288.

See Sheriff, 10-12.

PUBLIC-HOUSE. See Valuation Acts, 10, 13, 16.

PUBLIC POLICY. Condition in settlement that heirs succeeding to peerage shall denude—Validity.

A clause in a mortis causa disposition of heritage providing that in case any of the heirs succeeding thereunder to certain lands should succeed to a peerage, they should be bound to denude themselves of all right in the lands held not void as against public policy. Earl of Caithness v. Sinclair, p. 79.

PUBLIC POLICY—Continued.

RAILWAY. Negligence in relation to public—Sparks from engine—Improper construction—Negligent use.

1. In an action of damages against a railway company the pursuer averred that the driver of an engine, while passing a platform, put on steam carelessly, unnecessarily, and unskilfully, in such volume that large quantities of live cinders and soot were driven from the funnel and injured the bystanders. He also averred that the defenders or their servants were in fault in not having the funnel properly cleaned and in not having a cage at the mouth. Averments which were held not to disclose a relevant case of improper construction, but to disclose a relevant case of improper use, of the engine. Gray v. Caledonian Railway Co., p. 339.

Carriage of goods at reduced rates—Liability excluded except for “wilful misconduct”—Breach of regulations—Failure of railway servants to gauge load.

2. A railway company contracted to convey the plant of a switchback railway at a special reduced rate, one of the conditions of the contract being that the proprietor of the goods should relieve the company of all liability except for damage arising from the “wilful misconduct” of the company’s servants. One of the company’s regulations directed that all loads must be gauged “when there is any reason to doubt that they are not within the dimensions” specified for the lines over which they have to travel. The stationmaster at the station of departure did not gauge the load, but merely judged the height of it with his eye and concluded that it did not exceed the dimensions. In this, however, he was mistaken, and part of the load, in the course of transit, came in contact with the smoke-board of a bridge beneath which the train was passing, and was damaged. Held that the damage was due to “wilful misconduct” of the station-master, for which the company was liable. Bastable v. North British Railway Co., p. 555.

See Burgh, 10, 11—Compulsory Powers, 1—Reparation, 16.

RATES AND ASSESSMENTS. See Burgh, 1, 2—Local Government, 2—Title to sue and defend, 6, 7—Valuation Acts, 3.

RECONVENTION. See Jurisdiction, 1.

REDUCTION. See Fraud, 1, 2.

RENT. See Contract, 1—Sale, 6.

REPARATION. Premises let for specific business—Business interfered with by operations carried on by landlord on adjoining premises.

1. The top flat of an urban tenement was let to a tenant for the purposes of a photographic business. During the tenancy the proprietor of the tenement carried out alterations upon the lower flats which necessitated extensive building operations, and these caused structural and other damage in the top flat and interference with and detriment to the tenant’s business. Held that, while the landlord was admittedly bound to restore the structural damage done to the tenant’s premises, he was also liable in damages (1) for injury done to the tenant’s furniture and materials; (2) for injury to his business during the work of restoration; and (3) for injury to his business during the landlord’s building operations, but only in so far as this was due to physical and tangible injury to the premises (as from vibration or dust), and not where it was immaterial or temporary (as from noise or occasional obstruction to the access). Huber v. Ross, p. 898.

REPARATION—Continued.

Wrongous Apprehension—Police-Constable—Privilege—Issue—Whether malice and want of probable cause to be put in issue.

2. In an action of damages for wrongful apprehension, directed against two police-constables who had apprehended the pursuer without a warrant, the Court held that, in the circumstances of the case, it was unnecessary to insert malice and want of probable cause in the issue, in respect that the pursuer's averments disclosed a case of such wrongful and unreasonable conduct on the part of the defenders that their actings could not be regarded as privileged. Harvey v. Sturgeon, p. 974.

Malicious prosecution—Private prosecutor—Want of probable cause—Slander—Privilege—Sufficiency of averments of malice.

3. The pursuer, a wholesale bottler, received a letter from the solicitors of the defenders, a firm of brewers, stating that certain stout, which had been sold by him as their stout, had proved on analysis to be of lower original gravity than the stout manufactured by them, owing to adulteration by the pursuer. The pursuer having repudiated the charge, the defenders, with the concurrence of the Procurator-fiscal, prosecuted him for an offence against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. In the trial which followed the pursuer was acquitted. In an action of damages for slander and malicious prosecution, founded on the letter and prosecution respectively, the pursuer averred that the defenders had acted maliciously, recklessly, and without making a sufficient investigation into the facts of the case; that the tests applied by them to the stout in question had been inadequate; and that they had failed to allow him an opportunity of checking their analysis of it. Held (1) that the pursuer was not entitled to an issue of malicious prosecution, as the defenders were privileged in their action and there were no facts set forth from which malice and want of probable cause could be inferred; and (2) that he was not entitled to an issue on the letter, as it merely led up to, and formed a step in, the prosecution. Chalmers v. Barclay, Perkins, & Co., Limited, p. 521.

Slander—Innuendo—Failure to aver facts and circumstances supporting innuendo.

4. In an action of damages for slander the pursuer founded on a sentence taken from a letter written by the defender, and innuendoed it as charging him with a fraudulent attempt to obtain money. In his record he did not state any facts and circumstances to substantiate the innuendo, nor did he quote any part of the letter except the single sentence complained of. The Court refused an issue on the ground (1) that the sentence complained of was not prima facie slanderous, and (2) that the pursuer was not entitled to an opportunity of proving facts and circumstances which would give to that sentence a slanderous meaning without specifically averring them, and without producing the rest of the letter. Smith v. Walker, p. 224.

Slander—Slander of a class—Title of individuals to sue—Innuendo—Province of jury.

5. A newspaper published an article on Ireland stating that in Queenstown instructions were issued by the Roman Catholic religious authorities that all Protestant shop assistants should be discharged, and that a shopkeeper who had refused so to act had had his shop proclaimed and had been forced to close it. An action was brought by the Roman Catholic Bishop at Queenstown and six of his clergy (who averred that they were the Roman Catholic religious authorities referred to), in which they, suing as individuals, sought to recover separate sums of damages on account of the accusations in the article. The article was innuendoed as charging the pursuers with abusing their religious influence to procure the indiscriminate dismissal of Protestant shop assistants, and with ruining a shop-keeper's business. Held (1) that the pursuers were entitled to sue for damages as individuals; (2) that it was for the jury to determine whether they or any of them were the Roman Catholic religious authorities referred to; and (3) that the article could bear the slanderous meaning put upon it. Browne v. Thomson & Co., p. 359.

REPARATION—Continued.

Slander—Slander uttered in foreign language—Proof—Innuendo.

6. Where the words complained of in an action of slander have been uttered in a foreign language, not only must they be set forth on record as spoken in that language, but their English equivalent must be set forth in the same way as an innuendo is set forth, and the pursuer must prove (first) that the words were actually spoken, and (second) that their English equivalent is that which he avers. Bernhardt v. Abrahams, p. 748.

Slander—Proof—Innuendo—Innuendo not proved by witnesses.

7. The pursuer in an action of slander put in issue a private letter, which he innuendoed as accusing him of dishonesty and which he alleged had been shown by the defender to three persons. The Court set aside a verdict of a jury for the pursuer, and ordered a new trial, on the ground that the innuendo had not been put to any of these persons, and that none of them had testified that he considered that the letter contained an accusation of dishonesty. Bernhardt v. Abrahams, p. 748.

Slander—Trade Slander—Representation that person is unworthy of commercial credit—Privilege—Malice—Trade Protection Society.

8. A local association of traders issued to its members a list of the names and addresses of certain persons in the district. The list bore no title and contained no comment, but it was admittedly compiled from the "black lists." A person brought an action of damages for slander against the association, in which he averred that the list was known in the district as the "black list," and that the defenders by inserting his name in it had represented that he was unworthy of business credit. The Court held (1) that the publication of the pursuer's name was defamatory; but (2) that the defenders were privileged; and, as facts inferring malice were not averred, dismissed the action. Barr v. Musselburgh Merchants Association, p. 174.

Negligence—Explosion of naphtha vapour in private yard—Failure to specify cause.

9. A boy, seven years of age, was killed by the explosion of a barrel containing naphtha vapour, which was standing on a lorry in a ship-building yard. The Court dismissed an action of damages by the boy's father against the owners of the yard as being in the circumstances irrelevant, in respect that the pursuer had failed to specify in what way the defenders were responsible for the proximate cause of the accident, namely, the ignition of the vapour. Howie v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., Limited, p. 1225.

Negligence—Faulty construction of tramway car.

10. In an action of damages for personal injuries brought against a tramway company, the pursuer averred that when she was standing close to a passing tramway car her dress was caught by a stay that projected beneath the car between the front and rear wheels, whereby she was thrown down, and run over and injured. She averred that the accident was due to the faulty construction of the car, in respect that there were no guards covering the space between the front and rear wheels, a precaution that was reasonable and practicable, and almost universally adopted by other car systems. Held that the pursuer's averments disclosed a relevant case of faulty construction. Gibb v. Edinburgh and District Tramways Co., Limited, p. 580.

REPARATION—Continued.

Negligence—Accident caused by defective footway—Disused railway embankment in burgh area frequented by public—Responsibility of magistrates—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 4 (31)—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 104 (2) (c).

11. In an action against the Magistrates of a burgh the pursuer claimed damages for personal injuries resulting from a fall sustained by him at a place within the area of the burgh, which he described as a "promenade" and a public thoroughfare within the jurisdiction and under the control of the defenders. He averred that the defenders had neglected a duty of keeping the place in a condition of safety for the public. The place in question was an embankment situated between a public railway and the seashore; it belonged to a private owner, and with his tacit consent it was frequented by the public, for whose convenience the Magistrates had provided seats. Held that the place in question being neither a street in the ordinary sense of the term, nor a public street or public footpath within the meaning of the Burgh Police Acts, the defenders were under no obligation to keep it in a safe condition; and defenders assolzie'd. Taylor v. Magistrates of Saltcoats, p. 880.

Negligence—Accident caused by defective pavement—Opening in pavement covered by metal disc—Liability of proprietor of disc—Liability of road authority—Aberdeen Police and Water-Works Act, 1862, secs. 307, 323, and 344—Aberdeen Municipality Extension Act, 1871, sec. 143.

12. A woman, while walking on the foot-pavement of a public street placed her foot on a metal disc in the pavement covering an opening into a cellar, with the result that the disc tilted and her leg was injured. The tilting was due to the worn condition of the bevel in the flagstone of the pavement on which the disc rested. The disc was the property of P. & W., and the opening which it covered led into their cellar. Under certain local Acts P. & W. were bound to keep the covering in repair, but the pavement was vested in the Town-Council, and could not be altered without their consent. Held (1) that the Town-Council, being bound to keep the pavement in a safe condition for the public, and having failed to do so, were liable; but (2) that P. & W. were not liable as they could not interfere with the pavement. Laing v. Paull & Williamsons, p. 196.

Negligence—Collision of vehicles—Side road entering main road—Duties of drivers on side road and main road respectively.

13. While it is the duty of vehicles approaching a main road from a side road to give way to vehicles on the main road, this rule does not absolve vehicles on the main road from the duty of approaching the entrance to the side road with caution. Robertson v. Wilson, p. 1276.

Negligence—Flooding of agricultural land in burgh—Action against magistrates as drainage and road authority.

14. The tenant of a market garden on the estate of Craigentenny, which was annexed to the burgh of Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, brought an action against the Magistrates of Edinburgh (a) as the drainage authority (b) as the road authority, for damages caused to his garden by the overflowing of the Craigentenny burn. Circumstances in which the Court assolzie'd the defenders. Hanley v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 1199.

Negligence—Sparks from engine—Improper construction—Negligent use.

15. In an action of damages against a railway company the pursuer averred that the driver of the engine of a train, while passing a platform, put on steam carelessly, unnecessarily, and unskilfully, in such volume that large quantities of live cinders and soot were driven from the funnel and injured the bystanders. He also averred that the defenders or their servants were in fault in not having the funnel properly cleaned, and in not having a cage at its mouth. Averments which were held not to disclose a relevant case of improper construction, but to disclose a relevant case of improper use, of the engine. Gray v. Caledonian Railway Co., p. 339.

REPARATION—Continued.

Negligence—Railway—Private dock—Shunting operations inside dock—Duty to close dock gates or give warning.

16. In a dock owned by a railway company three lines of rails connecting the quays with the main railway system crossed the road leading into the dock on the level at a point inside and opposite the dock gate. A seaman entered the dock by the gate, which was open, and attempted to pass between two wagons which were standing on the crossing. While he was doing so the wagons were shunted, and he was caught between the buffers and injured. Held that there was no duty on the railway company either to shut the gate or to give warning before beginning to shunt the wagons. Clark v. North British Railway Co., p. 1.

Negligence—Carriage of goods—"Wilful misconduct"—Overloaded wagon—Breach of regulations—Failure of railway servants to gauge load.

17. A railway company contracted to convey the plant of a switchback railway at a special reduced rate, one of the conditions of the contract being that the proprietor of the goods should relieve the company of all liability except for damage arising from the "wilful misconduct" of the company's servants. One of the company's regulations directed that all loads must be gauged "when there is any reason to doubt that they are not within the dimensions" specified for the lines over which they have to travel. The station-master at the station of departure did not gauge the load, but merely judged the height of it with his eye and concluded that it did not exceed the dimensions. In this, however, he was mistaken, and part of the load, in the course of transit, came in contact with the smoke-board of a bridge beneath which the train was passing, and was damaged. Held that the damage was due to "wilful misconduct" of the station-master, for which the company was liable. The legal meaning of "wilful misconduct" considered. Bastable v. North British Railway Co., p. 555.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Management of mine—Responsibilities of owners—Competency of officials—Breach of statutory duty—Common employment—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 49.

18. An action of damages at common law or under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, was brought against the owners of a pit by the representatives of a miner who had lost his life through inhaling carbon-monoxide gas. The managers and fireman were possessed of the qualifications and experience usually required of persons holding these offices, but were unfamiliar with the indications of this gas, which is of rare occurrence in mines. Although such indications were present they did not detect them, and consequently failed to comply with the rules imposed by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, as to inspecting and reporting and withdrawing workmen when dangerous gas is present. The defenders, who admitted that the accident was due to the breach of these rules on the part of their managers and fireman, maintained that, so far as the action was laid at common law, they were not liable. Held that the defenders could not plead common employment but were liable at common law, in respect that (as it was proved that they had failed to secure that the persons in charge of the mine were competent to deal with the dangers arising from the presence of poisonous gas), they had been guilty of a breach of the duty imposed on them of taking all practicable steps to secure observance of the statutory rules. Black v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 33.

REPARATION—Continued.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Common Law—Employers Liability Act, 1880—Casual danger—Danger emerging in course of work.

19. A father brought an action of damages at common law and alternatively under the Employers Liability Act, in respect of his son's death, against a firm of shipbuilders in whose employment his son was killed. He averred that his son was employed on the deck of a vessel in course of construction to pick up from the deck and throw over the side the parings of red-hot rivets which fell from riveters who were working above; that in the performance of this duty he had to run quickly from place to place; and that in so doing he slipped, fell from the deck (which was unfenced), and was killed. He further averred that the footing on the deck was uncertain, and that on the occasion in question it had been rendered slippery by a recent shower of rain; that a reasonable and usual precaution for the safety of workmen was to erect a temporary fence at a place of this kind; and that the defenders and their foreman had known of the danger to which the workmen were exposed and had negligently failed to take this precaution. The Court, holding that the danger averred was a casual danger emerging in course of the work, dismissed the action as laid at common law as irrelevant, but allowed an issue under the Employers Liability Act. M'Millan v. Barclay, Curle, & Co., Limited, p. 263.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Action laid alternatively at common law or under the Employers Liability Act—Pleadings—Necessity of discriminating between grounds of claim.

20. In an action brought in the Sheriff Court by a father against a colliery company, concluding for damages at common law or alternatively under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, in respect of the death of his son, who was killed while in the employment of the defenders, the pursuer averred a defective condition of the defenders' works, but did not discriminate between the two grounds of claim. Held that the pursuer's averments were relevant, in respect that they disclosed and gave notice of what was a good ground of claim either at common law or under the Act. Campbell v. United Collieries, Limited, p. 182.

Negligence—Ship—Damage to ship in course of discharge—Liability of charterers—Negligence of stevedores engaged and paid, but not controlled, by charterers.

21. In an action brought by the owners against the charterers of a ship for damages in respect of injury received by the ship during the discharge of the cargo, the pursuers averred that the defenders were liable, in respect that they had employed and paid the stevedores and the owners of a crane engaged in the discharge, by whose negligence the injury was caused. Held that, as it was not averred that the defenders had undertaken the control of the discharge of the cargo, the pursuers had failed to set forth a relevant case; and action dismissed. Ballantyne & Co. v. Paton & Hendry, p. 246.

Negligence—Public Hospital—Unskilful treatment of patient—Responsibility of governing body—Contract.

22. Apart from special contract the managers of a public hospital are not responsible to the patients whom they receive (whether paying or non-paying) for unskilful or negligent medical treatment, provided they have exercised due care in the selection of a competent staff. Circumstances in which a special contract was held not sufficiently averred. Foote v. Directors of Greenock Hospital, p. 69.

REPARATION—Continued.Contributory negligence—Disclosure in pursuer's pleadings.

23. A pursuer in an action of damages in respect of the death of his son, who was killed while working in a coal-pit, averred that the lad, his lamp having become extinguished, continued to advance towards the place of his work on the face, and in doing so stepped on an unfenced piece of machinery in motion, and sustained the injuries from which he died. Averments which were held not to disclose such a clear case of contributory negligence as to disentitle the pursuer to a proof. Campbell v. United Collieries, Limited, p. 183.

See Minor and Pupil.

REVENUE. Settlement estate-duty—Incidence—Obligation by father to pay sum to his son's marriage-contract trustees—Marriage-contract fund settled—Succession—Parties liable for settlement estate-duty—Finance Act, 1894, sec. 5 (1)—Finance Act, 1896, sec. 19 (1).

1. Held that when a father becomes a party to the marriage-settlement of a child, and covenants to pay at his death a certain sum to the marriage-contract trustees, the settlement estate-duty on that sum falls to be borne by the marriage-contract trustees, and not by the father's executors. Dundas' Trustees v. Dundas' Trustees, p. 375.

Income-tax—Trade "exercised within the United Kingdom"—Income-Tax Act, 1853, sec. 2, Sched. D.

2. A firm of manufacturers of yarns in Belgium employed as agents for the sale of their yarns in the United Kingdom a firm of yarn merchants and commission agents in Glasgow. The agents submitted the offers of intending purchasers to the Belgian firm for approval, and, after approval, entered into contracts on their behalf. The goods were consigned to the agents, by whom they were invoiced to the customers, and by whom payment was received and accounts discharged on behalf of the Belgian firm. Monthly account sales and quarterly statements of expenses and commission were rendered by the agents to the firm. Held that the Belgian firm exercised a trade within the United Kingdom in the sense of sec. 2, Schedule D, of the Income-Tax Act, 1853. Macpherson & Co. v. Inland Revenue, p. 1315.

Income-tax—Profits of trade—Deductions—Interest payable on short loans—Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 100, Schedule D, First Case.

3. A financial and investment company obtained from bankers in New York sums on temporary and fluctuating loan for periods not exceeding six months in order to pay for securities purchased by it. In stating its profit for the purpose of income-tax the company claimed to deduct the interest paid on these loans, but the Commissioners, being of opinion that the sums borrowed were utilised as additional capital, disallowed the deduction. Held that the company were entitled to make the deduction, in respect that the sums borrowed were not "capital" within the meaning of the Income-Tax Acts, and the interest was in fact money paid for the hire of the instrument of the company's trade, and as such fell to be treated like any other similar outlay. Scottish North American Trust, Limited, v. Inland Revenue, (H. L.) p. 26.

Income-tax—Interest on foreign investments—Sums "received in Great Britain in the current year"—Interest reinvested abroad in purchase of bonds—Bonds transmitted to this country—Sale of bonds in this country in a subsequent year—Sum realised from sale—Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 100, Sched. D, Case IV.

4. The interest derived in 1907 from the American investments of a Scottish insurance company was reinvested in America in bearer bonds, and the bonds were transmitted to this country in the same year. The bonds were afterwards sold, and the proceeds of the sale were received at the head office in August and October 1908. Held that the sums realised on the sale of the bonds being sums "received in Great Britain" in respect of interest on foreign securities within the meaning of sec. 100 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, were chargeable with income-tax for the year in which the proceeds of the sales were received, although the interest had in fact been earned prior to that year. Scottish Provident Institution v. Inland Revenue, p. 452.

REVENUE—Continued.

Income-tax—Deductions for wear and tear—Unexhausted deductions—Purchase of old company by new company—Right of new company to unexhausted deductions—Finance Act, 1907, sec. 26 (3).

5. A new company having purchased as a going concern the business of an old company was assessed for income-tax on the average profits of the old company for the three years preceding the purchase. The amount of deductions for wear and tear to which the old company was entitled during these three years had not been given effect to in full, owing to the fact that they exceeded the amount of the taxable income of the old company during that time. Held that the new company was entitled to deduct from its taxable income the balance of the deductions allowable to the old company. Scottish Shire Line, Limited, v. Inland Revenue, p. 1108.

Super-tax—Deductions—Farming losses—Losses not claimed as deductions from income-tax—Deductions not claimed within six months—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, sec. 66 (2)—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, sec. 23 (1).

6. Held that a taxpayer, in making a return of his income of the previous year for the purposes of the super-tax, was entitled to claim as deductions losses sustained in husbandry, although these losses had not been claimed as deductions from his income-tax, and although his claim was not made within six months after the year of assessment. Hill v. Inland Revenue, p. 1246.

Corporation duty—Exemptions—Funds applied to charitable purposes—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, sec. 11.

7. The Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Scotland held and administered by means of committees three benevolent and annuity funds, which were kept separate from the general funds of the body and were appropriated entirely to benevolent purposes. These funds were derived from grants given by Grand Lodge, from contributions by members of Grand Lodge, from a proportion of the fees for intrants paid by daughter lodges, and from voluntary donations and subscriptions by lodges and by individuals. The funds were administered for the relief of distress among freemasons and their relatives and dependants; the relief given being entirely within the discretion of the committees, and no one having any legal right to participate in the benefits of the funds. Held that the funds were not benefit or provident funds, but were appropriated to charitable purposes within the meaning of sec. 11 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1885, and were accordingly exempt from corporation duty. Grand Lodge of Freemasons v. Inland Revenue, p. 1064.

Duties on land values—Valuation—"Assessable site value"—Minus value—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, sec. 25 (4).

8. Held that under sec. 25 (4) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the "assessable site value" of land can never be a minus quantity. Herbert's Trustees v. Inland Revenue, p. 948.

Duties on land values—Provisions as to minerals—Meaning of expression "minerals"—Felsite whinstone—Granite—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, secs. 20, 22, 24.

9. Held that all substances obtained from the crust of the earth, other than the surface soil, by mining, quarrying, or open working are minerals in the sense of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, with the exception of those substances expressly excepted in the Act; and accordingly that Felsite whinstone and granite, not being among the excepted substances, were minerals, and subject to mineral rights duty. Anstruther's Trustees v. Inland Revenue, and Paton v. Inland Revenue, p. 1165.

REVENUE—Continued.

RIGHT IN SECURITY. Bond and disposition in security—Creditor in possession by consent of insolvent debtor—Power to grant lease—Agreement between proprietor and tenant affecting the subjects—Rights and liabilities of bondholder—Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, sec. 6.

1. In 1908 a company disposed certain heritable subjects to a bank in security for an overdraft, for which three of its directors were made personally liable. In May 1909 the company granted a five years' lease of a shop, forming part of the subjects, to an auctioneer, and in July, in respect of a payment by him of a small sum down, undertook by letter not to let, during the currency of the lease, an adjoining shop, also forming part of the subjects, to any person carrying on an auctioneer's business. In 1910, the company being unable to repay the overdraft, payment was made by the directors, who got from the bank an assignation of the bond, and intimated to the company that they intended to enter into possession of the subjects and collect the rents through certain factors. The company thereafter passed a resolution that it should be left to these factors to collect the rents for behoof of the assignees, and notified the tenants to that effect. In 1911 the factors let the adjoining shop for a year to another auctioneer for the purposes of his business. In an action in which the tenant under the earlier lease sought to interdict the assignees from granting the later lease, the Court refused interdict, holding (1) that the company's undertaking was not binding upon the bank, the original bondholder, and therefore was not binding on the bank's assignees; (2) that the latter were in the position of heritable creditors in possession, and as such were entitled to grant the lease in question. Mackenzie v. Imlay's Trustees, p. 685.

Pledge—Transfer of Property—Delivery-Order—Appropriation of goods—Sale—Reduction—Holder for value and in good faith.

2. A, by means of fraudulent misrepresentations as to his solvency, induced the owner of a cargo of timber to sell it to him. He accepted bills for the price, and in return received the bill of lading blank endorsed. The timber, on delivery, was stored with a firm of timber measurers subject to A's orders. A borrowed money from certain lenders (one of whom was aware that A was in great financial difficulties), and in security therefor he granted to the lenders delivery-orders for certain parcels of the timber. Shortly afterwards A became bankrupt. The sale, on the ground of A's fraud, was subsequently reduced at the instance of the unpaid vendor, who claimed the whole of the timber as being still his property. Claims were also made by the holders of the delivery-orders to the portions of timber covered by these orders. The First Division held (1) that the holders of the delivery-orders had obtained them for value and in good faith; (2) that the timber transferred by the delivery-orders had been sufficiently identified and appropriated to the transferees; and (3) that consequently the holders of the delivery-orders had acquired a valid title to the timber good against the unpaid vendor. In an appeal the House affirmed that judgment, with a variation as to a small portion of the timber, consisting of 300 logs, which the House held, on the evidence, had not been sufficiently identified and appropriated to the transferees. Price & Pierce, Limited, v. Bank of Scotland, (H. L.) p. 19.

See Company, l—Ship, 1.

ROAD. See Burgh, 6—Justiciary Cases, 11—Reparation, 12, 13.

SALE. Hire-purchase agreement—Character of instalments—Appropriation of instalments as between capital and interest.

1. An agreement for the hire-purchase of certain furniture had endorsed on it an inventory of the furniture hired with cash prices annexed, the summation of which amounted to £7543. The agreement stipulated for payment by the hirer of annual sums of varying amount, the total of which was £8649; and further provided that the hirer might at any time become the purchaser of the furniture "by payment in cash of the hereon endorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners." The hirer, who had in the course of several years paid in terms of the agreement sums amounting in cumulo to £4966, desiring to become the purchaser of the furniture, tendered to the owners the sum of £2577, being the difference between the sums so paid and £7543, the "endorsed price." On a construction of the agreement, held that the expression "whole sums previously paid" must refer to the portion of the sums paid attributable to capital, to the exclusion of the portion attributable to interest; and, accordingly, that the purchaser was not entitled to become the purchaser of the furniture on payment of the sum tendered. Taylor v. Wylie & Lochhead, Limited, p. 978.

Sale under warranty—Horse—Rejection.

2. A horse was sold with a warranty that it was a good worker and sound in wind, and the purchasers bargained that they should have a week's trial. Held that the contract was one of sale under warranty and not one of sale on approbation, and accordingly that the purchasers were entitled to reject the horse within the week if it was disconform to the warranty, but not otherwise. Cranston v. Mallow & Lien, p. 112.

Rescission—Error as to substance of articles sold—Modern imitations of antique furniture.

3. A dealer in modern and antique furniture sold to a customer ten ribbon-backed chairs, which he described in a receipt for part payment of the price as a "set of antique mahogany chairs," but which proved not to be genuine antiques, but to be modern imitations. The price stipulated was a fair price for the articles actually sold. The seller gave no history of the chairs or guarantee that they were antique, but he made certain representations, held not to be fraudulent, which induced the buyer to believe that he was buying a set of old chairs. Circumstances where held that there had been such misrepresentation as to the substance of the articles sold as to entitle the buyer to rescind the contract. Edgar v. Hector, p. 348.

Sale of moveables—Transference of property—Sale of growing timber—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, secs. 17, 18, and 62.

4. The heir in possession of an entailed estate entered into a contract, constituted by offer and acceptance, with a firm of wood merchants for the sale to them of certain lots of standing timber on the estate, under the condition that the purchasers should themselves cut down and remove the timber, half the price to be paid within six days of the acceptance and the remainder when half the timber was cut, and the timber to be at the purchasers' risk from the date of acceptance. The heir died before all the timber was cut. Held, in a question between the purchasers and the succeeding heir that—even assuming the growing timber to be "goods" in the sense of sec. 62 of the Sale of Goods Act—the property therein had not passed in virtue of the provisions of that Act, in respect that this was not a contract for the immediate sale of timber in a deliverable state, but was merely a personal contract to allow the purchaser to cut and remove the timber. Morison v. A. & D. F. Lockhart, p. 1017.

SALE—Continued.

Sale of heritage—Disposition—Prior articles of sale.

5. Articles of sale for the sale of a heritable estate contained certain conditions as to the rights of the purchaser and the seller respectively in the rents. A sale was effected in terms of the articles, and was followed by a disposition which contained an assignation of rents in the statutory form. Held that the rights of parties in the rents were regulated by the terms of the disposition to the exclusion of the conditions contained in the articles of sale. Butter v. Foster, p. 1218.

Sale of heritage—Assignation of rents—Legal and conventional terms—Pastoral farm—Mansion-house and shootings—Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 8, Sched. B. No. 1.

6. A landed estate, consisting of a mansion-house and shootings and farms, was sold with entry at Martinmas 1910, and the disposition contained an assignation of rents in the statutory form. A hill or sheep farm on the estate had been let in 1895 on a lease which was still current. The lease provided for entry at Whitsunday 1895 as to the houses, yards, hill pasture, and natural grass, and also provided for payment of the rent at two terms in the year, beginning the first term's payment at Whitsunday 1896. The mansion-house and shootings had been let for the year 1910, the rent being payable one-half on 1st January 1910 and the other half on 1st July 1910. Questions having arisen between the purchaser and the seller as to the apportionment between them of the rents, held (1) with regard to the farm—that the rent conventionally payable at Martinmas 1911 was legally due at Martinmas 1910 for the crop up to that date, and so fell to the seller. Held (2) with regard to the mansion-house and shootings—that the rent must be regarded as running de die in diem, and, accordingly, that the seller must pay to the purchaser the portion of the half year's rent, received on 1st July 1910, that effeired to the period from 11th November to 31st December 1910. Butter v. Foster, p. 1218.

See Justiciary Cases, 15-17—Right in Security, 2.

SERVICE OF HEIRS. Prescription.

Observations on the effect of a decree of service as the foundation for a prescriptive title. Duke of Argyll v. Campbell, p. 458.

SERVITUDE. Altius non tollendi—Title and interest of singular successor in dominant tenement to enforce.

A proprietor disposed to two purchasers two adjacent portions of his property, the dispositions containing mutual restrictions altius non tollendi imposed on each portion for the benefit of the other. On one of the purchasers proposing to erect buildings on his portion beyond the specified height, the singular successor of the purchaser of the other portion, which was situated ex adverso of the proposed buildings, and was separated therefrom by a distance of 60 feet, objected to the erection. He did not aver that any specific injury would be done to his property if the buildings were erected beyond the specified height. Held that the dispositions had created a servitude altius non tollendi, which the singular successor in the dominant tenement had both a title and, in virtue of the propinquity of his property, an interest to enforce. Proprietors of Royal Exchange Buildings, Glasgow, Limited, v. Cotton, p. 1151.

SET OFF. See Compensation.

SETTLEMENT ESTATE-DUTY. See Revenue, 1.

SHERIFF. Jurisdiction—Furthcoming—Arrestee subject to the jurisdiction—Whether jurisdiction must be founded against common debtor—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 6, subsec. (g).

1. Held, in construing sec. 6, subsec. (g) of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, that an action of furthcoming may competently proceed in the Sheriff Court if the arrestee is subject to the jurisdiction, without the necessity of founding jurisdiction against the common debtor. Observations as to the necessity of intimating to the common debtor that decree of furthcoming is being asked for. Leggat Brothers v. Gray, p. 230.

Defences—Documents challengeable ope exceptionis—"Deed or writing"—Decree of Court—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, First Schedule, Rule 50.

2. Held that a decree of Court pronounced in foro was not "a deed or writing" in the sense of rule 50 of the First Schedule to the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, and accordingly could not be objected to ope exceptionis in a Sheriff Court action. Leggat Brothers v. Gray, p. 230.

Expenses—Debate Fee—Attendance Fee—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, General Regulations VI., and Table of Fees, cap. 1, 12 (1), and 15 (2).

3. Expenses were awarded as between agent and client in an action which had been debated before the Sheriff-substitute and Sheriff for eleven and twenty-three hours respectively. The successful party in moving for the allowance of higher debate fees asked, as an alternative, that he should be found entitled to an attendance fee at ten shillings per hour, which would have amounted to more than the higher debate fees asked for. Held that the alternative proposal could not be entertained. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Expenses—Skilled witnesses—Certification—Time for application—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, Table of Fees, cap. X. 5 (b).

4. A successful respondent in an appeal from the Sheriff to the Court of Session to whom expenses were awarded, held not to be entitled to include therein charges for the services of skilled witnesses in a proof before the Sheriff-substitute not certified by him, on the ground that the motion for certification, not having been made to the judge who heard the case and within the time allowed by the Act of Sederunt, could not be entertained in the Court of Session. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Expenses—Counsel—Higher Debate Fee—Certification—Time for application—Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, General Regulations VI., and Table of Fees, cap. 1, 16.

5. A motion for a higher debate fee or for the sanction of counsel should be made to the Judge who heard the cause; and, although it is not incompetent to delay the motion until the case is before the Sheriff on appeal or before the Court of Session, in such circumstances it will only be granted if it is shown, not only that the application is well founded, but also that there is very good reason why the motion has not been made before. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

Expenses—Taxation as between agent and client—Application of provisions of Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1 (b).

6. In a Sheriff Court action against a public authority the defenders were successful, and, in terms of sec. 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, were awarded expenses to be taxed as between agent and client. Held that, as the provisions of the Act of Sederunt, 10th April 1908, regulating fees in the Sheriff Court, applied to taxation as between agent and client as well as to taxation as between party and party, the defenders could not recover charges for the employment of skilled witnesses which had not been certified by the Sheriff as required by the Act of Sederunt. Reid v. North Isles District Committee of County Council of Orkney, p. 627.

SHERIFF—Continued.

Recovery of statutory penalty—Summary application—Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836, secs. 2, 18, and 22—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, sec. 4.

7. Proceedings for the recovery of penalties under the Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836, must be brought under the forms of the Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908, and not in the form of an ordinary action in the Sheriff Court. Glasgow Goldsmiths Company v. Mackenzie & Co., p. 992.

Action of separation and aliment—Cause remitted to Court of Session—Power of Court to send it back to Sheriff—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 5.

8. A Sheriff having, ex proprio motu, remitted an action of separation and aliment to the Court of Session under sec. 5 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, the Court remitted it back to the Sheriff, holding (1) that the section does not prevent the Court from dealing with a remitted cause as it thinks fit, and in particular sending it back to the Sheriff; and (2) that as the record did not disclose any special difficulty in the case, the Sheriff was not justified in declining to exercise his jurisdiction. Dunbar v. Dunbar, p. 19.

Arbitration—Summary application to appoint arbiter—Preliminary question involving a proof—Competency of summary procedure—Arbitration (Scotland) Act, 1894—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, sec. 3 (p).

9. One of the parties to a contract for the sale of oil, under which disputes were referred to "arbitration in Glasgow," presented a petition in the Sheriff Court, under the Arbitration (Scotland) Act, 1894, for the appointment of an arbiter, and averred that the expression quoted imported into the reference clause a custom of the oil trade in Glasgow by which each party nominated an arbiter, and the arbiters an oversman. The other party to the contract maintained that the reference to arbitration was not sufficiently specific to come within the scope of the Arbitration Act, 1894. The proceedings were conducted in the Sheriff Court under the rules prescribed by the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, for summary applications, and the Sheriff, having allowed a proof of the custom averred, granted leave to appeal against his interlocutor. Held that, in view of the questions which had arisen, the case was inappropriate for summary procedure; and cause remitted to the Sheriff to be transferred to the ordinary Court. United Creameries Co., Limited, v. Boyd & Co., p. 617.

Appeal against closing order under Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 39 (1) (a)—Refusal of Sheriff to order condescendence and answers—Act of Sederunt, 4th November 1910—Public Health.

10. An appeal having been taken to the Sheriff from a closing order issued by a local authority under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, upon a report by their Medical Officer of Health, which was communicated to the owner of the house to be closed, the Sheriff refused to order a condescendence and answers, and allowed the appellant a proof. Held that such an appeal is a summary application and not a summary cause, and accordingly that the Sheriff is judge of the procedure to be followed; and that, as the owner had sufficient notice in the report of the Medical Officer of the case he had to meet, the Sheriff had acted rightly in refusing to order a condescendence. Kirkpatrick v. Town-Council of Maxwelltown, p. 288.

SHERIFF—Continued.

Appeal against closing order under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 39—Order to state a case—Procedure—Public Health.

11. In an appeal to the Sheriff under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, against a closing order, the Sheriff, who had allowed a proof, refused to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Session. The appellant thereupon presented a note to the Court under sec. 39 of the Act for an order on the Sheriff to state a case, and appended a list of the questions of law which he desired to have stated. The Court sustained the competency of the note; but, by consent of parties, without ordering the Sheriff to state a case, answered the questions of law in the note, and remitted to the Sheriff to give effect to these answers. Kirkpatrick v. Town-Council of Maxwelltown, p. 288.

Appeal against closing order under the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, sec. 39 (1) (a)—Statement of special case for opinion of Court of Session—Competency of stating case after judgment pronounced by the Sheriff—Public Health.

12. The Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, allows any person aggrieved by a closing order to appeal to the Sheriff, and enacts (sec. 39) that the Sheriff may "at any stage of the proceedings on appeal" state a special case on a question of law for the opinion of the Court. Held that such a case must be stated during the progress of the appeal, and cannot be stated after the Sheriff has given judgment. Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation, p. 300.

Summary removing—Refusal of written answers—Discretion—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907, First Schedule, Rules 119, 121, 122.

13. In a summary removing the allowance of written answers is a matter for the Sheriff's discretion, and, even where written answers are tendered, a Sheriff is entitled to refuse them and to dispose of the cause summarily, with the effect of excluding review. Thomson v. Bent Colliery Co., Limited, p. 242.

Small-debt procedure—Review—Small Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, sec. 31—Wilful deviation from statute which prevents substantial justice.

14. A small-debt action of multiplepounding was brought in name of an insurance company by a creditor of a deceased policy-holder, the fund in medio being the sum due under the policy. The summons did not comply with section 10 of the Small Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, which enacts that the "common debtors" shall be cited, the only parties cited being creditors of the deceased. The representatives of the deceased had not confirmed, and were not cited. The Sheriff-substitute, although aware of the fact that the statute had not been complied with, repelled an objection to the competency of the action based on that fact, and pronounced a decree of ranking and payment. Held that an appeal against this interlocutor was competent, as the Sheriff-substitute's intentional disregard of the statute was a deviation therefrom, which had taken place "wilfully," and which also prevented substantial justice from being done in respect that a decree in the action would not afford the insurance company complete exoneration. Britannic Assurance Co., Limited, v. James Henderson, Limited, (J) p. 31.

See Reparation, 20—Poor's-Roll, 1—Process, 24-28, 31, 34, 40, 41.

SHERIFF OFFICER. See Diligence.

SHIP. Maritime lien—Necessaries—Necessaries supplied in foreign port.

1. Held (by the Lord Ordinary) that the law of Scotland, like the law of England, does not recognise a maritime lien for necessaries even when they have been supplied to a ship in a foreign port. Constant v. Christensen, p. 1371.

SHIP—Continued.

Owner—Brokers—Order from brokers for ship's stores—Liability for price.

2. A ship chandler received an order from a firm of "steamship owners and brokers" in these terms:—"Please supply the s.s. 'Silvia' with the following stores." He delivered the goods under the erroneous belief that the firm were the owners of the vessel, and sought to hold them liable for the price. Held that the firm were not liable, in respect that they were acting as agents for the owners, and—since the latter could be discovered by reference to the Register of Shipping—as agents for a disclosed principal. Armour v. Duff & Co., p. 120.

Collision—Compulsory pilot—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, sec. 633.

3. A ship, proceeding up the Clyde in charge of a compulsory pilot, collided with a vessel lying moored at a wharf. In an action of damages by the owners of the latter vessel against the owners of the former vessel, held that the defenders fell to be assoilzied, in respect that, the ship being in charge of a compulsory pilot, it was necessary for the pursuers to prove that the collision was caused by the fault of the defenders or those for whom they were responsible, and this they had failed to do. Alexander Stephen & Sons, Limited, v. Allan Line Steamship Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 69.

Damage to ship in course of discharge—Liability of charterers—Negligence of stevedores engaged and paid, but not controlled, by charterers.

4. In an action brought by the owners against the charterers of a ship for damages in respect of injury received by the ship during the discharge of the cargo, the pursuers averred that the defenders were liable, in respect that they had employed and paid the stevedores and the owners of a crane engaged in the discharge, by whose negligence the injury was caused. Held that, as it was not averred that the defenders had undertaken the control of the discharge of the cargo, the pursuers had failed to set forth a relevant case; and action dismissed. Ballantyne & Co. v. Paton & Hendry, p. 246.

Charter-party—Construction—Liability for damage to ship through negligent discharge.

5. A charter-party provided:—"Cargo to be loaded, stowed, and discharged free of expense to steamer, with use of steamer's winch and winchmen if required." Held that this clause had not the effect of transferring the duty of discharging the cargo from the shipowner, on whom it rests at common law, to the charterer, so as to render the latter responsible for damage received by the ship in the course of discharge. Ballantyne & Co. v. Paton & Hendry, p. 246.

Bill of Lading—Through bill of lading—Construction—Acknowledgment that goods in good order at place of departure—Goods found damaged at place of arrival—Claim against last carrier—Onus.

6. A quantity of flour in bags was consigned from Minneapolis, U.S.A., to Glasgow on a "through" bill of lading signed by an agent on behalf of the various carriers on the route (including the steamship company carrying from New York to Glasgow), and bearing that the goods were "received at Minneapolis in apparent good order, except as noted." On receiving the cargo at New York the steamship company notified a few bags as damaged, but on the discharge of the cargo at Glasgow a large number of bags were found to have been "caked," i.e., damaged by fresh water. The consignees thereupon brought an action of damages against the steamship company. Circumstances in which held that (except as regarded the small number of bags which had been notified as damaged) the defenders were bound by the admission in the through bill of lading that the flour had been received in apparent good order, and the onus was on them to prove that the damage had been sustained before the flour came into their possession; and that, having failed to discharge that onus, they were liable to the pursuers. Crawford & Law v. Allan Line Steamship Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 56.

SHIP—Continued.

Demurrage—Exemption of any "claim for damages" for delay "by reason of" a strike—Claim for demurrage—Congestion at port of discharge following on termination of a strike.

7. A charter-party, which allowed ten days on demurrage beyond the lay days at a certain rate, contained a clause providing that the days for discharging should not count during the continuance of a strike, and also providing that in case of delay "by reason of" a strike no "claim for damages" should lie. The ship was detained at the port of discharge for four days beyond the lay days, not owing to the continuance of a strike, but owing to congestion following on the termination of a strike. In an action for demurrage for these four days, held (1) that the detention was a "delay by reason of" a strike, which excluded claims for damages, and (2) that claims for damages for delay were not limited to claims for detention beyond the demurrage period, but included claims for demurrage. Moor Line, Limited, v. Distillers Co., Limited, p. 514.

Demurrage—Exceptions—"Stoppage at collieries"—Causes which "prevent or delay the loading."

8. A charter-party stipulated that a vessel should load a cargo of coals in sixty running hours, time not to count in case of "delays through stoppages at collieries with which steamer is booked to load," or "any accidents or cause beyond control of the charterers which may prevent or delay the loading." A colliery company, who were supplying to the charterers a certain class of coal, having temporarily restricted the output for the purpose of economic working and thereby diminished the supply, failed to deliver coal in sufficient quantities to allow loading to proceed continuously, and the consequent delay caused the vessel to exceed her stipulated loading time. Held that the charterers were not relieved from a claim for demurrage by the clause of exception, in respect (1) that the restricted output of the coal in question was not a "stoppage at collieries" in the sense of the charter-party, and (2) that it did not "prevent or delay the loading" but delayed the provision of the cargo. "Arden" Steamship Co., Limited, v. Mathwin & Son, p. 211.

Salvage—Competing actions against same defender—Competency of conjoining actions—Right of competing pursuers to cross-examine each other's witnesses.

9. Two shipowners brought separate actions against the same defender in respect of salvage services rendered to the defender's vessel. The claims of the two pursuers were mutually hostile. Held that the Lord Ordinary had rightly conjoined the actions, but his interlocutor varied by the addition of a declaration that (following the English practice) counsel for the one pursuer should have the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the other. Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur, p. 1235.

Salvage—Conjoined actions at the instance of different pursuers—Duty of defender to apportion sum tendered amongst pursuers.

10. Where separate actions for salvage services at the instance of two pursuers having conflicting interests had been brought against the same defender and had been conjoined, opinion per curiam that, if the defender desired to put in a tender in the conjoined actions, he should (following the English practice) be obliged to apportion the sum tendered between the pursuers. Lindsey Steam Fishing Co., Limited, v. Actieselskabet Bonheur, p. 1235.

SLANDER. See Reparation, 3-8.

STATUTE. Construction—Repeal—Reference to practice under repealed statute.

1. Question whether a repealing statute can be construed by reference to the practice which prevailed under the statute which it repeals. Thomson v. Bent Colliery Co., Limited, p. 242.

Bye-law—Order—Ultra vires—Regulation of traffic—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 385.

2. Under sec. 385 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, the magistrates of a burgh may make "bye-laws and issue notices and orders," inter alia, "regulating the traffic, or any particular traffic, in streets within the burgh." The Act further provides that such bye-laws shall be confirmed by the Sheriff and the Secretary for Scotland, but contains no such provision with regard to notices and orders. Held that an "order," made by magistrates in pursuance of this section, by which omnibuses were forbidden to turn in certain streets of the burgh was invalid, in respect that, as the regulation was intended to be permanent, it could be competently made only by bye-law. Taylor v. Nicol, (J.) p. 38.

Crown—Local Acts—Exemption of the Crown.

3. Observations on the extent to which the Crown is bound by restrictions contained in local Acts. Magistrates of Edinburgh v. Lord Advocate, p. 1085.

See Heritable Office.

STATUTES.

Act 1449, cap. 18, p. 1125.

Act 1469, cap. 36, pp. 698, 1125.

Act 1669, cap. 18, p. 1125.

Act 1672, cap. 19, pp. 698, 1125.

Act 1681, cap. 17, pp. 698, 1125.

6 Anne, cap. xi. (Act of Union, 1707), p. (H. L.) 12.

20 Geo. II. cap. 50 (Tenures Abolition Act, 1747), pp. 459, 698, 1125.

48 Geo. III. cap. 151 (Justice and Appeals (Scotland) Act, 1808), p. 172.

57 Geo. III. cap. lvi. (Union Canal Act, 1817), p. 1327.

59 Geo. III. cap. xxix. (Edinburgh and Glasgow Union Canal Act, 1819), p. 1328.

5 Geo. IV. cap. 83 (Vagrancy Act, 1824), p. (J.) 58.

6 Geo. IV. cap. 120 (Judicature Act, 1825), pp. 171, 972.

7 and 8 Geo. IV. cap. 53 (Excise Act, 1827), p. 303.

1 and 2 Will. IV. cap. 43 (General Turnpike Act, 1831), p. (J.) 7.

3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 30 (Exemption from Rates (Scotland) Act, 1833), pp. 1176, 1181.

6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 42 (Rosebery Act, 1836), p. 1120.

6 and 7 Will. IV. cap. 69 (Plate (Scotland) Act, 1836), p. 992.

7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. cap. 41 (Small-Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837), p. (J.) 31.

1 and 2 Vict. cap. 119 (Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1838), p. 244.

3 and 4 Vict. cap. 59 (Evidence (Scotland) Act, 1840), p. (J.) 102.

5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35 (Income-Tax Act, 1842), pp. 452, 1108, 1316, (H. L.) 26.

8 and 9 Vict. cap. 19 (Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845), p. 1120.

8 and 9 Vict. cap. 33 (Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845), pp. 1340, (H. L.) 9, 87.

8 and 9 Vict. cap. 83 (Poor-Law Act, 1845), p. 836.

9 and 10 Vict. cap. 17 (Burgh Trading Act, 1846), pp. 603, 887.

10 and 11 Vict. cap. 17 (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847), p. 1340.

10 and 11 Vict. cap. 48 (Lands Transference Act, 1847), p. 698.

11 and 12 Vict. cap. 36 (Entail Amendment Act, 1848), pp. 939, 1117.

STATUTES—Continued.

- 16 and 17 Vict. cap. 34 (Income-Tax Act, 1853), pp. 453, 1315.
 16 and 17 Vict. cap. 80 (Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1853), p. (J.) 43.
 17 and 18 Vict. cap. 31 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854), p. 558.
 17 and 18 Vict. cap. 91 (Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854), pp. 759, 772, 776, 807, 816, 821, 836, 850, 854.
 18 and 19 Vict. cap. 68 (Burial Grounds (Scotland) Act, 1855), pp. 793, 1174, 1176, 1180, 1183.
 19 and 20 Vict. cap. 79 (Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856), p. 1012.
 20 and 21 Vict. cap. 58 (Valuation Act, 1857), p. 854.
 20 and 21 Vict. cap. 71 (Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857), p. 316.
 22 and 23 Vict. cap. xvii. (Glasgow Public Parks Act, 1859), pp. 819, 823.
 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 37 (Poor-Law Act, 1861), p. 836.
 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 86 (Conjugal Rights (Scotland) Act, 1861), p. 746.
 25 and 26 Vict. cap. 101 (Police and Improvement Act, 1862), pp. (H. L.) 88, 89, 90.
 25 and 26 Vict. cap. cciii. (Aberdeen Police and Water-Works Act, 1862), pp. 196, 1294.
 28 and 29 Vict. cap. 62 (Poor Rates (Scotland) Act, 1865), pp. 1176, 1182.
 29 and 30 Vict. cap. cclxxiii. (Glasgow Police Act, 1866), pp. 976, (J.) 19.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 48 (Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868), p. 635.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 84 (Entail Amendment Act, 1868), p. 939.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 95 (Court of Justiciary (Scotland) Act, 1868), p. (J.) 47.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 100 (Court of Session Act, 1868), pp. 118, 355.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 101 (Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868), p. 1218.
 31 and 32 Vict. cap. 123 (Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1868), p. (J.) 28.
 33 and 34 Vict. cap. 78 (Tramways Act, 1870), p. (J.) 23.
 34 and 35 Vict. cap. 31 (Trade Union Act, 1871), pp. 534, 1078.
 34 and 35 Vict. cap. 112 (Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871), p. (J.) 58.
 34 and 35 Vict. cap. cxli. (Aberdeen Municipality Extension Act, 1871), p. 196.
 36 and 37 Vict. cap. i. (Morison's Estate Act, 1873), p. 1117.
 37 and 38 Vict. cap. 20 (Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874), pp. 794, 1173, 1183.
 38 and 39 Vict. cap. 17 (Explosives Act, 1875), p. 1229.
 38 and 39 Vict. cap. 63 (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875), pp. (J.) 87, 110.
 39 and 40 Vict. cap. 22 (Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876), p. 534.
 41 and 42 Vict. cap. 8 (Public Parks (Scotland) Act, 1878), p. 816.
 41 and 42 Vict. cap. 15 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878), p. 1108.
 41 and 42 Vict. cap. 51 (Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act, 1878), p. (J.) 7.
 41 and 42 Vict. cap. lx. (Glasgow Public Parks Act, 1878), pp. 819, 823.
 42 and 43 Vict. cap. 42 (Valuation Act, 1879), p. 854.
 42 and 43 Vict. cap. cxxxii. (Edinburgh Municipal and Police Act, 1879), p. 1201.
 43 and 44 Vict. cap. 26 (Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880), p. 1003.
 43 and 44 Vict. cap. 42 (Employers Liability Act, 1880), p. 263.
 44 and 45 Vict. cap. 58 (Army Act, 1881), p. (J.) 105.
 45 and 46 Vict. cap. 61 (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882), p. 425.
 45 and 46 Vict. cap. 77 (Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882), p. 1095.

STATUTES—Continued.

- 46 and 47 Vict. cap. 22 (Sea Fisheries Act, 1883), p. (J.) 3.
 48 and 49 Vict. cap. 3 (Representation of the People Act, 1884), p. 637.
 48 and 49 Vict. cap. 51 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885), p. 1064.
 48 and 49 Vict. cap. cxxiii. (Aberdeen Corporation Water Act, 1885), p. 1295.
 49 and 50 Vict. cap. 29 (Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886), p. 773.
 50 and 51 Vict. cap. 35 (Criminal Procedure Act, 1887), p. (J.) 43.
 50 and 51 Vict. cap. 58 (Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887), pp. 184, (J.) 63, (H. L.) 33.
 50 and 51 Vict. cap. 69 (Conveyancing (Scotland) Acts (1874 and 1879) Amendment Act, 1887), p. 566.
 52 and 53 Vict. cap. 49 (Arbitration Act, 1889), p. 303.
 52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50 (Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889), p. 1251.
 53 and 54 Vict. cap. 8 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890), p. 1246.
 53 and 54 Vict. cap. 39 (Partnership Act, 1890), pp. 126, 421.
 53 and 54 Vict. cap. ccxliii. (London County Council's (General Powers) Act, 1890), p. 833.
 54 and 55 Vict. cap. 34 (Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act, 1891), p. 142.
 54 and 55 Vict. cap. 69 (Penal Servitude Act, 1891), p. (J.) 59.
 54 and 55 Vict. cap. cxxxvi. (Edinburgh Municipal and Police (Amendment) Act, 1891), p. 219.
 55 and 56 Vict. cap. 55 (Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892), pp. 293, 678, 880, 1285, (J.) 38, 74, (H. L.) 87.
 56 and 57 Vict. cap. 8 (Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act, 1891, Amendment Act, 1893), p. 142.
 56 and 57 Vict. cap. 61 (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893), pp. 364, 628, 1295.
 56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71 (Sale of Goods Act, 1893), p. 1017.
 57 and 58 Vict. cap. 13 (Arbitration (Scotland) Act, 1894), p. 617.
 57 and 58 Vict. cap. 30 (Finance Act, 1894), p. 375.
 57 and 58 Vict. cap. 44 (Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894), p. 685.
 57 and 58 Vict. cap. lvi. (Edinburgh Corporation Stock Act, 1894), p. 139.
 57 and 58 Vict. cap. 60 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894), p. (H. L.) 69.
 58 and 59 Vict. cap. 41 (Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1895), p. 772.
 59 and 60 Vict. cap. 25 (Friendly Societies Act, 1896), p. 611.
 59 and 60 Vict. cap. 28 (Finance Act, 1896), p. 375.
 59 and 60 Vict. cap. ccxxiv. (Edinburgh Improvements and Tramways Act, 1896), p. 139.
 60 and 61 Vict. cap. 38 (Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897), p. 364.
 60 and 61 Vict. cap. 53 (Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897), p. 772.
 62 and 63 Vict. cap. 47 (Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899), pp. 1286, 1302.
 62 and 63 Vict. cap. 51 (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899), pp. (J.) 88, 110.
 63 and 64 Vict. cap. 49 (Town-Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900), p. 1286.
 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cxxi. (Hamilton, Motherwell, and Wishaw Tramways Act, 1900), p. (J.) 23.
 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cxxxiii. (Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900), pp. 219, 1199.
 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl. (Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900), pp. 400, 410.
 3 Edw. VII. cap. 33 (Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903), pp. 880, 1251, 1285, (H. L.) 87.
 3 Edw. VII. cap. 36 (Motor-Car Act, 1903), p. (J.) 1.

STATUTES—Continued.

- 3 Edw. VII. cap. cliii. (Lanarkshire Tramways Order Confirmation Act, 1903), p. 1254.
- 5 Edw. VII. cap. 9 (Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals) Act, 1905), p. (J.) 63.
- 6 Edw. VII. cap. 43 (Street Betting Act, 1906), p. (J.) 10.
- 6 Edw. VII. cap. 58 (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906), pp. 15, 37, 99, 189, 250, 256, 334, 343, 584, 644, 668, 754, 966, 996, 1073, 1145, 1190, 1239, 1262, (H. L.) 1, 7, 20, 70, 74.
- 6 Edw. VII. cap. clxiii. (Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1906), p. 1085.
- 7 Edw. VII. cap. 9 (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907), p. (J.) 105.
- 7 Edw. VII. cap. 13 (Finance Act, 1907), p. 1108.
- 7 Edw. VII. cap. 29 (Patents and Designs Act, 1907), p. 1185.
- 7 Edw. VII. cap. 51 (Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907), pp. 19, 112, 230, 242, 293, 320, 441, 617, 970, 1029, 1101, (J.) 31, (H. L.) 20.
- 7 Edw. VII. cap. cxlvi. (Glasgow Corporation Act, 1907), p. (J.) 66.
- 8 Edw. VII. cap. lix. (Motherwell Burgh Extension and Sewage Purification Act, 1908), p. 1252.
- 8 Edw. VII. cap. 62 (Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1908), pp. 854, (J.) 76.
- 8 Edw. VII. cap. 64 (Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908), p. 235.
- 8 Edw. VII. cap. 65 (Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1908), pp. 992, (J.) 2, 10.
- 8 Edw. VII. cap. 69 (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908), pp. 5, 625, 1062.
- 9 Edw. VII. cap. 44 (Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909), pp. 217, 288, 300.
- 10 Edw. VII. cap. 8 (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910), pp. 757, 761, 775, 776, 948, 1165, 1246.
- 1 Geo. V. cap. 3 (Army (Annual) Act, 1911), p. (J.) 105.

STOCK EXCHANGE. "Redeemable" Municipal Stock.

A corporation issued Corporation stock, "Redeemable at par after Whitsunday 1927." Held, in the circumstances, that the Corporation were bound on the application of the holders to redeem the stock at par at Whitsunday 1927, and had not merely an option of so doing. British Linen Bank v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, p. 139.

STREET. See Burgh, 4, 5, 6, 10, 11—Justiciary Cases, 10—Police Offences—Reparation, 11, 12.

SUCCESSION. Widow's allowance for mournings—Discharge of legal rights.

1. A widow's allowance for mournings is a privileged debt due by her husband's estate, and is not discharged by her acceptance of provisions under her husband's will which are therein declared to be "in full satisfaction of all terce of lands, jus relictæ, or legal share of moveables, and any other right or claim competent to her" through his decease. Griffiths' Trustees v. Griffiths, p. 626.

Heritable and Moveable—Conversion—Implied conversion—Partial intestacy—Partial conversion.

2. A testator by his trust-disposition and settlement provided for the payment of debts, Government duty, legacies, and annuities, and also for the retention by his trustee of a sum for each of his brother's children in liferent, with fee to their issue. He directed that all these purposes should be satisfied out of his "estate, heritable and moveable," and that the residue should be divided amongst such educational, charitable, and religious purposes within the city of A, as his trustee should select. He gave the trustee a power of sale, but did not direct him to sell. The trustee paid the debts, duty, and legacies out of the moveable estate, sold a portion of the heritable estate, and expended the price and the surplus moveable estate on improving the remaining heritable estate, which he retained. The annuities were paid and the liferents were satisfied out of the rents. As a result of this system of management, the estate, while largely increased in value, came to consist entirely of heritage or the accumulated rents of heritage. The testator died in 1879. His brother, who was his sole heir in heritage and in moveables, died intestate in 1893. In 1909, in a special case, the residuary purpose of the trust was held void from uncertainty. In a competition between the heir in heritage and the heirs in mobilibus of the testator's brother for the undisposed of residue held (1) that the operative trust purposes fell to be implemented in rateable proportions out of the heritable and the moveable estate; (2) that accordingly the heritable estate was converted to the extent necessary for the execution of the operative purposes of the trust, but no further; (3) that the undisposed of residue to which the testator's brother acquired right as his heir was heritable and moveable in the proportion which heritage bore to moveables at the testator's death; and (4) that on the death of the brother intestate the residue passed to, and now fell to be divided in that proportion between, his heir in heritage and his heirs in mobilibus. M'Conochie's Trustees v. M'Conochie, p. 653.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

Testament—Documents of debt pinned together with holograph writing importing legatum liberationis.

3. In the repositories of a deceased four I O U's and a letter from the borrower, acknowledging the sum for which one of them had been granted, were found pinned together and folded so that the back of the letter was outermost; and on the back of the letter there was a holograph note signed by the truster, "I don't want this money paid up." Held that the writing constituted a valid bequest in cancellation of the debts contained in the I O U's. Mitchell's Trustees v. Pride, p. 600.

Testament—Construction—Implication—Supplying prefatory words by implication—Marriage-contract.

4. A testator directed his trustees to hold a share of his residue for his daughter upon the same terms as those contained in her marriage-contract. By the marriage-contract it was provided that the wife should have the liferent of a settled fund, and "In the third place, upon the death of the" wife, in the event of there being children and of the husband surviving, that the husband should have a liferent, and that the fee should be paid to the children; "And lastly, in the event of there being no child or children" and of the husband surviving, that he should have a liferent, "and upon the death of the" husband that the fund should revert and belong to the wife's father, whom failing to certain other beneficiaries. There were no children of the marriage, and no provision with regard to the fee was made for the event, which happened, of the wife being the survivor of the spouses. Held that in order to give effect to the intention of the testator it was necessary to imply as introducing the last purpose of the marriage-contract the prefatory words of the third purpose "upon the death of the" wife; so that the direction for the distribution of the fee should read as if it were "upon the death of the wife and upon the death of the husband"—that is to say, upon the death of the survivor of the spouses. Scott's Trustees v. Bruce, p. 105.

Testament—Construction—Provision to widow of "liferent use and enjoyment" of house—Liferent or occupancy—Incidence of burdens and rates.

5. A testator directed his trustees on his death to give to his widow the

SUCCESSION—Continued.

“liferent use and enjoyment” of his house, to pay her an annuity, to set aside a certain sum to provide for the same, to distribute the residue of his estate between his widow and his brothers, and on the death of his widow to divide the price of the house and the annuity fund, with any surplus revenue accrued thereon, among his brothers. Power was given to the trustees to sell the house, with the consent of the widow, and thereafter to pay her the annual income of the price during her life. Held that the interest of the widow in the house was a liferent and not a mere right of occupancy, and accordingly that the feu-duty, proprietor’s taxes, and landlord’s repairs fell to be paid by her and not by the trustees. Johnstone v. Mackenzie’s Trustees, (H. L.) p. 106.

Testament—Construction—Provision of “liferent use and enjoyment” of house, coupled with direction for immediate distribution of the residue —Liferent or occupancy—Liability for proprietor’s burdens.

6. A testator directed his trustee, after payment of the expenses of administering the trust, to give the “liferent use and enjoyment” of a dwelling-house and furnishings to his sister, to pay certain legacies, and to realise and divide the whole residue of his estate among certain residuary legatees; and he directed that on the death of his sister the house and furnishings should be sold and the proceeds divided between the residuary legatees. Held that the sister’s right in the house was one of occupancy only and not of liferent proper, and that accordingly the trustee was bound to repay out of the general residue sums expended by her on proprietor’s burdens. Smart’s Trustee v. Smart’s Trustees, p. 87.

Destination—Clause of devolution—Mortis causa disposition of heritage —Condition—Validity—Public policy.

7. A clause in a mortis causa disposition of heritage provided that each of the heirs, who should succeed to the lands, should be obliged in all time to use the disponent’s name and arms, and that “in case any of the said heirs shall succeed to a peerage, then, when the person so succeeding, or having right to succeed, to my said lands shall also succeed to a peerage, they shall be bound and obliged to denude themselves of all right” in the lands, and the same should devolve on the next heir. Held (1) that this clause was not void as against public policy; (2) that it was effectual, although not protected by the fetters of an entail; and (3) that it applied to, and excluded, an heir who, prior to the opening of the succession to the lands, had succeeded to a peerage. Earl of Caithness v. Sinclair, p. 79.

Destination—Condition—Use of testator’s name.

8. A testator, by his trust-disposition and settlement, destined his estate of Teaninich in liferent and fee to a series of heirs, under the condition that the heirs taking benefit under the destination should “assume and constantly thereafter use as their surname, arms, and designation the surname, arms, and designation of Munro of Teaninich as their proper surname, arms, and designation in addition to their own surname, arms, and designation”; with a clause of forfeiture in the event of a contravention of the condition. Held that, in the absence of express direction that the assumed surname should be the last, a beneficiary was entitled to prefix the surname Munro to his own surname of Spencer, and to design himself “Munro-Spencer of Teaninich.” Munro’s Trustees v. Spencer, p. 933.

Accretion—Alimentary annuity—Right of children to share which parent would have taken jure accrescendi.

9. Where an alimentary annuity was settled by a father on his children and the survivor or survivors, held that a share of the annuity, set free by the death of one of the children without issue, did not accrete to the issue of another deceased child, there being nothing in the deed to indicate that the issue of a deceased child were to take the share which would have accrued to their parent if he had survived. Drybrough's Trustee v. Drybrough's Trustee, p. 939.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

Liferent and fee—Liferenter born after date of deed—Right to fee—Whether annuitant a liferenter—Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48—Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17.

10. The Entail Amendment Act, 1848, secs. 47 and 48, and the Entail Amendment Act, 1868, sec. 17, provide that where, under deeds executed after 1848 and 1868 respectively, a party of full age and born after the date of the deed is in possession of land or estate subject to conditions restricting his enjoyment thereof, or where estate, heritable or moveable, is held in liferent by or for behoof of such a party, he shall be deemed the absolute proprietor thereof. Held that these provisions had no application to the case of an annuity. Drybrough's Trustee v. Drybrough's Trustee, p. 939.

Faculties and powers—Unrestricted power of Appointment—Validity of exercise—Gift of liferent.

11. A testatrix by her will, after providing for the payment of certain legacies, bequeathed the "residue" of her estate to her sisters in liferent and to her nieces in fee. The testatrix, in addition to her own estate, had a power of appointment over a portion of her father's estate liferented by her, the power being in the form of a direction in her father's will to his trustees "to pay over her portion to such person or persons, and if more than one, in such proportions as she shall by any writing under her hand direct or appoint." Held that the testatrix by the bequest of residue in her will had validly exercised the power of appointment conferred on her by her father's testament, notwithstanding that she thereby restricted the right of certain appointees to a liferent. Observations on the distinction between unrestricted powers of appointment and powers of apportionment among a prescribed class. Watt's Trustees v. Jamieson, p. 1320.

Vesting—Payment at the age of twenty-five after expiry of liferent—Declaration referring vesting to "period of payment"—Accretion—Children "then surviving" and their issue—Issue of predeceasing children.

12. A testator by his settlement directed his trustees to divide his estate into shares and to hold the shares for his children, and their respective spouses, in liferent, and for their respective children in fee. It was declared that the shares of any of his children dying without leaving issue should accresce "to my other children then surviving in liferent and to their respective issue in fee"; that the shares should not be paid to any of the fiars until they attained the age of twenty-five; and that the fee should not vest until "the period of payment" arrived. Held (1) that no right in a share of the estate, whether original or accrescing, vested in a grandchild until he attained the age of twenty-five and the liferents of his parents terminated; and (2) that under the clause of accretion the share of one of the testator's children who died without issue passed to the other children alive at her death in liferent, and to their issue in fee, to the exclusion of the issue of children then dead. Swan's Trustees v. Swan, p. 273.

See Fraud, 1, 2—Husband and Wife, 3—Revenue, 1.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. Feu-contract — Construction — Composition — "Double" of feu-duty.

1. A feu-contract, by which certain building lots were conveyed, provided for an annual feu-duty of stated amount in respect of each lot, payable by equal portions at Whitsunday and Martinmas in each year. The feu-contract imposed this further obligation on the vassals:—"as also paying to" the superior "a double of the said respective feu-duties before mentioned in name of composition at the expiry of every twenty-two years from the" term of Whitsunday from which the feu-duty in each case commenced to run. Held that the sum payable in name of composition was, in each case, a sum equivalent to double of the annual feu-duty, over and above the half-year's feu-duty due at the term at which the composition fell to be paid. Governors of George Heriot's Trust v. Lawrie's Trustees, p. 875.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL—Continued.

Composition—Mid-superiority—Part redemption of subfeu-duty—Measure of composition due on entry to mid-superiority.

2. In 1817 a vassal subfeued his lands for a feu-duty of £20, which was an adequate return on the value of the lands as at that date. The feu-duty was subsequently redeemed to the extent of £19, 15s., in virtue of a proviso in the feu-disposition, by payment at the rate of twenty years' purchase. On the entry of a singular successor to the mid-superiority in 1908 the superior, on the ground that the existing subfeu-duty of 5s. was illusory, demanded payment of a composition of one year's rent of the lands, amounting to £936. The singular successor tendered £20, either as representing the original subfeu-duty, or as representing the existing subfeu-duty of 5s., plus 5 per cent on the redemption price paid. Held that the superior was not entitled to a composition of a year's rent, but was bound to accept the £20 tendered. Governors of George Heriot's Trust v. Paton's Trustees, p. 1123.

Casualty—Composition or relief—Entail.

3. In 1849 a vassal, on payment of a composition, obtained from his superior a charter of certain lands in favour of himself and his heirs and assignees whomsoever, under which he was duly entered. In 1851 he entailed the lands. The destination in the deed of entail was to himself and the heirs-male of his body, whom failing, his younger brother and the heirs-male of his body, whom failing, the heirs-female of the body of the entailer's grandfather; and after various other substitutions there followed this clause, "The eldest heir-female and the descendants of her body always excluding heirs-portioners." The deed contained a double manner of holding, and the entailer took infeftment de me under it, and held the lands base of himself as mid-superior. In 1860 he propelled the fee of the lands to his only son by disposition in favour of him and the other heirs of entail. The entailer died in 1861 survived by his son, who in 1872, on payment of a casualty of relief, obtained from the superior a writ of confirmation, which confirmed the deed of propulsiion, but also contained a clause of reservation by which the superior reserved to himself and his successors any claim which he or they might have to a composition "whenever the heir of entail to whom the succession shall open shall happen not to be the heir of line of the person who was last entered by me or my foresaids." The son died in 1883 without issue, and was succeeded as heir of entail by his cousin, who would also have been the heir under the investiture of 1849, and who obtained an entry upon payment of relief. On the cousin's death in 1907 without issue, a variance for the first time arose between the line of succession under the deed of entail and that under the deed of 1849; the cousin's sister, Miss R., succeeding to the whole lands as heir of entail, while under the deed of 1849 she would have succeeded merely as an heir-portioner along with her two sisters. The superior having claimed from Miss R. a composition on her entry to the pro indiviso two-thirds of the lands which, but for the entail, would have fallen to her sisters, held that the tailzied destination had not been enfranchised either by the writ of confirmation of 1872, with its clause of reservation, or by the entry of the cousin, and that as Miss R. was not the heir to two-thirds of the lands under the enfranchised investiture of 1849, she was liable in payment of a composition in respect of her entry thereto. Duke of Argyll v. Riddell, p. 694.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL—Continued.

Casualties—Composition or relief—Conveyance to Trustees—Heir of truster having "ultimate beneficial interest"—Conveyancing (Scotland) Acts (1874 and 1879) Amendment Act, 1887, sec. 1.

4. The testamentary trustees of the last-entered vassal in certain lands were directed to retain the residue of his estate including these lands until his eldest child, if a male, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, if a female, should attain that age or be married, and on the arrival of that period, if the truster then had a son or sons surviving, to hold the lands for behoof of his eldest son, and failing him before attaining the age of twenty-one, for behoof of his next eldest son on his attaining that age, and so on for his sons in the order of seniority. By a codicil the truster gave his widow a liferent of the lands, and postponed until her death the conveyance of the lands to the son who should be entitled to take them. In the event of failure of all the truster's issue under age, there was a bequest of residue, including the lands, to the truster's sister whom failing to her children equally among them. The truster was survived by his widow and by two sons, the elder of whom was over twenty-one at his father's death. The trustees having made up a title to the lands by notarial instrument, duly recorded in the Register of Sasines, the superior called upon them for payment of a composition of a year's rent in respect of their implied entry. In a special case the Court found that the trustees were liable in relief-duty only, holding that under the terms of the trust they had no power to introduce a stranger to the investiture, and, accordingly, that the truster's heir (even assuming that vesting was postponed till the widow's death) had the ultimate beneficial interest in the lands, in the sense of section 1 of the Conveyancing Amendment Act, 1887. Duke of Argyll v. Graham's Trustees, p. 566.

See Property, 4—Title to Heritage.

SUPER-TAX. See Revenue, 6.

SUSPENSION. See Title to Sue, 7.

TENDER. See Process, 2.

TESTAMENT. See Succession—Fraud, 1, 2.

TITLE TO HERITAGE. Ward-Holding—Fortress—Possession by vassal as keeper of the castle—Effect of abolition of ward-holding on vassal's title—Superior and Vassal—Property—Parts and Pertinents—Clan Act, 1747.

From ancient times the lands of Pennycastle of Dunstaffnage with their parts and pertinents were held by a vassal on a ward-holding, the reddendo including (besides a feu-duty) the rendering of military services to the superior and the military guardianship of the castle of Dunstaffnage, as well as the duty of maintaining the castle fit for the residence of the superior and of rendering certain services of fuel whenever he should reside there. The property in the castle admittedly remained with the superior, but the vassal's duties as keeper of the castle involved the occupation and possession of it by him. After the passing of the Clan Act in 1747, by which ward-holding was abolished, the military services were commuted for a money payment, but the other obligations of the vassal still continued. In 1810 the castle was burned down and was never rebuilt. In an action between the superior and the vassal brought in 1909, the vassal asserted a right of property in the castle, and maintained that, after the passing of the Clan Act, his possession of the castle was no longer that of military keeper for the superior, but was that of proprietor. Held that the superior was still the proprietor of the castle, in respect that the Clan Act, though abolishing military services, did not alter the proprietary rights in the subjects, and that after 1747 the vassal had continued in possession of the castle solely as keeper for the superior for the purpose of rendering the civil services enumerated in his charters. Duke of Argyll v. Campbell, p. 458.

TITLE TO HERITAGE—Continued.

TITLE AND INTEREST TO SUE AND DEFEND. Trade union rules—Agreement with member to pay sick benefit to dependants—Revocable agreement—Claim by dependant.

1. The rules of a trade union, which could be altered at the will of the general council, provided that if a member became insane his wife, family, or parent, if dependent upon him, should be eligible to receive sick benefit for one year. In an action at the instance of the wife of an insane member against the union for recovery of sick benefit, held that as the agreement embodied in the rules, though revocable, had not been revoked when the pursuer's claim arose, she had a good title to sue. Love v. Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland, p. 1078.

Patent affecting business of firm—Title and interest of individual partner to sue—Patents and Designs Act, 1907, sec. 94 (3).

2. In an action for revocation of a patent relating to concrete, brought with the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, the pursuer averred that he was a civil engineer, and was a member of a firm doing a large business in reinforced concrete, and that "the pursuer's business" was in danger of being affected by the enforcement of the defender's patent. The action was brought in the name of the pursuer as an individual and not of his firm. Held that the pursuer had a title and interest to sue in his own name. Melville v. Cummings, p. 1185.

Title of proprietor to interdict nuisance affecting letting value of his property.

3. Opinion that the law of Scotland allows "a proprietor to apply for interdict in respect of operations by a third party, complained of by his tenant, and lowering or reasonably calculated to lower, the letting value of his tenement." M'Ewen v. Steedman & M'Alister, p. 156.

Debt due to a deceased's estate—Action at instance of a beneficiary.

4. Circumstances where held by the Lord Ordinary, and approved of by the Court, that a beneficiary on the executry estate of a deceased was not entitled to sue for a debt due to the estate, although he averred that the deceased's executor had an adverse interest and had refused or delayed to take action. Morrison v. Morrison's Executrix, p. 892.

Slander of a class—Title of individuals to sue.

5. A newspaper published an article on Ireland stating that in Queens-town instructions were issued by the Roman Catholic religious authorities that all Protestant shop assistants should be discharged, and that a shopkeeper who had refused so to act had had his shop proclaimed and had been forced to close it. An action was brought by the Roman Catholic Bishop at Queenstown and six of his clergy (who averred that they were the Roman Catholic religious authorities referred to), in which they, suing as individuals, sought to recover separate sums of damages on account of the accusations in the article. Held that the pursuers were entitled to sue for damages as individuals. Brown v. Thomson & Co., p. 359.

TITLE AND INTEREST TO SUE AND DEFEND—Continued.

Ratepayer—Rates and assessments—Declarator at instance of individual ratepayers that assessments by magistrates illegal.

6. The magistrates of a burgh in fixing the burgh general assessment for the year, included in their estimate a sum for defraying a portion of the expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order for the extension of the burgh boundaries. The remainder of the expenses they proposed to defray out of the assessments for the following years. Held that certain individual ratepayers, who had paid their assessments for the year, had a good title to bring an action against the magistrates for declarator that the defenders had no right to levy or exact rates from the pursuers for the purpose of paying these expenses. Stirling County Council v. Magistrates of Falkirk, p. 1281.

Ratepayer—Rates and assessments—Illegal assessments by magistrates—Suspension and interdict at instance of individual ratepayers.

7. The magistrates of a burgh, in fixing the water rates for the current year, included in their estimate of expenditure to be paid out of the rates a sum representing half of the expenses incurred by them in the unsuccessful promotion of a provisional order and private bill. In an action of suspension and interdict brought against them by certain individual ratepayers in the burgh a plea of no title or interest to sue repelled. Farquhar & Gill v. Magistrates of Aberdeen, p. 1294.

See Burgh, 7—Executor, 3—Process, 1—Property, 3.

TRADE INCORPORATION. See Burgh, 13, 14.

TRADE PROTECTION SOCIETY. See Reparation, 8.

TRADE UNION. Unregistered trade union—Objects—Legality of objects—Promotion of parliamentary representation—Ultra vires—Trade Union Act, 1871—Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876, sec. 16.

1. The decision of the House of Lords in the case of Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87, to the effect that a rule which purports to confer on a trade union power to levy contributions from members for the purpose of promoting parliamentary representation is ultra vires and illegal, applies equally whether the trade union is or is not registered under the Trade Union Acts of 1871 and 1876. Wilson v. Scottish Typographical Association, p. 534.

Agreement to provide benefits—Enforcement—Provision of sick benefits to person dependent on member—Trade Union Act, 1871, sec. 4 (3) (a).

2. The rules of a trade union provided that if a member became insane his wife, family, or parent, if dependent upon him, should be eligible to receive sick benefit for one year. In an action at the instance of the wife of an insane member against the union for recovery of sick benefit, held that, as the agreement was not one for the provision of benefits to a member, but to the dependant of a member, the jurisdiction of the Court was not excluded by sec. 4 (3) (a) of the Trade Union Act, 1871. Love v. Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers of Great Britain and Ireland, p. 1078.

Jurisdiction of Court—Exclusion of actions enforcing agreements to provide benefits—Action to determine validity of proposed alterations in rules—Interdict against misapplication of funds—Trade Union Act, 1871, sec. 4 (3) (a).

3. Held that an action at the instance of a member of an unregistered trade union for declarator that certain proposed alterations in the rules were ultra vires, and for interdict against misapplication of the funds of the union, was not a proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing an "agreement to provide benefits to members," in the sense of the Trade Union Act, 1871, sec. 4 (3) (a), and that, accordingly, the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action. Wilson v. Scottish Typographical Association, p. 534.

TRADE UNION—Continued.

See Association.

TRAMWAY. Tramways Act, 1870, sec. 51—Passenger travelling without paying requisite fare—Proof of fraud.

1. Held that a person cannot be convicted of the statutory offence of travelling without paying the requisite fare unless it appears that he acted with fraudulent intention. Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co., (J.) p. 23.

Statutory cars for workmen at reduced fares—Right to charge other passengers ordinary fares—Hamilton, Motherwell, and Wishaw Tramways Act, 1900, sec. 75.

2. A tramway company was bound by its private Act to run cars for workmen at reduced fares specified in the Act. Opinions that the Act did not warrant the company in discriminating in the matter of fares between workmen and other passengers who were allowed to travel in cars for workmen. Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co., (J.) p. 23.

See Reparation, 10.

TRUST. Trustee—Conveyance to trustee, whom failing, his heir—Title of heir of deceased trustee to act.

1. A testator disposed his whole estate to J. H., "whom failing, the nearest heir-male who may be resident in Great Britain and sui juris at the time" of J. H., "as trustee for the ends, uses, and purposes aftermentioned." The trust purposes included payment of certain annuities and of a liferent. J. H. survived the testator and accepted office as sole trustee, but died before all the trust purposes were fulfilled. Held that the trust did not lapse by the death of J. H., but that his heir-male was entitled to act as trustee and to administer the trust. Brown v. Hastie, p. 304.

Liability of trustees—Negligence of original trustee—Action by assumed trustees—Alleged delay and contributory negligence of pursuers—Right to maintain action for behoof of beneficiaries.

2. One of the original trustees acting under a trust-disposition and settlement died in 1887, and in the same year two new trustees were assumed, one of whom was also a beneficiary under the trust. In 1909 these new trustees, suing in their capacity as trustees, brought an action against the representatives of the deceased trustee for recovery of funds which they alleged had been lost to the trust-estate through his negligence. The defenders pleaded that the pursuers were barred by mora, and by the fact that they had themselves been guilty of negligence which had contributed to the loss. Held that, assuming the truth of the allegations against the pursuers, they were still entitled to prosecute the action for behoof of the beneficiaries whom they represented. Held further that, although one of the pursuers was a beneficiary under the trust, the question whether her rights as a beneficiary were excluded by her conduct as a trustee could not be decided in an action to which as an individual she was not a party. Lees' Trustees v. Dun, p. 50.

Administration—Powers of trustees—Power to expend trust funds on, and grant long lease of, urban tenement—Application to nobile officium of Court.

3. The trustees under a testamentary settlement (the purposes of which involved separate interests of liferenters and fiars) presented a petition to the nobile officium of the Court for authority to expend a portion of the capital of the trust-estate in altering and repairing an urban tenement, and for power thereafter to lease the tenement for twenty-one years, which, in their opinion, would be to the advantage of all the beneficiaries. The Court dismissed the petition, holding (1) that if the trustees did not already possess the desired powers under the deed, it was incompetent for the Court to grant them; and (2) that if the trustees did possess the powers, the exercise thereof was a matter of administration for their own determination. Noble's Trustees, p. 1230.

TRUST—Continued.

Administration—Investment—Power to continue business—Conversion of business into private limited company.

4. A testator by his will directed his trustees to realise the business owned and carried on by him, or, alternatively, to "continue" the business if they considered it "desirable to retain the same and conduct it for behoof of" his estate. In the event of realisation the trustees were directed to invest the proceeds in trust investments. The trustees, after carrying on the business for some years, proposed to form it into, and conduct it as, a private limited liability company, with substantially the same capital and under the same control as before. Held that, in the circumstances, the trustees' proposal did not amount to a realisation of the old business (which would require the proceeds to be invested in trust investments), or to the starting of a new business, but was in substance a continuation of the old business. MacKechnie's Trustees v. Macadam, p. 1059.

Administration—Investment—Foreign investments—Deposit of security writs in foreign country—Duty of trustees to creditor attaching beneficiary's interest.

5. By her trust-disposition and settlement a testatrix directed her trustees, on the death of a liferenter, to convey her whole estate to A, an American citizen, and gave them special powers of investment in American securities, desiring them to act in this matter under the advice of a New York trust company. The trust funds were invested by the trustees in American securities which were deposited with this company. During the subsistence of the liferent an American creditor of A, by means of an arrestment and furthcoming, obtained a decree of the Scottish Courts adjudging to her A's whole interest in the trust-estate. Thereafter the creditor brought an action against the trustees in which she averred that the form in which the securities were taken would, by American law, entitle A to demand delivery of them from the custodiers thereof on the liferenter's death, and maintained that the defenders were bound to invest the funds in such form as would prevent her right under the Scottish decree being thus defeated; and she also sought to interdict the defenders from returning the security writs to America, whence they had been brought for the purpose of the actions. The Court assolized the defenders, holding that their administration could not be interfered with, as the acts complained of were not in breach of the trust, in respect (1) that the trustees were entitled under the trust-deed to deposit the securities in New York; and (2) with regard to the investments, that they were under no duty to do anything for the purpose of fortifying the pursuer's position which would not have been required in the ordinary course of the administration of the trust. Brower's Executor v. Ramsay's Trustees, p. 1374.

Administration—Payment of debts—Provision for contingent debts—Personal liability of trustees and executors.

6. Circumstances in which held that testamentary trustees, as they were not trustees for creditors, were entitled after six months to pay the testator's debts primo venienti without making provision for a contingent claim arising out of a letter of guarantee granted by the testator. Observations on the duties of trustees and executors with regard to payment of debts. Taylor & Ferguson, Limited, v. Glass's Trustees, p. 165.

TRUST—Continued.

Administration—Severance of interests of beneficiaries—Appropriation of investments to particular legacies—Appreciation in value of investments appropriated.

7. A testator directed his trustee to hold a specified sum for a certain party in liferent, and his issue in fee, and to pay over the residue of his estate "as it accrues and becomes available" to his residuary legatees. On the death of the liferenter it was found that the stocks, in which the legacy had been invested, had considerably increased in value. In a competition between the fiars and the residuary legatees, held that the trustee had an implied power under the terms of the trust-deed to set aside and invest the specified sum for the satisfaction of the legacy, and, accordingly, that the fiars were entitled to the benefit of the appreciation in the value of the securities. Vans Dunlop's Trustees v. Pollok, p. 10.

Administration—Charges against estate—Annual payment to trustees.

8. By his trust-disposition and settlement a testator directed his trustees to set aside £16,000 and hold it for the alimentary liferent use of certain liferenters and for certain other beneficiaries in fee, and to divide the residue of his estate among his residuary legatees. He also directed his trustees to pay to themselves annually the sum of twenty-five guineas. Held that the trustees were not entitled, before distributing the residue, to retain a capital sum to meet the annual payment to themselves, but were entitled to charge that payment against the revenue of the £16,000 which they continued to hold for the liferenters. Kirkwood v. Kirkwood's Trustees, p. 613.

Trustee acting as law-agent to trust—Appointment—Remuneration.

9. A law-agent, being one of a body of testamentary trustees who had authority under the testament to appoint a law-agent from among their own number, rendered professional services to the trust with the knowledge of his co-trustees, but without having been formally appointed to be law-agent to the trust. Circumstances in which the law-agent was held to have been validly employed, and to be entitled to remuneration for his services. Observed that when trustees intend to exercise a power to appoint one of their number to be law-agent to the trust, the only proper procedure is to make the appointment and to record it in the minutes of the trust. Lewis's Trustees v. Pirie, p. 574.
- See Alimentary Provision—Expenses, 12—Process, 22.

ULTRA VIRES. See Police Offences—Trade Union, 1.

USAGE. See Custom.

VALUATION ACTS. Subjects—Value—Public sewer—Burgh sewer passing through adjacent county.

1. An underground sewer, belonging to and serving a burgh but yielding no profit, was laid for a portion of its length in the adjoining county. Held that the portion so laid fell to be entered in the Valuation-roll of the county at its fair yearly value, fixed, in the circumstances of the case, at a figure representing 5 per cent of the cost of construction plus a sum of £50 payable for wayleave. Magistrates of Dundee v. Assessor for Forfarshire, p. 848.

Subjects—Hotel and stables—Cumulo or separate valuation.

2. A property, owned and occupied by an hotel-keeper, consisted of an hotel situated in a main street and, behind the hotel, stables and a stable-yard opening on to a side street. There was no internal communication between the stables and the hotel, but the two back doors of the hotel opened into the stable-yard. Ordinary hiring was done in the stables in addition to business immediately connected with the hotel. Held that the hotel and stables were rightly valued by the Assessor as a unum quid. Philip v. Assessor for Elginshire, p. 774.

VALUATION ACTS—Continued.

Subjects—Cumulo or separate valuation—Cemetery with superintendent's house and greenhouse—Assessment—Exemption of burial ground from assessments and rates—Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1.

3. A house and greenhouse were situated within a cemetery, the only access being by the cemetery gate. The house was the residence and office of the superintendant, and the greenhouse was used for storing and forcing plants bedded out in the cemetery. Held that the cemetery, the house, and the greenhouse all fell to be entered in the Valuation-roll as a unum quid. Observations on the bearing of this decision upon the question whether the houses fell under the statutory exemption from assessments and rates conferred on burial grounds by the Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 1. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Magistrates, p. 793.

Subjects—Cumulo or separate valuations—Houses and offices situated in and used in connection with public park.

4. Held that houses and offices situated in and used by the officials of a public park belonging to the Corporation of Glasgow did not fall to be separately entered and valued in the Valuation-roll, but that the park, houses, and offices fell to be treated as a unum quid. Glasgow Parish Council v. Assessor for Glasgow, p. 818.

Value—Public Parks—Parks owned and regulated by Corporation under statutory powers—Lands yielding no profit—Hypothetical tenant.

5. The Corporation of Glasgow were empowered by certain statutes to lay out and maintain, on lands already acquired, or to be acquired, by them under the statutes, parks for the use of the public of Glasgow. The statutes, which contained no express dedication of the lands to the use of the public generally or of the public of Glasgow in particular, empowered the Corporation to make rules and bye-laws regulating the use of the parks, and also to sell, feu, or lease such portions as they considered unnecessary for the purposes of the Acts. Held that parks, both within and without the limits of the city, owned and maintained by the Corporation in terms of these statutes and yielding no profit, fell to be entered in the Valuation-roll, not at a merely nominal figure, but at the rent which a hypothetical tenant might be expected to give for them in their actual condition, irrespective of any limitations on their use in the hands of their present proprietors. Opinion that the proper entry in the Valuation-roll under the head "Occupier" was "The Corporation" and not "the Public." Glasgow Parish Council v. Assessor for Glasgow, p. 818.

Value—Public park—Land leased by burgh authorities for golf course—Lands yielding no profit.

6. The magistrates of a burgh, acting under statutory powers, obtained a forty years' lease of a piece of ground at a rent of £523, and laid out and maintained the ground as a golf course for the use of the inhabitants of the burgh. They levied charges for playing golf, but these did not cover the cost of upkeep. Held that the subjects fell to be entered in the Valuation-roll at their fair annual value, and not at a merely nominal figure. Opinion that the magistrates and not the general public were the "occupiers." Edinburgh Parish Council v. Magistrates of Leith, p. 812.

VALUATION ACTS—Continued.

Value—Cemetery owned by public authority for discharge of statutory duty—Subjects not in fact yielding profit—Burial Grounds (Scotland) Act, 1855.

7. A cemetery was owned and carried on by the magistrates of a city in fulfilment of a statutory duty imposed by the Burial Grounds (Scotland) Act, 1855. Under statute they had power to sell lairs and to receive fees in respect of interments, but the expenditure on the cemetery, as a rule, exceeded the income. Held that the cemetery had an annual lettable value in respect that the possession of it enabled the magistrates to discharge a statutory duty, and accordingly that it fell to be entered in the roll at that value and not at a merely nominal figure. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Magistrates, p. 793.

Value—Statutory gas-works—Non-profit-earning undertaking—Revenue principle—Deductions—Feu-duties—Landlords' taxes.

8. Held that, in valuing on the "revenue principle" a gas-works undertaking carried on by statutory commissioners under a prohibition against making profit, although the whole expenses of management fell to be deducted, feu-duties and landlords' taxes could not be deducted. Edinburgh and Leith Gas Commissioners v. Assessor for Edinburgh, p. 790.

Value—Croft sold by Congested Districts Board—Payment by annual instalments—Method of valuation—Proprietor or tenant.

9. A crofter prior to 1905 held a croft from the proprietor of the estate of Glendale at a fair rent fixed by the Crofters' Commission. In 1905 the Congested Districts Board purchased the estate and entered into an agreement with the crofter to sell him his holding at a price payable by annual instalments spread over fifty years, possession to be given immediately, but a formal title to be granted only after the price had been paid up in full. Held that from the date of the sale the crofter had become proprietor of the holding, and, accordingly, that it fell to be entered in the Valuation-roll at its true letting value and not at the rent that had been fixed for it as a crofter holding by the Crofters' Commission. Ferguson v. Assessor for Inverness-shire, p. 768.

Value—Public-house—Principle of Valuation—Percentage of drawings.

10. The magistrates of a burgh fixed the yearly rent or value of a public-house, occupied by the owner, at 7 per cent of the drawings, of which a statement had been voluntarily tendered by the owner. Neither he nor the Assessor adduced any evidence as to the rents paid for leased public-houses in the neighbourhood; but it was proved that the method applied by the Assessor had been adopted by him under agreement with about sixty other publicans in the burgh who owned and occupied their own premises. Held that, in the particular circumstances of the case, the magistrates' decision fell to be sustained. Observations as to the valuation of public-house premises on a basis of drawings or turnover. Haggart v. Assessor for Leith, p. 784.

Value—Public-house—Increased licence-duty—Presumption as to value—Onus of proof—Refusal to produce statement of drawings.

11. Held that the presumption, recognised in the case of Deards v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1911 S. C. 918, that the increased licence-duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, had reduced the annual letting value of licensed premises could not be pleaded by a publican who refused a request by the Assessor for the production of a comparative statement of his drawings for the three previous years, in respect that the request was a reasonable one to enable the Assessor to prove that the value of the premises had not been diminished. Scouller v. Assessor for Glasgow, p. 757.

VALUATION ACTS—Continued.Value—Public-house—Principle of valuation.

12. Observations on the valuation of licensed premises by means of comparison with the rentals of similar adjoining premises. Scouller v. Assessor for Glasgow, p. 757.

Value—Licensed grocer's premises—Increased licence-duty—Presumption as to value.

13. The principle laid down in Deards v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1911 S. C. 918, in the case of a public-house, viz., that the increased licence-duty imposed by the Finance (1909-1910) Act, 1910, established a prima facie case for the reduction of the valuation, re-affirmed, and applied to a licensed grocer's shop; and the valuation reduced by half the amount of the increase of the duty. Robertson v. Assessor for Perth, p. 761.

Value—Lease—Bona fide lease—Consideration other than rent—Relationship of lessor and lessee—Conditions favourable to lessor.

14. A deceased farmer's testamentary trustees (consisting of his widow, who was the liferentrix, and her two sons) let the farm and shootings, which for many years had been entered in the roll at £235, to one of the sons at a rent of £175, without advertisement or any attempt to get another tenant. The lease contained, inter alia, a clause by which the tenant renounced any claims competent to him at the outgoing under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, or at common law. The Assessor having entered the subjects at £235, the trustees contended that the entry should be £175—the actual rent in the lease. The Court sustained the valuation of the Assessor, holding that the relationship of the parties (though not in itself conclusive) was, in conjunction with the other facts narrated, sufficient to show that the rent stipulated in the lease was not the true annual value of the subjects. Assessor for Dumfriesshire v. Kirk's Trustees, p. 780.

Value—Mineral lease—Mineral field situated in two valuation districts—Apportionment of value as between the two districts.

15. In an appeal against the valuation of a mineral field, situated partly in one valuation district and partly in another, which was let on a lease providing for a fixed rent with the alternative of royalties, held that the equitable rule for apportioning the valuation between the two districts was as follows:—(1) Where the minerals were not being worked:—On the basis of the fixed rent, apportioned according to the surface area of the minerals in each district. (2) Where the minerals were being worked:—On the basis of the royalties actually earned, apportioned according to the amount earned from the minerals won in each district, with the addition of any sum by which the fixed rent might exceed the total royalties, that sum being apportioned according to surface area. United Collieries, Limited, v. Assessor for Lanarkshire, p. 800.

Value—Evidence of value—Personal knowledge of Valuation Committees.

16. Held that a Valuation Committee are not entitled to proceed upon facts not admitted or proved, but stated by them to be within their personal knowledge, unless these facts are public matters or matters of common knowledge; and that the accommodation of a public-house whose valuation is in question, its condition several years earlier, and the rents and other particulars of similar houses in the neighbourhood with which it is compared, are not matters that fall within that category. Moyes v. Assessor for Perth, p. 761.

Procedure—Appeal—Times at which various steps must be taken—Delay in lodging cases on appeal to Lands Valuation Appeal Court—Preparation of stated cases—Duties of Appeal Committee in stating cases.

17. Valuation Committees in counties and burghs must hold their Courts between 10th and 19th September, with continuation of days, and complete their work and dispose of all appeals before 30th September. Parties appealing against any determination of a Committee, and the respondents in such appeal, must hand to the Clerk of the Committee their reasons for appeal and answers respectively within ten days from the determination appealed against, i.e., in no case later than 10th October; and the Clerk of the Valuation Committee must transmit the complete case to the Inland Revenue as soon after that date as is reasonably possible, and at anyrate in time for the sitting of the Lands Valuation Appeal Court. In preparing the case it is the duty of the Committee themselves to state the facts and their determination upon them, and to add the reasons of appeal and the answers furnished by the parties; but it is also proper and convenient that the Committee should submit a draft of the case to the parties for their observations, provided that no undue delay is thereby caused. Stein v. Assessor for Falkirk, p. 853.

VALUATION ACTS—Continued.

Procedure—Appeal—Competency—Entries in Roll other than yearly value.

18. While no appeal to the Valuation Appeal Court is competent in regard to any entry in the Valuation-roll other than that of yearly value, the Court is not thereby debarred from incidentally determining questions which may affect other entries in the Roll (such as the question whether an appellant is proprietor or tenant) where these questions require to be decided in order to reach the question of yearly value. Fergusson v. Assessor for Inverness-shire, p. 768.

See Revenue, 8.

WARRANTY. See Sale, 2.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1906. Appeal by stated case—Order for transmission of process—A. S., 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (f).

1. In an appeal by stated case the Court remitted to the arbitrator for a statement of the facts on which he had based his judgment. The arbitrator having reported, the appellant stated that the evidence in the arbitration had been recorded in shorthand, and moved the Court, in respect of the unsatisfactory nature of the arbitrator's report, to order the process to be transmitted to the Court of Session. The respondent made no objection, and the Court ordered the process to be transmitted. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, p. 37.

Appeal by stated case—Appellant allowed to lodge a condescence—Expenses.

2. In an appeal by stated case from the decision of an arbitrator dismissing an application for compensation in respect that the workman had failed relevantly to aver the happening of an accident, the Court permitted the workman to submit a condescence of the specific facts on which he relied, and thereafter allowed it to be received, and remitted to the arbitrator to proceed; but, in a question as to the taxation of the parties' accounts, refused to allow the appellant (who had been awarded the expenses of the appeal) the expenses of preparing and lodging the condescence. M'Laughlin v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 250.

Appeal by stated case—Expenses.

3. In a stated case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the Court found the appellant entitled to the "expenses of the appeal." Upon a note of objections to the report of the Auditor, who had disallowed the expenses of obtaining the stated case from the Sheriff, the Court allowed a modified fee of three guineas for these expenses, and observed that in future a modified fee of three guineas and a half would be allowed. Observed that there is no distinction between an award of "expenses of the appeal" and an award of "expenses of the stated case." M'Laughlin v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 250.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

Sec. 1 (1)—Injury by "accident"—Incapacity due to heart disease.

4. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, it was proved that a workman, while engaged in lifting a weight, felt a pain in the breast followed by palpitation of the heart; that he was found to be suffering from heart disease of long standing, which was bound to manifest itself sooner or later and probably in the way described; and that from that time his condition became gradually worse until he became permanently incapacitated for work as a result of the diseased state of his heart. It was not proved that the lifting of the weight had accelerated the progress of the disease. Held that on the facts stated the arbitrator was entitled to find, as he did, that the workman had failed to prove that his incapacity was due to an "accident" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Spence v. William Baird & Co., Limited, p. 343.

Sec. 1 (1)—"Out of and in the course of the employment"—Injury to knee—Incapacity alleged to be due to similar injury in previous employment—Onus of proof.

5. In December 1908 a workman in the course of his employment felt a severe pain in his right knee on rising from a kneeling position, and on examination it was found that the cartilage was torn. Three years before, while in another employment, he had sustained a "wrench" to the same knee, which had incapacitated him for some weeks, after which he was able to resume his ordinary work. It was not clear on the evidence whether the later injury was connected with the former, or, if so, to what extent it was so connected. In answer to a claim by the workman for compensation against the firm in whose employment he was in December 1908, they maintained that the incapacity was due to the original injury. Held that, as the injury in December 1908 was apparently sustained in the employment of his then employers, the onus was on them to show that it was due to the former accident; that they had failed to discharge this onus, and were accordingly liable to pay compensation. Borland v. Watson, Gow, & Co., p. 15.

Sec. 1 (1)—"Out of and in the course of the employment"—Collector falling on stair.

6. A collector for an assurance company, whose duty it was to make a door-to-door collection of premiums, fell upon a stair which he had occasion to use while seeking to collect a premium, and was injured. Held that the accident arose "out of and in the course of" the employment. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, p. 37.

Sec. 1 (1)—"Out of and in the course of the employment"—School janitor injured by falling on the street.

7. A school janitor, conveying a message on school business through the streets of Paisley about noon on a hot July day, was overcome by giddiness or faintness brought on by the heat, and fell, struck his head against the pavement, and sustained injuries of which he died. Held that the accident did not arise out of his employment. Rodger v. Paisley School Board, p. 584.

Sec. 1 (1)—"Out of and in the course of the employment"—Message clerk injured while boarding a tramway car in motion.

8. A boy, employed as a message clerk, was sent on an errand and given money to pay for his tramway fare. While attempting unnecessarily to board a tramway car in motion—which, as he knew, was forbidden—he fell, and was injured. Held that the accident did not arise out of the boy's employment. Symon v. Wemyss Coal Co., Limited, p. 1239.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

Sec. 1 (1)—“Out of and in the course of the employment”—Heat apoplexy.

9. A plumber, who was engaged in laying and jointing iron pipes in the open air on a day of unusual heat and who had to stoop at his work, was taken ill while so employed and died some days afterwards from heat apoplexy. Held that, even assuming that there had been an “accident,” it did not arise “out of” the deceased's employment, as there was no peculiar danger to which he had been exposed by the nature of his employment beyond that to which other persons who had to stoop at outdoor labour on the day in question were exposed. Blakey v. Robson, Eckford, & Co., Limited, p. 334.

Sec. 1 (1)—“Out of and in the course of the employment”—Seaman attempting to reach ship in a boat without oars.

10. A ship's engineer who had been ashore in the course of his employment attempted to reach his vessel, which was moored 100 yards from the shore, alone and without oars in a 27-foot lifeboat, trusting that the boat would be carried in the direction of the vessel by the force of wind and tide, his only means of directing its course being by paddling with the rudder. He was blown out to sea and was drowned. Held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Halvorsen v. Salvesen, p. 99.

Sec. 1 (3)—Arbitration—Competency—Compensation being paid—“Question” arising under the Act.

11. A workman, who was receiving full compensation for total incapacity under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, applied for the registration of a memorandum of agreement for payment of compensation at that rate until ended, diminished, &c., in terms of the Act. The genuineness of this memorandum was objected to by the employers, on the ground that the workman had signed a receipt bearing that he had agreed that compensation should be paid only while his employers were of opinion that his incapacity continued. The workman accordingly abandoned the application. He then presented an application for arbitration to fix the amount of compensation, to the competency of which the employers objected on the ground that, as full compensation was being paid, there was no “question” arising in any proceedings under the Act within the meaning of sec. 1 (3) thereof. Held, in the circumstances, that there was a “question” in the sense of the Act, and that the workman was entitled to apply for and to obtain an award of compensation. Hunter v. John Brown & Co., Limited, p. 996.

Sec. 1 (3)—Arbitration—Competency—“Question” as to duration of compensation—Act of Sederunt, 26th June 1907, (2).

12. The employers of a workman who had been totally incapacitated by an accident admitted liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, tendered the amount of compensation due (as to which there was no dispute), and requested the workman to sign a receipt which contained this clause:—“At the first or any subsequent payment liability is admitted only for the compensation to date of payment. Further liability, if any, will be determined week by week when application for payment is made.” The workman objected to this clause on the ground that he was entitled to have an unqualified admission of liability, refused to sign the receipt, and initiated arbitration proceedings. Held that there was a “question” between the parties as to the duration of the compensation which had not been settled by agreement, and, accordingly, that the arbitration was competent. Freeland v. Summerlee Iron Co., Limited, p. 1145.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

Sec. 1 (4)—Assessment of compensation—Unsuccessful action of damages against employer—Application for assessment of compensation—Time for making application—Procedure to follow on application—Expenses of application.

13. Held that where a workman, who has been unsuccessful before a jury in the Court of Session in an action of damages for personal injuries directed against his employer, desires to move the Court to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the motion must be made before the verdict of the jury is applied, and if not so made it will be too late. Observations on the character of the proceedings and the scope of the inquiry that will follow on the granting of such a motion. Circumstances in which held that a workman, who had been unsuccessful in an action of damages for personal injuries against his employers, but had thereafter applied for, and been awarded, compensation under sec. 1 (4) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, was entitled to the expense of obtaining the award of compensation. Slavin v. Train & Taylor, p. 754.

Sec. 2 (1) (a)—Notice of accident—Want of notice—"Mistake or other reasonable cause."

14. On 9th May 1910 a collector for an assurance company fell, in the course of his employment, on a stair and sustained injuries. A day or two after the accident, and again on 8th June, while he still believed that his injuries were temporary, he gave verbal notice of the accident, but made no claim for compensation. On 29th June he left the service of the company, and from that date onwards he was incapacitated. On 12th September, when he had ascertained from medical advice that his condition was much more serious than he had at first supposed, he gave formal notice of the accident. Circumstances in which held that the delay in giving notice was due to "mistake . . . or other reasonable cause" within the meaning of section 2 (1) (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and so was not a bar to the maintenance of proceedings for compensation. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Limited, p. 37.

Sec. 6—Remedies against employer and stranger—"Recovery" of both damages and compensation—Acceptance of compensation under reservation of claims against third parties.

15. An injured workman obtained compensation from his employers, for which he granted receipts which bore that he had "elected to take compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act." They further bore to be granted "under reservation of my claims against third parties," and he agreed with his employers to repay the sums received from them if he recovered damages from the third parties whom he alleged to be responsible for the accident. In an action of damages by the workman against these third parties held that he had not "recovered" compensation in the sense of sec. 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so as to be barred from pursuing the action. Wright v. Lindsay, p. 189.

Sec. 7 (2)—Workman—Fisherman partly remunerated by share in earnings.

16. A fisherman was employed as a member of the crew of a steam trawler upon a contract of service with the master, representing the owner, under which he received wages at the rate of 30s. a week, and a commission of 2d. per £1 on the gross value of the fish landed under deduction of the cost of carriage. During the only week of his employment his commission amounted to 7s. Held that he was not "remunerated" by a share in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of the vessel, and accordingly was not excluded by sec.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from claiming compensation under the Act. Colquhoun v. Woolfe, p. 1190.

Sec. 8, subsecs. (1), (2), and Third Schedule—Industrial disease—Certificates of certifying surgeon and of medical referee—Claimant certified to be suffering from scheduled disease—Finding that disease not due to employment—Claimant's right to prove contrary—Onus.

17. A miner, claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in respect of an industrial disease, obtained from a certifying surgeon a certificate that he was suffering from, and disabled by, "nystagmus," one of the scheduled diseases applicable to the employment of "mining." A medical referee, to whom the matter was referred on the application of the employers, found that the claimant suffered from nystagmus, but that it was not miner's nystagmus but one of the other forms of that disease. The arbitrator dismissed the claim on the ground that, in view of the referee's finding, the claimant had not obtained the certificate, required by sec. 8 of the Act, that he was suffering from a scheduled disease. In an appeal held (1) that the claimant had obtained the necessary certificate that he was suffering from a scheduled disease, (2) that the decision of the medical referee was not final as to whether that disease was or was not due to the claimant's employment, and (3) that the effect of the finding that it was not due to his employment was to displace the presumption in his favour, and to throw on him the onus of proving affirmatively that it was; and case remitted to the arbitrator to allow a proof. Opinion that it is competent for a medical referee, while affirming the certificate of a certifying surgeon that a claimant is suffering from a scheduled disease, to vary that certificate by finding that the disease is, or is not, due to his employment. McGinn v. Udston Coal Co., Limited, p. 668.

Sec. 13—"Dependants"—Children deserted by their father and maintained chiefly by their brothers.

18. A workman deserted his wife and his four children in March 1907. Up to 1909, besides a few shillings given directly to the children, occasional small payments, amounting in all to £2, were made to the wife by her husband for the children's support. In September 1909 she obtained a decree against him for aliment of the two younger children who were in pupillarity, and recovered 17s. from his employers by arrestment used on the decree. The workman then disappeared and was not traced until his death, by an accident in the course of his employment, in April 1911. From the date of his desertion his wife and family were supported partly from small sums earned by the wife but mainly from the earnings of the two elder sons. After the workman's death the wages then due to him were paid to his wife. Held that the children were neither wholly nor partially dependent on their father's earnings at the time of his death, and were, therefore, not entitled to compensation under the Act. Young v. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co., Limited, p. 644.

Sec. 16—Accident happening before commencement of Act—Application of Act—Right of appeal to House of Lords—"Proceedings consequential" on medical reference.

19. The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (which provides for an appeal to the House of Lords that did not exist under the Act of 1897), enacts, sec. 16, that the Act shall not apply to cases where the accident happened before its commencement, "except so far as it relates to references to medical referees and proceedings consequential thereon." In an arbitration with regard to an accident which had happened before the commencement of the Act of 1906, the arbitrator made a remit, under paragraph (15) of the Second Schedule to that Act, to a medical referee to examine and report, and thereafter pronounced an interlocutor which was appealed to the Court of Session. An appeal having been taken from the judgment of the Court of Session to the House of Lords, held that the judgment of the Court of Session was not a "proceeding consequential" on the medical reference and accordingly that the provisions of the Act of 1897, and not those of the Act of 1906, applied, and excluded the appeal. Rosie v. Mackay, (H. L.) p. 7.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

First Sched. (1) (b), (3), and (16)—Incapacity for work—Inability to get work—Review—Competency—Change of circumstances.

20. Held (1) that a workman's inability to obtain work owing to his injured condition is "incapacity for work" within the meaning of the Act, even though he may be physically capable of doing work; (2) that supervening inability to obtain work is a relevant ground for reviewing a weekly payment, even though there may have been no change in the workman's physical condition. Duris v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 74.

First Sched. (1) (b) and (3)—Incapacity for work—Physical capacity—Wage-earning capacity.

21. A miner, who had lost one eye by an accident and who had been given work above ground and was receiving partial compensation, was examined by a medical referee, who reported that he was "as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work underground." The employers having applied to have the compensation ended, the arbitrator, after a proof, found that the miner had made various applications for work underground without success, and that he "is presently working on the surface and is only able on account of his injuries to earn 18s. a week," and dismissed the application. In an appeal the Court refused to disturb the arbitrator's finding. Arnott v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, p. 1262.

First Sched. (1) (b), (3), and (15)—Incapacity for work—Wage-earning capacity—Report by medical referee of fitness for work—Finality of medical referee's report—Competency of further inquiry into wage-earning capacity.

22. By agreement between a coal miner, who had received an injury to his thumb and was receiving compensation, and his employers the question of the workman's capacity to resume his former employment was referred to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act. The medical referee reported that the workman was "quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from" the injury. The employers thereupon applied to have the compensation ended, when the workman lodged answers in which he averred that having returned to work he had ascertained "that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury," and maintained that he was still entitled to partial compensation. The arbitrator having ended the compensation, the workman appealed and craved leave to lead evidence in support of his averments. The Court dismissed the appeal, holding that, as the medical referee's report was final, and was from its terms conclusive as to the question raised by the workman's averments, proof of these averments was inadmissible. Observed that where a medical referee's report is not from its terms conclusive a proof may be admissible. Question whether a proof might not have been admissible if the workman had averred that, owing to the consequences of the accident, he had been unable to obtain employment. Gray v. Shotts Iron Co., Limited, p. 1267.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

First Sched. (1) (b) and (16)—Cessation of incapacity—Review—Ending of compensation—Loss of eye—Diseased condition of other eye—Risk of future incapacity—Concurrent causes of incapacity.

23. A miner lost his right eye through an accident arising out of his employment, and for a time received from his employers compensation for total incapacity. Subsequently, in proceedings for review, the arbitrator ended the compensation, on the ground that the miner's incapacity had ceased, and that he was fit to resume his former work as a miner. He however also found that there was incipient cataract in the remaining eye which would gradually produce incapacity for work, but that the cataract was not due to the accident. Held that the arbitrator was right in ending the compensation. Hargreave v. Haughhead Coal Co., Limited, (H. L.) p. 70.

First Sched. (1) (b) and (16)—Possibility of supervening incapacity—Review—Nominal award—Suspensory order.

24. Decision in Rosie v. Mackay, 1910 S. C. 714, to the effect that it is incompetent to keep open a claim to compensation by means of a nominal award or similar device, doubted in view of the opinions delivered in the House of Lords in the subsequent English case of Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway, [1912] A. C. 242. Weir v. North British Railway Co., p. 1073.

First Sched. (3)—Amount of weekly payment—"Benefit" received from Employer—Payment of hospital charges.

25. Held that the payment by employers of an account rendered to them for the maintenance of an injured man in hospital was a "benefit" received by the workman in the sense of paragraph 3 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, which fell to be taken into account in fixing the amount of his compensation. Sorensen v. John Gaff & Co., p. 1163.

First Sched. (4)—Medical examination of workman on behalf of employer—Workman's demand for presence of his own doctor.

26. Held that a workman has not an absolute right to insist on his own doctor being present when he is being examined, in terms of paragraph (4) of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, by a medical practitioner on behalf of the employers; the question whether such a demand is reasonable or unreasonable, and, accordingly, whether the workman's insistence on it does or does not amount to a refusal to submit himself to examination, being a question of fact for the decision of the arbitrator in each particular case. Morgan v. William Dixon, Limited, (H. L.) p. 1.

Second Sched. (9)—Recording of memorandum—Written agreement between parties—Terms of memorandum differing from terms of agreement.

27. Where an agreement in writing has been entered into between an employer and a workman with regard to compensation, it is the duty of the Sheriff (if objection is taken) to refuse to record a memorandum which is not in the precise terms of the written agreement. It is not part of his duty to construe the written agreement and then to determine whether the memorandum gives effect to it as so construed. M'Lean v. Allan Line Steamship Co., Limited, p. 256.

Second Sched. (17) (b)—A. S., 26th June 1907, sec. (17) (h)—Stated case—Refusal of arbitrator to state a case—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Form of question of law.

28. In arbitration proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that a workman's death resulted from injuries sustained by him owing to a fall from a ladder, and awarded compensation. A medical certificate which was produced stated the cause of death to have been appendicitis-peritonitis. The arbitrator refused a minute for the employers craving him to state a case for the opinion of the Court on the question whether the death of the deceased "was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment," on the ground that the question was one of fact and not of law. Held that the proper question was "whether there was evidence upon which it could competently be found that the death of the workman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"; and case remitted to the arbitrator to state a case on this question. Euman v. Dalziel & Co., p. 966.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—Continued.

Second Sched. (17) (b)—Act of Sederunt, 26th June 1907, sec. 17 (g)—Stated case—Procedure—Remit to arbitrator to reconsider his award.

29. In an appeal by way of stated case in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Court, without answering the questions put, remitted the case to the arbitrator to reconsider his award in light of the opinions expressed by the House of Lords in a judgment pronounced after the date of his decision. Weir v. North British Railway Co., p. 1073.

Second Sched. (17) (b)—Appeal—Stage at which appeal competent—Appeal against allowance of proof.

30. Observations on the circumstances in which the Court will consider an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act before proof has been taken. Colquhoun v. Woolfe, p. 1190.

WRIT. Holograph writing—Documents of debt pinned together with holograph writing importing legatum liberationis.

In the repositories of a deceased four I O U's and a letter from the borrower, acknowledging the sum for which one of them had been granted, were found pinned together and folded so that the back of the letter was outermost; and on the back of the letter there was a holograph note signed by the truster, "I don't want this money paid up." Held that the writing constituted a valid bequest in cancellation of the debts contained in the I O U's. Mitchell's Trustees v. Pride, p. 600.

See Sheriff, 2.

CASES REFERRED TO JUDICIALLY IN THE PRESENT VOLUME.

	Page
Aberdeen Land Association v. Aberdeen Magistrates	1904, 6 F. 1067 1123, 1124, 1125, 1128, 1136, 1137, 1138, 1139
Aberdeen Tailors v. Coutts	1834, 13 S. 226, 1 Rob. App. 296 1313
Admiral Fishing Co. v. Robinson	L. R., [1910] 1 K. B. 540 1194, 1197, 1198
Advocate-General v. Blackburn's Trustees	1847, 10 D. 166 665
Advocate-General v. Smith	1852, 14 D. 585, aff. 1854, 1 Macq. 760 665
Advocate, Lord, v. Hunt	1865, 3 Macph. 426 479, 481, 492
Advocate, Lord, v. Hunt	1867, 5 Macph. (H. L.) 1 476, 477, 492, 495, 501
Advocate, Lord, v. Moray	1894, 21 R. 553 698, 706 710, 711, 713, 744
Agnew v. Lord Advocate	1873, 11 Macph. 309 492
Aitchison v. Hopkirk	1775, M. 15,060, Feb. 14, 1775, F. C. 1130, 1134, 1136
Aitken v. Associated Carpenters and Joiners of Scotland	1885, 12 R. 1206 542
Akerman, In re	L. R., [1891] 3 Ch. 212 507
Aldin v. Latimer, Clark, Muirhead, & Co.	L. R., [1894] 2 Ch. 437 910, 912
Alexander's Trustees v. Muir	1903, 5 F. 406 877, 878
Alexandra Water Co. v. Musgrave	1883, L. R., 11 Q. B. D. 174 (H. L.) 29
Allan v. Wormser, Harris, & Co.	1894, 21 R. 866 1041, 1044, 1048, 1049, 1050, 1051, 1052, 1053, 1054, 1055, 1057, 1058
Allan's Executor v. Allan	1908 S. C. 807 78
Allan's Trustees v. Duke of Hamilton	1878, 5 R. 510 1133, 1140
Allen v. Flood	L. R., [1898] A. C. 1 178
Allen & Sons Billposting, Limited, v. Dundee and District Billposting Co., Limited	1912 S. C. 970 1031
Allgemeine Deutsche Credit Anstalt v. Scottish Amicable Life Assurance Society	1908 S. C. 33 1290
Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants for Scotland v. Motherwell Branch	1880, 7 R. 867 535, 543, 550
Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne	L. R., [1910] A. C. 87 534, 540, 543, 544, 548, 549, 550, 551
Anderson v. Anderson	1857, 19 D. 700 46, 49
Anderson v. Hunter	1891, 18 R. 467 748, 751
Andrew v. Failsworth Industrial Society, Limited	L. R., [1904] 2 K. B. 32 589, 590

	Page
Anglo-Continental Guano Works v. Bell	1894, 70 L. T. 670, 3 Tax Cases, 239 (H. L.) 26, 31. 32
"Ardan" Steamship Co., Ltd., v. Weir	1905, 7 F. (H. L.) 126 . . . 217
Argyll, Duke of, v. Dunmore	1795, M. 15,068, 2 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights), 335 . . . 716, 728, 738
Argyll, Duke of, v. Tarbert's Creditors	1762, M. 14,495 . . . 471
Argyll, Earl of, v. M'Naughton	1671, M. 10,791 . . . 458, 478, 485
Arnot v. Fife Coal Co., Limited	1912 S. C. 1262 . . . 1270, 1272
Ashbury Railway Carriage Co. v. Riche Assets Co., Limited, v. Bain's Trustees	1874, L. R., 7 H. L. 653 . . . 540 1904, 6 F. 676, 692, 1905, 7 F. (H. L.) 104 . . . 55, 58
Atkinson v. Newcastle Waterworks Co.	1877, L. R., 2 Ex. D. 441 (H. L.) 45
Auld v. Hay	1880, 7 R. 663 . . . 480, 492
Baikie v. Charleson	1901, 3 F. (J.) 54, 3 Adam, 323 . . . (J.) 38, 39, 40
Baikie's Trustees v. Oxley	1862, 24 D. 589 . . . 1324
Baillie v. Hume	1852, 15 D. 267 . . . 1044, 1057
Baillie's Trustees v. Whiting	1910 S. C. 887 . . . 111
Ball v. Hunt & Sons, Limited	L. R., [1912] A. C. 496, 1912 S. C. (H. L.) 77 . . . 1267, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1273, 1274, 1275, (H. L.) 85
Balle & Brink v. Benton	1763, M. 4036 . . . 1057
Bank of Scotland v. Edinburgh Assessor	1890, 17 R. 839 . . . 777, 779
Bank of Scotland v. Edinburgh Assessor	1891, 18 R. 936 . . . 777, 778
Barty v. Hill	1907 S. C. (J.) 36, 5 Adam, 235 . . . (J.) 75
Bater and Mayor, &c. of Birkenhead, } In re	L. R., [1893] 1 Q. B. 679, aff. 2 Q. B. 77 . . . 369
Bayne & Thomson v. Stubbs, Limited	1901, 3 F. 408 . . . 181
Bayne's Trustees v. Bayne	1894, 22 R. 26 91, (H. L.) 110, 111
Beard, In re	L. R., [1908] 1 Ch. 383 . . . 84, 87
Beattie v. Adamson	1866, 5 Macph. 47 . . . 31
Bedford, Duke of, v. Earl of Galloway's Trustee	1904, 6 F. 971 . . . 1027
Bedwells & Yates v. Tod	1819, Dec. 2, 1819, F. C. . . . 331
Bennett v. Wordie & Co.	1899, 1 F. 855 . . . 1133
Berwick	1874, 2 R. 90 . . . 1230, 1233
Bett v. Dalmeny Oil Co., Limited	1905, 7 F. 787 . . . (H. L.) 43
Biggart v. City of Glasgow Bank	1879, 6 R. 470 . . . 331
Biscoe v. Jackson	1886, L. R., 35 Ch. D. 460 . . . 392, 393, 397, 399
Bishop v. Duffy	1894, 22 R. 192 . . . 639
Black & Knox v. Ellis & Sons	1805, M. "Foreign" Appx. No. 7 . . . 1057
Blaikie v. Stenbridge	1859, 6 C. B. (N. S.) 894 . . . 248
Blair v. Duncan	1901, 4 F. (H. L.) 1 . . . 77
Blakey v. Robson, Eckford & Co.	1912 S. C. 334 . . . 587, 969
Blanc v. Greig	1856, 18 D. 1315 . . . 917
Blumer & Co. v. Scott & Sons	1874, 1 R. 379 . . . 1082
Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Limited	1910 S. C. 51 . . . 1271, 1275, (H. L.) 74, 84, 86
Boettcher v. Carron Co.	1861, 23 D. 322 . . . 1373
Bothwell Parochial Board v. Pearson	1873, 11 Macph. 399 . . . 1290
Braid Hills Hotel Co., Ltd., v. Manuals	1909 S. C. 120 . . . 1154, 1161
Bray v. Bruce's Executors	1906, 8 F. 1078 . . . 1322, 1324

		Page
Brice v. Lloyd	L. R., [1909] 2 K. B. 804	1244
Bridge v. South Portland Street Syna- gogue	1907 S. C. 1351	545
Bridger v. Neilson	1894, 31 S. L. R. 744 (J.) 81, 85
Briggs v. Mitchell	1911 S. C. 705	649, 651
British Fisheries Society v. Wick Magistrates	1872, 10 Macph. 426	1290
British Homes Assurance Corporation, Limited, v. Paterson	L. R., [1902] 2 Ch. 404	135
British Linen Co. v. Assessor for Aber- deen	1906, 8 F. 508	772, 834
British Oil and Guano Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Ross and Cromarty	1900, 2 F. 605	765
Brock v. Hamilton	1852, 19 D. 701	46
Broome v. Gosden	1845, 1 C. B. 728	753
Brown v. Brown	1906, 8 F. 687	103
Brown v. Ferguson	1885, 15 R. 159	643
Brown v. Thomson	1882, 9 R. 1183	441
Brown's Trustees v. Horne	1905, 12 S. L. T. 614	577
Browne v. Flower	L. R., [1911] 1 Ch. 219	911, 919
Bruce v. M'Leod	1822, 1 Shaw's App. 213	689
Bryon v. Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Co., Limited	1858, 3 De G. & J. 123 (H. L.) 30, 31
Buchanan, Petitioner	1864, 2 Macph. 1197	1119
Buchanan v. Angus	1862, 4 Macq. 374	662, 665, 666
Buchanan v. Jameson	1883, 10 R. 809	1119, 1121
Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers	L. R., [1906] 2 K. B. 583 1082, 1083, 1084
Burnet v. British Linen Bank	1888, 25 S. L. R. 356	331
Burns v. Monro	1844, 6 D. 1352	235
Caledon Shipbuilding and Engineering Co., Limited, v. Kennedy	1906, 8 F. 960	1001
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., Limited	1910 S. C. 951	1340, 1341, 1349, 1351, 1352, 1369, (H. L.) 11
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., Limited	1911 S. C. (H. L.) 72, L. R., [1911] A. C. 290 (H. L.) 11
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Hamilton	1850, 7 Bell's App. 272	441
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Sprot	1856, 19 D. (H. L.) 3, 2 Macq. 449	910, 918, 1337, 1367
Calvin's Case	1608, 7 Co. Rep. 15b, 16a (H. L.) 18
Cameron v. Chapman	1838, 16 S. 907	870
Cameron v. Fraser	1881, 9 R. 26	903, 909
Campbell	1754, 5 Br. Sup. 812	480
Campbell v. Barber	1895, 23 R. 90	419
Campbell v. Campbell	1867, 5 Macph. (H. L.) 115	446
Campbell v. Cochrane	1905, 8 F. 205	527, 530
Campbell v. Scottish Educational News Co., Limited	1906, 8 F. 691	753
Campbell v. Train	1910 S. C. 556	1279
Campbell v. Westenra	1832, 10 S. 734	1123, 1129, 1131, 1132, 1133, 1134, 1136, 1139, 1140, 1141, 1142, 1143
Campbell's Trustees v. Campbell	1882, 9 R. 725, aff. 1883; 10 R. (H. L.) 65	1135

		Page
Edinburgh and Glasgow Union Canal Co. v. Earl of Hopetoun	1856, 18 D. 655	1337
Edinburgh and Leith Gas Commissioners v. Edinburgh Assessor	1909 S. C. 664	790, 792
Edinburgh Collieries Co., Limited, v. Musselburgh Assessor	1906, 8 F. 484	801, 805, 806, 809, 810, 811
Edinburgh Incorporation of Cordiners v. Allan	1907 S. C. 654	610
Edinburgh Parish Council v. Cramond Parish Council	1903, 11 S. L. T. 12	325, 236
Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Assessor	1910 S. C. 823	816, 818, 828
Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Magistrates	1912 S. C. 793	1180, 1183
Edinburgh Parish Council v. Leith Magistrates	1912 S. C. 812	828, 843, 847
Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Surveyor of Taxes	1889, 17 R. 154	1184
Edwards v. Kinloss Parochial Board	1891, 18 R. 867	371
Egerton v. Earl Brownlow	1853, 4 H. L. C. 1	79, 84, 86, 87
Elderslie s.s. Co. v. Borthwick	L. R. [1905] A. C. 93	517
Eleis v. Keith	1665, M. 5987	333
Elliot v. North-Eastern Railway Co.	1863, 10 H. L. C. 333	1367
Ellis v. Ellis & Co.	L. R., [1905] 1 K. B. 324	1196, 1198
Elphinstone, Lord, v. Monkland Iron and Coal Co., Limited	1886 13 R. (H. L.) 98, L. R., 11 A. C. 332	7, 1097, 1103, 1105
Evans v. Liverpool Corporation	L. R., [1906] 1 K. B. 160	72
Evans & Co., Limited, v. Astley	L. R., [1911] A. C. 674	1246
Ewing v. Glasgow Police Commissioners	1837, 15 S. 389, 1839, M'L. & Rob. App. 847	1281, 1284, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1294, 1301
Ewing v. Hastie	1878, 5 R. 439	1313
Farquhar & Gill v. Aberdeen Magistrates	1912 S. C. 1294	1291
Ferguson v. Colquhoun	1862, 24 D. 1428	526
Ferguson v. Inverness-shire Assessor	1912 S. C. 768	834
Ferguson v. Paterson	1900, 2 F. (H. L.) 37	63
Ferguson v. Richardson	1826, 4 S. 814	311
Ferrier v. Edinburgh Assessor	1892, 19 R. 1074	840, 841, 842, 843
Ferrier's Trustees v. Bayley	1877, 4 R. 738	572
Field v. Longden & Sons	L. R., [1902] 1 K. B. 47	1001
Finlay v. North British Railway Co.	1870, 8 Macph. 959	558
Finnie v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co.	1857, 3 Macq. 75	1082
Fitzgerald v. Clarke & Son	L. R., [1908] 2 K. B. 796	587, 590
Fleeming v. Howden	1868, 6 Macph. (H. L.) 113	79, 83, 85, 86, 87
Fleming v. Lord Elphinstone	(1804) Mor. 15,559	79, 84, 85, 86, 87
Fletcher v. Owners of s.s. "Duchess"	L. R., [1911] A. C. 671	101
Forbes v. Livingstone	1827, 6 S. 167	497
Forder v. Great Western Railway Co.	L. R. [1905] 2 K. B. 532	559, 563, 564
Fordyce Parish Council v. Bellie Parish Council	1903, 1904 P. L. M. 46,	28

		Page
Fowler's Trustees v. Fowler	1898, 25 R. 1034	280, 284, 287
Francis v. Maas	1878, L. R., 3 Q. B. D. 341, 47 L. J., M. C. 83 (J.)	101
Fraser v. Lord Lovat	1898, 25 R. 603	496
Galloway, Earl of, v. Duke of Bedford	1902, 4 F. 851	1020
Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees	1905, 7 F. 931	228
Gardiner v. Macfarlane, M'Crindell, & Co.	1889, 16 R. 658	520
Gardiner v. Macfarlane, M'Crindell, & Co.	1893, 20 R. 414	216, 217
Gardner v. Ogilvie	1857, 20 D. 105	660, 662
General Auction Estate and Monetary Co. v. Smith	L. R., [1891] 3 Ch. 432 (H. L.)	30
George Whitechurch, Limited, v. Cava- nagh	L. R., [1902] A. C. 117	130
Gifford v. Gifford	1837, 15 S. 592, 12 Fac. 563, and App. 49	446
Gill's Trustees v. Patrick	1889, 16 R. 403	893
Gillespie v. Riddell	1908 S. C. 628	1020, 1027
Gillespie v. Russel	1854, 17 D. 1	1354, 1370
Gillespie v. Young	1861, 23 D. 1357	1188
Gilliland v. Ayr County Council	1907, 15 S. L. T. 21	369
Gillon's Trustees v. Gillon	1890, 17 R. 435	286
Glasgow and Govan Parish Councils v. } Glasgow Assessor }	1910 S. C. 823	818, 828, 834, 840, 847
Glasgow and Govan Parish Councils v. Glasgow Assessor	1911 S. C. 988	818, 841, 847
Glasgow Corporation v. Miller	1905, 13 S. L. T. 167	369, 373
Glasgow Magistrates v. Farie	1887, 14 R. 346, 1888, 15 R. (H. L.) 94	1351, 1361, 1363, 1368, 1369
Glasgow Parish Council v. Glasgow Assessor	1912 S. C. 818	816, 853
Glasgow Tailors' Incorporation v. Inland Revenue	1887, 14 R. 729	1064, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073
Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital	1879, 34 Amer. Rep. 675	74
Globe Insurance Co. v. Mackenzie	1850, 7 Bell's App. 296	169
Godard v. Gray	1870, L. R., 6 Q. B. 139	1107
Gold v. Houldsworth	1870, 8 Macph. 1006	1105
Gooch v. London Banking Association	1885, L. R., 32 Ch. D. 41	7, 10
Goodsir v. Carruthers	1858, 20 D. 1141.	576, 577
Gordon v. Love	1911 S. C. (J.) 75, 6 Adam, 438 (J.)	99, 100
Gordon v. Mosse	1851, 14 D. 269	703
Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter	1850, 15 Q. B. 52.	(H. L.) 17
Goslings v. Sharpe	1889, L. R., 23 Q. B. D. 324	(H. L.) 29
Gould v. M'Corquodale	1869, 8 Macph. 165 1151, 1154, 1159, 1161
Gourlay Brothers & Co. (Dundee) Ltd. v. Sweeney	1906, 8 F. 965	1001
Govan Parish Council v. Snizort Parish Council	1904, 1905 P. L. M. 31	28
Graham v. Belfast and Northern } Counties Railway Co. }	L. R., [1901] 2 I. R. 13 555, 559, 562, 564
Graham v. Graham	1878, 5 R. 1093	21
Graham & Co. v. Raeburn & Verel	1895, 23 R. 84	331
Grahame v. Kirkcaldy Magistrates	1882, 9 R. (H. L.) 91	1289
Grant v. Macqueen	1877, 4 R. 734	391, 399

		Page
Grant & Co. v. Coverdale, Todd, & Co.	1884, L. R., 9 A. C. 470	216
Gray, In re	L. R., [1896] 1 Ch. 620	382
Gray's Trustees v. Gray	1907 S. C. 54	279
Gray's Trustees v. Royal Bank	1895, 23 R. 199	169
Great Western Railway Co. v. Bennett	1867, L. R., 2 H. L. 27	1338, 1358
Great Western Railway Co. v. Carpalla
United China Clay Co. Limited	L. R., [1910] A. C. 83	1340, 1365
Great Western Railway Co. v. Glenister	1873, 22 W. R. 72	559
Great Western Railway Co. v. M'Carthy	1887, L. R., 12 A. C. 218	558
Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles	L. R., [1892] A. C. 309 . (H. L.) 29
Grier v. Laird of Closeburn.	1637, M. 15,042 .	1130, 1134
Grindlay v. Hill.	1810, 18th January 1810, F. C.	740
Grosvenor Hotel Co. v. Hamilton	L. R., [1894] 2 Q. B. 836	912
Groves v. Lord Wimborne	L. R., [1898] 2 Q. B. 402	(H. L.) 45, 50, 51
Haddington Masons' and Wrights' United Incorporation	1881, 8 R. 1029	891
Hamilton v. Baillie	1827, 6 S. 94, 2 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights), 389	716
Hamilton v. Bryson	1813, 17th June 1813, F. C.	310
Hamilton v. Hardie	1888, 16 R. 192	419
Hamilton v. Hopetoun	1839, 1 D. 689	706, 707, 709, 710, 712, 716, 717, 730, 731, 733, 734, 736, 737, 744
Hamilton v. Wood	1788, M. 6269	1373
Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery	1894, 21 R. (H. L.) 21	921, 927, 931
Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand	1869, L. R., 4 H. L. 171	342
Harris v. Best, Ryley, & Co.	1892, 7 Aspinall, 272	249
Harrison v. Wright	1811, 13 East, 343	1106
Harvey v. Farquhar	1870, 8 Macph. 971	895
Harvey and Fawell v. Chessels	1791, Bell's Octavo Cases 255	331
Hassan v. Paterson	1885, 12 R. 1164.	526
Hastings, Marquess of, v. Oswald	1859, 21 D. 871	697, 698, 699, 710, 711, 712, 716, 717, 738, 743, 744
Hawarden, Viscountess, v. Elphinstone's Trustees	1866, 4 Macph. 353	84
Hay v. Le Neve.	1824, 2 Sh. App. 395	1373
Hay v. Paterson.	1857, 19 D. 332	31
Hay's Trustees v. Baillie	1908 S. C. 1224	78
Hedde v. Leith Magistrates	1897, 24 R. 662	1290
'Heinrich Bjorn'	1885, L. R., 10 P. D. 44, 11 A. C. 270	1373
Henderson v. Hendersons	1890, 17 R. 293	944
Henderson v. Maclellan	1874, 1 R. 920	441
Henderson v. Robb	1887, 16 R. 341	893
Henderson v. Wallace	1875, 2 R. 272	692
Herbert v. Purchas	1871, L. R., 3 P. C. 605 (H. L.) 17
Heron v. Martin	1893, 20 R. 1001	688

		Page
Hext v. Gill	1872, L. R., 7 Ch. App. 699	1361, 1363
Hill v. Gray	1816, 1 Starkie, 434	350
Hillyer v. St Bartholomew's Hospital Governors	L. R., [1909] 2 K. B. 820	69, 72, 74, 75
Hislop v. Fleming	1882, 10 R. 426, aff. 13 R. (H. L.) 43	1342
Hislop v. MacRitchie's Trustees	1881, 8 R. (H. L.) 95	1155
Holt v. Everall	1876, L. R., 2 Ch. D. 266	1011
Home, Earl of, v. Lord Belhaven and Stenton	1903, 5 F. (H. L.) 13 1129, 1132, 1133, 1134, 1136, 1137, 1138, 1139, 1140, 1143	1123, 1136, 1143
Hope v. Hope	1864, 2 Macph. 670	500
Hulton & Co. v. Jones	L. R., [1910] A. C. 20	362
Hunter v. Weston	1882, 9 R. 492	933, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939
Hurlet and Campsie Alum Co. v. Earl of Glasgow	1850, 12 D. 704, aff. 7 Bell's App. 100	1342, 1343
Hutchison v. Hutchison	1872, 11 Macph. 229	730
Hutton v. Macfarlane	1863, 2 Macph. 79	491, 492, 500
Hyndman's Trustees v. Miller	1895, 33 S. L. R. 359	1097, 1105
Inglis v. National Bank	1911 S. C. 6	1056
Ingram v. Russell	1893, 20 R. 771	530
Innes v. Edinburgh Magistrates	1798, M. 13,189	882, 885
Inveresk Paper Co. v. Musselburgh Assessor	1907 S. C. 747	851, 853
Inverkip Parish Council v. Nairn Parish Council	1909, 47 S. L. R. 54	321, 326, 327, 328
Inverury Burgesses v. Magistrates	1820, Dec. 14, 1820, F. C.	1288
Isle of Sleepless Case	See Perth Magistrates v. Earl of Wemyss
Ismay, Imrie, & Co. v. Williamson	L. R., [1908] A. C. 437	337
Jack v. Thom	1860, 23 D. 173	31
Jameson v. Lothian	1855, 2 Irv. 273	(J.) 41, 46, 47, 48-57
Jamieson v. Welsh	1900, 3 F. 176	1218, 1225
Johannesburg v. Stewart & Co.	1909 S. C. 860	925
Johnson v. Marshall, Sons, & Co., Ltd.	L. R., [1906] A. C. 409	1246
Johnstone v. Mackenzie's Trustees	1911 S. C. 321	88, 91
Johnstone v. Stotts	1802, 4 Pat. App. 274	1135, 1143
Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corpora- tion	1912 S. C. 300	297, 611, 613, 1251, 1260
Johnstone's Trustees v. Johnstone	1819, Jan. 19, 1819, F. C.	1097, 1104, 1105
Jones v. Mersey Dock Commissioners	1865, 11 H. L. C. 443, 3 Macph. (H. L.) 102	836, 838
Julius v. Bishop of Oxford	1880, L. R., 5 A. C. 214	838
Keats v. Earl of Cadogan	1851, 10 C. B. 591	351
Keay v. Watson	1825, Feb. 19, 1825, F. C.	22, 25
Keeling v. New Monckton Collieries, Limited	L. R., [1911] 1 K. B. 250, [1911] A. C. 648	649, 650, 651, 652
Keighley, Maxstead, & Co. v. Durant	L. R., [1901] A. C. 240	131
Keith v. Lauder	1905, 8 F. 356	179

		Page
Kelly v. Glebe Sugar Refining Co.	1893, 20 R. 833	(H. L.) 45
Kelly v. Kerry County Council	1908, 42 Ir. L. T. 23	590
Kennedy v. Panama, &c., Mail Co.	1867, L. R., 2 Q. B. 580	353
Kerr v. Stirling Magistrates	1858, 21 D. 169	882, 885
Kildonan Creditors v. Douglas, Heron, & Co.	1785, M. 14,135	691
Kilmalcolm Parish Council v. Glasgow Parish Council	1906, 8 F. (H. L.) 12	325, 328
Kilsyth Parish Council v. Cumbernauld Parish Council	1906 P. L. M. 147	28
Kimber v. Admans	L. R., [1900] 1 Ch. 412	97
Kinmond's Trustees v. Kinmond	1873, 11 Macph. 381	945
Kirkintilloch Parish Council v. East- wood Parish Council	1902, 5 F. 274	328
Kirkpatrick v. Maxwelltown Town- Council	1912 S. C. 288	302
Kitchenham v. Owners of s.s. "Johan- nesburg"	L. R., [1911] 1 K. B. 523	41, 43, 101
Kitchenham v. Owners of the s.s. "Johannesburg"	L. R., [1911] A. C. 417	41, 101
Knight and Tabernacle Permanent Building Society, In re	L. R., [1892] 2 Q. B. 613	303
Knox v. Hewat	1870, 8 Macph. 397	26, 31, 35, 36
Laird v. Hamilton	1911, 1 S. L. T. 27	169, 170
Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council	L. R., [1897] A. C. 625	818, 833, 835, 836, 841, 842, 843, 853
Lamont v. Rodger	1911 S. C. (J.) 24, 6 Adam, 328 (J.) 92, 99
Lauder v. Millars	1859, 21 D. 1353	577
Laurent v. Lord Advocate	1869, 7 Macph. 607	898, 903, 907, 909, 912, 916, 918, 919
Lawrie v. Aberdeen Magistrates	1911 S. C. 1226	196, 202, 204, 886
Lawrie v. Banknock Colliery Co., Ltd.	1912 S. C. (H. L.) 20, L. R., [1912] A. C. 105	382
Leach v. Oakley, Street, & Co.	L. R., [1911] 1 K. B. 523	41, 43, 101
Lee v. Alexander	1883, 10 R. (H. L.) 91	1218, 1225
Lee v. Owner of Ship "Bessie"	L. R., [1912] 1 K. B. 83	652
Leith Dock Commissioners v. Leith Magistrates	1897, 25 R. 126, 1899, 1 F. (H. L.) 65	1284
Leith Dock Commissioners v. Leith Magistrates	1911 S. C. 1139	678, 683
Leith Parish Council v. Aberdeen Parish Council	1910 S. C. 404	26, 32, 36
Leny v. Leny	1860, 22 D. 1272	724
Leonis s.s. Co., Ltd., v. Rank, Ltd.	1908, 13 Com. Cas. 295	514, 516, 517, 521
Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co.	1877, L. R., 3 Q. B. D. 195	555, 562, 564
Lindsay v. London and North-Western Railway Co.	1860, 22 D. 571	859, 867, 868, 869
Lindsay v. M'Tear	1852, 1 Macq. 155	31
Linen and Woollen Drapers Institution	1887, 2 Tax Cases, 651, 58 L. T., N. S. 949	1070, 1072, 1073
Liverpool Corporation v. West Derby Assessment Committee	L. R., [1908] 2 K. B. 647	835
Livingstone v. Livingstone	1886, 14 R. 43	507

		Page
Lockhart v. Denham	1760, M. 15,047, 2 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights) 329 715, 727, 728, 731, 736, 737, 741, 743
Lockwood v. Wilson	1738, M. 736	857, 862, 865, 866, 873, 874
London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown	1905, 7 F. 488	250, 255, 256
London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans	L. R., [1893] 1 Ch. 16	1337, 1367
London County Council v. Erith Churchwardens	L. R., [1893] A. C. 562.	844, 845
Longworth v. Yelverton	1868, 7 Macph. 70	1056
Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co.	1876, L. R., 1 A. C. 662	417
Lysons v. Knowles & Sons, Limited .	L. R., [1901] A. C. 79 (H. L.)	78, 80
M. v. H.	1908 S. C. 1130	530
Mabon v. Christie	1844, 6 D. 619	131, 136
Macandrew v. Tillard	1908 S. C. 78	1276, 1278, 1279, 1280
M'Conochie's Trustees v. M'Conochie .	1909 S. C. 1046	78
Macdonald v. M'Coll	1901, 3 F. 1082	181
M'Dougall	1878, 5 R. 1014	391, 399
M'Ewan's Trustees v. Macdonald's Trustees	1908, 46 S. L. R. 31	279
M'Ewan's Trustees v. Robertson . .	1852, 15 D. 265	1057
M'Fee v. Broughty-Ferry Police Com- missioners	1890, 17 R. 764	882, 886
M'Govern v. Cooper & Co.	1901, 4 F. 249	250, 255
M'Grath v. Glasgow Coal Co.	1909 S. C. 1250	183, 184, 185
Macintosh v. Dun	L. R., [1908] A. C. 390 174, 179, 180, 181
Macintyre v. Grimond's Trustees . .	1904, 6 F. 285	77
Macintyre v. Grimond's Trustees . .	1905, 7 F. (H. L.) 90	77
M'Iver & Co., Ltd., v. Tate Steamers, Limited	L. R., [1903] 1 K. B. 362	247
Mackay v. Barry Parochial Board . .	1883, 10 R. 1046	925
Mackay v. Dick & Stevenson	1881, 8 R. (H. L.) 37 (H. L.) 38
Mackay's Trustees v. Gray	1903, 5 F. 1086	279
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie	1777, M. 15,053, M. "Superior and Vassal," Appx. No. 2, 2 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights), 398	697, 698, 699, 710, 716, 725, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 736, 738, 743, 744
Mackenzie's Trustees v. Somerville .	1900, 2 F. 1278	1218, 1224, 1225
M'Kercher v. M'Quarrie	1887, 14 R. 1038	633
Mackinnon's Trustees v. Mackinnon .	1909 S. C. 1041	78
Mackintosh v. Mackintosh	1886, 13 R. 692	704, 718
MacLachlan v. Meiklam	1857, 19 D. 960	1379
M'Lean & Macdonald v. Auchinvole .	1824, 3 S. 190	310, 311, 314, 315
M'Millan & Son, Ltd., v. Rowan & Co.	1903, 5 F. 317	619, 622
M'Neice v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., Limited	1911 S. C. 12	587
Macqueen v. Hay	1854, 17 D. 107	314
Macrae v. Cooper	1882, 9 R. (J.) 11, 4 Coup. 561	(J.) 46, 54
Macrae v. Wicks	1886, 13 R. 732	362

		Page
Mactaggart v. Roemmele	1907 S. C. 1318	1155
M'William v. Adams	1852, 1 Macq. 120	30
Maitland v. Maitland	1843, 6 D. 244	286
Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co. v. Anderson	L. R., [1898] 2 Ch. 394	917
Manchester, &c. Railway Co. v. Brown	1883, L. R., 8 A. C. 703	558
Marshall v. Ferguson	1683, M. 5990	333
Marshall v. North British Railway Co.	1881, 8 R. 939	1149, 1150
Martin v. Fullerton & Co. . . .	1908 S. C. 1030	1245
Martin v. M'Lean	1844, 6 D. 981	748, 751
Maryon-Wilson, In re	L. R., [1900] 1 Ch. 565	375, 379, 380, 381, 383, 386
Maule v. Maule	1782, Hailes's Decisions, ii. 899	478
Maule v. Maule	1829, 7 S. 527, and Appx. 55	478
Maxwell v. Wardroper	1726, M. 6266	1373
"Mecca"	L. R., [1895] P. 95	1373
Melville v. Flockhart	1857, 20 D. 341	326
Mersey Docks v. Lucas	1883, L. R., 8 A. C. 891 (H. L.) 29
Mexican Santa Barbara Mining Co., Ex parte	1890, L. R., 24 Q. B. D. 613	1306
Mildmay v. Mildmay	L. R., [1900] 1 Ch. 96	936, 939
Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. . . .	1912 S. C. 37	969, 1246
Mitchell v. Aberdeen Magistrates	1893, 20 R. 253	371
Mitchell v. Mackersy	1905, 8 F. 198	169
Moncrieff v. Waugh	1859, 21 D. 216	64
Monktoun v. Yester	1634, M. 15,020	1130, 1134, 1136
Moore v. Manchester Liners	L. R., [1910] A. C. 489	101
Moreton's Trustees v. Moreton	1854, 16 D. 1108	488, 500
Morgan v. Owners of Steamship "Zenaida"	1909, 25 T. L. R. 446, 2 Butterworth, 19	337
Morier v. Brownlie & Watson	1895, 23 R. 67	688, 690
Mortensen v. Peters	1906, 8 F. (J.) 93, 5 Adam, 121	(J.) 6
Mulligan v. Dick & Son	1903, 6 F. 126	192, 194
Munro v. Butler-Johnstone	1868, 7 Macph. 256	85
Munro v. Munro	May 19, 1812, F. C., 3 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights), 373	458, 479, 485
Murray v. Denholme & Co. . . .	1911 S. C. 1087	590, 1243
Murray v. Kidd	1852, 14 D. 501	311, 314
Murray v. Scott	1884, L. R., 9 A. C. 519	544, 552
Murthly Case	See Stewart v. Robertson. . . .
Musgrove v. Newell	1836, 1 M. & W. 582	529
Musselburgh Magistrates v. Brown	1804, 21st February 1804, F. C., M. 15,038	567, 573, 740
Neilson v. Stewart	1860, 22 D. 646	660
Nelson Line, Limited, v. Nelson & Sons, Limited	L. R., [1908] A. C. 16	517
"Neptune,"	1835, 3 Knapp P. C. 94	1373
Neville v. Shepherd	1895, 23 R. 351	944
Nicholson v. Piper	L. R., [1907] A. C. 215	1077
North British Railway Co. v. Budhill Coal and Sandstone Co. . . .	1910 S. C. (H. L.) 1, L. R., [1910] A. C. 116	1340, 1341, 1342, 1351, 1356, 1361, 1363, 1365, 1366, 1369, (H. L.) 11

		Page
North British Railway Co. v. Newburgh and North Fife Railway Co.	1911 S. C. 710	925
North British Railway Co. v. Turners, Limited.	1904, 6 F. 900	1367
Oliver v. Nautilus Steam Shipping Co., Limited.	L. R., [1903] 2 K.B. 639	192, 194
Oppenheimer v. British and Foreign Exchange and Investment Bank	1877, L. R., 6 Ch. D. 744	7, 9, 10
Ord v. Barton	1847, 9 D. 541	1057
Ormond v. Henderson & Sons	1897, 24 R. 399	1150
Orr v. Mitchell	1893, 20 R. (H. L.) 27	1218, 1225
Orr Ewing v. Orr Ewing's Trustees	1884, 11 R. 600, rev. 1885, 13 R. (H. L.) 1	1379, 1380, 1382
Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants	L. R., [1909] 1 Ch. 163, aff. [1910] A. C. 87	534, 540, 543, 544, 548, 549, 550, 551
"Pacific"	1864, 33 L. J., P. M. & A. 120	1373
Paisley Parish Council v. Glasgow and Row Parish Councils	1907 S. C. 674	1031
Paisley Parish Council v. Row and Glasgow Parish Councils.	1908 S. C. 731	26, 28, 31
Panmure Case	See Maule v. Maule (1829)
Paterson v. Beattie	1845, 7 D. 561	1180, 1184
Paterson v. Linlithgow Police Commis- sioners	1888, 15 R. 826	103
Paterson v. Russell	1850, 7 Bell's App. 337	21
Paterson's Trustees v. Paterson	1909 S. C. 485	78
Patterson v. Landsberg & Son	1905, 7 F. 675	351, 352
Paul v. Cuthbertson	1840, 2 D. 1286	1020, 1022, 1025, 1028
Peak v. Guernsey	1873, L. R., 6 H. L. 377	351
Pearson v. Houston's Trustees	1868, 6 Macph. 286	66
Perth Magistrates v. Earl of Wemyss	1829, 8 S. 82	480
"Peter der Grosse"	1875, L. R., 1 P. D. 414 (H. L.)	68
Peterhead Granite Polishing Co. v. Peterhead Parochial Board	1880, 7 R. 536	373
Peters v. Olsen	1905, 7 F. (J.) 86, 4 Adam, 608	(J.) 6
Petrie v. Meek	1859, 21 D. 614	31
Pierce v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Limited	L. R., [1911] 1 K. B. 997	587
Pitman v. Burnett's Trustees	1882, 9 R. 444	417
Pollock v. Scott	1844, 6 D. 1297	857, 859, 861, 862, 864, 866, 873, 874
Port-Glasgow and Newark Sailcloth Co. v. Caledonian Railway Co.	1892, 19 R. 608, aff. 1893, 20 R. (H. L.) 35	341, 342
Port-Glasgow Ropework Co. v. Crosses Porter v. Nisbet.	1761, M. 6268	1373
Postlethwaite v. Freeland	1912, S. C. 400	414
Powell v. Main Colliery Co.	1880, L. R., 5 A. C. 599.	216
Primrose v. Primrose	L. R., [1900] A. C. 366	1132
Pringle v. Bremner and Stirling	1854, 16 D. 498	703
Pryce v. Penrikyber Navigation Colliery Co.	1867, 5 Macph. (H. L.) 55	977
Quinn v. Leathem	L. R., [1902] 1 K. B. 221	651
	L. R., [1901] A. C. 495	178

		Page
Radcliffe v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co.	L. R., [1910] 1 K. B. 685 (H. L.)	85
Raes v. Meek	1888, 15 R. 1033, aff. 1889, 16 R. (H. L.) 31	50, 67, 893
Ramsay's Judicial Factor v. British Linen Bank	1911 S. C. 832	208
Rankin's Trustees v. Lamont	1880, 7 R. (H. L.) 10	572, 720
Reid v. Morrison	1893, 20 R. 510	333
Reliance Mutual Life Assurance Society v. Halkett's Factor	1891, 18 R. 615	330, 333
Revie v. Cumming	1911 S. C. 1032	1244, 1246
Richardson v. Macdougall	1868, 6 Macph. (H. L.) 18	278
Riley v. Ellis	1910 S. C. 934	862, 866, 868, 873
Robertson	1880, 7 R. 1092	103, 104
Robinson v. Fraser's Trustees	1881, 8 R. (H. L.) 127	14
Rodgers Trustees v. Rodger	1875, 2 R. 294	91, (H. L.) 110
Rooney v. Cormack	1895, 22 R. 761	271
Rosie v. Mackay	1910 S. C. 714	1073, 1075, 1076, 1077, 1273, (H. L.) 72
Rosie v. Mackay	1912 S. C. (H. L.) 7	1077
Rothwell v. Stuart's Trustees	1898, 1 F. 81	508
Rox v. Stewart	1818, July 3, 1818, F. C.	310
Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners	L. R., [1910] 1 K. B. 506	542
Russell v. Cowpar	1882, 9 R. 660	94
Rutherglen Parish Council v. Glasgow Parish Council	1902, 4 F. (H. L.) 19	31
Rutherglen Parish Council v. Glenbucket and Dalziel Parish Council	1895, 33 S. L. R. 366	326
Rymer v. Stanfield	L. R., [1895] 1 Ch. 19	394, 399
Schumann v. Scottish Widows' Fund Society	1886, 13 R. 678	1010
Scobie v. Hill's Trustee	1869, 8 Macph. 161	1012, 1014, 1016, 1017
Scott v. Ritchie	1865, 7 S. L. R. 135	239
Scott's Trustees v. Scott	1895, 23 R. 52	14
Scottish North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Gardiner	1864, 2 Macph. 537	1290
Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan	1903, 5 F. (H. L.) 10	458
Scottish Provident Institution v. Inland Revenue	1901, 3 F. 874	458
Scottish Widows' Fund v. Inland Revenue	1909 S. C. 1372	456
Seyton v. Satterthwaite	1887, L. R., 34 Ch. D. 511	1011
Sharman v. Holliday & Greenwood, Ltd.	L. R., [1904] 1 K. B. 235 (H. L.) 84
Sim v. Robinow	1892, 19 R. 665	925
Smart & Co. v. Suva Town Board . . .	L. R., [1893] A. C. 301	683
Smellie's Trustees v. Glasgow Royal Infirmary	1905, 13 S. L. T. 450	78
Smith v. Gray	1752, M. 10,803	478
Smith v. Patrick	1901, 3 F. (H. L.) 14	66
Smith v. Ritchie & Co.	1892, 20 R. (J.) 52, 3 White, 408	(J.) 18
Smithies v. Bridge	L. R., [1902] 2 K. B. 13 (J.) 88, 93, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101
Somerville v. Lord Advocate	1893, 20 R. 1050	1091
Somerville v. Wemyss	1854, 17 D. 151	66

Souter v. Lean	1903, 6 F. (J.) 20, 4 Adam, 280	(J.) 72
Southern Brazilian Rio Grande Do Sul Railway Co., Limited	L. R., [1905] 2 Ch. 78	153
Stark's Trustees v. Duncan	1906, 8 F. 429	441
Steele v. M'Intosh Brothers	1879, 7 R. 192	300, 303, 613
Steele v. South Wales Miners' Federation	L. R., [1907] 1 K. B. 361	548
Stenhouse	1902, 10 S. L. T. 349	1233
Stewart v. Greenock Harbour Trustees	1864, 2 Macph. 1155 (H. L.)	93
Stewart v. Kennedy	1890, 17 R. (H. L.) 25	350, 352
Stewart v. Robertson	1874, 1 R. 532, rev. 1875, 2 R. (H. L.) 80	450
Stewart's Trustees v. Stewart's Executrix	1896, 23 R. 739	169
Stirling v. Ewart	1842, 4 D. 684, 3 Bell's App. 128, 2 Ross's Leading Cases (Land Rights) 340	708, 709, 710, 713, 714, 715, 716, 720, 721, 723, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 742, 745
Stirling County Council v. Falkirk Magistrates	1912 S. C. 1281	1298, 1300, 1302
Stirling Crawford of Milton	Unreported	959
Stourbridge Canal Co. v. Dudley	1860, 30 L. J., Q. B. 108	1338
Sturt v. Blagg	1847, 10 Q. B. 906	226
Summerlee Iron Co. v. Lindsay	1907 S. C. 1161	415, 417
Summerlee Iron Co. v. Lindsay	1908 S. C. 754	415, 417
Sutherland v. Aberdeen Magistrates	1894, 22 R. 95	371
"Tagus"	L. R., [1903] P. 44	1372
Tait v. Lees	1903, 5 F. 304	1029, 1031, 1032
Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Co.	L. R., [1912] A. C. 242	1073, 1076, 1077, 1078
Taylor v. Taylor	1853, 22 L. J., Ch. 742	660
Teacher's Trustees v. Teacher	1890, 17 R. 303	14
Tebb v. Cave	L. R., [1900] 1 Ch. 642	910
Telegraph Construction Co., In re	1870, 10 Eq. 384	7, 10
Tendring Hundred Waterworks Co. v. Jones	L. R., [1903] 2 Ch. 615	130
Teulon v. Seaton	1885, 12 R. 971	894
Thom v. Caledonian Railway Co.	1886, 14 R. (J.) 5, 1 White, 248	(J.) 26
Thom v. Macbeth	1875, 3 R. 161	44, 46, 47, 48, 49
Thomas v. Kelly	1888, L. R., 13 A. C. 506	(H. L.) 79
Thomas v. Tennent's Trustees	1868, 7 Macph. 114	660
Thompson v. Goold & Co.	L. R., [1910] A. C. 409	1132
Thompson v. Whitehead	1862, 24 D. 331	1041, 1044, 1049, 1050, 1051, 1052, 1053, 1055, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1059
Thomson v. Christie	1849, 12 D. 179, aff. 1852, 1 Macq. 236	66, 67
Toogood v. Spyring	1834, 1 C. M. & R. 181	180, 182
Tully v. Ingram	1891, 19 R. 65	134, 135
Turnbull v. M'Lean	1874, 1 R. 730	1102
Veitch of Elliock	Bell's Com. i. 51	1027

		Page
Walker v. Arbroath Presbytery	1876, 3 R. 498, 1876, 4 R. (H. L.) 1	1180
Walker v. Walker	1911 S. C. 163	746, 747
Wallace v. Whitelaw	1900, 2 F. 675	421, 423, 424, 425
Walshaw v. Brighthouse Corporation	L. R., [1899] 2 Q. B. 286	369
Ward v. Lang	1893, 20 R. 949	278
Wardlaw, &c. (Campbell's Trustees) v. Campbell	1882, 9 R. 725, aff. 1883, 10 R. (H. L.) 65	1135
Wardlaw's Trustees	1902, 10 S. L. T. 349	1233
Warner v. Couchman	L. R., [1911] 1 K. B. 351	338
Watson v. Callander Coal Co., Limited	1888, 16 R. 111	1149, 1150
Watson v. Henderson	1802, Hume, 208	331
Watson v. North British Railway Co.	1904, 7 F. 220	1278
Watt v. Hannah	1857, 20 D. 342	326
Watt v. Roger's Trustees	1890, 17 R. 1201	893
Webber, In re	L. R. [1896] 1 Ch. 914	380, 382, 386
Webster v. Bosanquet	L. R., [1912] A. C. 394	1107
Weir v. Crum Brown	1908 S. C. (H. L.) 3	78
Wenlock, Baroness, v. River Dee Co.	1885, L. R., 10 A. C. 354	541
West Hartlepool Mayor, &c., v. Durham Council	L. R., [1907] A. C. 246	1256, 1257
West Kent Main Sewerage Board v. Dartford Union Assessment Committee	L. R., [1911] A. C. 171	851, 853
Whelan v. Great Northern Steam Fishing Co., Limited	1909, 78 L. J., K. B. 860, 25 T. L. R. 619	1197, 1199
White v. Anderson	1904, 12 S. L. T. 493	306
Whitechurch (George), Limited, v. Cavanagh	L. R., [1902] A. C. 117	130
Whitehead v. Reader	L. R., [1901] 2 K. B. 48	1245
Whiteley v. Adams	1863, 15 C. B. (N. S.) 392	180
Whittall v. Christie	1894, 22 R. 91	869
Wicks v. Dowell & Co., Limited	L. R., [1905] 2 K. B. 225	588, 589
Wigan v. Cripps	1908 S. C. 394	1218, 1224
Wightman v. Wilson	1858, 20 D. 779	235
Williams v. Philip	1907, 15 S. L. T. 396	271
Williamson v. North-Eastern Railway Co.	1884, 11 R. 596	1054
Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers	L. R., [1910] A. C. 7 (H. L.) 18	1106
Winter v. Trimmer	1763, 1 Wm. Bl. 395	1106
Winters v. Addie & Sons' Collieries, Limited	1911 S. C. 1174	674
Wolfenden v. M'Culloch	1905, 20 Cox's Criminal Cases, 864	(J.) 97, 100
Woods v. Tulloch	1893, 20 R. 477	352
Wright v. Wright	1809, 16 Ves. jun. 188	666
Wynn v. Lindsay	1883, 11 R. (J.) 18, 5 Coup. 370	(J.) 105
Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden	L. R., [1905] A. C. 256	535, 543, 550
Young's Trustee v. Perth Trades Incorporation	1893, 20 R. 778	390, 398
Zetland, Earl of, v. Carron Co.	1841, 3 D. 1124	877
Zetland, Earl of, v. Hislop	1882, 9 R. (H. L.) 40	1061
Zuille v. Morrison	1813, March 4, 1813, F. C.	478

Stanford Law Library

3 6105 062 686 048

